TO THE MOST REVERENDFATHER IN GOD, GEORGE,

Lord Archb. of Canterburie His Grace,

Primate of all ENGLAND and Metropolitan,
One of His MAIESTIES most HONORABLE PRIVIE COVNCELL,
His very good Lord.

HAuing brought vnto your Grace the Sheafe of my first Fruits to bee waued before the Lord, I am bold now also to offer (not after 7. but aboue 77. weekes) these waue loaues for my harueſt, that both may bee hallowed by the ſame Prieſtly hand: in which reſpect your Graces Name which firſt honored my Pilgrimage, hath the laſt place in theſe Pilgrime-Volumes, that my All might be bleſſed by your gracious embracing (the Alpha and Omega of my Dedications) and might bee by your Fatherly benediction commended to vulgar vſe. The ſutableneſſe of the former worke to your Graces Place and recreations, cauſed the former preſumption: but now the Author, by frequent Dedications knowne and graciouſly acknowledged Yours (how vnprofitable a ſeruant ſoeuer) is guiltie not of ſingle boldneſſe; beautifying the Frontiſpice with His Highneſſe Name vnto your Graces entertainment (eſpecially Leuit. 23.

in this time so many wayes Festiuall) that your Graces Name and entertainment might so much more Entitle and Endeare the same to His Highnesse. The authorising of Books in iustest order belongeth to your Grace, as doth the Author also: whose mistie conceits of ignorance, or smokie vapours of ambition, suffering the exhaling rayes of Princely heat and Highnesse, hope in the Middle Region of your Gracious and vertuous moderation to be so mildly attempered, that they shall neither fall short in vanishing dewes, nor be reiected after a short blaze as falling Starres, nor transcend into combustious Comets, nor fall downe in furious Stormes, but gently descend as fresh and fruitfull Showers on the thirstie Candid Readers. Pardon farre-fetched similitudes to a Historie of farre-fetched rarities, and the Elements of the world borrowed to patronise our world of literate Elements, not being (as the commendable labours of Others) a Booke of Voyages and Trauels in the world, but the World historised in a world of Voyages and Trauels. Wherein our Ship hath beene longer in her Circum-Nauigation then any of the World-Compassers here related; often in danger to be ouerset, while the Authors impotent and impatient Genius filled all her sailes to the Top and Top-gallant beyond the proportion of her balast; whereby some leakes of vnwitting errors, happening in so new a course thorow so various Seas, implore your Graces indulgence to the Ship and Pilot. Sir Francis Drake a Ministers sonne, after a happy inuironing of the Globe, feasted Queene Elisabeth aboord his Argo, and then laid her vp at Deptford, deuoting her Carkasse to Time, Her (or rather his) exploits to Fame and Eternitie. An English Minister, beginneth and endeth his more then Circling Nauigation with the glorious Name of His Maiestie, in poore, but his best entertainment, and returning thus manned and freighted, humbly sueth to bee laid vp in the Liberties and Libraries of Saint Iames, Yorke-house, Westminster, and Lambith. Here also the Pilot further petitioneth, that his Body being more leakie then his Ship, your Grace (to whom principally the promise was made) will accept this Part of payment in satisfaction of the whole whole debt of his Europæan Peregrination and Christian Visitations. But a long Epistle were injurie to your Graces more necessarie imployments for the Church and State: My selfe am the Epistle, this Worke the Seale, this Epistle but the Superscription, these Pilgrimes all humble Sutors for your Gracious fauour to the worst of

THE SIXTH BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

A briefe Relation of the seuerall Voyages, vndertaken and performed by the Right Honorable, GEORGE, Earle of Cumberland, in his owne person, or at his owne charge; and by his direction: collected out of the Relations and Iournals of credible persons Actors therein.

THE first Voyage of this Right Honorable Earle was intended to the South Sea: and begun from Gruneſend, Iune 26. 1586. with three Ships and a Pinnace; the Red Dragon Admirall, of 260. Tunnes, with 130. men, commanded by Captaine Robert Widrington: the Barke Clifford Vice-admirall, of 130. Tunnes, with 70. men, commanded by Captaine Chriſtopher Liſter (he had beene taken priſoner in Barbarie at the battell of Alcaſſar, in which King Sebaſtian was ſlaine) the Roe Rere-admirall, commanded by Captaine Hawes: the Dorothee, a ſmall Pinnace of Sir Walter Raleighs (This voyage being publiſhed at large in Maſter Hakluyts printed voyages, I will here but briefly runne ouer.) Septemb. 7. they fell with the Coaſt of Barbarie, haling in with the Road of Santa Cruce: after that they anchored in Rio del Oro, and ſearched vp the Riuer, finding it fourteene or fifteene leagues vpward as broad as at the mouth, ſome two leagues ouer. The laſt of September they reſolued for Sierra Leona, from whence they departed the ſeuenth of Nouember. The fourth of Ianuarie they fell with the American ſhoare in 30. degrees and 40. minutes South latitude, the weather temperate. Ian. 10. they tooke (a little ſhort of the Riuer of Plate) a ſmall Portugall ſhip, and in her Abraham Cock of Leigh neere London, married in that Country, who was brought home by the Admirall. They learned that in that Riuer were fiue Townes each of ſeuentie houſholds or more. Buenos Aeres, fiftie leagues vp the Riuer, the reſt fortie or fiftie aboue each other; Tuccaman the vppermoſt 230. leagues from the entrance: In which was ſtore of Corne, Cattell, Fruits, but neither Siluer nor Gold. In this Barke were fiue and fortie Negroes. The next day they tooke another, in which were fiue and thirtie Negro women, foure or fiue Friars, one an Iriſhman. Their Bookes, Beades, and Pictures, coſt aboue 1000. Duckets. The Biſhop of Tuccaman had ſent for them to take poſſeſſion of a Monaſterie. They learned of Maſter Iohn Drake who were in conſort with Captaine Penton, caſt away away neere the Riuer of Plate, his companie taken or ſlaine by the Saluages: of which Iohn Drake and Richard Fairweather eſcaped with two or three others in a Canoa to the Spaniards and liued in thoſe parts. Here alſo they tooke Miles Philips left in the Countrey by Sir Iohn Hawkins.

Baya. After counſell taken they fell Aprill 9. with the Land of Braſil in 18. degrees and a Terſe, and watered in the Road of Camana. They proceeded and anchored before the Towne of Baya, and found in the Harbour eight Ships and one Caruell. The next day they forced the Portugals Bold courage. to abandon foure of the beſt of thoſe Ships, and towards them forth in deſpight of infinite ſtore of great and ſmall ſhot from the ſhoare and ſhips: one Hulke hauing in her foure and twentie pieces of Ordnance. The leaſt of theſe prizes was 220. Tunnes. After this they haled the Hulke and commanded the Maſter to follow them, which he did, together with a Caruell with fifie Butts of wine. They fetched reliefe from the ſhoare alſo in deſpite of innumerable Indians and all the enemies forces. May 24. they tooke a ſhip of 120. Tunnes laden with Meale and Sugar. But the voyage to the South Sea was defeated by ſome mens deſire to returne, in which Captaine Hulks diſaſter. Delamour tooke a ſmall Pinnace. The Flemmiſh Hulke taken into the Fleet in ſtead of the George caſt off, furniſhed with her men, ſuddenly tooke fire and periſhed, Ship, Men, and Goods. September 39. the reſidue reached the Coaſt of England after an vnprofitable and vnfortunate voyage.

The Earle in Sluce, 88. ſeruice. IN the yeare 1587. when the Towne of Sluſe was beſeeged by the Duke of Parma, Sir Roger Williams being Gouernour there, the Earle put himſelfe in perſon to make proofe of his valour in that ſeruice, but at his arriuall found the Towne ſurrendred vnto the Duke, the ſaid Sir Roger being not able to hold out longer. Anno 1588. amongſt many of the Nobility which diſtributed themſelues into diuers of her Maieſties Shippes vpon the approach of the Spaniſh Armada, the Earle put himſelfe aboord the Bonaduenture commanded by Captaine George Raymond; when Second voyage 1588. they wanne that honour that no Sea can drowne, no age can weare out. The Queene ſo accepted this Noble Earles reſolution, that ſhe gaue him leaue the ſame yeare to goe as Generall, and for his greater honour and ability was pleaſed to lend him the Golden Lion, one of the Shippes Royall, to be the Admirall; which he victualled and furniſhed at his owne charge and aduenture, hauing Commiſſion to purſue his intended voyage towards the Spaniſh coaſts, vnder the broad Seale of England, bearing date the fourth of October, 1588. Attended with many braue Gentlemen he ſet forth about the end of October, and in the Narrow Seas met with a Shippe of Hare taken. Dunkerke called the Hare, laden with Merchandiſe for Spaine, which after ſome fight he tooke and ſent home. But contrary windes firſt ſuſpended, and after that a ſtorme (which forced them to cut the maine Maſte ouerboord) deprined him of further hopes and ability to proſecute his true deſignes.

Third voyage 1589. HIs ſpirit remaining neuertheleſſe higher then the windes, and more reſolutely by ſtormes compact & vnited in it ſelfe, he procured anew of her Maieſtie the Victory, one of the Royal Nauie, accompanied with the Meg and Margaret, two ſmall Ships and one Caruell; which were ſet forth at his charges, and manned with 400. Mariners and Souldiers: the Admirall commanded by his Lordſhip, and vnder him Captaine Chriſtopher Lyſter: the Meg by Captaine William Mounſon Viceadmirall: the Margaret by Captaine Edward Careles alias Write Rereadmirall: the Caruell by Captaine Pigeon. The eighteenth of Iune they ſet forth from Plimmouth and within The League then was enemy to Queene Elizabeth. three dayes met with three French Ships, Leaguers of New Hauen, and Saint Maloes laden with New-found-land fiſh: two of them with the Margaret not able to endure the Sea, were ſent for England. The thirteenth of Iuly his Lordſhip met with eleuen Dutch Ships which at firſt made ſhew to abide a fight, and after a few ſhot yeelded and ſent their Maſters aboord ſhewing their Paſports from Hamborough, Lubecke, Bremen, Pomerland and Callice: who confeſſed that they had Iew of Lisbone. goods aboord to the valu of foure thouſand & fiue hundred pounds of a Iew of Lisbone, which being deliuered and diſtributed, his Lordſhip ſet ſaile for the Aſores. The firſt of Auguſt he had ſight The Azores foure Ships taken. of Saint Michael, and to diſguiſe himſelfe put forth a Spaniſh Flagge. Eſpying foure Shippes in the Roade, he reſolued that night to cut their Cables and to bring them away: which he accordingly performed before he was deſcried. The Spaniards in three of them leaping into the Sea, with much noiſe and outcry gaue the alarme to the Town, which made many vaine ſhots at his Boate in the darke. The fourth was the Falcon of London, vnder the name of a Scottiſh Ship, hauing a Scottiſh Pilot. The three Spaniards were laden from Siuill with Wine and Salles Oyle. The Pinnace tooke a ſmall Shippe wherein was thirty tunnes of Madera wines, ſame Wollen Cloath, Silke and Taffata. The Carracks were departed from Tercera eight dayes before. He manned his Boates and obtained refreſhing at Flores profeſſing himſelfe a friend to their King Don Antonio. From thence rowing a ſhipboord, the Boate was purſued two miles together by a monſtrous A monſtrous Fiſh. Fiſh, whoſe Finnes many times appeared about the gils aboue water foure or fiue yards aſunder, and his iawes gaping a yard and a halfe wide, not without great danger of ouerturning the Pinnace, and deuouring ſome of the company: but at the laſt they all eſcaped. Here his Lordſhippe met and accepted into conſort Captaine Dawes with his Shippe and Pinnace, Pinnace, a Shippe of Sir Walter Raleighs, commanded by Captaine Markesbury, and the Barke Lime.

Hauing intelligence that the Carracks were at Tercera, he came vp to the road of Fyall the seuen and twentieth of August, and descrying certaine Shippes at anchor close aboord the shoare, he sent his Boates which boorded a Ship of 250. tunne armed with foureteene cast Peeces, and continued fight till a supply of Boates came from the Fleete to second them, and then recouered the prize. The Spaniards (except Iohn de Palma) leapt all ouer-boord to swimme to the shoare, which was so neere that the Ship was moored to the Castle, from whence the great Ordnance plaied all the time of the fight: onely it was not a play to the Master of the Caruell, whose calfe of his legge was shot away. This Shippe came laden from Port-Ricco with Sugar, Ginger, and Hides. The Ship-boates fetched also out of the Roade some other small Ships laden from Guinnee with Elephants teeth, Graines, Coca nuts, and Goate Skinnes: most of which prizes he sent for England. The next day, eight Englishmen prisoners stole from Tercera in a small Boate, hauing no other yard for their maine saile then two Pipe staues. These told his Lordship, that the Carrackes were departed a weeke before, which moued him to returne for Fyall with purpose to take that Towne.

He arriued, September the tenth, landing his men, the Platforme shot at them in their march, but they comming vp found it and the Towne abandoned, and tooke thereof possession. This Towne containeth 500. households well and strongly built of Lime and Stone, well stored with fresh water, delicate Fruites and Grapes of diuers sorts. He set a guard to preserue the Churches and Religious Houses, and staid there foure dayes till the ransome was brought him, which was 2000. Duckets, most of Church Plate. He shipped from the Platforme eight and fiftie Peeces of Iron Ordnance. The Gouernour of Gracioſa sent his Lordship sixtie Butts of Wine, but excused his want of fresh water. A Ship of Weymouth came thither with a Spanish prize worth sixteene thousand pounds, and brought newes of the West Indie Fleete shortly to come; which after three or foure dayes playing to and fro in rough weather (I let passe a Shippe of Saint Malo, which he took laden with New-found-land Fish) he espied going into the hauen at Angra in Tercera to the number of fifteene saile, being too farre to Leeward to come neere them: and they being strong and fortified with the Castle and Fort, he was forced to giue ouer. And although he left a Pinnace for aduice, intending to waite for them at Sea; yet she returned with newes that they had taken off their sailes, and downe their topmasts with resolution of longer stay. Wherefore he sailed to Saint Michaels, and being there repelled from watering, went to Saint Maries, where they found two Brasil Ships laden with Sugar, which the Flanders sought to bring a ground: but Captaine Lyster hasting the attempt in the face of the enemie and danger of continuall shoare-shot, boarded the vttermost, cut asunder her Cables and Hawsers and towed her away, whiles Captaine Davies entred the other then a ground and abandoned, and was forced to forsake her. Two men were slaine and sixteene hurt. But a greater losse followed whiles the Earle in person sought to get the other ship, Captaine Lyster rashly disualuing the enemies force, the Barre also detayning them on ground in the midst of danger from the enemie, to the losse and hurt of eightie men. His Lordship receiued three shot vpon his Target, and a fourth on the side, not deepe, his head also broken with stones that the bloud couered his face, both it and his legs likewise burned with fire-balls.

The Meg being leakie was sent with the prize into England, and his Lordship held his course for Spaine. By the way he tooke a Portugal ship laden from Brasil, and after that another which was one of the fifteene which had before entred Angra, being a ship of 400. Tunnes, laden from Mexico and Saint Iohn de Vlhua with seuen hundred hides, sixe chists of Cochenele, certaine chists of Sugar and some Siluer. The Captaine was an Italian, and had in her fiue and twentie thousand Duckets aduenture. Thus full of ioy they resolued homewards, but Sea-fortunes are variable, hauing two inconstant Parents, Aire and Water. His Lordship sent Captaine Lyster in the Mexican prize for Portsmouth, which at Helcliffe in Cornwall was wracked, the Captaine and all his companie drowned except fiue or sixe. Scarcitie of drinke caused by contrarie windes, caused his Lordship to seeke to recouer some part of Ireland for relieſe; but wayting for entrance was put off againe, their Beere and Water being all spent. Three spoonfuls of vineger were allowed to each man at a meale with some small relieſe squeezed out of the lees of their wine vessels: which continued fourteene dayes without other supply then the drops of Haile and Raine, carefully saued with Sheets and Napkins. Some dranke vp the soyled running water at the Scupper-holes; others saued by deuise the runnings downe the Masts and tarred Ropes; and many licked the moist Boards, Railes, and Masts with their tongues like Dogs. Yet was that Raine so intermingled with the sprie of the fourming Seas in that extreme storme, that it could not be healthfull: yea, some in their extremitie of thirst dranke themselues to death with their Cannes of salt-water in their hands. Notwithstanding this extreme scarsitie, his noble charitie caused equall distribution of the small store they had aswell to all his prisoners as to his owne people. By this time the lamentable cryes of the sicke and hurt men for drinke was heard in euery corner of the ship: for want whereof many perished (ten or twelue euery night) more more then otherwise had miscarried in the whole Voyage. The storme continuing added to their misery, tearing the ship in such sort, as his Lordships Cabbin, the dining roome, and halfe Decke became all one, and he was forced to seeke a new lodging in the hold. His minde was yet vndaunted and present, his bodily presence and preuentions readie. The last of Nouember hee spake with an English ship, which promised him the next morning two or three tunnes of Wine, but soone after vnfortunately came on ground. The next day hee had some supply of Beere, but not sufficient to enable him to vndertake for England. Hee therefore (the winde seruing) put into Ventre Hauen, in the Westermost part of Ireland, where hauing well refreshed, the twentieth of December he set sayle for England. His Lordship in this Voyage tooke thirteene Prizes, but that which was worth more then all the rest was lost, yet the profit redoubled his aduentures. At his arriuall in London, hee met with the vnfortunate newes of the death of his eldest Sonne Francis Lord Clifford, which died the twelfth of December, 1589. yet was comforted with the birth of the Ladie Anne Clifford (borne the last of Ianuary following (his Daughter, and by the death of Robert Lord Clifford, who dyed the fourteenth of May 1591.) his heire, now the vertuous wife of the Right Honourable Richard Earle of Dorset.

The fourth Voyage 1591.

THis Honourable Sparke was further kindled and enflamed by former disasters, and obtayning of her Majestie a new ship called the Garland, a ship of sixe hundred tunnes, added the Samson Vice-admirall, a ship of his Lordships, of two hundred and sixtie tunnes, the Golden Noble Reare-admirall, and to them the Allagarta, and a small Pinnasse called the Discouerie. With these he set forth 1591. at his owne charge to the Coast of Spaine, where hee tooke good purchase, a ship laden at Saint Thomas with Sugars, which he was forced to cast off by an irrecouerable leake: another also which after long contrary winds in her course for England, was driuen to put into a Spanish Harbour for want of victuals. But in two other hee was more vnfortunate. For Captayne Munson being sent to dispatch the goods, and the Golden Noble to accompany them (which the nights calmenesse prohibited) the ships being thus seuered, were by the Gallies of Penecha set vpon, his Lordship being within hearing of the shot, but by reason of the calme not able to releeue them: so that the two ships were recouered, Captayne Bayly slaine, Captayne Munson and the rest carried Prisoners to Penecha, and thence to Lisbone. His Lordship wrote to the Archduke Albert, then Vice-roy, for their good vsage, otherwise threatning requitall to theirs of whom he presumed hee should take store. For feare whereof the common sort were returned a few dayes after new clothed, Captayne Munson with sixe others only detayned. His Lordship hauing intelligence of a great Armada prepared in the Groyne, to bee sent against the Lord Thomas Howard then Admirall of her Majesties fleet at the Asores, attending to surprize the West Indian fleet, sent the Moone-shine with aduise; otherwise the Lord Howard had runne the fortune of Sir Richard Greenuile, who lost his ship and life, or rather exchanged the one for honor, and for the other made the Spaniards the greatest losers in so deere a purchase. Thus weakned by disaduenture, he was forced to returne for England.

Fifth Voyage 1592.

HIs Lordship considering the inconuenience of her Maiesties command, not to lay any Spanish ship aboard with her ships, lest both might together be destroyed by fire, rather chose to seeke out amongst the Merchants, then to make further vse of the ships Royall. And so hee hired the Tigre a ship of six hundred tunnes, furnished by the Owners for three hundred pounds a moneth wages, in which he went in person, there to adding his owne ship the Samson, and the Golden Noble, with two small ships.

Ill beginnings.

These in the yeere 1592. were set forth, but so crossed with winds, as three moneths victualls were spent in Harbours, before they could get to the Westward of Plymmouth: whereby also one of his Lordships principall designes was frustrate, which was the taking of the Carrikes outward bound, as also the meanes to performe his intended Voyage to the West Indies. Whereupon, not like to satisfie that expectation which might arise from a personall expedition of his Lordship, he transferred the chiefe command to Captayne Norton, and returned to London, leauing instructions with the Admirall to goe for the Asores. Captayne Norton neere Cape Finisterre, met two of the King of Spaines Gallions, returning from Brest in Brittanie; in fight with whom the Golden Noble receiued a shot in her fore-mast, which made them doubt of her further sufficiencie: but hauing fished it as well as they could, Captayne Cave her Commander espied an Argosie bound for Lisbone, and gaue chase to her within shot of the Fort of Cascais within fiue fathome water of a shoald called Catchops, and there in sight of the men on shoare laid her aboard, and returned into England with her.

His returne, and Captayne Norton substituted.

The Admirall with the rest of the fleet arriued at the Asores, and hauing watered and refreshed at Flores (which that Iland permitted to all men of warre, as not able to withstand them) put to Sea and spreading themselues, the Santa Cruce was descried, which made all the haste she could for Angra in Tercera. They hasted after, and being within halfe a league of her, they espied Sir Iohn Burroughs in the Re-bucke, a ship of Sir Walter Raleighs of two hundred tunnes (which had ridden vnseene on the Easterne side of the Iland) standing to crosse the Carrickes way, so that now ſhe was forced, the wind being Weſterly to luffe vp, & recouer the Road of Lagoona on the South end of Flores. The law and cuſtom of the Sea, making al ſhips of war then together (though not formerly conſorted) equall ſharers according to their tunnage of the prizes gained, Captayne Norton out of ciuil reſpect (and not needing help) conſulted with Sir Iohn Burroughs, and they agreed to board her the next morning. But a ſtorme in the night forced them al from their anchors, which the next day being ſomwhat alleiad they recouered the road & found the Carrike warped as neer the ſhore as they could, hauing indeuored alſo to put aſhore ſuch goods as time would permit) and fired, with all her ſayles and flags vp and Ordnance laden, which went off on euery ſide when the fire came to them: a ſight more pleaſing to the Portugals then the Engliſh, whom thoſe accounted now the Owners of that conſumed ſubſtance. The ſurge alſo (iſſue of the late ſtorme) ſcarſly permitted their Boates to land, to ſeeke to get wrackes, and what the Portugals had carried aſhare: euery man (for feare of wracking the Boates on the Rockes) being vp to the neck, and ſome ouer head and eares before they could obtayne the ſhoare; where alſo they were forced on hands and knees to climbe vp a ſteep hill; on the top whereof ſtood many Ilanders tumbling downe great ſtones on them. But all difficulties were made eaſie by reſolution and hope, which brought them to the Towne (now forſaken by her Inhabitants) and made them Maſters of the wracked goods, which ſeemed to flye thither for refuge from the fire and water.

Whiles they were thus employed about this burnt Carrike, Sir Robert Croſſe Captayne of the Foreſight of her Maieſties, Maſter Tomſon Captayne of the Daintie (a ſhip of Sir Iohn Hawkins) Captayne Newport in the Golden Dragon came into this conſort. They were much grieued with this ſpectacle, but comforted that there had but one of the fiue Carrickes paſſed, this had fallen into this terrible Purgatory, and three were ſtill expected. They ſpread themſelues, & continued expecting from the nine and twentieth of Iune, till the third of Auguſt, at which time Maſter Tomſon firſt had ſight of the great Carricke, called Madre de Dios, and comming vp, gaue her a broad-ſide of Ordnance; & falling a ſterne came (hauing laden his Ordnance) again and againe to deliuer his peales to hinder her way, till the reſt of the fleet could come, the Carricke anſwering with the like. Sir Iohn Burroughs and the Golden Dragon came in about three a clocke, and Sir Iohn receiued a ſhot of a Canon Perier vnder water in the Bread-roome, which made him beare vp to ſtop his leake. Sir Robert Croſſe was the next, who to giue her his broad ſide, came ſo neere, that becalming his ſayles he vnwillingly fell aboard the Carricke, which hauing laſhed her faſt by the Strowdes, ſayled away with her by her ſide. The Earle of Cumberlands ſhips, worſt of ſayle, were the laſt which came vp, about eleuen a clocke at night, not minding then to boord her: But hearing the Foreſight, calling to Captayne Norton, And you be men, ſaue the Queenes ſhip: he gaue order to the Samſon, to lay her aboord on the one ſide, and promiſing to doe the like in the Tigre on the other, which about twelue a clock was performed. The Tigre running ſtemling aboord, broke her beake-head to the huddings; the Samſon laid the Foreſight aboord, and entred thorow her into the Carricke, whereby the Foreſight without entring any one man, tooke opportunitie to free her ſelfe.

And now both ſhips companies being entred into the Fore-cheynes, the Fore-caſtle was ſo high, that without any reſiſtance the getting vp had beene difficult. But heere was ſtrong reſiſtance, ſome irrecouerably falling by the boord, and the aſſault continued an houre and an halfe, ſo braue a bootie making the men fight like Dragons, till the Fore-caſtle being gained, the Portugals ſtowed themſelues in holds. The Engliſh now hunted after nothing but pillage, and were readie to goe to the eares about it, each man lighting a Candle, the negligence of which fired a Cabbin, in which were ſixe hundred Cartrages of Powder. The rumour hereof made them all readie to forſake the Carrike, when Captayne Norton with ſome others with buckets of water, aduentured the quenching of that fire: Feare of leake by the fight and neerneſſe of the ſhoare were great parts of his care. All theſe dangers freed, contention about ſo rich a pillage was welnigh kindling in the Commanders, beeing ſo diuerſly commanded and employed: but Sir Iohn Burroughes pretending the Queenes name, Captayne Norton yeelded that hee ſhould take care of the Carricke, which he accordingly repayred, lands about eight hundred Negros on Corno, detaynes the ordinary Saylers, commits the Gentlemen to a ſhip of the Earle of Cumberlands to goe whether they would, who eſcaped not a ſecond rifling by other Engliſhmen of warre, which tooke from them (thus negligently diſmiſſed) nine hundred Diamonds beſides other odde ends. The Earle of Cumberland had notice by a Pinnaſſe ſent from Captayne Norton twentie dayes before the Carricke came into England, and had Commiſſion from the Queene for her ſafe harbouring. Hardly ſhe eſcaped the Rockes of Silly (the Tigre alſo participating in that danger) and came to Dartmouth, being ſo huge and vnweldie a ſhip, as ſhee was neuer remooued out of that Harbour, but there laid vp her bones. His Lordſhips ſhare would haue amounted according to his employment of ſhips and men, to two or three Millions, but becauſe his Commiſſion large enough otherwiſe, had not prouided for the caſe of his returne, and ſubſtituting another in his place, ſome adiudged it to depend on the Queenes mercie and bountie. the Earle was faine to accept of sixe and thirtie thousand pounds for him and his, as out of gift.

Sixt voyage. 1593.

THe next yeere 1593. his Lorship procured two ships Royall, the Golden Lion Admirall commanded by himselfe, the Bonadventure Vice-admirall, and therewith employed the Backe Chaldon, the Pilgrime, the Anthonie, and the Discouerie: which three last when hee came to the Coast of Spaine hee sent for the West Indies. Hee tooke from the protection of fourteene great Hulkes, two French ships of Saint Malowes (which then held for the league, and were therefore reputed in state of Spaniards) of great value, one of which he carried with him, and sent the other into England. The Spaniards hauing intelligence, set forth an Armada against him, which waited for him at the Ilands, and the Earle hearing of their beeing at Flores, and within fiue leagues of them, lighted on a ship which they had sent to descry, which before shee could recouer her fleet, he tooke. He learning by these that the Spanish fleet trebled the force of his, hauing kept company with them one day, quitted them and kept tenne or twelue leagues distant from them three weekes. In which space he fell sicke beyond hope of life, without returne or refreshing from the shoare. Captayne Monson with much hazard, procured him some refreshing from Corue; and leauing the rest of the ships (which tooke one Prize after) hee returned for England, this prouing the most gainfull Voyage which he made before or after.

The seuenth Voyage. 1593.

THe Anthonie of one hundred and twentie tunnes, commanded by Captayne Iames Langton, Pilot Antonio Martino a Spaniard, which had long liued in those Indies, and wel acquainted with those Ports: the Pilgrime of one hundred tunnes, commanded by Captayne Francis Slingsbie, Diego Petrus a Spanish Pilot, and the Discouerie: these three after farewell solemnely taken and giuen by shot on all hands, shaped their Course for the Antillas, and fell with the Iland of Saint Lucia, there and at Matinnio, refreshing themselues three dayes, they concluded to attempt the taking of the Rancherias, which are the Pearle-fishings of Margarita, contayning sixe or seuen seuerall small Villages, which for that purpose they inhabit but not aboue one of them at once, when their fishing failes there, remouing to another and so by course, hauing emptie houses standing alway readie for that purpose. The Pearles for more safetie are monethly carried to the Towne of Margarita three leagues from the waters side. They kept out of sight all day for feare of discouerie, and at night landed and visited two emptie Rancherias: but taking a Spaniard which then came thither in a Boate with two Indians, they made him their guide to the inhabited Rancheria, fiue leagues off, commanding the Boates to row along the shoare, and not to double the point till euening. The two Captaynes with eight and twentie men, marched by land in the heat, which with want of water much annoyed them. They came thither in the beginning of the night, and agreed to assault the place in three places at once, notwithstanding their small numbers, lest they should gather head any where. The Spaniards at first thought it had beene some false alarme of the Gouernour, and bid away with this iesting, but finding it earnest, hastily fled to the woods. Thus did they take the Towne, with some two thousand pounds value in Pearle besides what other pillage the Souldiers gate. Their weapons they brake for feare of pursuite.

Pearl-fishings.

Rancheria assaulted and taken.

In the morning they went aboord the fishing Boats, and tooke their Oysters gotten the night before: and gate aboord their ships (much in suspense for them, not knowing of this sudden enterprize) the fifth day after they had gone from them. The shippes now comming before the Towne demanded ransome for their houses and Canoas, to redeeme which from destruction they gaue two thousand Duckets in Pearle. But Caruels of aduice hauing euery-where giuen intelligence of them, at Cumana they found them on their guard and returned, not without losse. Thence they coasted Terra Firma, till they came to the Ilands of Aruba and Corresao, where they landed and refreshed themselues: Thence to Rio de Hache, which they thought to haue taken, but found the enemy ready for them, with other intelligence that they had carried their goods into the Mountaynes.

Aruba and Corresao. R. de Hache.

Strange watering.

They therefore set saile for Hispaniola, came to Cape Tuberone, and thence to the Bay of Saint Nicholas, and thence to Fort Plat, and others on the North side: thence to Mona, and so Sauona, where they watered againe, in this manner. The Iland is low destitute of any Spring, and to the Sea a small fine Sand. Not twenty paces from the wash of the Sea digging a hole and setting therein a Hogshead (the head knocked out) water is plentifully taken, seeming to be no other then the Sea water, losing the saltenesse in that passage. Thence they went to the Riuer of Socko, about 5. l. Eastward of Saint Domingo, and went in the night 4. l. vp and suddenly surprised an Estanca, that is, a Farme place, where slaues keepe the great mens cattle, make their Cassani bread, dresse their Ginger and Fruites, and doe other offices of Husbandry. Being thereof possessed, they came to parlie for ransome of their Houses, and for their Negros, for which they gaue them the flesh of thirtie Beeues with Cassani and Fruites. Beefe will not keepe in those parts aboue foure and twenty houres, vnlesse first salted, and then dried in the Sunne, being first cut into two sides like Bacon, without any bone left in it, nor any peece of flesh thicker then a mans hand. It must first be searched with a Knife, then rubbed ouer with Salt, and hauing so remained twelue houres must be dried in the Sunne: and foure hot dayes drying will saue it sufficiently.

Other Estanças being likewise taken yeelded like contributions. From thence they went vp on another Riuer called Manaseua, where there was an Ingenio of Sugars which they tooke for their prouisions and caused the owner to ransome it from burning. Thence they went to the mouth of the harbour of Saint Domingo, and rid there at the East side of the same, at Point Torrosilo to intercept any Shipping comming forth. The Sergeant Mayor came hither to treat for ransome of some prisoners, and with him an Englishman of Captaine Lancasters company of Captain Raymunds fleere, whose Ship was newly cast away comming out of the East Indies into those parts, a little to the West of Saint Domingo at Acon. The Spaniards set forth two Caruels to intercept the Boates, which they did, but the Ships recouered the taken and takers together. They brought foure brasse Falcons of Captaine Lancasters Ship, ten others of Iron they left for the heauinesse being somewhat farre from the water. They tooke also a fine Frigot hidden vnder the trees, which they brought for England. Ri. Manseua. Cap. Raymund.

Thence they went for Iamaica, and there found two Barkes laden with Hides and Cannafistola, one of which they manned and sent for England, taken by a Frenchman of warre by the way. Thence they went to Cuba, to Cape Corrientes, and Cape Saint Antonio, to expect shipping comming for the Hauana, but in vaine. Thus after eight moneths spent in the Country, the Antonie and the Frigot went to the Bay of Honduras; the Pilgrime at Hauana spent some few dayes, and then set saile for England, where they arriued in Plimmouth, May 14. 1594. Iamaica. Bay of Honduras.

The Antonie and the Frigot within foure leagues of Porto cauallo descried seuen Shippes in the Road, the least of nine score tun. They anchored within Culuer shot of the Spanish Shippes and moored their Ships a head and sterne, and bent their broad sides vnto them, and there fought all that day with those seuen Shippes and all night, now and then a shot: Captaine Langton sent the Boate and Shallop to the shore, from whence they brought a Frigot of twenty tunne. The next morning they fired the Frigot, and with their Boates purposed to bring her crosse the Admirals halse. But when they saw them comming, they all ranne into the Boates and got ashore. The Admirall let slippe the other sixe, vnhanged their Rudders, and carried them ashore that none should saile away with the Shippes if they were taken. They laded the Admirall with the best out of all the Shippes, and sent ashore to know if they would ransome the rest, which they delaying, they fired one of them laden with Hides and Logwood, and then another laden with Sasaparill. But the King of Spaine had forbidden them any ransoming, and they came not. All their Ordnance was heaued ouerboord saue two or three Brasse peeces, in hope some Englishmen might be the better for them afterward. One of them was a Shippe of fiue hundred tunnes. They brought away the Admirall of 250. and came into Plimmouth the fifteenth of May, the next day after the Pilgrims arriuall. Porto Cauallo. The fight. Ships fired.

ANno 1594. The Earle of Cumberland on his owne charge with the helpe of some aduenturers set forth for the Tercera Ilands the Royall Exchange, Admirall of 250. tunnes, commanded by Captaine George Cave: the May Flower Viceadmirall, of like burden, commanded by Captaine William Antonie: the Samson Rereadmirall, commanded by Captaine Nicholas Downton, a Caruell and a small Pinnace. They set forth from Plimmouth, April 6. In the way they tooke a small Barke laden with Galicia wines, &c. Iune the second, they had sight of Saint Michael; After ten dayes they descried the great Carracke of 1000. tuns, called the Cinque LLagas or Fiue Wounds. The May Flower first got vp to her and receiued an vnwelcome salutation. In the night the Samson came in and continued the fight, and at last the Admirall. They agreed that the Admirall should lay the Carracke aboord in the Prow, the Viceadmirall in the Waste, and the Rereadmirall in the Quarter. But it fell out that the Admirall laying her aboord at the looffe, recoiled a sterne, the Viceadmirall being so neere that she was faine to runne with her bolt sprit betweene the two quarters, which forced the Rereadmirall to lay her aboord on the Bowe. The eight Voyage 1594. The great Carracke called Fiue wounds. Borded.

After many bickerings, fire-workes flew about interchangeably. At last the Vice-admirall with a Culuering-shot at hand fired the Carrick in her Sterne, and the Reare-admirall her Forecastle by a shot that gaue fire to the Mat on the Beake-head, from thence burning to the Mat on the Bolt-sprit, and so ran vp to the Top-saile-yard: they plying and maintayning their fires so well with their small shot, that many of those which came to quench them were slaine. These fires encreased so sore that the Vice-admiralls fore-saile and fore-top-saile were both burnt, the Reare-admirall being in like predicament, whiles the Admirall with much danger and difficultie quenched the fires throwne into her from the Carrick. To saue themselues in this heat and furie, the Admirall and Vice-admirall fell off, leauing the Reare-admirall foule of the Carricks sprit-saile-yard in great danger to haue beene consumed with her, had they not helped her off with their Boats. Carracks fired. English Ships in danger.

Pitifull distresse of the Carrike.

In this distresse the companie brought the Commander Don Francisco de Mele to put forth a flagge of truce: but the Carricks Carpenter more desperate, comforted him with hope of quenching the fire, whereupon he cryed, Coragio, I will neuer yeeld, notwithstanding the protestations, contestations, and obtestations of the lamenting vnderlying companie. One inraged on him, charging him with this soule vncharitablenesse, threatning vengeance on him and his for this obstinacy in suffering so many soules to perish, rather then to accept the English assistance. Some of their chiefest, rich in chaines and jewels, cast off all, and naked as they were borne cast themselues into the Sea to aduenture vpon English mercy; amongst all which, was taken vp by the Reare-admirals Boat, two men of note and three of inferiour qualitie. These three were clothed and set on land: the other two were Don Manu Velio Periera (who had sometimes bin Gouernour of Mozambique and Sofala, and returning for Spaine in a Carrick of great value, lost neere Bona Speranza, was now here a passenger) and Bras Carero, Captaine of another Carrick cast away neere Mozambique, here also a passenger. These two were brought into England and ransomed. 10

The impediments of taking the Carrike.

Three impediments happened to the Assailants, the Reare-admirall hurt with a shot and made in person vnseruiceable being a valiant man; the Vice-admirall slaine; and the Admirall himselfe Captaine Cane shot all the first thorow both the legs; whereof shortly after his returne hee dyed. The Caruell and Pinnace were accidentally absent: one and twentie were slaine in the fight. In the Carrick were many of qualitie; and before infection had fallen amongst them neere the Cape, their number of white and blacke men exceeded 1100. all which perished but those before named. The burden of this Carrick and her lading in wealth did farre exceede the Madre de Dios, returning after a long voyage fraighted with pearles, jewels, drugs, silkes (her meanest lading pepper) besides the best of the Nazaret (lately cast away) her commodities, the Captaine whereof had beene Bras Carero aforesaid. 20

Another Carrike.

They set saile after this disaster for Flores and after some refreshing, on the nine and twentieth of June descryed another Carrick of 1500. Tunnes, which they supposed to bee the Saint Philip one of the King of Spaines men of warre. After some more cautelous sight occasioned by that conceit, they sent their Boat to summon her to yeeld to the Queene of Englands ships vnder the command of the Earle of Cumberland, or else to vndergoe the fortunes of the Five wounds, the sorrowfull witnesses whereof they presented those two former Captaines: to whom the Generall Don Lewys de Cofkyno answered; As your Generall hath beene at the burning of the Five wounds, so I haue beene at the burning and taking of the Reuenge of the Queene of England. Therefore let him doe what he dare doe for his Queene, and I will doe what I am able for my King: commanding the Boat instantly to be gone. The fight was renewed, but intermitted by the calme, and remitted by the remisser companie, their Captaines being slaine and wounded. Whereupon they gaue ouer and arriued in England in August and the beginning of September, hauing done much harme to the enemie, and little good to themselues. 30

The ninth voyage. 1595.

THe Earle not liking his ill partage in the Madre de Dios, nor this vnhappie losse of two Carricks for want of sufficient strength to take them, builded a ship of his owne of 900. Tunnes at Detford, which the Queene at her launching named The Scourge of Malice, the best ship that euer before had beene built by any subiect. She made his Lordship three voyages, and after was sold to the East Indian Companie, whence shee made many returnes (before in the name of the Dragon related) and proued fortunate against the Portugals in the East. His Lordship had thought to haue gone in her in person, and prepared the Alcede his Vice-admirall, commanded by Captaine Monson, the Antonie commanded by Daniel Iarret and the old Frigot. But when he had gone as farre as Plymouth on his intended voyage, Her Maiestie by Sir Francis Drake and Sir Iohn Hawkins, sent for him to returne, which commandement his Lordship obeyed, but the ships proceeded to seeke their aduenture, giuing command of the Admirall to Captaine Langton; which Captaine Monson misliking went forth literally to seeke his owne fortune in the Alcede. The Scourge, the Antonie, and the Frigot, went together to the Assores, where first they tooke a Saint Thome Caruell of 100. Tunnes laden with Sugars. After which neere the Iland of Flores in a fogge they espyed a great Ship lying by the Lee, which they conceiued to be a Carrick, but found it to be the Saint Thomas, Vice-admirall of the King of Spaines fleet, lying for the wafting of the East and West Indian fleetes: with whom they fell in so hot a fight that shee was glad to beare vp to recouer her selfe amongst the rest of her Consorts; which after the cleering of the fogge they discerned not farre from them. Thence they went to the Coast of Spaine, where they tooke three Dutch ships of the East-Countries laden with Wheat, Copper, and other munitions and prouisions for the King of Spaine. Hauing spent their victuals they returned. 40

Tenth voyage. 1596.

AN. 1596. his Lordship set forth againe the Scourge of Malice, in which he went in person accompanied with the Dread-naught of the Queenes, and some other small ships; and about thirtie or fortie leagues from England was incountred with a storme, wherein the Scourge spent her mayne mast, and was made vnseruiceable for that voyage: so that hee was forced to returne for England in the Dread-naught. 60

THe ſame yeere perceiuing that the Earle of Eſſex and the Lord Admirall were to goe to the Coaſt of Spaine with a great fleet of the Queenes, together with a ſquadron of Flemmiſh men of warre, his Lordſhip thought good to awaite ſome gleanings in ſo great a Vintage, and ſet forth the Aſcenſion of 300. Tunnes and foure and thirtie pieces of Ordnance, manned with 120. men, commanded by Captaine Francis Slingsby, chiefly to expect ſuch ſhips as ſhould come from Lisbone. The Aſcenſion thus furniſhed, met with ſuch a fret of winde that with all haſte they handed in their ſailes, and being within the Hooke of Godwins Sands droue with two anchors ahead, till they were within two Cables length of the Sands. They then let fall their ſhort anchor, which by Gods grace ſtayed them till the next day noone (hourely expecting their wrack) and at laſt cut their Cables. Hauing refurniſhed themſelues at Plimouth they ſet forwards and comming to the Rocke, lay off and on. After ſome fruſtrated attempts by the Boat on a Caruell (in which the Captaine was ſore wounded) the King of Spaines Admirall Strago ſet forth ſixe ſhips againſt them, and himſelfe and another ſhip laid the Aſcenſion aboard, the one on the Bow, the other on the Quarter, and now the mouthes of the great Ordnance (being neere in place to whiſper) roared out their thunders and pierced thorow and thorow on all hands. Which ended, the Spaniards leaped into the fore-chaines and mayne-chaines, thinking to haue entred the ſhip, but were brauely repelled. The Engliſh ſeeing many Spaniards together vnder the Admirals halfe decke, diſcharged amongſt them a Fowler laden with caſe ſhot to their no ſmall harme: ſo that the Spaniards had enough and were content to fall off. Of ours two and twentie were ſlaine and hurt, which loſſe lighted aſmuch on them which hid themſelues as thoſe which ſtood to the fight. To preuent the like afterwards, they put ſafe in hold the Chirurgeon, Carpenter, and Cooper for the publike dependance on them, and made faſt the hatches that others ſhould not ſeeke refuge. But the Spaniſh Admirall making a brauado, and ſeeing them readie to receiue them, tacked about and went in for Liſbone without any further leaue-taking. The Aſcenſion continued on the Coaſt till they had but fourteene dayes victuals left, and then returned with hurts to themſelues, and loſſe alſo to his Lordſhip.

Names of the ſhips and their Captaines employed in the twelfth voyage.

For the land Souldiers, Sir Iohn Barkley was Coronell Generall: Captaine William Moſey Lieutenant Colonell: Captaine Hercules Folyambe Sergeant Major: Captaine Arthur Powell Lieutenant Colonell of the Earles Regiment: Captaines, Lewis Orrell, Thomas Roberts, Henrie Gyll, Thomas Cocke, Hugh Starkie, Ralph Rookesby, Roger Tirwhit; Captaine Andrew Andrewes Leader of the Earles Companie: Captaine Iames Tothill Leader of Sir Iohn Barkleys Companie: Captaines, Iames Euans and George Orrell Corporals of the field: Captaine Iohn Man Prouoſt Marſhall: Captaine Arthur Milles Maſter of the Artillerie and Prouant Maſter.

The noble Earle thus attended and furniſhed (chiefly at his owne charges) ſet ſaile with this Fleet from Portſmouth the ſixt of March. But you ſhall haue a better Relator.

His Lordſhip hauing had the ſpoile of all things at his pleaſure, prepared for the ſending aboard the Ordnance, Munitions, Bels, Ginger, Sugar, &c. of braſſe Ordnance hee tooke aboue ſixtie peeces: ſetting ſaile for England Iuly 16. In which returne his Lordſhip loſt a Barge, by his commandement ſunke in the Hauen to the prejudice of the Enemie. Another Barge caſt away in a ſtorme at the Bermudas. The Pegaſus wracked vpon Goodwin Sands, and the old Frigot vpon Vſhent, with the loſſe of about ſeuen hundred men, whereof ſix hundred dyed of the bloudie flix and Calenture at Porto Rico: ſixtie ſlaine in fight, and fortie drowned in the wracks of the old Frigot and Pegaſus.

CHAP. II.

The Voyage to Saint Iohn de Porto Rico, by the Right Honorable, GEORGE, Earle of Cumberland, written by himſelfe.

1596. WOrthieſt of your Sexe, my chiefe Commandreſſe, to giue content to your wiſh in bare plainneſſe. I haue ſet downe the courſes and fortunes of my late performed iourney. The ſixth day of March, with my whole Fleet I ſet ſaile out of the Sound of Plimouth, the winde being proſperous though much. Wee kept altogether till the when the faire paſſage put mee in hope that God had prepared this an vnlooked for fortune, if it were well handled, in getting vpon the Coaſt of Spaine ſure intelligence whether the Carricks were gone, and how neere they were readie if not gone. The doing of which vndiſcouered, though I knew was hard; yet not impoſſible for him that could well worke: And conſidering the mightie importance, I tooke the courſe to doe it my ſelfe, taking with me the Guiana and the Skout; which two I meant ſhould onely be ſeene vpon the Coaſt, and left the reſt of the fleet, appointing them where to lye till I came vnto them. But God whoſe will is beyond mans reſolutions, forced mee to alter this; for my Maſts not made ſo ſufficiently as I expected, both now began to ſhew their weakneſſe, eſpecially my mayne Maſt, which I continually looked would haue gone ouer board. My Mariners were at their wits end: and I proteſt I would haue giuen fiue thouſand pounds for a new one; the greateſt part of my ſtrength both by Sea and Land hauing beene loſt, if that ſhip had returned in this extremitie.

His purpoſe fruſtrated.

Deſect in the mayne Maſt.

Hearing all that would, I heard many opinions to little purpoſe, and at length reſolued (though many thought it dangerous) leſt the winde ſhould with a ſtorme come vp at Weſt North-weſt, to goe to the Burlings and there ride, till my Maſts were fiſhed, my ſelfe knowing the Roade, though not any elſe in my ſhip: the windes they ſpake of, I feared not; my onely doubt was that I ſhould be diſcouered, being within three leagues of Penechia; Caruels comming off euery day to fiſh; but this extremitie forced deuice how to hide what I was. For goe thither I muſt, hopeleſſe otherwiſe to repaire thoſe deſperate ruines. My ſhip was black which well furthered my deuice, and though ſhee were great, yet ſhewed not ſo afarre off. Wherefore I came in about eight of the clocke at night vpon Thurſday, when I was ſure all the Fiſher-men were gone to ſell their fiſh at Lisbone, and from the mayne they could not make mee: this was the ſixteenth of March. Before the morning I had downe my top-maſts, my mayne yard vnrigged, and all things readie for my Carpenters to worke. The ſmall ſhips with mee I made ſtand off to Sea all day, that not hauing any in my companie I ſhould be the leſſe ſuſpected. And thus with a ſtrange Flagge and Ancient vpon my poope, I rid without giuing chaſe to any, as though I had beene ſome Merchant, euery day diuers ſhips comming by me that were both good prize, and had beene worth the taking. Vpon Sunday night the Fiſher-men returne to the Burlings; wherefore to goe away vndiſcouered of them, and alſo ſoone to meet with my fleet, which I had appointed to tarry for mee in that heigth betwixt twentie and thirtie leagues off, and that they ſhould keepe with them what ſhips ſoeuer they met, that were outward bowne: I ceaſed not working day nor night, and by Saturday at night was readie to ſet ſaile, when within night I heard the Ordnance goe off betwixt me and the ſhoare, and well knew it was a ſmall ſhip of Hampton and my little Pinnace the Skout, that were in fight with a ſhip which they chaſed to windward of mee before night, and fearing their match too hard, as in truth it proued, I, for loſing time let ſlip mine anchor, and ſoone came to helpe the poore little ones much ouer-matched. At my firſt comming vp ſhee ſhot at me; yet forbare I, and went ſo neere that I ſpake to them, and demanding of whence they were? anſwere was made, of Lisbone. Then aſſuring my ſelfe ſhee was a Biſcaine, and would fight well, I came cloſe to her, and gaue her my broad ſide, which ſhee ſo anſwered as that I had three men killed, fiue or ſixe ſhot, and my ſhip in ſixe or ſeuen places, ſome of them very dangerous. So I laid her aboard and tooke her, ſhee proouing a ſhip of Hamburgh, laden with Corne, Copper, Powder, and prohibited commodities. I made the more haſte to end this fight, for that I would be out of the ſight of the Land before day, which as I deſired I was, and there met with a French man laden with Salt going into Liſbone: which ſmall Barke was very fit to ſerue my purpoſe. For putting ſome of my men into her, I ſent her into Cales Road, commanding them to fall with it by day in the morning, and keeping themſelues cloſe to ſhew none but the French, and make a waft to call ſome Portugall to them for Pilotage vp the Riuer. This deuice ſucceeded well: for betimes in the morning they were faſt by a Caruell that was going to fiſh, which (not ſuſpecting them) came cloſe to them, ſo as the men I put in ſhot at them with Muskets ſo faſt, as not any of them durſt ſtirre to handle their ſailes till their Boat went aboard, and ſo brought them off to me. Theſe men came that night from Liſbone, and aſſured me that the next faire winde there would come forth fiue Caracks, with more treaſure then euer went in one yeere for the Indies, and fiue and twentie ſhips for Braſil. This welcome newes was accompanied with the meeting againe of my whole fleet, which at that very inſtant I deſcryed. So none being ioyned, I wiſhed for nothing but an happy houre to ſee thoſe long-looked-after after Monsters, whose wealth exceedes their greatnesse; yet bee they the greatest ships in the world. My fleet being thus ioyned, I called all the Captaines and Masters aboard, and gaue directions where and in what order we should lye, and how we would fight, not doubting to meete them being vndiscouered, and well knowing the way they would come. Being drawne from our rests with our ioy in our hope, wee so long continued gasing for that which came not, as I began to feare some vnluckie accident, and leauing my fleet alone, with a Caruell I went in with the shoare, and with her and my Boat got another Caruell, by whom I vnderstood that the very same day that I tooke the first Caruell at the Rock, there came into Lisbone a ship that brought Spaniards out of England, and was in Plimouth when I came by, which assured them that I was comne forth, and they verily beleeued was looking for them, so as they sent Caruels of aduice to search euery where for me, one of which when I returned to my fleet, I vnderstood had comne by them to windward and discouered them all. So I feared it was vaine to tarry there any longer; for either they would shift their course or not come at all. So knowing that their seeing of me could not hurt, I went to see if they were comne so low downe the Riuer, as that it were possible to lay them aboard in the night where they rode. Now againe I left my fleet at Sea, and (the winde something fauouring me) got in betwixt the Cat-ships, from whence I saw them riding in the Bay of Wiers. Here had I too much of my desire, seeing what I desired to see, but hopelesse of the good I expected by seeing them: for they were where no good could bee done vpon them, riding within the Castle of Saint Iulian, which hath in it aboue an hundred peeces of great Ordnance; so as though I could haue got in (which I verily beleeue I could) it had not beene possible to haue returned, the winde being euer very scant to come forth withall, and hanging for the most part so farre Northerly, as that for feare of the Cat-ships, I must of force haue comne close by their platformes. With this vnpleasing sight I returned to my fleet, and that night being the fift of Aprill, wee went altogither for the South Cape. The eight day I went from thence towards the Canaries, and the thirteenth day I came to Lancerota, where by diuers both Englishmen and Spaniards I had beene informed that there dwelt a Marquesse, that was worth 100000. pounds, if he could be taken suddenly: which I doubted not, hauing aboard mee three or foure which had beene prisoners there, who assured me they could bring me into the Road by night: and being on land could guide me to the Castle where he dwelt, how darke soeuer it were. But they fayled in all: for when I came to the land, they knew not where the Road was; so as I was forced to anchor finding ground, but where it was they knew not. And in truth, it was so neere a ledge of Rocks, as if we had gone any further, the ships had beene in danger. In the morning, though then I had no other hope left me to catch the Marquesse, saue onely that perhaps he would hold his Castle; yet I thought it meete to set all my Souldiers on shoare, for that till this time I neuer had giuen them any trayning, and well knew many of them to bee very raw and vnpractised to seruice at land. Wherefore my selfe then fearing an ague, tooke physick, was let bloud, and sent Sir Iohn Barkley with them, knowing for certaine that place could make no resistance against such a force. So being landed they marched to the Towne, which the guides said, was but three miles from the landing place. But it proued more then three leagues, the most wicked marching for loose stones and sand that euer I saw. That night I heard not from them, nor the next day till night, when I had word brought that they had taken the Towne and Castle without resistance. Onely as they marched the people of the Countrie (I meane the Mountayners) would watch if any straggled, and would most desperately assault them with their Lances, being so swift of foot, as when once they runne, not any could come neere them. In the Castle was not any thing but some few peeces of Ordnance dismounted. In the Towne (whose houses were most beggarly) some little wine onely, which little was too much; for it distempered so many, that if there had beene a strong enemie to haue attempted, they should haue found drunken resistance; the meaner sort being most ouer-throwne alreadie, and the Commanders, some distempered with wine, some with pride of themselues, or scorne of others; so as there were very few of them but that fell to most disorderly outrage one with another. And Sir Iohn Barkley with much griefe told me, if I tooke not some seuere course to remedie those things, he assured himselfe it would be the ruine of our voyage. Whereupon the next day I went on shoare to see my men trayned, and calling all the Commanders before me, rebuked them for those faults, and gaue Articles both for their courses at Land and Sea, reading to them my Commissions, that they might know I had full power to execute those punishments I set downe for euery offence; and assuring them I would not be slow in doing it if they offended. The next day being the one and twentieth of Aprill, I set saile, and betwixt the Grand Canarie and Teneriffe met with the Royall Defence, a ship which should haue comne with mee out of England, but being not readie followed me; and thwart the Rocke, after I was comne from thence met with a Caruell, which by ten English men that were prisoners in Lisbone, was stollen forth in the night. They assured me (word being brought thither that I was gone off the Coast) they resolued to send forth the Carracks, and that within a few dayes they would come forth. Which I making knowne to all my Commanders, they agreed with me that it was fit to spend some few dayes and looke for their comming; so did we: but not seeing them, the yeere was so farre spent that I assured my selfe they were were either gone by, or would not goe this yeere, their time for doubling the Cape of Buona Speranza being now past; for they neuer went out so late but once, and then were all forced to returne.

Danger of late going forth for the Cape of Good Hope.

Though many would imagine the missing of this faire fortune should much haue troubled me; I assure you it did not: the reason I will let you know hereafter. Now againe, calling all the Captaines and Masters aboard me, I first asked them whether they thought it was fit to tarry any longer vpon that hope, telling them mine opinion how little reason there was in it, and that longer stay might much hurt our other purposes, to which all agreeing, we resolued to proceede. Then I asked whether they thought the time was not too farre spent to get Farnanbuco? to which many answered; No. And though I well knew what it was, I would not reply till I had called two Portugall Pilots, which I brought with me out of England, old men that had at the least beene twentie times apiece there out of Portugall: And asking their opinions, they told vs that they had gone it at that time of the yeere, but diuers times put backe, and at their best passage beene sixe or seuen weekes in getting one degree. To which there were that answered, though sometimes it happened so, yet it might fall out otherwise: and if not, though we should be long in getting thither, yet there was assurance to win that place with ease, and getting it to haue wealth enough. Till this I kept secret, what now euery occasion gaue mee fit time to vtter. Hauing dispatched from mee a ship that was in Trade at the Canaries and bound for England, and being so farre shot to the Southwards, as I was sure not to meet with any going to the Northwards; so as not any newes where I was could come into Spaine, till it came out of the Indies: which winning of time would giue me so good leisure to fortifie my selfe in the place whither I meant to goe, as hardly I would bee supplanted till either wee honorably quitted the place, or had supply; you may see, too griedie desire is a dangerous enemie, for where I should haue but lightly touched this as yet, I was almost entring into the bowels of my intention, the time ripe I saw to speake more freely then I had done. I told them I had aduisedly considered, of all these things now pleaded, and could, as I thought, before their speech haue giuen them so sufficient reasons for the shaping of some other course then Brasil, as would haue stayed all these pleadings. But I thought it better first to beare euery one speake his minde, and then to vtter my conceit. Which though I assured my selfe was the best for vs, yet if any amongst them could giue reason against it, I would not onely take it well, but be drawne to them. Then layed I before them how our men were already many of them sicke; and that vndoubtedly the crossing the Line would keepe those from recouering, although the passage were as good as man could wish. Besides, I remembred them of intelligence giuen vs both vpon the Coast of Spaine and the Iland, that the King had sent thither to defend the place against me six hundred Souldiers; and also it was likely that he had giuen order, that if they saw not themselues strong enough to resist, that with their portable goods they should flee into the Mountaines, and set their Sugar and Brasil wood on fire; then were we sure to haue nothing: and lastly, if wee beat long vnder the Line, vndoubtedly the most of our men would fall sicke, and then should we be forced to returne without doing any thing; for to no other place could we goe, once bearing vp vpon that occasion.

His speech.

With this I pawsed, to heare if there would be any thing said by them: but not any speaking, I told them I well perceiued by their silence the doubts my words had driuen into their mindes: but not to conceale any longer from them, that which hitherto I had for all their goods done, the truth was I neuer had intention, after I found I could not get out of England before Christmas, to goe for Brasil, but onely for the west Indies, where there were many possibilities to make a voyage by: as first, the sacking of Margarita, which they knew was rich; then Porto Rico, after that Saint Domingo, then in July the outward bound fleet would be in the Acoa, where we could not misse them: and if these gaue vs not content, in the end of July or August, wee should meete the fleet at Cape Saint Antonio. Many of these reasons I vttered, more to carry my men with good liking thither, then for any thought I had of diuers of them. And my speech had desired successe, for they all went with greedie desire, and hopefull expectation, I appointing them to make what haste they could to Dominica, where we would stay one for another, thinking it better to goe straggling thither then to goe togither, there being possibilitie to meete some purchase by the way, which we were in most likelihood of when we spred furthest. Therefore we spred thus till we met at Dominica, wee straggled all saue the Alcedon, the Centurion, and two Flemmings, laden with Corne, which I tooke vpon the coast of Spaine, and still carried alongst with me, as chiefe meanes to effect my most desired purpose. These with all the rest came safely to Dominica, where wee carried our sicke people ashoare the three and twentieth of May, and tarried till the first of Iune.

His purposes and probabilities.

They arriue at Dominica.

This Iland is onely inhabited by Indians that mightily hate the Spaniard, but loue the English very much. They brought vs great store of Potatoes, Pines, Plantins, Tabacco, Mammyes, Indies-pepper, and other of their Countrie commodities to trade. They most desired to haue Swords, Hatchets, or Knines, and very much Clothes. But if they could get none of these, they would sell their commodities for glasse beades, and such trifling things. From hence I went to the Virgines Ilands which are not inhabited, and there purposed againe to muster my men, the Iland of Dominica being so wooddie as that there I could not doe it; and in the euening the third day I came there to an anchor. The next morning early I had them on shoare, and after mustering them for many reſpects, found it meet to ſpeake to them, which as neere as I can remember, was thus: Kinde Countrymen and fellow Souldiers, I am ſure there is none here but haue marked, My Lords and the wiſeſt wonder at my light regarding the many groſſe faults committed amongſt you ſince my ſpeech. comming to Sea; ſuffering euery man to doe what he would, vrging no man further then he liſted: Many cauſes drew me to this patience, onely one I will now vtter, the reſt being fitter to conceale to my ſelfe, then to make ſo many acquainted with. The great hope of meeting the Caracks made me hope for a ſhort iourney; which hapning, I thought it better to returne with euery mans good word, then by iuſt puniſhing of any to haue their ill word at my returne. But that hope as you now ſee is altogither paſſed, and now we are ſettled to another courſe, which though it may be will not proue altogither ſo rich, and muſt of force keepe vs longer abroad; yet I aſſure you vpon my honour and conſcience, I doe conſtantly beleeue there will ſpring out of it more glorie to God, more ſeruice to our Prince and Countrie, and more honour to our ſelues, then could haue done by the Caracks if we had taken them all. For the better performance we muſt fall to another courſe; I in gouerning, you in obeying; I in directing you what to doe, you in following my direction. To which end I haue already deliuered you certaine Articles, wherein you may ſee how the breach of them ſhall be puniſhed. And though theſe twentie dayes at the leaſt you haue had them amongſt you, yet heare I there are ſome which wiſh they could but light vpon ſo much as they would conceale from me. And he that concealeth any Baſeneſſe of theft. thing gotten in this iourney, ſtealeth from euery man in it, all going to haue their part of whatſoeuer is gotten. This I thought not vnfit particularly to touch, becauſe the ſpeech hath giuen great offence to the whole Armie, and no doubt may encourage ſome men of lewd and baſe humours amongſt vs to doe the like: but let the warning I now giue you driue theſe thoughts out of their thoughts that hold them: and be alſo a warning that they heedfully obſerue the reſt of the Articles. For I aſſure you, my ouer-patient and forced ſluggiſh humour is ſhaken off, and I will neither ouer-ſee, nor ſuffer to paſſe vnpuniſhed ill deſeruers.

This deliuered, I preſently ſhipped my men which were by muſter and gaue order to ſet ſaile. Now hauing ſet all things in order, and wanting nothing but ſure knowledge, where might bee our ſafeſt and moſt commodious landing, there were many of my Maſters and Sea Captaines that would willingly haue gone through the Virgines, as Sir Francis Drake did; when Sir Francis hee was there. But I finding the way through the paſſages more certaine and ſafe tooke that Drake. courſe; more deſiring to be the firſt that tooke Porto Rico, then the ſeoond that paſſed through the Virgines. And the fift day in the morning, I ſent for Captaine Lanckton, and Knotsford, who was Maſter of the Gallion, very expert in thoſe Countries, and was Pilot with Iohn Hawkins when hee dyed, and putting either of them into a ſmall Pinnace, ſent them before that they might make the landing place before night, and my ſelfe with the fleet did linger, and ſo when it was darke, putting out all our ſailes, came to them vndiſcouered, which was about one of the clocke that night. But they did mee no good, for the place they went to diſcouer was further They arriue at from them then they expected, ſo as it was darke before they came to it, and for feare of carry- the Iland. ing me to leeward ſtayed, and told me they had done nothing. Wherefore I ſtood cloſe vpon a winde off and on, vntill the morning, when being cloſe by the ſhoare there was to my ſeeming Euill ſurmiſes. a ſmooth landing place, which by all them in my fleet that were there with Sir Francis Drake, I was told was impoſſible to get, the winde ouer-blowing all day out of the Sea. Wherefore I tooke my Boat and Sir Iohn Barkley with me, rowed thither, and found it not onely ſmooth, but His ſearch. by the view of our eyes a moſt goodly ſandie Bay, to march all alongſt by the Sea ſide till wee came to the Towne. Being well pleaſed with this ſight I returned aboard, and gaue order to all the Commanders preſently to land there. But by diuers of them many obiections were made againſt landing there. Firſt, that the march ſeemed to be great: Then, that none knew the ways Obiections. and laſtly, if the Towne ſtood in an Iland, as they often had heard it did, we ſhould be forced to returne to our ſhips, not hauing meanes to get vnto them. Gentlemen, ſaid I, a willing minde makes The Earles long ſteps with great eaſe: I haue beene ſicke and am not now ſtrong; you ſhall goe no further nor faſter anſwere. then I will doe before you: for guides wee need no better then our eyes; the Towne ſtanding by the Sea ſide, and we landing from the Sea ſee no other but faire ſandie Bayes all the way thither: ſo as much neerer we might land if we were ſure there were any where to leeward ſuch a head-land as this that maketh ſmooth landing within it. But that being vncertaine I meane to take this, which I doe aſſuredly beleeue God hath directed vs vnto; for I am ſure, it is better then any euer told me of. And for your laſt argument, that if it be an Iland we ſhall not get into it, that reaſon is nothing; for you ſee our Boats may row by vs, and when we ſhall come to any water they may ſet vs ouer, if it be deepe: in ſhallow places we ſhall paſſe our ſelues. So all you haue or can ſay being now throughly anſwered, let me haue no more ſpeaking, but get your men all into your Boates, and follow in order as I haue directed you. I will goe before in my Boat, and when you ſee my Colours diſplayed, make all the haſte you can to land. This doe with good heart and courage, aſſuring your ſelues you haue the mayden-head of Porto Rico, and ſo poſſeſſe the keyes of all the Indies. And though there bee not ſo many millions in it as there was when a greater force then we went without it: yet aſſure your ſelfe the Towne is rich. The laſt yeere there were eighteene ſhips laden with Ginger and Sugar from it. I aſſure you there are mynes of gold in it. And though theſe be motiues to draw you to fight, yet haue I not told you of one. You being Souldiers and carrying the mindes of Souldiers, will, I doubt not, carry you beyond all profit. It is thought by men of iudgement too strong for this strength to carry, because it hath alreadie resisted a much stronger force: so as we should haue iust cause to be proud of taking it, and (beleeue me) assured we are to take it, now we see where to land quietly, the Indian Souldiers liuing too pleasantly to venter their liues: for if they liue two or three yeares, they get with the labour of their slaues (without taking any paines themselues) whatsoeuer they loose; so as they will make great showes, and is maybe indure one brunt; but if they doe any more, feare me in peeces.

This said, the Captaines that were there went for their men, telling all the rest my resolution. And as soone as they saw me rowe towards the shoare all followed as I had directed. Thus landed we the sixt day in a most fine place, where not any wet his furniture nor saw any enemie. By which meanes all our troopes were put in good order, and we made much stronger; then a small resistance before we were martialled would haue made vs. This place was 3 leagues from the Towne, towards which we marched in the extreame heate of the day, the way being sandy, and would no doubt haue tired many, but that going all alongst by the Sea, we at pleasure marched in it when we listed; and besides had the place wee went to, still in our sight, which standing vpon the top of an hill shewed much nearer then it was. When wee had gone some three leagues, we saw six or seuen Horsemen; which (the forlorne hope) comming within sixteene or twenty score of, presently turned their Horses and galloped away. Not long after there came a Negro willingly offering his seruice, which I was most glad of; assuring my selfe he would haue guided me to the Towne: but he not speaking Spanish nor vnderstanding it, we were led by him to the entrance of the Sea that maketh the Iland, where I imagined with Boates to get ouer. But of that we were hindred by a bulwarke standing on the Iland side close vpon the mouth of the entrance, and hauing in it fiue peeces of Brasse. The entrance is not aboue sixtie yards ouer, and a little within it is stopped quite ouer with piles driuen in; so as it was not possible to get in there so long as the enemy possessed it. Then were we at our wits end, but I assured my selfe there was some other good way ouer where those Horsemen rid which we saw before; and with much a doe made this dumbe guide vnderstand that I would haue him carry me to the place where they went ouer. When I perceiued he vnderstood me, I followed him through the most wickedest wood that euer I was in in all my life, & at length he brought me to the reare part of all my troope. And for that it grew late, and I was loath to loose any time, I made them march, being Sir Iohn Barkleys Regiment; and gaue order mine owne should come in the reare, not hauing place nor time then to shift them. We had not gone farre, but we crossed the footing of the Horsemen we saw before, and following them were about Sunset brought to a narrow Bridge, whereon three might goe a front about two score ouer, and to our seeming about the midst of it a strong Gate of wood close shut; and at the further side of the water a Block-house with Ordnance, by which there stood fiue Spaniards. When I and Sir Iohn Barkley had viewed this place, we vnderstood by another Negro, that comming thither, at a low water we might passe ouer wading besides the Cause. And he telling vs that it was not low water till two of the clocke in the morning, we returned to a little plaine (that we passed by before) to rest our men and giue them some refreshing, for the better inabling them to fight in the morning.

§. I.

The Shippes employed in the Voyage and accidents on the Coasts of Spaine, in the Canaries, and the Nauigation thence to Dominica.

HIs Lordship being authorised by Letters Patents giuen at Westminster the foureteenth of Ianuary, to leuie Forces seruiceable by Sea and Land, came downe to Portesmouth the eight of February, wherein nothing memorable happened till Munday, being the thirteenth of March. While we were at Morning Prayer, his Lordship happened to see a Gallant of the company (purposely I name him not) reading of Orlando Furioso; to whom himselfe in person went presently after Seruice, all the Company being by, and hauing told him that we might looke that God would serue vs accordingly, if we serued not him better; bad him be sure that if againe he tooke him in the like manner, he would cast his Booke ouer-board, and turne himselfe out of the Ship. The next day by obseruation it was found, that towards the euening we had runne within fiue or sixe and twenty leagues of the North Cape: whereupon his Lordship gaue direction to the Vice-admirall, that he should carry his Flagge in the Maine-top, and with a peece of Ordnance should hale in the rest of the Fleete to his Lee, and that they all with him as their Admirall for the time, should this night winde South and by West; and there they should ride off and on scattering themselues to the North and South, in the height of the Burlings, till his Lordshippe should come to them. In the meane season himselfe attended onely with the Guiana, and the Scourge, Scout, run to fall in with the North Cape, meaning by the taking of some Caruell or some Fisherman to haue some certaine intelligence in what forwardnesse the fiue Carracks were which at this very time his Lordship knew were outwards bound, The defect of his maine Maste caused him to stand in for the Burlings.

The Burlings is an Iland something longer then broad, and by the violent beating of the Sea, it selfe almost made two Ilands, and within few yeares it will be so; exceeding rockie it is and barren aboue measure. We found no liuing thing in it, but Lyzards and some few Conies.

The Canarie Ilands.

Vpon thursday, being the thirteenth of Aprill, we had sight of the Ilands. The first that was within kenning, was Alegranza, the most Northerly of the Canaries: we left it on the star-boord side, as also three little hils rather then the Islands hauing all one name of the Grange. In the afternoone we had Lancerota, one of the six great Canaries, in cleere kenning. The next morning twixt fiue and six, we were come to an anchor in the Roade, which beareth East South-east of the Iland. His Lordship had taken colde with watching the last night, whereupon he found himselfe so ill the next morning (being good Friday) that he kept his Cabbin, and was glad to take some strong Physicke: He sent therefore for Sir Iohn Barkley his Lieutenant generall, and gaue him order to land with certaine Companies, to the number of betweene fiue and six hundred men. They were in their March by ten that morning, and marched the next way (as they thought) to the chiefe Towne of the Iland, but their foremost desire was if they might, to haue surprised the Marquesse, who commandeth both that and the next Iland called Fortenentura, as his owne possession. The Towne is from the place they landed at, as they coniecture, some ten miles at the least. By fiue in the afternoone they entered the Towne, which besides the expectation they found clearely quitted of the enemy, and nothing in a manner left, sauing good store of very excellent Wine and Cheese. After the Towne was assured, Sir Iohn sent a troope to a strong Hold some halfe a mile of from the Towne, called the Castle; a place which the Marquesse had fortified with good store of Munition and Ordnance. When our Troopes were come vp the Hill, they found twixt 80. and 100. Ilanders and Spaniards within and about the house, but without fight they quitted the place, so that our men entered it without losse or danger. They found in it a dozen or more cast Peeces of Brasse, the least Bases, the most whole Culuering and Demiculuering, and an innumerable company of Stones laid in places of greatest aduantage. The Houle it selfe built of squared stone, flanked very strongly and cunningly, both for defence and offence: the entrance thereunto not as in our Forts of equall height with the foundation and ground, but raised about a Pikes length in height, so that without the vse of a Ladder, there could could be no entrance there. I haue heard sundry of our wisest Commanders say, that if they had drawne in their Ladder and onely shut the doore, twenty men victualled might haue kept it against fiue hundred. The Towne consisteth of somewhat more then a hundred houses, whose building is rude, being commonly but of one Storie, their Rooses flat and something sloping to cast of raine, couered onely with Canes or Straw laid vpon a few tasters, and very dirt cast vpon all, which being hardned by the Sunne, becommeth of showre-proofe.

The Towne described.

Inhabitants.

The Inhabitants are of very able and active bodies, their stature commonly tall, of swiftnesse (in that Mountainous Countrie) not farre behinde their Horses and Cammels: their Armes are Pikes and Stones; when a Peece is presented to them, so soone as they perceiue the cocke or match to fall, they cast themselues flat to the ground, and the report is no sooner heard, but they are vpon their feete, their stones out of their hands, and withall they charge with their Pikes, and this in scattered incounters or single fight (for either they know not or neglect orderly battalion) oftner giueth then receiueth hurt. The Iland it is not round, but stretched somewhat in length to the North-east and South-west, parted by a ridge of Hils from end to end, as Italie is by the Mountaines-Apennine. These hils are barren, otherwise then that in prettie store they feede flocks of Sheepe and Goates. Their Vallies promise no fruitfulnesse, being very sandy and dry, something like Rye-fields in England, and yet they yeelde passing good Barley, and Wheate. Their beasts be Sheepe and Goates, few Neate, many Asses, fewer Camels, but fewest Gennets, and these of no great stature. The Iland is thought to exceede the Wight both in breadth and length: of the Temper a man may iudge (besides that it lyeth in 28. degrees, and some minutes) by the complexion of the Inhabitants, which is blackish, and by their Harueſt-time, which was past before the middest of Aprill, and looke for a second about Michaelmas, their landing there was vpon good Friday. The next day, the fifteenth of Aprill, Sir Iohn Barkeley, being out of hope to finde the Marquesse, not knowing where to seeke him, whom feare had taught to hide himselfe closely, marched backe to the Nauie, without farther harme to the Towne or Castle, then borrowing some necessaries. There is in the Towne a Church of old, and a Frierie not yet finished. Their Church hath no windowes, nor admitteth light otherwise then by the doores; it hath no Chancell, but is one vndeuided roome, stone seates along the sides, and in the one end an Altar with the appurtenants: for the people seemeth full of ignorant Superstition, many Buls and Pardons being found in diuers houses. The Friery is a prettie square, with more commodities of fresh water and Gardens, then any other place of the Towne, euen the Marquesse his house.

They came that night to the waters side, yet thought it better to lodge abroade then aboord, though there were Boates to receiue them. The next day being Easter day, his Lordship hauing something recouered his strength, after dinner, went ashore to the Companies, hauing seene them trained, knowing that the enemy watched for aduantage of scatterers, saw all his men shipt first, and then himselfe tooke Boate. The next day, being Munday, all the Captaines dined aboord the Admirall, and after dinner his Lordship caused his Commission (which was exceeding large in many points) to be openly reade; and Articles of gouernment were giuen for Sea-matters to the Captaine of euery Ship, and for seruice by Land to the Captaine of euery company; besides which Articles to the Sea Captaines, was deliuered a sealed letter, which they should open, if vpon any accident they lost the Fleete, and thereby learne direction where to seeke his Lordship. But withall it was expresly articled, that in no other case they should aduenture to open it; and that if they came into any danger of being taken by the enemy, they should not faile to cast the Letter ouer-boord sealed, as it was deliuered; for in no sort would his Lordship haue his purpose disclosed, no not by examination nor torture.

While his Lordship was coasting neere Taneriffa, the breathes rather then windes were so diuers, that it was doubled on euery side almost and came so close aboord the shore, that we did easily see into Santa Cruz, and some other coasting Townes, and might discerne the men vpon the hils, the rather by coniecture, by reason of the eminencie and height thereof; among which there is one aboue the rest incomprable, generally held to be much higher then the Pyke of the Açores, being then couered with Snow, when the bottome was as hot as at Midsummer it is in England. The Iland though to the Sea a very high land, yet is full of many very fruitfull Plaines, and Vineyards, yeelding to the King yearely (by credible mens report) 28000. Buts of Canary-Sacke. Certaine it is, that in common reputation it is held richer not onely then the rest, but euen then the grand Canaria it selfe (though it seeme not so goodly a champion Countrie (for we had that also in very neere kenning.) And that the King esteemeth it more, no man can doubt seeing he keepeth a farre greater Garrison there, then in the Canaria.

Captaine Charles Leigh which hitherto had commanded of the Alcede, on the fourth of May last, the Fleete and in his owne Barke, called the Blacke Lee, runne himselfe alone for the Riuer of Orenoque. His Lordship after diuers consultations determined that the Fleete should goe for Dominico. (His speeches, Captaine Slingsbies employment, and other particulars, are here for brevity omitted.

An old Portugall Pilot told his Lordship that he had beene in eight and twentie voyages into Brasil, Brasil, but at this time of the yeere onely in one; wherein, hee saith, the windes were so contrarie, and they had so many other difficulties, that they were forced to put in againe and loose that yeeres voyage; so that the windes being in these parts at set times of the yeere, themselues also constantly set, we might well thinke wee should bee encountred with the same difficulties. All this while we held on our course for the West Indies, running West and by South, and West South-west, but bearing still to the Westward, both because we are likelier to keepe the fresher gale that way (though some were of contrarie opinion) and because the later wee entred within the Tropick, we should bee the likelier to meet with the Brasil fleet, whose course homewards must of necessitie be much to the North. By Wednesday the tenth of May (for till then wee met not with any memorable accident, seeing to tell of the flocks of flying fishes, might iustly seeme triuiall) we were come so directly vnder the Sunne, that none could see euidently the shadow of a stile set perpendicularly, but if there were any it inclined rather to the due South. For by obseruation by the Astrolabe (the vse of the staffe now fayling) we were found to haue passed our Tropick three degrees and a halfe, and the Sunnes declination that day was precisely twentie degrees. This was more cleerly perceiued at night by taking the height of the Crosier (a starre which of all other distinctly to be perceiued neere the Antartick Pole, serueth for those Southerly parts, as the lesser Beare doth to the Northerly countries.)

Sunne in their Zenith.

The Crosier.

It is a long step from the Canaries to the West Indies, which first of all wee had in our kenning vpon Sunday being the one and twentieth of May. But to lay, if it be but a handfull of peeble stones, in this gap. Vpon Saturday being the thirteenth of May, we had the first gust, and it had many followers, for few dayes passed without raine. When this raine began, immediately wee all felt a very noysome sauour, it was very sulphurous, and lasted so long as the raine did. Whether this proceeded of the nature of the water that fell from so neere the Sunne, or from the ship being very drie (as on land after a great drought there will rise a hot sauour) it is not cleerly knowne, nor yet determined, but that others may the better, this obseruation is expressed. This sauour was not felt vpon the decks, nor any where else besides the Cabbin, or at least not any where so much. The reason whereof may happily bee, that the aire being suddenly beaten in, and that by narrow passages, came the more violently, and by consequent the more sensibly into the Cabbin, then into other parts of the ship, and therefore whatsoeuer qualitie it bore with it, it was there the stronglieſt felt. In the following of as great gusts as that which came first, there was no such sauour felt, the fleet going still farther and farther from the Sunne. And which may be most to the purpose, not any of them that felt it, found any distemper after it, onely the sense was much displeased therewithall; his Lordship had at this time taken much physick, but still rather to preuent sickneſſe, then for to recouer health (for God be thanked, his body was very able to obey his minde) finding no difference in the world in the working of physick there and in England. Nauigators may helpe themselues by his Lordships obseruation: That vpon Friday being the nineteenth of May, the colour of the Sea began sensibly to alter, that whereas before it was of a cleere azure, it then began to incline to a deepe blacke. We were that day a hundreth and sixtie leagues (or thereabouts) from the West Indies and held our selues so certainly in the height of Dominica, that wee runne a due Westerly course. It is not vnlikely but this colour will be found in the same place at another time. And in such a course, wherein (besides the great difference of Cardes) a man must bee forced to trust to a dead reckoning; this may bee some helpe to a heedfull man. Vpon Sunday in the euening his Lordship directed the Master to runne that night with an easie saile, because he tooke himselfe neerer land then most of the Mariners would consent to, being himselfe the first that both spyed and cryed land; they were but few that did assent at the first: some desired it so much, that they durst not let themselues be ouer credulous; others happily would haue had themselues the first discryers, but his Lordship still made it land. Wee set saile for the land, and within two houres it was made to bee Matinino. Leauing it therefore on the larboard side, wee stood for Dominica, and within an houre or thereabouts had it in kenning.

Description of Dominica and the Virgines. Their landing on Port Ricco, march, fights, and taking the Towne.

BY two in the afternoone wee were come so neere aboard the shoare, that wee were met with many Canoes, manned with men wholly naked, saue that they had chaines and bracelets and some bodkins in their eares, or some strap in their nostrils or lips; the cause of their comming was to exchange their Tabacco, Pinos, Plantins, Potatoes, and Pepper with any trifle if it were gawdie. They were at the first suspicious that wee were Spaniards or Frenchmen, but being assured that wee were English they came willingly aboard. They are men of good proportion, strong, and straight limmed, but few of them tall, their wits able

Besides their Merchandise for exchange, euery one hath commonly his Bowe and Arrowes; they speake some Spanish words: they haue Wickers platted something like a broad shield to defend the raine, they that want these, vse a very broad leafe to that

That night, hauing with much adoe found land, within a quarter of a mile of the shore, we ankored for that night onely, for though there were a good watering place, and a very sweete riueret fast by vs, yet his Lordship ment to way ankor the next morning, and to beare in to another watering place, wherewithall we certainly looked for a hot Bathe. Their Oares wherewith
Their Oares. they rowe are not laid in bankes as Ship-boates haue, but are made like a long Battledoore, saue that their palmes are much longer then broade, growing into a sharpe point, with a rising in the middest of them a good way; very like they are to blades of bigge Westerne Daggers, that are now made with grauing. The shankes of these Oares are of equall bignesse, and at the top crosset, like a lame mans crutch. These they vse alwayes with both their hands, but indifferently as they finde cause to steere this way or that way. The next morning wee bore in to the North-west end of the Iland, where we found a goodly Bay able to receiue a greater Navie then hath beene together in the memorie of this age. There his Lordship found the hote Bathe fast by the side of a very fine Riuer. The Bathe is as hot as either the Crosse-bathe or Kingebathe at the Citie of Bathe in England, and within three or foure yards runneth into the Riuer,
A hot Bathe. which within a stones cast disburdeneth it selfe into the Sea. Here our sicke men specially found good refreshing. In this place his Lordship staied some six dayes in watering the whole Fleete, which in that time was all come sauing the Frigat, one of the blacke Pinnaces, and one of the Flemmings (which we hoped to be before vs, for they haue directions.) It was held conueniene here to take a Muster of our companies, and something better to acquaint euery one with his owne colours; but the weather was so extreamely foule, that in three or foure dayes spent to this purpose, there could be nothing done. Vpon Wednesday therefore, being the last of May,
The Virgines. it was resolued to stay no longer there, but to come againe to ankor at the Virgines, and there bestow one day in training our men. For that was our way to Saint Iohn de Puertorico, whether his Lordship now declared it was his purpose to goe first of all. By this time (for his Lordship would not haue any thing done in that foule weather) the other blacke Pinnace was taken down for a long Boate to serue for the more conuenient landing of our men.

That euening and the next morning all our men were brought aboord, and on thursday night
Description of Dominica. our sailes were cut for the Virgines. To describe this Iland, it lieth North-west and South-east, the soile is very fat, euen in the most neglected places, matching the Garden-plats in England for a rich blacke molde: so Mountainous (certaine in the places where we came neere the Seacoasts) that the Vallies may better be called Pits then Plaines, and withall so vnpassably woodie, that it is marualious how those naked soules can be able to pull themselues through them, without renting their naturall cloathes. Some speake of more easie passages in the Inland of the Iland, which make it probable that they leaue those skirts and edges of their Countrie thus of purpose for a wall of defence. These Hils are apparelled with very goodly greene Trees, of many sorts. The tallnesse of these vnrequested Trees make the hils seeme more hilly then of themselues happily they are: for they grow so like good children of some happy ciuill body, without enuie or oppression, as that they looke like a proud meddow about Oxford, when after some irruption, Tems is againe cooched low within his owne banks, leauing the earths Mantle more rugged and flakie, then otherwise it would haue bin; yea so much seeme these natural children delighted with equalitie and withall with multiplication, that hauing growne to a definite stature, without desire of ouertopping others, they willingly let downe their boughes, which being come to the earth againe take roote, as it were to continue the succession of their decaying progenitors: and yet they doe continually maintaine themselues in a greene-good liking, through the liberalitie partly of the Sunnes neighbourhood, which prouideth them in that neerenesse to the Sea, of exceeding showres; partly of many fine Riuers, which to requite the shadow and coolenesse they receiue from the Trees, giue them backe againe, a continuall refreshing of very sweete and

A Captaine or two watering neere the place where his Lordship first anchored, found a leasure to rowe vp a Riuer with some guard of Pikes and Musketers, till they came to a Towne of these poore Saluages; and a poore Towne it was of some twenty cottages rather then Houses, and yet there was there a King, whom they found in a wide hanging garment of rich crimson Taffetie, a Spanish Rapier in his hand, and the modell of

There they saw their women as naked as wee had seene their men, and alike attired euen to the boring of their lippes and eares, yet in that nakednesse, they perceiued some sparkes of modestie, not willingly comming in the sight of strange and apparelled men; and when they did come, bulie to couer, what should haue bin better ter couered. The Queene they ſaw not, nor any of the Noble wiues, but of the vulgar many; and the Maidens it ſhould ſeeme they would not haue ſo ſquemiſh, for the King commanded his Daughters preſence, with whom our Gentlemen did dance after meate was taken away. This withdrawing of their wiues ſeemeth to come of the common ielouſie of theſe people; for (it is reported) that though they admit one man to haue many wiues, yet for any man to meddle with another mans wife, is puniſhed with death, euen among them. And no meruaile if the ſeueritie of law be ſet inſtead of many other wanting hinderances. It ſeemeth that themſelues are wearie of their nakednesſe, for beſides the Kings apparrell, they are exceeding deſirous to exchange any of their Commodities for an old Waſte-coate, or but a Cap, yea or but a paire of Gloues. Adultery puniſhed with death.

It is pretie that they ſay is the difference twixt the habit of a Wife and a Maide. The Maide weareth no garter (and indeede ſhe needeth none) but the Wife is the firſt night ſhe is married (which is not done without asking at the leaſt the conſent of her parents) ſo ſtraightly gartered, that in time the fleſh will hang ouer the liſt. The haire of men and women are of like length, and faſhion. But of all other things it is moſt memorable, that whereas their Houſes are priuate to all other vſes, yet they haue one common place, where all their men at leaſt take their diet, nature teaching them that Law which in Lecurgus his mouth was thought ſtrange and perhaps needeleſſe. The King ſitteth in the ſame great roome with the reſt, but withdrawing himſelfe into ſome more louely part, accompanied onely with three or foure of the beſt eſteeme; their meates are their fine fruites, yet haue they Hennes and Pigges, but it ſhould ſeeme rather for delight, then victuall: their drinke is commonly water, but they make drinke of their Caſſain, better of their Pines (and it ſhould ſeeme that might be made an excellent liquor) but the beſt and reſerued for the Kings cup onely of Potatoes: their Bread is Caſſain. The laſt report of them ſhall bee what I haue ſeene in experience, namely their great deſire to vnderſtand the Engliſh tongue; for ſome of them will point to moſt parts of his body, and hauing told the name of it in the language of Dominica, he would not reſt till he were told the name of it in Engliſh, which hauing once told he would repeate till he could either name it right, or at leaſt till he thought it was right, and ſo commonly it ſhould be, ſauing that to all words ending in a conſonant they alwayes ſet the ſecond vowell, as for chinne, they ſay chin-ne, ſo making moſt of the monaſillables, diſſillables. But it is time to leaue them who are already many leagues of. Difference of maide & wife. Common diet roome. Kings ſtate. Deſire to learn Engliſh.

On thurſday night his Lordſhip ſet ſaile for the Virgines, and on ſaturday morning had them in ſight: and in the afternoone we were come to an ankor. On Whitſunday in the morning betimes (for there was a fit place ſought out the euening before) our land forces went on ſhore, and there his Lordſhippe tooke a perfect muſter of them. The Companies indeede were (though after much ſickneſſe) goodly, in number one might well ſay not ſo fewe as a thouſand. When the Companies had bin trained into all ſorts, and faces of fights, at length his Lordſhippe commanded the Drummes to beate a call, and the troopes being drawne in the neareſt cloſeneſſe that conueniently they might be, that he might be heard of all, his Lordſhip ſtanding vnder a great cliffe of a rocke, his proſpect to the Seaward, ſtept vpon one of the greater ſtones (which added to his naturall ſtature, gaue him a pretty height aboue the other company) ſo commanding audience, made a ſpeech to them. They come to the Virgines. My Lords land companies about one thouſand. The ſpeech you haue before in his own relation, and therefore here omitted.

After which, the Fleete then within one dayes ſailing from Puerto rico, his Lordſhip preſently appointed Officers for the field. They all made vp a dozen Companies: whereof if any wanted the full number of 80. they were plentifully ſupplied, by a large ouerplus of gallant Gentlemen that followed his Lordſhips colours, borne by Captaine Bromley; and Sir Iohn alſo had more then 80. ſo that the whole Armie appointed to Land, was neere vpon a thouſand, ſpecially ſeeing the Officers of ſeuerall Companies were not reckoned in theſe numbers. The Offices thus beſtowed, his Lordſhip forthwith commanded euery man to be ſhipped in Boates, and to goe aboord, where after dinner it was debated, whether it were better to paſſe through the Virgines, a way not clearely vnknowne (for diuers of our company both Souldiors and Marriners had gone it before with Sir Francis Drake, in his laſt voyage) or elſe to hold the old courſe through the Paſſages. It was acknowledged that the Virgines was the neerer way, but withall none can denie, but that it was the more dangerous; for the way is very narrow (about the breadth of Thames about London) and we durſt not promiſe our ſelues the continuance of a leading winde. The way through the paſſages was found to be farther about, but withall it was without danger, and therefore hauing no great haſte chooſe the ſafer way by the paſſages; for (ſaid his Lordſhip) I chooſe rather, to be the firſt that ſhall take Puerto rico, then the ſecond that ſhall paſſe the Virgines. The Virgines are little Ilands not inhabited; ſome thinke for want of water, ſome thinke that is no cauſe, and that there is ſtore of water. They are very barren and craggie, ſomewhat like the Burlings, but being much more ſandie, as it is much more hot. Among theſe many ſcattered Ilands there is one called the Bird-Iland, by reaſon of the incredible ſtore of Fowle. So ſtored is it with plentie of Fowle, that neuer was Engliſh Doue-coat more willing to yeelde her increaſe then that hillocke, for you may take with your hands onely, as much See before the names of the Captaines and Commanders, here omitted. much as you will to the filling of Buſhels and Quarters. That euening we cut ſailes, and ranne through the Paſſages in the night time.

Vpon Monday afternoone, we made our ſelues to be not farre from Puerto rico; and our deſire was to beare in with it in the morning before day, that by that meanes we might leaſt of all be diſcouered. For this cauſe therefore the Scout and the Anthony were ſent before to make our landing place, and that done to returne, which was about midnight. His Lordſhips greateſt care was and had bin ſome dayes to ſet his men ſafely and well on land, for he doubted not to make them a way, if once they were landed without impeachment. Himſelfe therefore hauing commanded that Sir Iohn Barkley ſhould come aboord with him, tooke a Boate and went himſelfe no otherwiſe accompanied then with Sir Iohn and the Cockſons gyng, to diſcouer a landing place. Without long ſtay he returned againe, ſo wet, that he was forced to change his apparell, but withall gaue preſent commandement that euery Captaine and Ship ſhould put their men into Boates, and that they ſhould follow his bloudy colours, which he would haue preſently landed.

They land vpon the Ile of Saint Iohn de Puerto rico the ſixt of Iune.

By eight of the clocke that tueſday, being the ſixt of Iune, his Lordſhips regiment, and moſt part of Sir Iohn Barkleys were landed, which amounted neere to the number of a thouſand men. We began to march as ſoone as we could be brought into any order, & the forlorne hope drawne out, which was led by Captaine Andrewes the Commander of his Lordſhips priuate Company, which that day was brought vp in the the Battell by Captaine Powell, Lieutenant Colonell of his Lordſhips regiment. The way we marched was along the Sea ſide, commonly on firme, ſometime on looſe ſand, but yet it was a faire march, for three leagues at the leaſt, till we met with a blacke-Moore, who we hoped ſhould haue bin our Guide (and ſo he was willing to be) but he neither ſpake good Engliſh, nor good Spaniſh, and beſides was affrighted, ſo that a great while he did miſlead vs; for through moſt vnpaſſable roeks and clifts he brought vs: for betwixt the clifts where we ſtood, and the Iland wherein the Towne ſtood, there we ſaw an arme of the Sea, in breadth not Calieuer ſhot, but on the other ſide was a fort with fiue peece of great Ordnance, and ſome, though not many, Musketeers; for both the euening before they had diſcouered our Nauie, and this morning our landing, as we were ſure by diuers Horſemen, whom we ſaw come forth to view our ſtrength. Here there was offer made by ſome, ſo to plant a number of Musketeers in theſe rockes, as that they might beate them in the fort from their Ordnance: this was thought poſſible, and afterwards was done but now deferred, becauſe though we had no annoyance of the fort, yet we knew not how to get ouer, for the depth of the paſſage meerly vnknown, and our Boats yet had not found any landing place neere the fort. And while here we were at a flat bay, euen at our wits end, what courſe we might take to come to the Towne, there was ſent a Peece or two of great Ordnance (but without any hurt) from another fort, which ſtandeth vpon the narroweſt part of the ſame arme of the Sea, and was the onely paſſage that was vſed from the maine Iland where we were, to the Iland where the Towne is.

Negros miſguiding.

Here the Nigro was ſomething comforted, and brought to the little wit he had; at length, with much adoe, being made to vnderſtand, we tooke our ſelues to be out of the way, becauſe wee could not paſſe that way; partly with threatning and partly with promiſes if he brought vs into a better way to the Town; he began againe to leade, and we to follow with as nimble mindes as weary bodies, for we had marched from morning till now that it was euen in the edge of the euening; but we would not be weary.

Bad March.

At length through many vntroden pathes, or rather no pathes, but ſuch wodden holes, as would haue taught the moſt proud body to ſtoope very humbly; he brought vs into a beaten ſandy way. But for all this we were not neere the Bridge which muſt be paſſed, and diuers euen of our leaders began after ſo long and troubleſome a march to faint, ſo that order was giuen to ſtay the Vantgard, when it pleaſed God to helpe by one meane or other to as many Horſes, as kept vs from ſtaying our march. There might be ſeene a poore tyred Iade, without Saddle or Bridle, onely with a match in his mouth very welcome to them that commanded the beſt Horſes of England. But at length we ouercame the length of the way, and euen to the Bridge were come, but it was ſo late, that that night we were out of hope to paſſe it, being (as we had great reaſon to thinke) fortified againſt vs. Onely the Companies were commanded to keepe their guard, till his Lordſhip in perſon with Sir Iohn Barkley went as quietly as they could to take view of the place; which they found to be narrow and a long Cawſe-way leading to a Bridge reaching from the one Iland to the other. The Bridge they perceiued to be pulled vp, and on the other banke was there a ſtrong Barricado, a little beyond which was a Fort with Ordnance.

Bridge and Barricado.

But how much or what we could not learne, nor by how many men it was held, yet perceiued they it abſolutely not to be paſſed but at a low water. Our Mariners and Sea-men could ſay little to the ebbing and flowing in this Countrie, and therefore the onely way to know the fit time of aſſault, was to ſet a continuall watch to giue preſent information of the ebbe. The meane time the Armie was led backe to repoſe themſelues a while.

In a great Lawne we all ſat or lay downe, and with freſh water, which the firſt Negro, and another, that was afterwards taken in this wood, led our men to, they refreſhed themſelues; some had some Bread, his Lordship was no niggard of that he had. His lodging that night was his Target; I lay at his head, and to my remembrance, neuer slept better. In the morning (two houres at least before day) the allarum was giuen very quietly, and was readily taken, for we needed not but to shake our eares. The Companies were streight ranged, and euery man had forgotten how weary he had bin the last night, so forward they were to be in seruice. Euen betwixt his Lordship and Sir Iohn Barkeley there grew a little question; whether of them should haue the point that day. Sir Iohns answer was, that his Lordship might command them all, and therefore it was at his pleasure to haue or leaue the point; but since it had pleased him to diuide the Armie into two Regiments, and his Lordshippes Leaders had all the last day had the Point, he tooke it to be neerer the order of the Warres if the other Regiment this day were respected. This reason together with request to his honour to remember himselfe to be the Generall, and therefore his place should not be so full of danger, so farre moued his Lordship that Sir Iohns Regiment had the Point; neuertheleſſe his Lordshippe would be at the seruice in person. Thus the manner of the enterprize being vpon the present resolued on, his Lordship put himselfe into his Armour, so did all the Commanders, and who else had Armours, for they looked that the seruice should be hot, as indeede it proued.

Sir Iohn Barkeleys honourable ambition.

By and by the enemies Centinell had discouered the approach of our Companies, and they tooke the Alarum. It may be well said it was well fought by the English, and if it had bin day that euery one might haue seene what he did, it is to be thought so many would not haue deserued so much commendation. The assault continued aboue two houres, during which time the Spaniards were not idle. For though the assalants left no way in the world vnattempted, yet no way could they finde to enter the Gate. The Cawsey, which was the ordinarie way of passage, was purposely made so rugged: that our men to keepe them on their feete, made choise to wade in the water besides it. Here his Lordship was (by the stumbling of him that bore his Target) ouerthrowne, euen to the danger of drowning; for his Armour so ouerburdened him, that the Sergiant Maior that by chance was next had much adoe at the first and second time to get him from vnder the water: when he was vp, he had receiued so much Salt water, that it droue him to so great extremity of present sickneſſe, that he was forced to lye downe in the very place vpon the Cawsey; till being somewhat recouered, he was able to be led to a place of some more safetie and ease; in which place the Bullets made him threatning musicke on euery side. His Lordshippe being brought to this little safe place (whence yet he would not be remoued till the fight was done) Sir Iohn Barkeley led on his Regiment, from whom there were not leſſe then 3000. English Bullets sent among the Spaniards, who had not so many hands as we, yet were not much behinde vs, in sending these heauy leaden messengers of death. For besides six peece of great Ordnance, which were bent and played inst vpon the Cawsey, and some pretty store of Musketeers; at a port fast by the gate lay there a fowler, or a cast peece, that did more skathe, then all the rest, for that at once shot many murthering shot, whereupon the peece is also called a murtherer; for all this our Soldiers came to the very gate, and with Bils, some two or three that they had, wanting other fitter instruments, began to hewe it. At their ports and loope holes they were at the push of the Pike, and hauing broken their owne, with their naked hands tooke their enemies Pikes, and perforce brake them.

The fight betwixt the English and Spaniards.

The Earles accidentall danger.

Valiant assaults at the gates.

But for all this no entrance could be got. Sir Iohn Barkeley attempting to discouer if any passage might be found of either side of the gate, twice waded so farre, that if he could not haue swamme, he had bin drowned. They that were come to the gate called to their owne Companies, that some Pikes should be drawne to them: this word was giuen farther then was intended, for by and by all the Pikes were called for. Then his Lordships colours began to march, and to the Cawsey came, where hee was very exceeding sicke lying vpon the ground in a place, no leſſe dangerous then if he had bin vpon the Cawsey; a place so perilous that it had bin as safe being at the entry of a breach by assault: but the end was, it could not then bee taken; the tyde came in so fast, that what was at our knees before, was now come vp to our middles: and besides the day began to breake, which though some thought would be aduantagious for vs, yet certainely it would haue bin the death of many a man; their Ordnance being bent to scoure the Cawsey, and the ruggedneſſe which they had made to hinder our approach, had made vs forsake it; which if the day had once discouered to them, they might easily haue bent their Artillery to our much greater losse. But God would not haue more bloud shed, nor ours as yet to haue our wils. The Companies therefore were brought off to the place where we lodged all night, before where the Chirurgians were presently to looke to the hurt, which were not many, and the slaine much fewer, all vnder fiftie of both sorts. No Commander slaine or hurt but two Lieutenants. Lieutenant Chelmley, that had serued excellently well, and Lieutenant Belings. The losse that the enemy had was much like, sauing that of the assaults there were some few more slaine: from this place our Companies marched to the Sea-side, whether his Lordship had appointed victuals to meete them.

for that night, but his thoughts were ſo buſied and reſtleſſe, that within few houres he came aſhore againe, and preſently put in execution a purpoſe, which his Lordſhippe had this meane time digeſted: it was to land men at the other Fort. For effecting whereof he gaue direction that one of the Ships ſhould beare in cloſe to the ſhore, though it were (as indeede it proued) with apparent danger of caſting her away: But the ſeruice was to be done whatſoeuer it coſt: Withall there were in the rocks on the other ſide ouer againſt the Fort (I meane that which we firſt came to ſee, but could not come at) ſome fifty Musketeers placed, to beate the enemy from their Ordnance: meane while there were ſhipped in Boates Captaine Coach, and Captaine Orrell with two hundred Pikes and ſhot to land on the other ſide the Fort, twixt it and the Town, that they hauing made good the place, might either make a ſtand till the reſt of the forces were landed (if it were thought needefull) or elſe might march and charge the other Fort on that ſide, when our men ſhould aſſault it on this ſide. This plot tooke very good effect; for within an houre that the attempt was giuen, partly the Ship, and partly the Musketeers had ſo beaten the Fort, that the Boates had good leiſure to land; whereupon within ſhort ſpace the enemy quitted the place without loſſe to be ſpoken of to our Companies: for of all ours there were not aboue three hurt, and one ſlain, onely the Ship was driuen vpon the rockes, and finally caſt away. Their direction was that the Souldiers ſhould make the place good (for there was no doubt of their ſufficient ſtrength) the Boats were commanded to come backe againe to his Lordſhip, who appointed to tarry at a Conduit which is in the maine Iland but from whence men might be landed betwixt the point or the Bridge, and the red fort, called Mata-diabolo.

The red Fort, called Mata-diabolo.

Our men were ſafely landed ſome pretty diſtance beyond the red Fort; where the Spaniards were ready to receiue them, and a while they skirmiſhed gallantly, but finding themſelues ouerweake, they made an honorable retreat till they were fallen into the wood, in the edge whereof they made their firſt ſtand. Ours marched directly to the Fort, which they found quitted, and there lodged all that night. By that time that the Boates were come backe to his Lordſhip, the Moone was growne ſo light, and the water fallen to ſo dead an ebbe, that there was no hope of paſſge till the next floud. There was not ſo much as a candle or a match to be ſeene in the Fort, whereupon his Lordſhip told Sir Iohn Barkeley that he tooke that Fort alſo to be quitted, the rather becauſe ſome were ſeene paſſing from the Fort to the Frigat. Hereupon himſelfe accompanied with Sir Iohn Barkeley, went to the Cawſey to ſee if they could perceiue any more certaintie, and Captaine Rukesby was ſent and brought certaine intelligence, that the enemy was gone.

Another Fort quitted.

By this time it was growne very late, and our men needed ſome refreſhing: the Companies therefore were drawne vp to the place where we had lodged the laſt night, where hauing eaten ſomething they were within a while brought downe to the point, where meeting with Captaine Coach and Captaine Orrell, all began to march directly towards the Towne. And now our men made but little doubt of all, hauing once ſet ſafe footing in the leſſer Iland. It was night when we began to march, and by breake of day we were at the Towne. This day was thurſday, Iun. 8. The paſſage is wooddie on either ſide, and ſo narrow that not paſſing three at the moſt can march in ranke; and from the Towne this Fort is a mile and a halfe: yet all this way being ſo fit for Ambuskadoes, or for the Iriſh manner of charging by ſudden comming on and off, there was not a Dogge that barked at vs, ſo that in great quietneſſe wee came to the Towne, and found it quitted of all able to make reſiſtance: for beſides women and men, whom either age or wounds had diſabled for the warres, all the reſt had quitted the Towne, and betaken themſelues as to their laſt hope, to one of their Forts to the Sea-wards, called Mora.

AFter that the place was aſſured with ſufficient guards, and euery Company quartered: firſt of all the Spaniards that were left were deliuered to the Prouoſt, and then his Lordſhip ſent a Drum to ſummon the Fort to be deliuered to him for the Queene of England, who had ſent him thither to take it. The Gouernour made anſwere that the King of Spaine had ſent him thither to keepe it, and that ſo long as he liued it ſhould not be deliuered. After this ſummons his Lordſhip tooke exceeding care for the taking in of this hold with the leaſt loſſe of men that poſſibly might be; for he conſidered that he was to leaue a ſtrong Garriſon there, and that he muſt himſelfe goe home well guarded. His purpoſe therefore was to take it without fight, onely with a ſtraight ſiedge to force them to yeelding: his Lordſhips ſpeciall purpoſe and deſire was by hunger to driue them to a yeelding (as in the end hee did) but withall withall he prouided a batterie, if their victualls should last longer then he wished and hoped. At one time therefore he tooke order to cut off all possible meanes of reliefe of victualls, by sending Boates, which continually lay twixt the Fort and their Mayne; and withall hee prouided two plat-formes, and seuerall Gabions, that from two places at once their wall might bee beaten. To this purpose there was brought from the Scourge two whole Culuerings, and two Demiculuerings, and about the Towne were found foure other peeces that would serue for batterie, among the which one was that which had slain Sir Nicholas Clifford there not long before. By Saturday the seuenteenth of Iune the Ordnance was readie to batter. But his Lordship would not haue them begin on the Sabbath day; so that it was deferred till Monday. Sir Nicholas Clifford.

All this while the noise of warre was not so great among vs, but that the still voice of Iustice was well heard. It is no newes that in such companies there will bee outrages committed; and so was it there: for his Lordship publikely disarmed a very good Souldier, for ouer-violent spoyling a Gentlewoman of her jewels. But because this was not terrible enough to the rest, and he was desirous to arme Iustice with the authoritie of all the Commanders, forthwith hee caused a martiall Court to bee called. Whereupon the Article of defacing Churches or Houses of Religion, and of offering force to Women, there were two condemned to die. Hee that had done violence to a Spaniards wife, was a Souldier, and had giuen very good proofe of his valour, so farre, that his Lordship had taken speciall notice of him, but being conuicted of this crime, there was no place left for mercy, but hanged hee was in the market place; the Spaniards as many as would come, being suffered to be present at the execution. The other-fellow was a Sayler and an Officer in the Vice-admirall, for defacing some things in the Church, without order from the Generall, hee was brought thrice to the Gibbet, and at length his Lordship was intreated to grant him mercy. These few but indeed notable examples of iustice haue since held vs in much better termes of duly obedience. His Lordships iustice. Souldier disarmed for vnmanly and vnmannerly vsage to a woman. Churches and Women secured. Rauisher executed. Sacriledge terrified.

Vpon Monday the batterie began to speake very loud: both the Gabions beat vpon a Caualero which they had made vpon the Point next to the Towne. The Ordnance which they had planted thereon, by dinner time was iudged to bee dismounted, and though that were the thing specially respected in the batterie, yet because the Wall and the Caualero that stood vpon it began to nod, they beat that place till towards the euening. All this while scarce was there a Spaniard to be seene vpon any part of their wall, whereas before the Ordnance began to play, there could not within the sight and reach of the Fort, foure or fiue of the Souldiers come together, but there would a shot of great Ordnance be sent to scatter them. In the euening the Canoneers found that they had spent all the Culuering shot, and therefore shut vp that day with the lesser peeces. Against the morning there was more prouided; but in the meane season it was perceiued, that the Caualero was alreadie sufficiently beaten, and that with the next raine (which in that Countrie and time of the yeere, is neither seldome nor little) it would fall, being (as all the Countrie is) of a sandie earth, it did but crumble into dust. The Canoneers therefore were appointed in the morning to beate the other Point neerer the Sea. For that so flanked the Gate, and the breach alreadie made, that without great danger there could not any approch be made, and his Lordship was growne exceeding niggardly of the expence of any one mans life. Raines

This wrought so with them in the Fort, that about one a clocke, they sent forth a Drum to demand parley. His motion was, that two of their Captaines might be suffered to speake with two of the English. It was granted; and they met in a place of the greatest indifferency that could be found, so that neither partie should discouer others strength. The demands were deliuered in Paper, written in Spanish: the summe whereof was; for themselues they desired that with Colours flying, match in their cocks, and bullets in their mouth be set beyond the Point at the Bridge, to goe whither they would. Further, they demanded all the prisoners to bee deliuered without ransome, and that no mans Negroes and Slaues should be detayned from them. His Lordship vtterly refused any such composition, but told them because hee tooke no pleasure in shedding Christian bloud, hee would deliuer them some Articles, which if they liked, hee would without more adoe receiue them to mercy. Which Articles were these, deliuered vnder his Lordships owne hand to the Gouernour. Parley demanded. Conditions demanded.

A resolution, which you may trust to.

I Am content to giue your selfe and all your people their liues, your selfe, with your Captaines and Officers to passe with your Armes: all the rest of your Souldiers with their Rapiers and Daggers onely. Articles offered.

You shall all stay here with me, till I giue you passage from the Iland, which shall bee within thirtie dayes.

Any one of you, which I shall choose, shall goe with me into England, but shall not stay longer there then one moneth, but being well fitted for the purpose, shall bee safely sent home into Spaine without ransome.

It was doubted whether there were any in the Fort that ſpake Engliſh, and therefore ſome were wiſhing the Articles were tranſlated into Spaniſh. But his Lordſhip peremptorily refuſed to ſeeke their language, but would haue them to finde out his; but becauſe it was now growne late, he gaue them reſpite to thinke what they would anſwere till eight a clocke the next day, and promiſe was giuen on either ſide, that neither ſhould practiſe to put things out of the ſtate they now were in. The next morning rather before then after the time appointed, there returned to his Lordſhip, beſides the two former Captaines, both hee that now was, and hee that had beene laſt Gouernour, and withall they brought with them one of good place in his Lordſhips ſeruice whom they had taken priſoner, while he was viewing a peece of Ordnance that lay neere the Fort. Theſe alſo required (as Captaine Lanſois and the Sergeant Major before) priuate audience who without much difficultie yeelded vpon the foreſaid conditions; and farther deſired they might haue two Colours left them, & in lieu hereof they made promiſe that nothing ſhould be ſpoyled in the Fort. That day the Gouernour and his Companie dined with his Lordſhip, and after dinner the Gouernour went and brought out his Companies out of the Fort (which of all ſorts were neere foure hundred) and deliuered the keyes to his Lordſhip, who immediately brought in his owne Colours, and Sir Iohn Barkleys, and placed them vpon the two Points of the Fort. The Spaniards without being pillaged (for beſide all promiſes his Lordſhip ſuffered them to carry their ſtuffe away) conueyed ſafely into a ſtrong Caſtle in the Towne called Fortileza. This Fort was taken in vpon Wedneſday being the one and twentieth of Iune, and vpon Thurſday our fleet was commanded to come into the Harbour, for all this while it had rid without. This Fort is to the Sea-ward very ſtrong, and fitted with goodly Ordnance, and beſtowed for the moſt aduantage to annoy an enemie that poſſibly could bee deuiſed. It is held abſolutely impoſſible that any ſhippe ſhould paſſe that Poine without ſinking inſtantly, if the Fort doe not graunt her paſſage: And the riding without the Harbour is very dangerous as wee found by the loſſe of many Anchors and Cables, to the extreme danger of many of the Ships, and the finall caſting away of one of them. The Fort to the land-ward is not altogether ſo ſtrong as towards the Sea, but yet being victualled able to abide a long ſiege.

Spaniards yeeld the Fort.

The Fort Mora wherein were 400. Souldiers, deliuered vp to the Engliſh.

The deſcription of the citie of Saint Iohn de Puerto Rico.

The Towne conſiſteth of many large ſtreets, the houſes are built after the Spaniſh manner, of two ſtories height onely, but very ſtrongly, and the roomes are goodly and large, with great doores inſtead of windowes for receit of aire, which for the moſt part of the day wanteth neuer. For about eight in the morning there riſeth ordinarily a freſh breeſe (as they call it) and bloweth till foure or fiue in the afternoone, ſo that their houſes all that while are very coole, of all the artificiall day the ſpace from three in the morning till ſixe, is the moſt temperate, ſo that then a man may well indure ſome light clothes vpon him; from ſixe till the breeſe riſe is very ſoultering, from fiue in the afternoone hotteſt of all the reſt till midnight, which time alſo is held dangerous to be abroad, by reaſon of the Serenaes (they call them) which are raynie dewes. And indeed in the nights the Souldiers which were forced to lie abroad in the fields, when they awaked found as much of their bodies as lay vpwards to bee very wet. The Towne in circuit is not ſo bigge as Oxford, but very much bigger then all Portſmouth within the fortifications, and in ſight much fayrer. In all this ſpace there is very little loſt ground; for they haue beene ſtill building, inſomuch as that within theſe three yeeres, it is augmented one fourth part. The Cathedrall Church is not ſo goodly as any of the Cathedrall Churches in England, and yet it is faire and handſome; two rowes of proportionable pillars, make two allies beſides the middle walke, and this all along vp to the high Altar. It is darker then commonly Countrie Churches in England. For the windowes are few and little, and thoſe indeed without glaſſe (whereof there is none to be found in all the Towne) but couered with Canuas, ſo that the moſt of the light is receiued by the doores, the greateſt whereof is iuſt in the Weſt end to the Seaward, ſo that out of it a man walking in the Church may behold the ſhips riding in a very faire Harbour. The other two doores (beſides that which is priuate from the Biſhops houſe) are on either ſide, a little aboue their Quire. For that of all other things is the moſt ſingular and differing from the faſhion in England, that their Quire is in the very loweſt and Weſtermoſt part of their Church, wherein is the Biſhops ſeate rayſed three good ſteps aboue the reſt, and pompouſly built. On either ſide of him ſeeme to ſit ſixe Prebends, and vpwards are places for ſinging men and Quiriſters. Their Church wanteth no neceſſarie implement. On the North ſide a faire paire of Organs; at either ſide-doore a poore mans boxe: aboue the Organs on the ſame ſide, there is a decent Pulpit very conueniently placed; on the other ſide of the ſide-doores, there were two Lauers for holy water, to ſprinkle the Incommers, and in the South-weſt corner faſt by the great doore is there a place ſeemly incloſed with Ioyners worke, where is a faire Font placed. This Church is ſacred to Saint Iohn Baptiſt, as is all the Iland; beſides his Image there were many other in particular ſhrines, which the Souldiers could not bee held from defacing vnorderly. There are in the Citie three or foure little Chappels to Saint Anne, Saint Barbara, and others.

Beſides the Fort, which held out thoſe few dayes, and is of ſome twice twelue ſcore remoued mooued from the Towne: there is in the West and by South side of the Towne a strong Castle, The Castle.

built of squared stone, commonly called the Kings house, named before Fortaleza, wherein was found good store of Munition. Betwixt this Castle, and the Fort Mora, there is another peece of fortification of squared stone and battlemented, it also coasteth along the Sea, and may beate the harbour. So that all things considered, it was the mightie hand of God, which with the losse of two men onely at one shot slaine with a peece of Ordnance, deliuered a place of such strength, to so small a troope of men, the rather if it be considered, that we came not thither vnlooked for; for they had particular warning a moneth at least before, and to the waterside where Boates vse to land out of the harbour, they had cast vp a strong ditch to impeach landing there, but God brought vs a better way. There is also a faire Frierie standing on the North side Monasterie.
of the Towne, but little distant from it: it is built of Bricke in a good large square, with a Church and Hall, and all necessary roomes for a Pryor and Couent of Fryers; it seemeth not to be perfected yet, for they are beginning of a Cloyster not yet couered. The Couent was fled all, saving one old Fryer, who in the little broken Latine that he had told me, that they were Dominicans ordinis predicatorum mendicantium. The situation of this place is exceeding delightfull: it standeth vpon the ease hanging of a hill, inclosed on three parts well neere by the Sea. The soile sandie and very light, like to our Rye-fields in England: the temper as in that heighe hot, and yet rather effectually and in operation, then to the sense. There books haue their glewed backs, there melted and loosened; Flowers or Fruites candied in England, there lose their crusty and English Comfits grow liquid. But after some little acquaintance, it is likely it would proue a very healthfull place; for though they spake of some mortality (as what place in the world is alwaies free from that scourge of God?) that hath bin there of late, yet haue I bin told by them that haue liued there, in seuenteene moneths there haue not aboue two bin buried, and those of extreame age. And at his Lordships comming hither people of 80. and 90. yeares old were of good abilitie of body.

out some fruite or other, but so strange as would pose the professors of that skill in England: and in these woods Horses and Oxen grow fat, if they be suffered to rest. Therein be also some large inclosures carefully dressed, not vnlike to our manner of dressing Hop-yards, and euery hillocke laden with the fruites of the Countrie. Lemmons or rather Lymes, and the goodliest Oreinges that euer I saw are ordinarily to be found where no man set them. In and about the Towne there is store of Coker-nut-trees, which, beside the excellencie of the Fruite, giue a very delightfull gracing to the Towne. There is not in this little Iland any knowne Riuer or Spring, but hard beyond the point in the other Iland there is an excellent Conduit of very good fresh water, handsomely ouerbuilt with squared Stone; and in the Towne euery house hath a large Well, and some two, so as they cannot want water in such plentie of raine, which is there both often and abundant. And if men will not lose themselues with ouermuch ease and pleasure, there will be no necessarie thing wanting. But the eminent and knowne profits of this place are Ginger, Sugar and Hides, besides the secrets of the Gold Mines, howsoeuer of late yeares neglected. Some reasons haue beene giuen, why the King left working though he knew there were exceeding store of Gold. The first is, the very store of Gold; for say they the sweetenesse he found, made him vnwilling to haue any copartners, and therefore knowing this place to bee the neerest to the Indies to Why those those Countrimen, whom he most feared that they would in time become sharers with him, mynes are he would not lay such a baite to entice them to set footing there, where being once entered, neglected.
they would not onely guild their fingers, and pay their Souldiers for the present with his Treasure, but would make this their baiting place in the longer iourney to the other Ilands, and continent of the Indies, which are the very coffers whence he feedeth his warres. And if it be obiected, that the working in these Mines was ceased before the King had cause to feare the English or French inuasions thereinto, there being then no warres twixt him and them; let them rest satisfied, that with the answer made by a Spaniard to his Lordship, obiecting the same, that the warres were then a brewing. Secondly, they say that the King left working in this, because he would haue all not onely this, but the other Mines also; for he saw that all men, as they doe loue wealth, so doe they also seeke after ease, And if with lesse labour they may get the same profit, none will vndergoe needlesse trauell. From which generall, the descent is very easie and direct to this particular. That if in a shorter voyage and lesse time his subiects were sure to make themselues Masters of as much gold, as if they went farther and should come no heauier home; hee should finde but few that would fetch gold from Peru, or the other more inland parts of the Indies, when as they might haue it with halfe the trauell, and in halfe the time. Besides, the Spaniards great lands and pouertie of men will not suffer all workes goe forwards at once. There are among the Spaniards whom God hath deliuered to his Lordships hands, the same Lansoit of whom was spoken before. In what reckoning hee is held by the Spaniards, may bee perceiued, by their imploying him, in time of so great necessitie. Once it is confessed, that hee almost onely was hee that held the rest from present yeelding, and who after yeelding (which yet they say was without his consent) taketh the losse of the Spaniards most of all to heart. He seemeth truly to be wise aboue the common pitch of Souldiers which is his profession, yet hath he beene heard say and protest by the faith of a Souldier, that there is not so rich and good a myne in all the Kings Dominions to the Westward, as that of Puerto Rico. Others whose fathers were imployed in the workes, report what their dying fathers told them. But that which maketh most of all to the purpose, is the present preparation which the King is euen now a making, for the reuiuing of these workes afresh in Puerto Rico, by setting two hundreth Negroes to worke, and for that purpose had sent great store of Mattocks and Spades thither, there found in his store-house, and for what other vse they should haue needed, is not well conceiueable.

Much time was spent in taking order how the Spaniards might be dispatched to Carthagena; (for thither it was resolued they should bee sent) being a place so farre to the leeward of Puerto Rico, as that they neither could in haste themselues make any head, nor send newes to Spaine, to procure the leuying of any forces thence: and in prouiding victuals for this place, and repayring ships that were first to come for England. Vpon Thursday being Saint Peters day, there was a saile discryed at Sea in the morning, and by noone shee was come into the Harbour, which with much astonishment shee found turned English. The Spaniards had some few dayes before reported that they looked for a ship to bring from the Hauana much of the Souldiers pay that was behinde. This held vs for the time in great suspence of hope and doubt, whether this might bee shee or no; the rather because this seemed to bee of the same bignesse that they had spoken of, but when shee was fallen into the trap, it was found indeed to bee a very Mouse, where we looked for a Mountaine. For her lading was a number of poore naked Negroes from Angola to bee sold there. Yet was shee a pretie Boat, and of her lading likely to bee made of good vse. Within few dayes after there was another saile almost taken after the same manner, yet perceiuing a greater fleete riding there, then shee could hope to finde Spanish shee got her tack aboard, and went away lasking, so that though the Affection was sent away in chace after her, yet shee escaped.

Saile descryed.

A ship of Negroes.

Vpon Friday being the seuenth of Iuly, all things being made readie for their passage, the Spaniards were imbarked in a Caruell, and in another ship, which during the time the ships rode without the Harbour, for feare of them whom shee could not passe, or enuie that they should receiue good by her, ranne her selfe desperately ashoare, but shee and most things in her were saued, and here shee saued the sending away of a better ship. With these two, wherein the baser Spaniards were put, there were two other ships sent to waft them, wherein also went the Gouernour and some few others, who deserued some respect. And for themselues it was permitted them to come directly home for England. The next day being the eighth of Iuly, there came to his Lordship two Negroes from the mayne Iland with a flagge of truce, and a letter from one Seralta, an ancient Commander in that Iland, and who vpon a wound receiued in the first fight at the bridge had with-drawne himselfe into the Countrie. The effect of his desire was, that being in great distresse through feare of the English, that daily marched vp and downe the Countrie, he desired his Lordship to grant him and his protection to trauell without danger. Whereunto his Lordship made this answere to be written, and sent him. That he must absolutely denie his request, but yet if himselfe, or any of his Nation, or any dwelling with him or them would within eight dayes come vnto him to Puerto Rico, he should by the vertue of that his Letter bee protected from being taken or spoyled, by any of his Souldiers: and this hee willed him to signifie to them neere about him, that they might giue notice of the same throughout the whole Iland. And further, his Lordship promised that to as many as would come, that they should both come safely, and if they so would should bee imbarked, and sent away as the Gouernour with the rest of the Spaniards were alreadie.

His Lordships honorable resolution and intendment was, not to come so farre from home, to take onely or spoile some place in this other world, and then run home againe: but hee had determined (by the leaue of God) to keepe Puerto Rico, if it pleased God to giue it into his hands. That was the place he meant to carry, whatsoeuer it might cost him, being the very key of the West Indies, which locketh and shutteth all the gold and siluer in the Continent of America and Brasilia. He knew that Saint Domingo might with much lesse losse bee taken, and would bring much greater profit for the present; in regard whereof, and of the desire hee had his Aduenturers should become gayners, his thoughts sometime tooke that way, but finally they stayed at Puerto Rico, and there setled themselues. As this was his resolution before hee had it, so was it also after he had it, and then not onely his, but euery man of worth or spirit saw such reason in his Lordships designments, that some thought themselues not so graciously dealt withall, that they were passed ouer, when others were named to stay. But God had otherwise disposed. For within a while that his Lordship had beene in Puerto Rico, many of our men fell sicke, and at the very first not very many dyed. The Spanish as well as the English were both sicke and dyed of the sickenesse, as besides Seralta was seene in diuers others. Others suspected their bodily labours to haue procured it, and both seeme to haue concurred.

In Iuly and Auguſt is their Winter, ſo called for their great raines at thoſe times, which to bodies alreadie rarified by the heat of the Sunne then ouer them, and yet rather where vehement exerciſe hath more opened the pores whereby inward heat is exhaled, muſt needes be very dangerous. It was an extreme coolenesſe of the body, which within few dayes would grow into a flux of bloud, ſometimes in the beginning accompanyed with a hot Ague, but alwayes in the end attended by an extreme debillitie and waſte of ſpirits: ſo that ſome two dayes before death, the armes and legs of the ſicke would be wonderfull cold. And that was held for a certaine ſigne of neere departure. This ſickneſſe vſually within few dayes (for it was very extreme to the number of ſixtie, eighrie, and an hundred ſtooles in an artificiall day) brought a languiſhing weakneſſe ouer all the body, ſo that one mans ſickneſſe (if hee were of any note) commonly kept two from doing duties. And this was it, which rather then the number alreadie dead, made his Lordſhip firſt thinke of quitting the place. For though towards the beginning of Iuly, there were not much aboue two hundred dead, yet was there twice as many ſicke, and there was no great hope to recouer the moſt of them. The ſhips were left weakly manned, for when we landed we landed about a thouſand men, of which the greater part was dead or made vnſeruiceable for the preſent. There were aboue foure hundred reported dead when his Lordſhip left the Towne, and ſurely as many ſo ſicke, that moſt of them could not bring themſelues aboard, before his Lordſhip left the place. After that it was once openly giuen out what his Lordſhip purpoſed, then was order taken to make readie the ſhips, in which time theſe things happened. Vpon Friday the ſeuenth of Iuly, there was a ſaile diſcryed, which being come in was found to bee one of our owne, though made ours by purchace. Heretofore it was noted, that at our comming from the Canaries, wee wanted the Frigat and one of the black Pinnaces, which being ſent vpon a piece of ſeruice with Captaine Slingsby in the Conſent, had left him, and were gone after a chace, but how farre or whither none knew till this ſaile came in, which told vs that they had taken that chace, whoſe lading was Muttons onely and Hennes, paſſing from one Iland to another, but withall they had ſo irrecouerably loſt the fleet, that after they had there ſtayed fiue or ſixe dayes, beating vp and downe to finde vs againe, but without effect. Captaine Harper that commanded the Frigat, was forced to breake open his Letter, to know his direction whither his Lordſhip had appointed him to come to him. According whereunto they firſt ſtood for Margarita, where not finding his Lordſhip, nor hearing any newes of the fleet, they put off againe for Puerto Rico, according to the direction they had receiued. But by reaſon of the violence of the Current there not ſo well knowne to them, they were driuen to the leeward of Puerto Rico, and ſo had beene at Domingo before they came to vs. There they heard newes of his Lordſhips being at Puerto Rico, and that he had taken the Towne, but the Fort held out ſtill. Making therefore all the haſte they could, bearing vp as high as the Paſſages, they got thither at laſt. The men in this ſhip were they which had beene in the black Pinnace, but becauſe ſhee began to bee leakie, and not to brooke theſe Seas, they had ſunke her, and put themſelues into the prize, which being of better ſaile then the Frigat, had out-gone her ſome dayes ſayling, for they told vs ſhee would alſo bee there within few dayes, and ſo ſhee was on Tueſday next after, hauing loſt one man of their companie, all the reſt were very ſtrong, and in good liking. Vpon Wedneſday the nineteenth of Iuly, there came into this Harbour a Caruell: Shee was found to bee of Margarita, laded onely with paſſengers that were bound for Spaine. There were alſo found ſome rags and medicine pearle, to the value of a thouſand Duckets; the men were not many, and it ſhould ſeeme they had not further furniſhed themſelues, then might prouide them neceſſaries at their arriuall in Spaine, and to preſent their friends. Vpon interrogatories therefore he found it very certaine by the agreeing confeſſion of them all, that they were ſo farre from hearing of any fleet of the Engliſh in theſe Weſterne parts, that in much ſecuritie the Kings Chiſt was yet remayning in Margarita, with no more then the ordinarie guard. For beſides the old Garriſon of about thirtie Souldiers, there was not any new ſupply. Onely they had receiued direction from the King, that ſeeing the Chiſt was very rich, they ſhould not aduenture to ſend ſo great treaſure without aſſured ſtrength; and therefore his pleaſure was ſignified to be, that it ſhould attend his ſending of ſome Gallions or Frigats for the ſafe wafting of the ſame. The Chiſt had not beene ſtirred ſome yeeres, and therefore rich it muſt needes be, in a place which ſo plentifully yeelded pearle. Triall was made by his Lordſhip with three ſhips; but Margarita lying South-eaſt or South-eaſt by South from Puerto Riceo, and the windes at that time of the yeere conſtantly blowing Eaſt South-eaſt or South-eaſt by Eaſt, they were forced backe fruſtrate of their hopes.

§. IIII.

HIs Lordſhip after he ſaw it was not Gods pleaſure, that this place ſhould yet bee kept by the Engliſh, had made ſome offers afarre off to the Teniente, and other chiefe men that were in the mayne Iland, for ranſomming their Iland and Citie. To this purpoſe he vſed one Antonio Robles, a Licenciate in phyſick, that had beene taken in the ſhip of Angola, whereof I noted ſomething before. This Robles is a man, whom ſome learning and much experience added to his naturall wit, had made very ſubtile and craftie. Hee once returned, but ſoone after gaue the ſlip, as alſo did two others. By reaſon of this accident, the old Gouernour and the reſt of the Spaniards, were reſtrayned of much libertie they had, and were kept in cloſer durance: which wrought with them in ſuch ſort, that at his Lordſhips returne into the Harbour, the Gouernour Pedro Suarez made offer to his Lordſhip, that if it would pleaſe him to ſend one Vincent Lopez (that was in reſtraint with him) againe to negociate with the Teniente touching the ranſome of the Citie and Stanſies, he would become ſuretie for his returne. His Lordſhip refuſed to write any more to men ſo vnworthy of his curteſie, which they had much abuſed; Marry if you, ſaid my Lord, doe ſee likelihood that any thing would bee effected, and would your ſelfe and as from your ſelfe write to them to perſwade them for their owne good, I would vpon your word and ſuretiſhip, be content that the ſaid Lopez ſhould paſſe. Thus vpon Tueſday the firſt of Auguſt, was Lopez diſpatched with one Letter to the Biſhop, and another to the Teniente, both from Pedro Suarez. Vpon Thurſday the third day, Lopez returned. And brought his Lordſhip a Letter in ſhew from the Licenciate in phyſick, Antonio Robles, but indeed it was an anſwere from the Teniente, Pedro Garcia, and the reſt, into whoſe hands the gouernment fell, vpon the ſending away of the preſent Gouernour Antonio Beluſchere. In this Letter, beſides many idle excuſes for his owne treacherous breach of promiſe (the conuenient doing whereof was in likelihood the cauſe, that he ſpecially was deputed to write for the reſt) there was offer made, that if it would pleaſe his Excellencie, to ſet downe and ſend them a definite ſumme, which he would accept, they would looke into their preſent abilitie, and accordingly would ſend his Lordſhip aſſurance, that within ſeuen dayes it ſhould be ſent to him, to be receiued at the Point, where hee held continuall guard. Concluding, that in theſe ſendings they ſought nothing but delaies, his Lordſhip determined not to ſend them any more, but withall ſpeed to make himſelfe and the fleet readie for a happy, and by many much deſired returne, ſince it was cleere, that it was not Gods pleaſure, that yet this Iland ſhould bee inhabited by the Engliſh. All the Hides therefore, and Ginger and Sugar, which either was alreadie readie or in time could be gotten, was forthwith ſhipped, and ſo was all the munition in the Towne, all the Ordnance in any place of that Iland, which amounted in all and of all ſorts very neere the full number of fourſcore caſt peeces, ſome of them the goodlieſt that euer I ſaw. But when they ſaw his Lordſhip reſolute to ſend no more to them for negotiating touching the ranſome of their Citie, they now begin to ſend againe and againe to him. His Lordſhip neuer meant to deface their Citie, or to make it vnfit to be inhabited. But withall he tooke the likelieſt wayes, to conceale this from the knowledge of the enemie, whom hee could not ſo well rule with any other bit, our owne ſtrength being now growne ſo weake. His Lordſhip therefore entertayned their offers, and ſo farre granted their deſires, that ſome in the name of them all, might with his Lordſhips Paſſe come to the Citie to goe through with his Excellencie. There came two, Immanuel Cordero and Don Pedro de Pantoia, who without the Biſhops conſent, they ſaid, offered fiue hundred kintals of Ginger; at whoſe returne (which ſhould bee within three or foure dayes) they did thinke that thrice ſo much would be giuen. The fleet was not yet altogether readie, and Sir Iohn Burkley not yet ſo well recouered of his the common diſeaſe, as that it was deemed fit hee ſhould preſently commit himſelfe to the Sea, being to bee ſo long without a bayeing place; and hee by his Lordſhips directions left him, might diſpatch the matter. Theſe two therefore were licenſed to returne to Luiſa to their friends vpon Saturday being the twelfth of Auguſt, with promiſe to be againe with vs on the Tueſday following. But before their appointed day his Lordſhip ſet ſaile: yet it is not vnlikely his returne was ſomething haſtened, by an accident that fell out. The old man Pedro Suarez had a countenance that promiſed an honeſt minde, and in regard of his age and weakneſſe, he was not ſo narrowly looked to, as for ſometime hee had beene. This old ſicke man found a meanes to eſcape the Sunday-night after they were gone to Luiſa, certainly not without practice with his Countrimen; and it is thought with the priuitie of his Keeper. Now this mans departure onely therefore miſliked, becauſe it was traiterous and without leaue, did more and more confirme his Lordſhip in his opinion that the Spaniards dealing with vs was traiterous, and for ſome other end, then was pretended. And therefore ſeeing his owne ſtay ſhould not be needfull (for he knew Sir Iohn very ſufficient to diſpatch any thing that was to bee done) he preſently commanded that his owne ſhip ſhould weigh, and with her, of great ſhips onely the the Samſon; of the leſſer, the Royall Defence, the Frigat, the Scout, the Elizabeth, the Guiana, and two little ones that were found in the Harbour, one a Frenchman, and the other a Spaniſh Frigat, which were rigged during our aboad there. So that his Lordſhip left with Sir Iohn the ſtrength of the Naue, the Aſcention, the Gallion, the Alcedo, the Conſent, the Pegaſus, the Centurion, two ſtrong flie-boats, and the Anthonie. The true reaſon of his Lordſhips deſire to be gone from Puerto Rico quickly, was indeed a longing he had to be quickly at the Ilands. For hee had ſo plotted the voyage, that ſtill hee would haue a ſtring left in ſtore for his Bow. And now hee had intelligence that the fleet of Mexico, which hee knew was to goe this yeere, was euen now vpon their diſpatch. For vpon very good aduertiſements he was giuen to vnderſtand, that the fleet meant to diſimbogge the firſt light Moone in their September, which falleth out to bee the ſeuen and twentieth of our Auguſt, and his deſire was to be at the Ilands before them, which he might well hope for being in the height of the Bermudas by that time they ſhould put forth of the Bay. Beſides this he had reaſon to looke for the meeting of a Carack, if by the middeſt of September hee were at the Ilands. For though they, which are homewards bound hauing made their voyage in the Eaſt Indies, ordinarily haue timelier paſſage, and are at home by Auguſt, yet if any of them, which this yeere were to goe from Liſbon, ſhould be put backe againe, September is the moneth, wherein they were to bee expected at the Azores. And for their more certaine meeting againe with his Lordſhip, that ſo all the fleet might come home together, his Lordſhip left them this direction, which was giuen to euery ſhip vnder his hand. You ſhall ſteere in with the Southward part of Flores: if you finde me not in that courſe, then ſeeke me betwixt ten and fourteene leagues of Fayal, Weſt South-weſt. If there you finde mee not, then come through betwixt Fayal and the Pike; and ſeeke me in the Road at Graciola; if you finde me in none of theſe places, you may be aſſured I am gone from the Ilands for England. And for the Towne, Sir Iohn had order giuen to leaue it vndefaced, ſauing that the Fort Mora ſhould bee razed to the landward. Thus wee left Puerto Rico, and ſteered as directly to the Ilands as the windes would ſuffer vs, which are there continually Eaſterly, yet ſerued vs ſo fauourably, that blowing much at Eaſt South-eaſt, wee tooke our ſelues to hold a North North-eaſt courſe, allowing our ſhips to driue one point to the leeward; which courſe if we could hold, we hoped to weather the infamous Iland of Bermuda, notorious with vnmercifull and incredible ſtormes of fearfull thunder and lightning. It was the ſixt day after our departure from Puerto Rico, being Saturday the nineteenth of Auguſt, when I writ out this note, then were wee a great way from the height of the Bermuda, which lyeth in thirtie three degrees.

Cauſe of the Earles quick departure.

The Earle departed from Puerto Rico the 14. of Auguſt.

Now we are in the way from Puerto Rico to the Ilands of Azores, which muſt needes be found a long paſſage, and the way being not much beaten with reſort of the Paſſengers, puts me in hope that this may be a leiſurefull place, to pay a piece of a promiſe that I made before, to ſay ſomething more of the nature and qualitie and largeneſſe of the mayne Iland of Puerto Rico. The meanes which I did moſt wiſh and hope for, to enable mee the better for the payment of this debt, I could neuer with conueniency come by. For I alwayes waited if his Lordſhip would paſſe ouer into the Mayne. For without him I had no great deſire, and indeed I ſhould haue beene quickly miſſed, ſeeing it pleaſed his Honor to vſe mee in the diſpatch of all things, which were to be done by warrant or direction vnder his hand. So that whatſoeuer I ſhall ſay here, I muſt be content to report vpon the report of others; and I will not tell you any thing, which (mee thought) my ſelfe did not firſt ſee reaſon to beleeue. The plat and figure of the Iland is a ſquare, altera parte longius, the length exceeding the breadth neere the proportion of ſeuen to foure; for it is told me, to be ſixe and thirtie leagues long, and twentie leagues broad, bearing it ſelfe out from end to end neere in the ſame diſtance. It lyeth Eaſt and Weſt: at the Weſt end the two corners doe ſo jut out, that they make a goodly Bay betwixt them, but yet not ſo profitable, becauſe a goodly Riuer, which would gladly diſburden it ſelfe into the Bay, is choaked with ſands, which the Sea caſteth vp into the mouth of the Riuer, which being nauigable a good way vp into the Land, is within a ſtones caſt of loſing his old name, and being called the Sea, made ſhallow and vnfit for the receit of Veſſels of burthen. There are indeed in the ſame Bay other leſſer Riuerets, whereat Paſſengers vſe to take in freſh water, as Sir Francis Drake did, after hee was beaten from the Citie of Puerto Rico, and put forth thence to Nombre de Dios. Vpon this part of the Iland, which is commonly called La Aguada, in Engliſh, The watering place, the greateſt Commander, and of largeſt poſſeſſions, is, or of late hath beene, one Cherено; whoſe proper land, is thought to containe in compaſſe and circuit neere the quantitie of ten leagues. The other end, the Eaſterly end is knowne by the name of La cabeça de San Iuan, in Engliſh Saint Iohns head. The Citie of Puerto Rico is his right ſide or arme: and the South ſide about the Countrie of Choama (whither the Biſhop at our comming had carried himſelfe) will be anſwerable to the left ſide or left arme, as being leſſe fit for action, and his feet is the watering place. The moſt famous Riuers of this Iland are Toa and Baiamond, the rather becauſe they runne into the Harbour of the Citie of Puerto Rico; whereof Toa is by much the greater, and falleth more with the Weſt of the Towne: This Riuer riſeth out of a Mountaine, called Guiamo, being on the South ſide of the mayne Iland, ſome fifteene or ſixteene leagues from Puerto Rico to the Eaſtward;

from Guiamo it runneth North in one ſtreame, till it come to another Mountaine, called Cawas, and though in this way it receiue many Riuerets into it, yet it cannot bee ſaid either to loſe or retaine his name, for thus farre it is not knowne certainly what name it had, as they ſay; but here parteth it ſelfe into two ſtreames, the one whereof runneth Northerly to Luiſa, a Towne not great but ſomewhat fortified, ſtanding ſome ſixe leagues to the Eaſtward of Puerto Rico. Whether the Towne doe giue or take his name of this arme of the Riuer, it is vnknowne. But well knowne it is, that they haue both one name. The other ſtreame being once diuorced from Luiſa, runneth North North-weſt and falleth into the Harbour of Puerto Rico, where it is called Toa.

Riuer Baiamond.

Baiamond riſeth betwixt the parting of Toa and Luiſa, and runneth a Northerly, but more Eaſterly courſe withall, till it mingleth it ſelfe with ſalt water on the South-weſt ſide of Puerto Rico. The Iland is watered with very many other Riuers, and Riuerets and Springs without number, or names, but thoſe that giue or take names of the Villages and Townes which ſtand vpon them, for the moſt part runne Northerly. For beſides Guiamo, which riſeth in the Countrie of Coama, and runneth into the Southerly Sea, and the Riuer whereon Saint German (which alſo is called Salamanca and Guadianilla) is ſituate towards the Weſt end of the Iland neere to Cape Roxo; all the other of name runne to the leeward of the Iland, and fall into the Northerly Sea. As firſt and next to Puerto Rico to the Weſtward, the Riuer and Towne of Sabuco: next to it Guiamo, then the Recibo, twixt which and the Laguada is another, whoſe name I could not learne. The Laguada, whereof I ſpake before; and which giueth name to the Weſterly end of the Iland, where Sir Francis Drake (as I ſaid) watered, is next vnto the choaked Bay before mentioned; in which Bay at the North-weſt Point is the Gawaraba, which the Seas violence hath made ſomething vnprofitable for nauigation, ſo that the paſſage to Saint Domingo, and the other leeward parts of the Weſt Indies, are moſt ordinarily from the Laguada, if they of the Weſterly part of the Iland haue any buſineſſe that way. For as Saint Germans or Salamanca, though I haue heard it to be a Harbour and a Sea-faring Towne, yet I am told ſo much to the contrarie, as makes me doubt of the former report, though I dare not abſolutely aſſent to this later, though a Spaniard of good vnderſtanding told it me. Now, in euery one of theſe Riuers which I haue named is there gold found ordinarily before it be fought. And (I know it to bee true) when the Spaniards perceiued by his Lordſhips manner of leauing the Citie of Puerto Rico, that hee went not away without purpoſe to returne, one of them told his Honor in plaine termes, that he could not thruſt his ſpade into any of theſe named Riuers, and many other beſides theſe, but hee ſhould finde gold. This certainly is true, and I haue ſeene the experience, that ſome of the grauell of one of theſe Riuers being brought to his Lordſhip becauſe it looked rich, when triall was made, onely by waſhing away the ſand and grauell, there was cornes of very good gold found in it, and that for the quantitie and proportion in great meaſure. Where, becauſe we are againe fallen into this argument, I will report vnto you a certaine truth, whereby the richneſſe of the mynes in Puerto Rico may be eſteemed. One Ioancho de Luyando, a Mint-maſter in this Iland, dwelling in the Guadianilla neere to Saint Germans, or at the leaſt hauing workes there, tooke a bullion or maſſe of gold ſo pure, as it needed no further triall, that being ſent to the King it was found worth three thouſand and fiue hundreth Duckets, and diuers times he found ſuch plates, that onely ſplitting them, he made himſelfe trenchers of gold to eate his meat on. This man may bee judged to haue beene of no great either wit or care; for it is certainly reported, that oftentimes meeting his owne ſlaues comming out of the Countrie to his houſe in Puerto Rico with ſtore of gold, hee did not know them to be his owne, till themſelues told him ſo; and yet this man dyed ſo very rich, that he left euery of his three ſonnes a hundreth thouſand Duckets; inſomuch that the youngeſt of them being in Spaine vpon the diſpatch of ſome buſineſſe, which his father had left vnſettled, was there thought of ſtate ſo good, that a Marqueſſe thought his daughter well beſtowed vpon him in marriage. But ſee how nothing will laſt where God with his preſeruing bleſſing doth not keepe things together. For at this day, ſcarce is there any remainder left of all his riches, and this now moſt poore though great Lady, not being able to proportion her ſelfe to the lowneſſe of her fortune, and beſides vexed with her husbands ill conditions, hath by authoritie left him, and hauing entered religious profeſſion, is at this preſent in a Nunnerie in Saint Domingo.

Gold found ordinarily in the Riuers of Saint Iohn de Puerto Rico.

Vanitie of riches.

The ſoile.

I haue beene very inquiſitiue of the beſt obſeruers, and moſt able to judge among ours, that haue vpon occaſion trauailed into the inparts of the Iland. They doe agreeingly tell me, firſt that their wayes are very myrie, or rather dirtie, as proceeding of mold rather then grauell or ſand; now, the prouerbe in England is, that that Countrie is beſt for the Byder, that is moſt cumberſome to the Rider. Secondly, the graſſe and herbage they meet withall euerywhere is very proud and high, though ſomewhat courſe, which argueth a luſtineſſe, and ſtrength of fatneſſe in the ſoile, and which wanteth onely ſtore of mouthes to ouer-come that luxuriant pride, and to bring it to the fineneſſe which we moſt commend in England, which is made moſt probable, by that, which in the third place they report of their experience, that the ſoile is a black mold, vnderlaid within ſome two foot, with a laire of reddiſh clay, which is one of the moſt infallible marks by which our Engliſh Graſiers know their battle and feeding grounds. The whole Iland is delightfully and plea-pleasurably diuersified with Hills and Vallies. Among the Hills there is one eminent aboue the rest, called the Loquilla, commended with the greatest plentie and riches of mynes. And yet none of the Riuers that I can heare of, haue their heads from thence, which perhaps may bee the reason, why it aboue the rest is lesse wasted. For they say that in the other Hills also there are veines found, of whose pouertie no man needeth to complaine. This Hill which they call Loquilla, is placed Easterly aboue Luisa. The Vallies are much wooddy, but in very many places interlaced with goodly large Playnes and spacious Lawnes. The woods are not onely vnderlings (as in the lesser Iland for the most part they are) but timber trees of goodly talnesse and stature, fit for the building of ships, and of euery part of them. For not to speake of a ship which wee our selues found here a building towards the burthen of a hundreth, the great Bongonia; a ship of a thousand, hauing lost her Masts at Sea, had them all made here of the timber of this Iland, her mayne Mast being of two trees onely, and being there and all other wayes fitted for Spaine, was euen vpon the point of putting forth of this Harbour, when Sir Francis Drake and Sir Iohn Hawkins came hither with an honorable intent to take her and the foure Millions, which shee brought hither from the Hauana. For this ship was the Admirall of the fleet, which that yeere went from Tierra firma; and being taken with a storme at Sea, and hauing lost her Masts, with much adoe recouered this Harbour, and here was againe fitted. But the Queenes Nauie (vpon aduertisement of this accident) came so just in the nick, that they were forced to sinke her in the Harbour, and that with so great haste, that the passengers had not time to fetch their clothes, but lading and victuals and all was lost. Some of the ribs of this great Beast we found here, but the marrow and sweetnesse of her was gone; for shee brought in her foure millions and a halfe of treasure, for the wasting whereof those Frigats, which Sir Francis burned in this Harbour, were purposely sent. For while Sir Francis was watering at Guadalupe, some of his fleet discouered the passage of these Frigats by Dominica; which good newes (as truly they were very good) assured Sir Francis (as he openly told the fleet) that the treasure was not yet gone from Saint Iohn de Puerto Rico, for as much as he assured himselfe that these ships were going to fetch it home. The Playnes and Lawnes of the mayne Iland are graced with much varietie of many kindes of fruit: for besides the great Countries of ground where their Heards roame with such vncontrolled licence, as that they grow almost wilde, the champaine which they haue chosen to place their Stancies and Ingenios vpon, are richly laden with Ginger and Sugar-cane. Their Ingenios are commonly vpon some Riuer, or neere some moore-marrish and waterish places, for in places of that qualitie doe their Sugar-canes prosper best. And besides, there is much vse of water for their Mills, and other works, though most commonly their Mills goe with the strength of men and horses, as I vnderstand, like our Horse-mills in England, which if I had seene my selfe I should haue beene better able, and consequently more willing, to haue reported to you the manner and cunning of the same. They that haue beene eye-witnesses, doe with great wonder and commendation speake of them. Their Stanfias are more inwardly placed in the Countrie, and yet a conuenient neerenesse to some Riuer is desired, for more conuenient carriage of their Ginger to Puerto Rico, whence they vent their commodities into other Countries; which I take to bee some part of the cause why more follow Ginger then Sugar workes, because their Stanfias doe not need such choise of place, and therefore the poorer may more easily come by them, which yet also more easily they set vpon, because much needeth not to set vpon the commoditie of Ginger. I haue heretofore said in generall, that Sugar and Ginger are the greatest knowne commodities of this Iland.

Ginger and Sugar their richest commodities.

A third commoditie of the Iland besides Ginger and Sugar, I did before note to bee Hides. Whereof without contradiction there is very great store. I haue beene told by the Spaniard, that that same Cherene, whose Countrie is neere to the Laguada of the quite contrarie side to Cape Roxo, is generally reported to feede to the number of twelue thousand head of Cattle. Whereupon we may easily coniecture, how infinite the number of Cattell in this Iland is, seeing in the Westerly end thereof, which is held farre worse for feeding then the Easterly, neere Saint Iohns head, there is so incredible abundance. Once, it is generally spoken and beleeued, that by reason of this ouer-flowing of Beeues, it is lawfull for any man to kill what he needeth for his vse, if onely hee bee so honest as to bring the skins to the proper owners. Now, these Hides must rise to a huge summe of riches, considering that their Cattell are farre larger, then any Countrie that I know in England doth yeeld. For their Kine that I haue seene here, are for goodlinesse both of heads and bodies comparable with our English Oxen. And I wot not how that kinde of beast hath specially a liking to these Southerly parts of the world, aboue their Horses, none of which I haue seene by much so tall and goodly as ordinarily they are in England. They are well made, and well metalled, and good store there are of them, but me thinks, there are many things wanting in them, which are ordinarie in our English light horses. They are all Trotters, nor doe I remember that I haue seene aboue one Ambler, and that a very little fidling Nagge. But it may be, if there were better Breeders, they would haue better and more goodly increase, yet these are good enough for Hackneys, to which vse onely almost they are imployed. For Sheepe and Goates I cannot say that there are any great flocks, and of the two, fewer Sheepe then Goates. For I haue seene and tasted of many Goates, but to my remembrance, I did not see one Sheepe, Woolish Dogs.

The wild dogs liue of Crabs.

Description of these land-crabs, quere if they bee not Tortoises.

yet (say they) that the Iland is not without reasonable flocks: and I haue beene told so, by them who haue receiued information from their owne eyes. Neither can this scant of sheepe be laid vpon the nature of the soile, as being vnfit or vnwilling to feed that sober harmlesse creature, but it proceedeth rather of a woolish kinde of wilde Dogs which are bred in the woods, and there goe in great companies together. This commeth to passe, by reason that these Dogs finde in the woods sufficient sustenance, and preferre that wilde libertie before domesticall, and to themselues much more profitable seruice. These Dogs liue of Crabs; I meane not fruits of trees: but an Animal, a liuing and sensible creature, in feeding whereupon, euen men finde a delight, not onely a contentednesse. These woods are full of these Crabs, in quantitie bigger then euer I saw any Sea-Crabs in England, and in such multitudes that they haue Berries, like Conies in English Warrens. They are in shape not different from Sea-Crabs, for ought I could perceiue. For I speake not this out of report, but of my owne sensible experience. I haue seene multitudes of them both here, and at Dominica. The whitest whereof (for some are vgly blacke) some of our men did catch and eate with good liking, and without any harme, that euer I heard complaine of. At our first comming to Puerto Rico, the Dogs of the Citie, every night kept a fearfull howling, and in the day time, you should see them goe in flocks into the woods along the Sea side. This wee tooke at first a kinde bemoaning of their Masters absence, and leauing of them: but when within awhile they were acquainted with vs, who at first were strangers to them, and so began to leaue the howling by night, yet still continued their daily resort to the woods, and that in companies. We vnderstood by asking, that their resort thither was to hunt, and eate Crabs, whereof in the woods they should finde store. This then is the sustenance which the wilde Dogs of Puerto Rico finde in their woods; which either fayling them sometimes, or out of a woolish disposition they get by liuing apart from men, they fall vpon the sheepe, whereof they haue made great waste; but which easily might be repayred, if the Spaniards would bee content, to sweat a little, or to be a little wearie in killing of these Dogs. Their Goates liue more securely, because they loue cliffes of Rocks, or the tops of Hils, and therefore they are out of the ordinarie haunt of these murderous Dogs, by reason that their ordinarie foode the Crabs are most vsually in bottoms, and along the Sea side. Besides Sheep and Goats there is reasonable good store of Swine, which in these Westerly and Southerly Ilands yeeld most sweet Porke. I doe not remember that I haue seene here either Hare or Conie, but here is store of excellent Poultrie, as Cocks and Hens and Capons, some Turkies and Gimy-hens, Pidgeons in meruailous abundance; not in Doue-houses as with vs, but which breed and build in Trees, they are both of great number and goodnesse. For besides other places, there are two or three little Ilands hard by Puerto Rico, neere to the mouth of Toa, where a Boat may goe in an euening or morning, and suddenly take nine, ten, or a dozen dozen; the chiefest of these three is called (as I haue heard) the Gouernours Iland. I haue not marked any store of Fowle vpon this little Iland, nor haue I heard of more by any that haue beene in the mayne Iland. Parrots and Parrachetoes are here, as Crowes and Dawes in England; I haue ordinarily seene them flie in flocks, and except it bee some extraordinarie talkatiue, they are not here much regarded, as it should seeme.

Now, fruits of the Iland are abundant in number and measure, very excellent; Potatoes are ordinarie. Their Pines are in shape like a Pine-apple, and of this likenesse, I thinke, these had their names, but neither in feeling or taste are they any thing like; for that wherewith this Pine is inclosed is not wood, but soft, that you may squease it in your hand, and so apt to bee mellow, that it will not keepe long, whereas a wooddie Pine-apple is of an exceeding durance and lasting. The taste of this fruit is very delicious, so as it quickly breedeth a fulnesse. For I cannot liken it in the palate to any (me thinks) better then to very ripe Strawberries and Creame, the rather if a man haue alreadie eaten almost his belly full: for then they much resemble a Pine; I haue seene some a quarter of a yard long at least, and in proportionable thicknesse, to bee like a Pine-apple; it groweth vpon an heard like an Artichoke. Their Mammeis are of the colour of a very darke russitting apple, or a leather-coat, of the bignesse of a great Costard, the rinde of it as thicke or thicker then the barke of a Sallow, which being easily pulled off discouereth a yellow, but well tasting meat, something like a Carrot roote, but much better. Within this meat, there are two or three great rugged ill-shaped stones, which (as I remember) haue kirnels in them. Their Guiauas are a lesser fruit, as bigge as a Peach, and without not much vnlike, but within not solid as the Mammeis, or as an Apple is, but full of such little seedes as a Goose-berry hath, not so greenish, but inclining to a sanguine colour; the taste of this is (me thought) like to a very ripe great white Plum: this fruit is (which a man would not thinke) a remedie against the flux, and so are their Papaies, a fruit like an Apple of a waterish welsh taste. They haue Plums blacke and white, their stones much bigger, and their meat much lesse then in England, and these also stay the flux. And so doe their wilde Grapes, which are a fruit growing in Clusters, and therein onely (me thinkes) like Grapes, they are round, and as great as a good Musket-bullet, and yet haue they very little meat vpon them, for their stone (if that which is not hard may bee called a stone) is exceeding great for the proportion of the fruit, insomuch that the meat seemeth to bee but the rinde of this stone. A stone I call it though you may put it together with your finger, but it

It hath a bitterish kirnell in it, and that which is without it is meat, and that of a delightfull saporous taste. Their Plantines are a fruit which grow on a shrub betwixt an hearb and a tree, but it is commonly called, a tree of the height of a man, the stem of it as bigge as a mans thigh, the fruit it selfe, of the bignesse and shape of a Goates horne, it groweth yellowish and mellow being ripe either vpon the tree, or with keeping, and then eaten raw or roasted, it is a good meat, comming neere to the relish of an Apple-Iohn, or a Duson that hath beene kept till it is ouer-ripe, saueng that me thought I still found some taste of a roote in it, the meat of it is lapped vp in a thin skin, which being scored the long way with a knife, easily deliuereth what is within it. Plantines.

Their Coker-trees please the eye, as well as their Nuts doe the taste. The body of them is but slender, no where so bigge as a mans middle, and vpwards growing proportionably lesse, till they are risen some thirtie or fortie foot high without sprig or bough, then breake out their boughs all at once, euery one whereof is iust like a goodly Ostridge feather; their leaues are so cunningly set together, euery one whereof alone is something like a Sedge or the leafe of a wilde Lilly. Vnder this bush which is the head of the tree, doe the Coker-nuts grow, some fortie on a tree round about the Bole, some yard downward from where the branches breake out. These trees are a very great grace to the Citie of Puerto Rico, and very many there were found in it: and he that hath seene this may somewhat conceiue of the forme of a Palmeto tree, for in shape they are not vnlike. This Palmeto tree, while it is young (and yet of good yeeres) is much of it selfe meat, and tasted (me thought) like a Wall-nut, but somewhat bitterish; when it is old they say it beareth fruit, the Date, one of the best fruits in my iudgement; I saw not any fruit vpon any of the Palmetoes that I saw, and therefore this shall be said onely vpon the report of others. Besides these fruits the Iland yeeldeth Figs, Pomegranates, Muske-millions, Pome-citrons very faire (as my selfe saw) but it is incredible almost that is reported of them by men of good credit; that their Pome-citrons grow to so huge greatnesse, as that a very little number three or foure of them will lade a horse. Limons I did not see any, yet they say there are some, but of Limes the number is numberlesse; and as for Oranges, truly I thinke they are the best tasted, and most goodly in the world. For both their sweet and sowre Oranges are full of most delicate and taste-pleasing iuyce, and besides they are the goodliest both in colour and greatnesse, that euer I saw. They haue Pepper also growing vpon trees, the Pepper it selfe is a little seede of colour twixt white and yellow, and inclosed in a bagge which sometime is round like a Ball, sometime it runneth out in a picked length like a fruit, which we gather in our Gardens in England, and eate as a sallet with Mutton. This pepper is much hotter and stronger then the blacke pepper vsed with vs in our Countrie. These fruits and many more grow vpon trees, and common to them all it is, and I thinke to all the fruits of the Iland, that the same tree at once beareth buds, greene fruit, and ripe fruits, and often withall seedeth. Cocos. Palmetos. Other fruits. Huge Citrons. Oranges. Pepper. Trees diuersified in fruits, greene & ripe, and buds at once.

Now if any man thinke that wee haue found meates in good store, but yet want bread and drinke, it may at one word bee answered, that the industrious and painefull can want no store of either. For first of all their Cassauie specially new, and carefully dressed is good bread, and will keepe so well that ships that goe hence to Spaine are victualled with it to the good liking of passengers. This Cassauie is the roote of a small tree, like, me thought, to an ouer-growne Hyssope stalke, or a young Sallow, but that the leaues are not so broad, but by much thicker vpon the branches of Cassauie: this roote is very full of liquor, which must be carefully pressed forth, before the dryer part bee fit to make bread. For the roote eaten with the iuyce, or the iuyce by it selfe, bringeth a painfull swelling in the belly, whereof death doth often follow. Wherefore the Spaniards generally hold it for a kinde of poyson. Yet our men (I am told) meeting with the rootes vnpressed, and mistaking them for Potatoes (whereby you may coniecture their shape) haue eaten them without after feeling any mortall distemper. And to a body whose naturall heat is able to ouercome their crudities and rawnesse, there is happily no present danger, for they tell me that of this iuyce sodden, there is made a prettie kinde of drinke somewhat like small Ale. The bread which they make of this roote is very passing white, not kneaded into loaues, but rolled out in Cakes of a reasonable thicknesse, yet may they be better called thin, and of such breadth, that they lap them in foldes one vpon another. Besides their Cassauie, they haue Mais, which maketh a much finer bread, and vsed of the better sort. There are two sorts of Maiz, the lesser they say not vnlike to Rice, in proportion and bignesse and taste; this I neuer saw either growing or raw, but I haue seene it in the dish, and at first did take it for Rice, saueng that mee thought it was something ouer-swollen; they that eate it said, it tasted like Rice. The bigger sort of Maiz I haue seene growing, and it is either the same or exceeding like to the graine which we call Guinny wheate; it groweth vp with a knotted stalke like a Reed, with large scattered leaues; it riseth to a fadome and a halfe or least in height, and at the very top shooteth out the graine. Besides Maiz and Cassauie, there is good store of Rice growing in the Iland, and where Rice will grow, who will make a question of Corne? But to put it without contradiction, that Corne will come vp with good increase, experience hath determined the question. For that same Mulato Christus (whom I mentioned before) did make experience and did sow Corne, which he reaped with good increase. But because it was painefull to follow husbandrie and tilCassauie described. The iuyce not poyson. Maiz. Rice.

lage, and (forſooth) Caſſauie and Maiz would ſerue, the Spaniards would none, nay this Molato halfe borne a ſlaue, would not bee at the paines to continue tillage. For drinks, the Spaniard doth here, as in Spaine hee doth, vſe water for moſt of his drinke, which in ſo hot a climate, would well agree with the Engliſh after ſome acquaintance; yet the Spaniard hath two other ſorts of drinke, the one called Guacapo, made of Molaſſes (that is, the courſeſt of their Sugar) and ſome Spices; the other kinde, and vſed by the better ſort of them, is called Ale: which is a kinde of Bragget made with many hot ſpices. And if both theſe fayled, yet haue they good ſtore of wines, indeed brought in from other Countries; not that this Iland will not nouriſh Vines: for I haue ſeene ſome grow here in Puerto Rico very flouriſhingly. But I haue heard the King will not ſuffer them to plant and dreſſe Vineyards, as a matter of policie.

Drinkes.

I might here, and ſo would I make an end of ſpeaking of the fruits of this Iland (for me thinks what hath beene ſaid, ſheweth it to be ſelfe ſufficient to liue well and happily) but their Terua viua will not haue me forget it. This hearbe is a little contemptible weed to looke vpon, with a long woodden ſtalke creeping vpon the ground, and ſeldome lifting it ſelfe aboue a handfull high from ground. But it hath a propertie, which confoundeth my vnderſtanding, and perhaps will ſeeme ſtrange in the way of Philoſophers, who haue denyed euery part of ſenſe to any plant; yet this certainly ſeemeth to haue feeling. For if you lay your finger or a ſticke vpon the leaues of it, not onely that very piece which you touched, but that that is neere to it, will contract it ſelfe, and run together, as if it were preſently dead and withered, nor onely the leaues but the very ſprigs, being touched, will ſo diſdainfully withdraw themſelues, as if they would ſlip themſelues rather then be touched, in which ſtate both leafe and ſprig will continue a good while, before it returne to the former greene and flouriſhing forme. And they ſay, that ſo long as the partie which touched it ſtandeth by it, it will not open, but after his departure it will, this laſt I did not my ſelfe obſerue: and if it be ſo, it muſt be more then ſenſe, whence ſuch a ſullenneſſe can proceed; but for the former, I haue my ſelfe beene often an eye-witneſſe to my great wonder, for it groweth in very many places in the little Iland. His Lordſhip made ſome of it bee put in pots with earth, and yet it liueth, and how farre it will ſo continue is vncertaine. There hath beene Cinamon and ſomething elſe giuen me as fruits of the Ilands, but I doe thinke they are but rarities at the moſt, and therefore they ſhall not come in my bill. But now to returne to the ſlow ſteps we made towards the Ilands of the Açores.

§. V.

Accidents by Sea in their way to the Azores and there.

ON Saint Bartholomewes eue wee had ſtore of lightning and thunder, which beſides the obſeruation, put vs more out of doubt of our neerer approach to the Bermuda. The next day about noone wee began to ſteere East North-east and better. Vpon Friday the fiue and twentieth, wee were melted with a greater and more ſmothering calme then any time before; and yet (which made it ſtrangeſt) wee had out of the North-weſt higher Seas, then before that time I had euer ſeene, in the greateſt windes that we had had. The hugeneſſe of this Sea was perceiued not onely by the view of our ſight, but rather by the extraordinarie heeling of our ſhip, certainly as much or more impatient of a high Sea in a calme, as of any other weather. This calme was ſo extremely hot, that wee were in hope it would bee like other extreames, of no long continuance; but behold it laſted obſtinately thirteene dayes, ſauing that ſometimes there would be ſome ſhew of a gale, but it would ſo inſtantly and frowardly leaue vs, as if it had beene come onely to let vs ſee wee needed not to deſpaire. There had beene often ſpeech of a Current, that wee were to haue, and ſome thought that they had found it, the moſt durſt not be apprehenſiue. But vpon Wedneſday the thirtieth, it began to be cleere: for though the winde was not worthy to be called ſo, nor ſcarce by the name of a breath, and beſides ſo narrow, that we ſtood vpon abowling, yet we were found in that laſt paſſed artificiall day, to haue run aboue fiftie leagues at the leaſt. For whereas vpon Tueſday wee were by obſeruation found to bee almoſt precilely in thirtie two: vpon Wedneſday at noone, wee had the Sunne in thirtie three, and two terces, and eight minutes. So that in foure and twentie houres we had rayſed one degree and fortie eight minutes, which if we had run due North or South, had riſen to about foure or fiue and thirtie leagues. But ſeeing our courſe was three parts of the time at East North-east, and East and by North, the ſhip could not bee allowed leſſe way, then fiftie leagues at the leaſt; and this being without winde, argueth a violent Current, and the rather becauſe for the time we had a hard Sea. This was made yet more certaine by obſeruation of the Pole-ſtar vpon Thurſday at night. This opinion for a Current, was vpon Saturday Sept. 2. made vndoubted, for the ſubſtance of the thing, I meane that there was a Current, but the circumſtance ſeemed to varie ſomthing. For the Current was then iudged to ſet rather to the East & by South, though this would fill the former obſeruations with greater difficulties. This was perceiued by many drags, which howſoeuer the the ship scaped, yet they still runne or were carried to the East Southerly. And then many other things purposely cast into the Sea to make further triall, all went the same way and that a good pace though directly ahead the ship. And yet farther if there were any breath at all, it was at South-east, so that they went against the winde that was.

And now I come to that the remembrance whereof rather then present apprehension yet maketh me quake, like the man that dyed vpon the fearfull knowledge of how great danger he had passed at Rochester bridge. It was a fearfull storme, which I truly not knowing how dangerfull it was, feared not much while we were in it, but since hearing old Sea-men and of long experience speake of it, I perceiue it is good to be ignorant sometime. Vpon Thursday the seuenth of September, the gale began to be very fresh and to keepe the sailes stiffe from the Masts, and so continued all that day. Vpon Friday it began to speake yet lowder, and to whistle a good in the shrowdes, insomuch that our Master made the Drablers bee taken off, and before night it had blowne the fore-top-saile in pieces by the board; this was taken for the beginning of a storme, and the storme it selfe was looked for: which came indeed about the shutting in of the day, with such furie and rage, as none could say it stole vpon vs vnawares. For I am out of doubt that I had neuer heard any winde so high. One of our Bonnets had beene taken in in the euening, and the other was rent off with the furie of the storme. And thus (for our mayne-top-saile was taken in and the top-mast taken downe) bearing onely a bare corse of each, if the ship had not beene exceeding strongly sided, shee could not haue indured so rough weather. For oftentimes the Sea would ship in waues into her of three or foure Tunne of water, which (the ship being leakie within board) falling often, was as much as both the pumps were able to cast out againe, though they went continually all night, and till noone the next day were neuer throughly sucke, so that if any leake had sprung vpon vs vnder water, it could not haue beene chosen, but shee must haue foundered, seeing the pumpes were hardly able to rid the water that was cast in aboue hatches. The Missen-saile had beene in the euening well furled (for the winde came vpon the starboard quarter) and yet the storme had caught it, and with such violence and furie rent it, that with much adoe the Missen-yard was halled downe, and so the quarter decke and poope saued from danger of renting vp. All this was in the night, which made it much more hidious, specially in the fore-end of the night before the Moone got vp. The winde continued in this excesse of violence till midnight, and then abated hee something, but then began the effect of his blowing to shew it selfe, for then the Sea began to worke, and swell farre higher then before. His Lordships ship is a very goodly one, and yet would shee bee as it were in a pit, and round about vast mountaines of water, so that a man might leaue out the rest of the verse, and say onely vndiq; pontus. For I protest, besides that which was ouer our heads, our prospect any other way was quickly determined, with waues, in my conscience, higher then our mayne-top. And that (which is strangest) round about vs: for the Sea came vpon euery point of the Compasse, so that the poore ship, nor they that directed and cunned her, could not tell how to cunne her to bee safe from the breaking of these vast waues vpon her. This continued all night: and though the winde fell by little and little, yet the Sea was so light, that all Saturday it was not quieted, so that though out of a storme, yet were wee still in a stormy Sea, insomuch that our mayne-top-mast was broken. By Sunday we were come to haue reasonable weather, and rather too little then too much wind. And vpon Monday being the eleuenth of September, wee were not much from a new calme, which wee could not with much more patience haue endured then a good storme; for then wee began to looke out for land, and now to come so neere, what so long wee had longed for. After the storme, the Admirall found himselfe all alone, and so were we the most part of the next day, but towards euening, came the new Frigat to vs. And a sterne her there was a ship seene, which within a day or two afterward, the Samson came and told vs, was her selfe. With day the fifteenth of September, we had the South-west side of it in sight, and bore in therewith till noone. His Lordship had no meaning to make any forcible attempt against it, nor to stay longer, then to take in some fresh victuals; for which purpose, hee sent the Boat off with an old Portugall, and an African of Mozambique, who bearing a flagge of truce, should giue the Ilanders to vnderstand what his Lordships pleasure was, that if they would let him haue things for his money, he would not vse them worse then in former times, they had had experience of him. Withall he gaue the Boat commandement, that shee should bring him answere to the East North-east side of the Iland, where he meant to come to anchor, and tarry for the newes they could learne either English or Spanish. This stay in hoysing the Boat out, gaue the Samson time to get a head vs, and within awhile shee was at anchor. When, behold, at the opening of the Point, first there came one saile, then two, and then three sailes, and within a little the fourth was seene; it was not at first knowne what these might be, yet because the Samson being much neerer, made no haste to weigh, we thought shee made them to be friends. And within awhile we perceiued them to haue pendents in their fore-top-mast heads: this put vs out of doubt, that they were of our owne fleet. For his Lordship at his departure from Puerto Rico, had giuen them direction that euery ship should so beare a pendent, for a marke to be knowne of their friends, and which would make strangers neuer a whit the wiser. These foure were the Merchant, the Ascention, the Consent, and and the Pegasus, which by and by came to an anchor with vs. Now were wee growne a prettie ſtrong fleet againe, either part receiuing new ſtrength of other, each hauing formerly loſt their owne. For the ſtorme had ſcattered Sir Iohns companie as well as ours, though it ſhould ſeeme not to haue beene altogether ſo great with them, as vs. Of Sir Iohns we had not yet, the Gallion, the Alcedo, the Centurion, the Anthonie, the Keſar, and the Doue, which were the Flemmings. The firſt newes that the Boat brought vs, made theſe though friends yet more welcome if that might be. For the Boat hauing told his Lordſhip that they could not be ſuffered to land, yet had promiſe that his Lordſhip ſhould haue any thing that the Iland would affoord. Mary (ſaid they) we are ill prouided, by reaſon of the Kings men of warre, nine and twentie of them haue within theſe few dayes beene here, and taken almoſt all our prouiſions, for they were great ſhips, and full of gallants, fiue of them being the fiue Caracks, that ſhould this yeere haue gone for the Eaſt Indies, but being by the Condes lying on the Coaſt kept in till it was too late for them to haue any hopefull paſſage, they were of Merchants made men of Warre, and with the reſt or rather the reſt with them, were ſent to theſe Ilands to waft the Caracks which were looked for at home this yeere. But the Caracks (ſaid they of Flores) were gone by, before their comming hither, for the ſafetie whereof, they had commandement to ſtay if need were, till the end of this moneth. Whither this Armada was gone they ſaid they knew not, nor whither it would returne, but the very laſt day a great Gallion was within kenning. Theſe newes, as they gaue great cauſe of circumſpection and care, not to meet with them, whom we could not doubt to be too ſtrong for vs, and therefore made vs wiſh they were finally gone from the Ilands; ſo on the other ſide, if knowing that the Caracks were paſſed, if yet they ſtaid, it made the intelligence of the Mexico fleet more probable. And therefore if this were the cauſe of their ſtay, our hope to make ſome purchace of it, made vs more willing, to haue their neighbourhood. Mary, it might bee, they were ſent to looke for our comming home, which they might thinke would bee ſtraggling and weake, and yet on the other ſide the vncertaintie of our comming either at this time or certainly this way, made this ſomething vnlikely. His Lordſhip therefore commanded Captaine Slingſby (a fine Gentleman) to goe aſhoare and to learne more certaintie what was become of the Kings fleet, and why they came. This relation was from the men of Santa Cruz: but the intelligence which Captaine Slingſby brought the ſame night late, was from Villa de la punta Delgada, another Towne of the Ilands. The ſumme of his report (for I was by when he made it) was, that his Excellencie ſhould haue any thing wherewithall they could doe him ſeruice, and if it would pleaſe him to come aſhoare, they would take it as a great fauour. For the Kings men of Warre, they ſaid, that they iudged them certainly to bee gone home, for they were gone hence vpon a fortnight before. The cauſe of their comming was to waft the Caracks, which all foure were gone by, before the Kings fleet came hither, with purpoſe indeed to ſtay till the end of this moneth for them. But ſince the Caracks were come home, there had beene ſent a Caruell of Admſo to recall them. As for the Mexico fleet, there was not at the Ilands any newes of their comming this yeere. This report made by Captaine Slingſby ouer-night, was confirmed early the next morning by the Gouernour himſelfe of the place (a poore Gouernour ſcarce ſo good as an Engliſh Conſtable.) But this Captaine Iuan de Fraga de Mendoça, came himſelfe and made the ſame offer to his Lordſhip, and withall brought both Hennes and Muttons with him, which hee knew hee ſhould not giue for nothing, though hee would ſeeme vnwilling to receiue any thing. He hauing beene ſometime with my Lord, and told all the newes hee remembred, was licenſed, hauing firſt asked and obtayned a Paſſe for himſelfe, and a Protection for the Ilanders, to keepe them from ſpoile by ours. His Lordſhip granted his ſuit, and (which hee farther deſired) that they might bee conceiued in the ſame forme as thoſe were which the Earle of Eſſex had giuen him, within two dayes of the ſame day twelue moneth; and which himſelfe had carefully kept euer ſince.

When this fellow was gone, the flagge of Counſell was hanged out, &c. The returne of this fleet vpon conſultation after the newes aforeſaid, I forbeare to mention in regard of the length of this diſcourſe. They ſet forth from Flores Septemb. 16. 1598. On Michaelmas day they ſounded, and the ground on the fallow did ſtill more aſſure vs of being in the ſleeue: and the Scollop ſhells confirmed their opinion which held vs rather on the Coaſt of France, by the Maſter and others iudged otherwiſe: whoſe iudgement if his Lordſhip out of his iudgement and authoritie had not contradicted and cauſed them to take a more Northerly courſe; all had periſhed in all likelihood on the Vſhent and Rocks. For the next morning we ſaw the land of Normandie.

The first Voyages made to diuers parts of America by Englishmen, Sir SEBASTIAN CABOT, Sir THO. PERT: also of Sir IOHN HAWKINS, and Sir FRANCIS DRAKE, and many others: collected briefly out of Master CAMDEN, Master HAKLVYT, and other Writers.

SIr Sebastian Cabota wee haue alreadie mentioned in the former Booke, as a great Discouerer of that, which most iustly should haue beene called Columbina, and a great deale better might haue beene stiled Cabotiana then America, neither Vespusius nor Columbus hauing discouered halfe so much of the Continent of the new World North and South as he (yea, the Continent was discouered by him, when Columbus had yet but viewed the Ilands) this Herrera for the South part hath mentioned in his Relation of the Riuer of Plate before, naming him an Englishman: and for the North is by vs in the fourth Booke deliuered. A second time Sir Thomas Pert and the said Cabota, were set forth with a fleet to America, by King Henrie the eighth in the eight yeere of his reigne, the same perhaps which Herrera hath also mentioned, of an English ship at Hispaniola, and other American Ilands, in the yeere 1517. Master Hakluyt hath published the Voyages of many English into those parts: as namely of Master Robert Tomson Merchant, and Iohn Field; which together with Ralph Sarre and Leonard Chilton in a ship of Iohn Sweeting dwelling at Cadiz, all Englishmen An. 1555. sayled to Hispaniola, and thence to Mexico in New Spaine, where they found Thomas Blake a Scottishman, who had dwelt there twentie yeeres. At Mexico, Robert Tomson and Augustine Beatio an Italian, were imprisoned many moneths by the Inquisition, and then brought out in a Saint Benito (or fooles coat) to doe penance, a thing neuer seene there before; which caused much concourse of people, giuen to vnderstand of I know not what enemies of God, and expecting to see some Monsters of vncouth shape. They were much pitied by the people seeing such personable men, but sentenced by the Archbishop to be sent back to Spaine, where Tomson did his three yeeres enioyned penance at Siuil. Beatio found the meanes to escape and dyed after in London. Tomson after his libertie married with a rich Spanish heire. The historie at large and his description of Mexico, with the cause of his imprisonment about speaking freely of Images (his Master had made an Image of our Ladie of abode 7000. pezos price, each pezo being foure shillings and eight pence of our money) the Reader may see in Master Hakluyt.

Where also is deliuered the voyage of Roger Bodenham Englishman 1564. to Mexico: also of Iohn Chilton 1568. thither and from thence to Nueua Biscaia, and to the Port of Nauidad on the South Sea: to Sansonate in Guatimala, to Tecoantepec, to Soconusco, to Nicaragua, to Nombre de Dios; to Perossi, Cusco, Paita; to Verd Paz, Chiapa, three hundred leagues from Mexico. From Chiapa he trauelled thorow Hills till he came to Ecatepec, that is, The Hill of winds, in the end of that Prouince, supposed the highest Hill that euer was discouered, from the top whereof are seene both the North and South Seas; deemed nine leagues high. They which trauell vp it, lye at the foot ouer-night, and about midnight begin their iourney, that they may trauell to the top before the Sunne rise the next day, because the winde bloweth with such force afterwards, that it is impossible for any man to goe vp. From the foot of this Hill to Tecoantepec the first Towne of New Spaine are fifteene leagues. From Mexico he trauelled againe to Panuco, and there fell sick, which sicknesse in his returne benefited him: for he fell amongst Canibal Indians which afraid to eate him for feare he had the pox, let him goe. Hee went to R. de las Palmas, and to the Mynes of Sacatecas, the richest in all the Indies. After his returne to Mexico he trauelled to other parts, spending seuenteene yeeres in his American peregrinations. Henrie Hawkes liued fiue yeeres in those parts, and his obseruations are recorded by Master Hakluyt.

Sir Iohn Hawkins his third voyage to Guinea, and thence to the West Indies.

Sir Francis Drake.

Slaine Iohn de Vlloa.

AN. 1567. Master Iohn Hawkins Generall in the Iesus, departed from Plimouth with fiue other ships, the Minion, of which Master Iohn Hampton was Captaine; the William and Iohn, Thomas Bolton Captaine; the Iudith, of which Master Francis Drake was Captaine; the Angel also and the Swallow. Hauing on the Coast of Guinea taken some fiue hundred Negroes, they sayled with them to the Ilands of the West Indies, to sell them to the Spaniards. By tempest they were driuen to the Port of Saint Iohn de Vlloa, where the Spanish ships with 200000. pounds in treasure were at his mercy, but hee dismissed them; which they repayed him with treacherous dealing, the Spaniards perfidiously setting on the English contrarie to the Couenants betwixt them concluded. For after that, when as the whole fleet with their new Vice-roy comming thither had perished, if Master Hawkins had not permitted them to enter the Hauen, out of which he could easily haue kept them: they practised secretly and against agreement to certaine Articles, assaulted the English perfidiously and treacherously, vsing both fraud and scorne, in which fight two ships of the Spaniards were sunke, and one burnt; Some of ours were slaine, others taken and dispiteously tortured, all distressed; all their ships also sunke and burnt, sauing the Munion and Iudith, which were by a storme ensuing betrayed to famine at Sea, which forced the Generall to set 114. men on shoare to the cruell mercies of the Sauages and Spaniards. Yea, one Boat not being able to get to shoare, two were drowned, the rest getting a mile thorow the Sea thither as they could, as Miles Philips one of that forlorne companie hath recorded. Some were dead in seeming two houres space with abundant drinking of fresh water, others swolne exceedingly with salt water and fruits they found; a shower also leauing them not one drie thread, as if Heauen had pursued the Seas challenge, without; and partly hunger, and partly the water and fruits of the Earth, within their bowels, had conspired against this poore crue.

Miles Philips.

The Chichimici Indian Sauages added their inhumanitie, killing eight of their companie in the first onset, but they yeelding (hauing neither weapons nor hearts to resist) the Sauages perceiuing them not to be their Spanish enemies pointed them to Tampico, saying, Tampico Christiano, which they vnderstood not: but diuided themselues into two companies, one going Westward, of which Philips was one, the other Northward, and with them Dauid Ingram, which recouered his Countrie. After the stingings of flies, deaths by Indians, and manifold miseries, this Westerne companie got to Panuco where the Gouernor stripped them of the little which they had, and of their libertie, calling them English Dogs and Lutheran heretikes, and when they demanded helpe of their Surgeons for such as the Indians by the way had wounded, hee said, they should haue none other Surgeon but the Hangman: and after feue dayes sent for them out of the Prison, and with many new Halters (wherewith they expected hanging) bound and sent them to Mexico ninetie leagues distant West and by South, with a great guard of Indians. At Mestitlan they receiued kind vsage. One of their keepers vsed them kindly, the other would strike them to the ground, and bid them, March, march English Dogges, Lutherans, enemies of God. Thus marching they came within two leagues of Mexico, where was our Ladies Church, and therein her Image of Siluer guilt as large as a tall woman, and before it as many Siluer Lampes as are dayes in the yeere, which on high dayes are all lighted. Neither Horseman nor Footman will passe by this Church without entring and praying. After their comming to Mexico many dyed, the rest had kind vsage in the Hospitall, Thence they were carried to Tescuco, to be vsed as slaues, but by one Robert Sweeting (sonne of an Englishman by a Spanish woman) were holpen much from the Indians, or else had all perished.

After this they were put to Spaniards as seruants, and had meanes to get somewhat for themselues, till they became a prey to the Inquisition, which seised their goods and persons, shutting them asunder in dungeons a yeere and halfe. By frequent examinations they would haue pumped somewhat out of them in matters of faith, and not being able, they yeelding to their Assertions in that kind, crauing mercie as men which came into that Countrey by distresse of foule weather: they neuertheless racked them to extore confession that way, which made some to say that which cost their liues. After solemne Proclamation that all might come to this sight, they were brought in fooles Coats, with ropes about their neckes and candles in their hands to the Scaffold, George Rowly, Peter Momfrie, and Cornelius an Irishman were burnt, others condemned to 200. or 300. blowes on Horseback with long whips, and to serue in the Gallies, fiue, eight, or ten yeeres: others to serue in Monasteries, in the S. Benito, fooles-coates, diuers yeeres, of which Philips was one. The whipping was cruelly executed on Good Friday, two Cryers going before proclaiming; behold these English Lutherans, Dogs, enemies of God: the Inquisitors themselues and their Familiars, crying, Strike, lay on those English Heretickes, Lutherans, Gods enemies. All bloudie and swolne they returned to prison to bee sent into Spaine to performe the rest of their Martyrdome. Philips and the rest hauing serued their times (in which hee learned the Mexican tongue) they had their fooles-coats hung vp in the chiefe Church. The rest married there, Philips escaped a second imprisonment and after many crauls in the Countrey and dangers in Spaine, returned to England 1582.

Iob Hortop another of this company hath related like aduentures: He saith, that he and some others were sent Prisoners into Spaine, by the Vice-roy with Don Iuan de Velasco de Uarre, Admirall and Generall of the Spanish fleet, who carried with him in his ship to bee presented to the King of Spaine, the Anatomie of a Giant, sent from China * to Mexico, to the Vice-roy Don Martin Henriques. The skull of his head was neere as big as halfe a bushell; his neck-bones, shoulder-plates, arme-bones, and all other lineaments huge and monstrous; the shanke of his skull from the ankle to the knee, was as long as from any mans ankle vp to his waste, and of bignesse accordingly. At this time were also sent to the King two chists ful of earth with Ginger growing in them: The Ginger runneth in the ground like to Liccoras; the blades grow out of it in length & proportion like to the blades of wild Garlick, which they cut euery fifteen daies, and water them twice a day. They put the blades in their pottage, and vse them in other meates, of pleasing taste and good for appetite.

When they came in the height of Bermuda, they discouered a Monster in the Sea, who shewed himselfe three times vnto them from the middle vpwards: in which parts he was proportioned like a man, of the complexion of a Mullato, or tawny Indian. The Generall commanded one of his his Clerkes to put it in writing to certifie the King thereof. Preſently after for the ſpace of ſixteene dayes, the weather proued very foule. Offering to make an eſcape they were deſcried and ſeuerely ſhacked, and impriſoned a yeere in the Contractation houſe in Siuill, and breaking priſon were taken, and by the Inquiſition were ſentenced: Robert Barret and Iohn Gilbert to bee burnt, Iob Hortop, and Iohn Bone to the Gallies for tenne yeeres, and after that to perpetuall priſon. Others were adiudged to the Gallies ſome eight, ſome fiue yeeres. Hortop ſerued twelue yeeres in hunger, thirſt, cold and ſtripes, and after foure yeeres impriſonment in his Fooles coat, was redeemed to the ſeruice of Hernando de Soria, from whom after three yeeres ſeruice more, he ſtole away and landed at Portſmouth in December 1590. after three and twentie yeeres miſerable bondage. Second ſentence of Inquiſition.

As for Dauid Ingrams perambulation to the North parts, Maſter Hakluyt in his firſt Edition publiſhed the ſame, but it ſeemeth to me incredibilities of his reports cauſed him to leaue him out in the next Impreſſion, the reward of lying being not to be beleeued in truths. Dauid Ingram.

And for Sir Iohn Hawkins himſelfe, he had made one Voyage with three ſhips and three hundred Negros gotten on the Coaſt of Guinea to Hiſpaniola, 1562. and other Ports; and returned with a rich gaine. This encouraged him to a ſecond Voyage with the Ieſus, Salomon, Tigre, and Swallow, 1564. And hauing viſited diuers Ports he returned by Florida. Anno 1567. their vnfortunate Voyage before mentioned was ſet forth, in which his vniuſtice to Sauages was chaſtiſed by vniuſtice of Chriſtians, in manner as you haue heard. Himſelfe with his remayning company were firſt endangered with an extreame ſtorme, after that with famine his men dying continually, ſo that the reſt being not able to manage the ſhip, and the winds croſſing, ſeeking to releeue themſelues at Ponta Vedra, with freſh meate, they grew diſeaſed and many of them died, and thereby were alſo in danger of a ſecond Spaniſh betraying, which they hardly eſcaping arriued in England, Ianuary the twentieth 1568. Sir I. Hawkins his 3. voyages.

The Spaniſh indignities and treacheries were deeply lodged in the wronged minds both of Sir Iohn Hawkins, and of Captayne Drake: meaborne for the honour of the Engliſh name and Nation in Marine affaires. Sir Iohn Hawkins was ſonne to Maſter William Hawkins of Plimmouth, a man much eſteemed by King Henry the Eighth, as a principall Sea-captaine. Hee had long before armed a ſhip of his owne of two hundred and fifty tunnes, called the Paul of Plimmouth, wherewith he made two Voyages to Braſill, one in the yeere 1530. and the other 1532. in the firſt of which he brought a Braſilian King (as they tearmed him) to preſent him in his wilde accoutrements to King Henry. It ſeemed, that Sea affaires and arts remayned an Inheritance, from the Father to the Sonne; and from him alſo to the Nephew, as ſhall after be ſeene: neither did the Weſt of England yeeld ſuch an Indian Neptunian pair as were theſe two Ocean Peeres, Hawkins and Drake. M. Wil. Hawkins. Sir Richard Hawkins.

OF Sir Francis Drake Maſter Camden reports that he hath heard him ſay of himſelfe, that he was borne in the County of Deuon, of meane condition; his Godfather was Francis Ruſſell afterwards Earle of Bedford, who gaue him his name Francis. Whiles he was young, his father being called in queſtion for Religion, by reaſon of the ſixe Articles ſet forth by King Henry againſt the Proteſtants) was driuen to ſhift, and withdrew himſelfe into Kent. After King Henries death, he obtayned a place in the Nauie Royall to reade Seruice, and ſoone after was ordayned Deacon, and made Vicar of the Church of Vpnor on the Riuer of Medway: where by reaſon of his pouertie he put this his ſonne to ſerue a Neighbour Mariner which traded with a ſmall Barke into France and Zeland, who brought him vp in the Mariners art, and tooke ſuch liking of him, that at his death he bequeathed (being a Bachelour) vnto him his Barke. This Barke, vpon the report of Sir Iohn Hawkins his preparations for that diſaſtrous Voyage 1567. hee ſold and ioyned to him in ſocietie aforeſaid, and at Saint Iohn de Vlua loſt all, and hardly brought himſelfe backe. Hereupon ſeeking by his Mariners practice to repaire his loſſes, and thereby, and as a man of warre, hauing gotten ſtore of money together, he made a ſecond Voyage to recouer in the Spaniſh Indies what there he had loſt (quod lucro Theologum claſſiarium facile perſuaſerat) and with a ſhip of warre called the Dragon, and another ſhip and a Pinnaſſe, none knowing it but his owne conſorts, Anno 1572. ſayled to Nombre de Dios, which Towne he ſuddenly ſurpriſed and loſt. For hauing landed one hundred and fiftie men, and leauing ſeuentie of them in a Fort, with the reſt he went to the Market place, and there diſcharged his Caliuers and ſounded a Trumpet, anſwered in like manner from the Fort. The Townesmen hereby terrified, fled into the Mountaynes. But fourteene or fifteene would backe with their Harquebuſes to ſee what the matter was, and diſcouering the Engliſhmen, ſhot and by hap killed the Trumpeter. Hereupon they in the Fort not ſeeing their Trumpet anſwered, after they had heard the Caliuers, ſuppoſed all thoſe which had entred were ſlaine, and fled to their Pinnaſſes. The Captayne comming and ſeeing his men all gone, was ſurprized with a new feare, and leauing their furniture they ſwamme and waded to their Pinnaſſes and departed the Port. intelligence by certayne fugitiue Negros of Mules comming loden with treasure from Panama to Nombre de Dios; and guided by them, intercepted two companies of Mules, and carried away the Gold only; for they were not able to carrie the Siluer thorow the Mountaynes. Two dayes after he came to the house of Crosses, and burnt aboue 200000. Duckets in Merchandize, and so departed. When he trauelled ouer those Mountaynes hee beheld thence the South Sea; and thereby inflamed with desire of glory and wealth, was so rapt with desire of sayling therein, that he fell there on his knees, and begged of God, and besought the fauour of God to assist him in that exploit, and made a solemne vow to that purpose, one day to sayle on that Sea, which euery day and night lay next his heart, pricking him forwards to the performance.

Drakes vow for the South Sea.

Iohn Oxenham.

Whiles hee was muling and hatching these haughtie Designes, Iohn Oxenham, who in the former Nauigations, had serued vnder Captayne Drake, both Souldier, Mariner, and Cooke, became a Captayne also, and with a ship of one hundred and fortie tunnes, and seuentie men came to the said Sound of Darien, Anno 1575. and had conference with those Negroes. But hearing that the Mules were now conducted with Souldiers, hee resolued on a new Enterprize, which neuer any had attempted, and landed in that place where Captayne Drake had had conference with the Negros: and hauing brought his ship aground, and couered her with boughes, and hid his Ordnance in the ground, he tooke two small Peeces of Ordnance and Calieuers, with store of victuals, and went twelue leagues with sixe Negros into the mayne Land, to a Riuer which runneth into the South Sea. There he cut wood and made a Pinnasse fortie fiue foot by the keele, and therewith went into the South Sea, to the Iland of Pearles, fiue and twentie leagues distant from Panama, to watch for shippes comming from Peru thither: he tooke a Barke with 60000. Pezos of Gold, comming from Quito: and staying sixe dayes longer, tooke another which came from Lima with 100000. Pezos of Siluer in barres, and delaying somewhat long sent away his Prizes, and went with his Pinnasse vp the Riuer. This delay gaue opportunitie of intelligence, and Iohn de Ortega was sent to pursue him; at a partition of the Riuer into three, when he was taking vp the greatest, feathers of Hennes which the English had plucked, diuerted him vp the lesser streame, whereby hee lighted on the treasure first, Oxenham beeing gone to get Negros to helpe him carrie his treasure, his owne men quarrelling for larger pay. Some of the English were taken, which bewrayed the ship, and the rest were betrayed by the Negros, whiles they were making Canoas for the North Sea, there to take some Barke. They confessed that they had no license from the Queene, and were all executed, but two Boyes. Thus perished Oxenham, a man, if his Case had beene iust, worthy of lasting memory for an attempt so difficult, Quem sinon tenuit, magnis tamen excidit ausis. The King of Spaine sent Souldiers to take those fugitiue Negros, which had assisted the English, and two Gallies to guard the Coast. This and Captayne Barkers frustrated attempts giue greater lustre to Drakes glory.

Captaine Barker of Bristoll.

Andrew Barker of Bristoll, much wronged by the Inquisition, Anno 1576. sought to right himselfe in those parts, and came with two ships to Nombre de Dios, and the Riuer of Chagre, eighteene leagues distant to the North-west, landed ten men to seeke intelligence of Negros, which they could not find, and most of the men also died of the Calentura. Betwixt that and Veragua he tooke a Prize, and another in the Gulfe of Honduras. Mutuall quarrels betwixt Coxe and the Captayne betrayed them to the Spaniards, which assayling them, slue the Captayne and eight men at the Ile Francisco. After this Coxe went with his Pinnasse, and tooke the Towne of Truxillo, but eight men were (by reason of men of warre chasing the ship, thus forced to shift for themselues) left there to their fortunes. Fourteene others and the Frigat with the treasure were cast away. Diuers of the rest after their returne were long imprisoned.

These indeed are pettie things to Captayne Drakes expedition in December 1577. wherein he encompassed first of any Generall, and except Candish more fortunately then all of them together, this whole Terrestriall Globe. He set forth with fiue ships, and one hundred sixtie three Mariners. The whole Voyage you haue before at large. The Carkasse of the shippe; or some bones at least of that glorious Carkasse, yet remayne at Deptford, consecrated to Fame and Posteritie; in which Queene Elizabeth being feasted, Knighted this noble Mariner: at which time a bridge of boords made for her Maiestie to passe, fell with one hundred men thereon, of which none were hurt, as if Good Fortune had both sayled abroad, and feasted at home in that ship. The goods taken were sequestred by her Maiestie, for answere to the Spaniard if need should bee. Some principall Courtiers are said to haue refused the offer of some of this, as Piratically gotten. Bernardine Mendoza made demand for the King of Spaine, (whose Embassadour hee was) and receiued answere from the Queene, that the Spaniards had vniustly prohibited commerce to the English, that Drake should legally answere if any thing were prooued against him, the goods being to that purpose sequestred, howsoeuer the Spaniard had put her Maiestie to greater charges against the Rebels, which the Spaniard had raised in England and Ireland: Neither did she know why her subiects and others were prohibited the Indies, which she knew no reason to thinke proper to the Spaniards, by vertue of the Popes Bull (which could nothing oblige Princes which owed him no obedience) nor by reason that the Spaniards had arriued here and there, had directed Cottages, and giuen names to Capes and Riuers. Neither might these things hinder other Princes from commerce, or to transport Colonies to places not inhabited by the Spaniards (the Law of Nations not infringed hereby, seeing prescription without possession is nothing worth) the vse of the Sea and Aire being exposed to all. The Gouernour professed his ignorance in both, and that this later was the Kings pleasure. After some spoiles done about Vigo, they fell with Hierro, but the Iland being poore, departed without harme. Thence they

No Treasure was found but Wine, Oyle, Meale, &c. They possessed it foureteene dayes. Saint Domingo assaulted and taken.

Carlile, and 150. horsemen presenting themselues from the Citie being retired, they diuided their forces to assault both the Westerne gates at once. The Ordnance being discharged on them, they ran in to preuent a second charge and entred with them pell mell into the Gates, the enemy altering their sight into flight, which they made by the North gate. Both troopes met in the Market-place and there barricadoed themselues. The Castle was abandoned the next night. They held the Towne a whole moneth. They burned many houses before they could bring the Spaniards to a price for the ransome of the rest, for which at last they paid after much spoile 25000. Duckets. The pray was not much. In the Towne-house were the Kings armes, and in the lower part of the scutchion was painted a globe of the Sea and Land, a horse standing thereon with his hinder legges, the forepart without the globe, with this motto ascribed to his mouth, Non sufficit Orbis.

Ambitious Armes.

Cartagena assaulted and taken.

From Saint Domingo they set saile for Carthagena on the Continent, landing some Companies with Captaine Carlile fiue miles of, which were led on by night, the Generall with this Fleete presenting themselues before the chained Port: and hauing gotten the Citie, held the same six weekes. They tooke Alonso Brano the Gouernour. After many houses burned 11000. Duckets were paid for ransome of the rest from burning. The Calenture continued, killing some (being a pestilent spotted Feuer) and spoyling others of their strength and memory for a long time. The Serena or Euening ayre is said to cause it to them which are then abroad, if not of that Countrey: so that by holding their watch, the English were thus infected. This forced them to giue ouer their intended voyage to Nombre de Dios, and Panama, sailing therefore alongst the coast of Florida, they tooke and fired two garrison Townes of the Spaniards, Saint Anthonie * and Saint Helena, and the Fort of Saint Iohn. Then passing alongst the Virginian shore they tooke home the English Colonie there remaining with Master Lane their Gouernour, sent by Sir Walter Raleigh. These are said by Master Camden to haue beene the first bringers in of the vse of Tobacco, since so frequently abused by our Nation. They arriued at Portsmouth the 28. of Iuly 1586. They got Ordnance of Brasse about 200. peeces, and about 40. of Iron. The prey was valued at 60000. li. English. There dyed (most of the Calentura) 700. persons. The industry of the Generall in all places is remakeable, whose vigilance and bodily presence, and labour in all businesse was much, that had he beene in the meanest he had merited the highest place. To this is fittest in next place to adde his Cadiz exploit Anno 1587. and the taking of the rich Caracke, called Saint Philip.

The 16. of Aprill two Shippes of Middleborough which came from Cadiz (with whom we met in 40. degrees) gaue him to vnderstand that there was great prouision in Cadiz and thereabout prouided to come to Lisbone, whereupon the Generall with all possible speede bending himselfe thither to cut of the forces and prouisions, the 19. of Aprill, one houre before the Sunne setting, entred the harbour of Calz, and the Spanish Fleete there checked vs, at the entring thereat with the Towne Galleyes, but in short time retired vnder the Fortresse.

* This voyage is printed in Master Hak. Tom. 2. part. 2. but finding this written Relation, I thought good to inserr it. It was written by one Tho. Pinner

There were in the Roades 60. Ships, and diuers other small shipping vnder the fortresse. There fled 20. French Shippes to port Riall, and some Spaniards, which could not be hindred of the Fleete by reason of the sholdnesse. There were sunke by vs at our comming in with shot, one Orgasey of 1000. tun, furnished with thirty peeces of Brasse, and richly laden. There were two Gallies more came presently from port Riall, and two other from Saint Mary port, but all in vaine the expenses of powder and shot, the greatest gaine to themselues.

There were to the number of 38. Shippes taken before night, and the English victours of the Roade: the Galleyes retyring vnder the Fortresses. Twenty Hulcks Hollanders confiscated to the King, and their goods sold to the Kings vse: foureteene of them were fired the other six were at port Riall laden with Wines and Bread, and to be presently full laden for Lisbourne one Carracke of foureteene hundreth tun appertaining to the Marquesse of Saint Cruce; fiue great Biskainers fired, foure of them lading and taking in of victuals for the Kings prouision for Lisbourne, the Saint was a Ship of 1000. tuns, bound for Lisbourne hauing in her great store of Pikes, much Iron, Nailes, Spikes, Iron hoopes, and such like, fired. One Sbataya laden with Wines of 250. tuns for the Kings prouision, which we brought to Sea with vs, and discharged at Sea a part of their Wines, for the prouision of the Fleete, and there fired her. Three Flye-boates of foure hundreth tunnes laden with Bisket whereof the one being of two hundred tuns and vpwards, we halfe vnladed and then fired her, the other two are yet with vs in company. Some tenne Barkes more laden with Wines, Raisons, Figges, Oyle, Wheate, with such like, fired. By supposition the eight and thirtie Shippes and Barkes fired, sunke, and brought away with vs, amounted in iudgement to thirteene thousand tuns of shipping. There rid in sight of vs at port Riall, by estimation, aboue fortie saile, besides those that fled from Calz roade.

They gaue vs little ease during our aboade there, which they shot from the Galleyes, as also from the Fortresses and from the shore, where continually they planted new Ordnance at places conuenient to offend; notwithstanding their Ships we continually fired as the floud came, thereby to bee cleared of them, which terrible fire was pleasant vnto vs to behold, and mittigated the continuall burthen of trauaile, which lay vpon vs day and night in discharging, firing, and vnlading, such prouisions, with obseruations for good and gardable defence of the enemie. It pleased the Generall, after his great care and paines day and night, to finish this happy Action in her Maiesties seruice, in one day and two nights, and hee came forth againe the Friday in the morning, with very little losse, thankes be to God.

Of twelue Galleyes, and those that came from port Riall, and Saint Mary port, tenne of them came forth after vs, as it were to make some pastime with their great Ordnance. At length, the winde standing, wee cast about againe and strooke in for the shoare, and came to an anker within a league of Cales, where their Galleyes suffered vs to ride quietly. There were also three Flye Boates more at Mallegas laden with Bysket, bound for Calez, and so for Lisbborne. We vnderstood of their great prouisions and forces prouided within the straights. We doubt not, but as God hath begunne this worke in great happinesse, to the daunting of the enemie: so God will blesse this Armie in cutting daily their forces shorter, to the great annoyance of the enemy, and to the honour of our Prince and Countrie.

Gally-fight.

Wee haue had the experience of Galley fights (wherein I can assure you) that these onely foure of her Maiesties Ships wil make none accompt of twenty Galleyes; so as they were alone, and not driuen to guard others.

There were Galleyes had place fitter for their aduantage in fight vpon shot they receiued, they had present succour to ground vnder the towne, which they sundry times did waye, riding in a narrow gutter, the place yeelding no better, in that wee were driuen to maintaine the same vntill wee had discharged, and fired the Shippes, which could not conueniently be done but vpon the floud; that thereby they may driue cleare of vs.

We rest now victualed with Bread and Drinke, for six moneths in our Ships, and Bread besides in two flye Boates to maintaine a good Armie three moneths. We rest all in good loue with our Generall and vnitie in all the whole Fleete.

After this, they came before the hauen of Lysbon, where the Marquesse of Santta Cruz was with his Gallies, whom the Generall inuited to some exchange of Bullets, but he refused. Thence they sailed to the Azores, and met with a Portugall Carracke, called Saint Philip, which had in her voyage outward carried the three Iaponian Princes into the Indies. This Carracke he tooke; the first of that kinde taken by the English, ominous in the name: and so it proued not onely by the losse of so great wealth to King Philip, both in leading the daunce to others after taken, and in opening the eyes of the English to visite the Indian fountaines, whence such wealth issued; wherein also the Hollanders quickly imitated them.

Sir Francis Drakes last voyage.

To omit other braue exploits neerer home, as that most glorious of 88. and the rest: our purpose is to giue you the remote Voyages of this worthy Sea-man; and now lastly that last and fatall expedition Anno 1595. with sixe of the Queenes Ships and one and twenty other Ships and Barkes, containing 2500. men and boyes, intended for some speciall seruice in the West Indies. Sir Francis Drake and Sir Iohn Hawkins were ioyned in Commission. They set saile from Plimmouth the eight and twentieth of August. Nouember the twelfth, neere the Eastermost end of Saint Iuan de Puerto Rico, Sir Iohn Hawkins died. The hauen of Saint Iohn they found strongly fortified against them, but yet they fired their fiue Shippes each of 200. tunnes, hauing in euery of them twenty Peeces of Brasse, and richly laden. Much harme was done on both sides. The fiue and twentieth they passed by Mona. In the beginning of December, they tooke Rio de la Hacha. They tooke also the Rancheria or fisher towne for Pearles. The Spaniards offered to ransome their Towne at 24000. Ducates which they brought in Pearle so dearely rated, that the General sent them backe, and both were burnt. The seuenteenth they tooke Tapia, and after that Saint Martha, and the Spanish Lieutenant Generall. The seuen and twentieth Nombre de Dios was taken, a Towne subiect to raine, and very vnhealthfull: the roade faire, hauing on each side as you come a ledge of rocks. The nine and twentieth, Sir Thomas Baskeruile with 750. Land-soldiors went for Panama, a sore march thorow the woods, the way cut out of the woods and rocks, very mirie, the Spaniards playing on them out of the woods. After ten leagues march, they came to a fort on the top of a hill: two such more were betwixt that and Panama, that also strongly fortified, the enemy hauing knowledge before of this designe. Hereby was he forced to returne. Ianuary the eight and twentieth. Sir Francis Drake died of a fluxe. He made his brother Thomas Drakes sonne his heire. Sir Thomas Baskeruill succeeded. The six and twentieth of February the Spaniards fleete of twenty sailes, and the English met; a fight followed, & continued two houres, and then they parted. A great Ship of the Spaniards that night was burned. In Aprill following they arriued at Plimmouth.

In this Voyage I haue followed the printed Relation: but because another hath come to my hands, written (as it seemes) by one offended therein, I haue to thy other eare permitted him to speake, that freedome of iudgement may remayne to euery Reader.

Quarrell betwixt the Generals.

THe seuen and twentieth of August, hauing our dispatch from her Maiestie, wee brought all our fleet into the Sound of Plimmouth, and the eight and twentieth day wee set sayle for our pretended Voyage. In our course alongst the Coasts of Spaine, was diuers meetings with our Generals, where passed many vnkind speeches, and such as Sir Iohn Hawkins neuer put off till death. In this traict was put on a resolution with Sir Francis Drake, and Sir Thomas Baskeruile to take the Grand Canaria, whereupon a counsell was held, and therein propounded by Sir Francis, how great a benefit, much honour, and good refreshing was offered vs, and therefore would stand on most voyces. Sir Iohn Hawkins to whom hee spake this vtterly refused, with these reasons following. First, there could bee no need considering our small time out. Secondly, not possible to carrie it without hazarding all, and Thirdly, not good to lose time, which would neuer be recouered. To this last reason Sir Thomas Baskeruile answered. First, for time, hee would require but foure dayes in this manner, In foure houres he would take it, and in the rest would hee burne it downe, except they would compound, thus the fourth day would he be shipped readie for our Voyage.

Reason for and against the Canary exploit.

In this controuersie Sir Francis would goe for the Canaria with such as would follow him, and Sir Iohn Hawkins with the rest for the Indies, yet after this hard debating, at the earnest request of some friends, Sir Iohn Hawkins vpon the confessing of need, was content to assist them, yet in his iudgement labour lost with much hazard of all. Thus altogether standing alongst, the fiue and twentieth of September we came to anchor afore the Fort that guards the landing place at Grand Canaria, where were put into our Boates and Pinnasses, all our land men vnder the conduct of Sir Thomas Baskeruile Colonell Generall, who drew head neere the middest of the Beatche. Betwixt the Fort and the Towne, a most safely for our landing. To this place euen then did the Spaniards draw two or three very small Peeces of Ordnance, with which, and with some companies of Souldiers made some shew of resistance, whereupon notwithstanding most of our smaller shipping, who accompanied our Boats with their Artillery, Sir Thomas made his retraite without putting foot on land, and then to know, as it was reported, if our Generals would put their Voyage thereon or no. With this better consideration were all our men shipped againe, and stood alongst to the Westermost end thereof. Here went many ashoare some for water, some for pleasure, amongst whom, the eight and twentieth day was Captayne Grimstone with two more in his company slaine, and by Peasants as was thought: with this euill beginning, this night wee weighed and stood alongst for the Indies.

The Grand Canaria.

Dominica.

The eight and twentieth of October, wee came faire by the Southermost end of Dominica: and the thirtieth day we came also safe anchoring at Guardalupa, onely the Delight and the Francis, two of our smallest Pinnasses, who being to leewards out of sight, was there chased by fiue Spanish ships, in which chase the Francis was taken, the other escaped with this newes. The last of this moneth Sir Iohn Hawkins not able to beare his griefes out longer, sickned. Here we built seuen Pinnasses. The fourth of November were they launched, and we stood of for Porto rico, the eight day in the way we anchored among the Ilands Virgins, where all our Souldiers were appointed to their land Captaines. The twelfth day we came to anchor afore the Harbour at Porto rico, where dyed Sir Nicholas Clifford, by a shot from a platforme, sitting at supper in the Defiance, with this shot was likewise Master Brewt Browne hurt, who lined but few dayes after, and this day also died Sir Iohn Hawkins, whose death of many was much lamented.

Sir I. Hawkins sickneth.

At Porto rico.

He dyeth.

In this Harbour rid those fiue Frigats of the Kings, which came for the treasure. This place beeing well viewed by our Generall, and Colonell Generall, a counsell was held and therein agreed, That first and most necessariest these Frigats should bee burned, and for that seruice was named out the next night thirtie of our Boates and Pinnasses with fire workes, and with warlike weapons, these Frigats were so well defended aboord, and with the Ordnance ashore, that our men returned with consuming onely one of them, out of which were saued some of the Spaniards, who reported certainly, that there the Treasure of two Millions was, and so were our men taken in the Francis.

Treasure lost.

Notwithstanding all these quickning newes after some few dayes, we weighed and stood alongst to the Westermost end of this Iland, where we contented vs with some refreshing of water, Oranges and Plantanes; here were built foure Pinnasses more. At this place sent hee aboord me with his Warrant forth Souldiers out of the Defiance. The foure and twentieth day we weighed and stood alongst for one Plaine, called Knaw-saw, with which wee fell the nine and twentieth day, but stayed not; thus standing alongst. The first of December we arriued at Cape dela Vela, the second in the morning was put into our Boats and Pinnasses, all our Souldiers for Rio dela Hatcha. This was taken, the people being all fled, yet here with search in the Woods, and intelligence of some Negros, was found great store of Pearle, Plate, Iewels, Reals of Plate, Bales of Silke, rich apparell, with much other baggage. The sixt of this moneth, brought in Sir Francis from one other Towne called Rancharia, great quantitie of Pearle and baggage. The ninth day came in some Spaniards, with intent to ransome their housel, Negros, and some Spaniards Prisoners, and concluded for 24000. Pezos, euery Pezo worth fiue shillings sixe pence. The thirteenth day, came in the same all in Pearle, and the fourteenth day came in their Lieutenant for the delidelivery. But in the valuing, their quantity and quality would not be taken, wherefore departed they with foure houres respite for further answere from their Gouernour Don Francisco Manso, but answere was himselfe would come to conference, which hee did the sixteenth day. After dinner our Generall and Colonell Generall, with the Spaniards had secret conference about this Ransome, whereupon concluding, they absolutely broke off, and therefore in all haste was fire put in some of the houses, and the Gouernour had two houres time to cleare him of our Army.

Thus hauing burnt Rio dela Hatcha, Rancharia, and Tapia. The eighteenth day wee weighed and stood alongst for Santa Marta, to which we came the twentieth day, here we onely tooke fame fine Prisoners, whereof one was the Lieutenant there. The one and twentieth, it was put to fire, and we set sayle for Nombre de Dios, to which we came the seuen and twentieth day, where in like manner the people had acquited the Towne, yet here was found by intelligence of some Negros, as I heard, two and twenty Sowes of Siluer, Gold in Bullion, some Iewels, great store of Plate, and Riall of Plate, with much other luggage. The nine and twentieth day, Sir Thomas Baskeruile, Colonell Generall with all his able Captaines and Souldiers tooke their iourney for Panama, now the marke of our Voyage: who entering the mid-way being empeached by some Spaniards and Negros, made their retreite to the Ships at Nombre de Dios, at this encounter were few of our men slaine, some hurt, some of the which there left to the mercie of the Spaniards.

Santa Marta.

Sir T. Baskeruils iourney for Panama.

The fifth day of Ianuary, all our men being shipped, the towne and Gallies put to fire, we set sayle there by the aduice of a Spaniard, for the River Nicorago, in which way we fell with one Iland called Escudo, a place which affordeth nothing good, yet here wee stayed from the tenth day vntill the three and twentieth, when we set sayle and plied to the Eastward, which by Gods speciall fauour, the eight and twentieth day we came in with Porta Iabella. This morning died our Generall Sir Francis Drake. This is the place where the people of Nombre de Dios meaneth to dwell at. Here found we a beginning of a strong platforme with three Brasse Peeces vnmounted. In my opinion, this was our best remoue, for if God had not preuented our Generals purpose for the River Nicorago, it would haue hazarded all her Maiesties Ships, farre with the rest. Here tooke we in ballast, water, mended our sayles, and calked our ships, such as had need.

Escudo.

Sir F. Drakes death.

The eight of February, Sir Thomas Baskeruile taking vpon him Generall, we all set saile for Santa Marta homewards, but not able to recouer higher then Carthagena, as wee ghesse in the Bonauenture with the splitting of all our sayles, put ouer for Iamaica. In this course lost we the Fore-sight, the Susan Parnell, the Helpe, and the Gregory. The fine and twentieth day came we faire by Canaria granda, which bore ouer vs in the morning East North-east, and this day was all our flesh and fish spent. The second of March, making this our miserie like to be known to Sir Thomas Baskeruile, who hath giuen mee his promise to relieue mee at my need, his answere was carelesly for vs, and with all said, hee would goe in with the Iland Pinos to water, which I vtterly misliked, the winde then being good to stand alongst, very ill to lose, and more for that no Englishman in our fleete either knew or euer heard of any watering or other good there.

In this reasoning betwixt vs, we descried twentie sayle of ships a-head vs, who were the Kings men of Warre, waiting our home comming, it was my fortune in the Bonauenture to take to taske the Vice-admirall, one of the twelue Apostles of the Kings, for so I thought by a great golden Saint, which manned her Poope. The manner of our fight and my deseruing, I leaue euen to the report of mine enemies, yet thus much vnderstand, their Admirall with the rest, all the next day being in the winde, was content we should passe in peace. Thus being quietly, and we all dismbogued some two hundred leagues, I made a second demand of Sir Thomas, his promise for victuals, which he vtterly refused, wherefore as well in regard of our Generals lacke as mine owne danger, with a shot in our sight, wherein it was indifferent with mee to liue or die, I told him I must make more haste home then I presumed hee would, yet wee stayed with him two dayes longer, when in a storme I left him, and this was the fourteenth day of March.

Now for these two English Sea-worthies, as wee haue begunne their American Aduentures, and ended them together, so I haue thought good to insert this following censure of a Gentleman in a Letter of his, touching them both, as an Epitaph dedicated to their memory.

Sir, I haue according to your request, and my owne plainnesse sent you here the comparison betweene those two Commanders Sir Francis Drake and Sir Iohn Hawkins. They were both much giuen to trauell in their youth and age, attempting many honourable Voyages alike; as that of Sir Iohn Hawkins to Guiny, to the Iles of America, to Saint Iohn de Vlua. So likewise Sir Francis Drake after many Discouuries of the West Indies, and other parts, was the first Englishman that did euer compasse the World; wherein, as also in his deepe iudgement in Sea causes, he did farre exceed not Sir Iohn Hawkins alone, but all others whomsoeuer. In their owne natures and disposition they did as much differ; as in the managing matters of the Warres, Sir Francis being of a liuely spirit, resolute, quicke, and sufficiently valiant: The other slow, iealous, and hardly brought to resolution. In Councell Sir Iohn Hawkins did often differ from the iudgement of others, seeming thereby to know more in doubtfull things, then he would vtter. Sir Francis was a willing hearer of euery mans opinion, but commonly a follower of his owne: he neuer attempted any action, wherein he was an absolute Commander, but hee performed the same with great reputation, and did easily dispatch great matters; Contrariwise Sir Iohn Hawkins did only giue the bare attempt of things, for the most part without any Fortune or good successe therein. Sir Iohn Hawkins did naturally hate the Land-souldier, and though hee were very popular, yet he affected more the common sort, then his equals; Sir Francis contrarily did much loue the Land-souldier, and greatly aduanced good parts, wheresoeuer he found them. Hee was also affable to all men and of easie accesse. They were both of many vertues, and agreeing in some. As patience in endurring labours and hardnesse, Obseruation and Memory of things past, and great discretion in sudden dangers, in which, neither of them was much distempered, and in some other vertues they differed. Sir Iohn Hawkins had in him mercie and aptnesse to forgiue, and true of word; Sir Francis hard in reconciliation, and constancie in friendship; he was withall seuere and courteous, magnanimous, and liberall. They were both faulty in ambition, but more the one then the other; For in Sir Francis was an insatiable desire of honor, indeed beyond reason. He was infinite in promises, and more temperate in aduersity, then in better Fortune. He had also other imperfections, as aptnesse to anger, and bitternesse in disgracing, and too much pleased with open flattery: Sir Iohn Hawkins had in him malice with dissimulation, rudenesse in behauiour, and passing sparing, indeed miserable. They were both happy alike in being Great Commanders, but not of equall successe, and grew great and famous by one meanes, rising through their owne Vertues, and the Fortune of the Sea. Their was no comparison to bee made betweene their well-deserning and good parts, for therein Sir Francis Drake did farre exceede. This is all I haue obserued in the Voyages, wherein I haue serued with them.

All

All these I referre to the painfull labours of Master Hakluyt, who hath well deserued of the English Nation, and of these Neptunian Heroes; that I mention not the many Voyages of others in those times of difference betwixt England and Spaine, which here and there you shall finde mention of in these Relations. Also, Anno 1589. three ships were set forth by Master Chudlie and others for the Magellan Straites, one of which arriued there and tooke there a Spaniard, one of the foure hundred which had beene sent thither to inhabit, which had long liued there alone, the rest being famished. They spent sixe weekes there with contrary winds, and sixe only of their company returned, they also being racked on the Coast of Normandie, as W. Magoths one of the sixe hath related.

These I doe but summarily mention, as an Index rather to Master Hakluyts labours, then with any intent to giue the discourse thereof. But the strange fortunes of Peter Carder (not hitherto published) compell me to take speciall notice thereof, which himselfe hath thus related.

CHAP. V.

The Relation of PETER CARDER of Saint Verian in Cornwall, within seuen miles of Falmouth, which went with Sir FRANCIS in his Voyage about the World, begun 1577. who with seuen others in an open Pinnasse or Shallop of fiue tuns, with eight Oares, was separated from his Generall by foule weather in the South Sea, in October, An. 1578. who returning by the Straites of Magellan toward Brasill, were all cast away, saue this one only afore named, who came into England nine yeeres after miraculously, hauing escaped many strange dangers, aswell among diuers Sauages as Christians.

AFter Sir Francis Drake had passed the Straites of Magellan, the sixt of September 1578. and was driuen downe to the Southwards in the South Sea, vnto the latitude of fiftie fiue degrees, and a terse, with such accidents as are mentioned in his Voyage, and returning backe toward the Straite againe. The eight of October we lost sight of the Elizabeth, one of our Consorts, wherein Master Iohn Winter was, who returned by the Straites againe, as wee vnderstood afterward at our comming home into England; according to his Voyage extant in print. Shortly after this separation from our company, our Generall commanded eight men to furnish our small Pinnasse or Shallop with eight men, whose names were these, my selfe, Peter Carder aforesaid, Richard Burnish of London, Iohn Cottle and another, both seruants to Master Iohn Hawkins, Artyur a Dutch Trumpetor, Richard Ioyner, seruant to Vincent Scoble of Plimmouth, Pasche Gidie of Salt Ashe, and William Pitcher of London.

This company was commanded to waite vpon the ship for all necessary vses, but hauing not passed one dayes victuals in vs, nor any Card nor Compasse, sauing only the benefit of eight oares, in the night time by foule weather suddenly arising we lost the sight of our ship, and though our ship sought vs and we them, for a fortnight together, yet could we neuer meet together againe. Howbeit within two dayes after we lost them, we recouered the shoare, and releeued our selues with Muscels, Oysters, Crabs, and some sorts of Roots in the Woods, and within a fortnight after the losse of our consorts, wee returned backe into the Straites of Magellan, and in two places came on land on the mayne of America, to relieue our selues in certaine Bayes, where wee found Oysters, Muscels and Crabs as before, and filled our Barricos with fresh water, and in one of these places we found Sauages, but they fled from vs.

Afterward we came to Penguin Iland in the Straites, and there wee salted and dryed many of the Penguins for our sustenance. Thence we shaped our course for Port Saint Iulian, where Sir Francis Drake not many moneths before had beheaded Captayne Dontie: In this Port we stayed a day or two, and tooke fish like Breames and Mackerils, with hookes and lines. Then coasting the land for some fortnight, some hundred leagues beyond the Riuer of Plate, wee found a small Iland three leagues from the mayne full of Seales, whereof wee killed good store to our sustenance, the young ones we found best and eate them roast. Then passing ouer the Riuer of Plate to the North side, we put into a small Riuer, and went vp into the Woods sixe of vs; other two remayning on the shore to looke to the Boat.

While we were thus seeking food in the Woods the people of the Countrey, called Tapines, some sixtie or seuentie armed with Bowes and Arrowes shot fiercely at vs, and wounded vs all very grieuously, and foure of vs were taken by them, and neuer recouered: the rest of vs they pursued to our Pinnasse, and wounded vs all: but in the end we put them to flight. Thence we went to an Iland some three leagues off in the Sea, not aboue a league in compasse. Where wee cured our ſelues as well as we might, yet ſo, that two of vs died of our late wounds, and that, which was worſe for want of helpe. Through foule weather our Pinnaſſe was daſht againſt the Rockie ſhoare and broken, and now there remayned aliue of vs eight, no more but my ſelfe, Peter Carder and William Pitcher.

Here we remayned the ſpace of two moneths, in all which time for our victuals, wee had a fruit ſomewhat like vnto Oranges, growing vpon a high Tree, the leafe whereof was ſomewhat like the Aſpen leafe, and ſmall; white Crabs creeping vpon the ſand, and little Eeles which we found vnder the ſands, but in all this Iland we could not find any freſh water in the World, inſomuch, that we were driuen to drinke our owne vrine, which we ſaued in ſome ſheards of certaine Iarres, which we had out of our Pinnaſſe, and ſet our vrine all night to coole therein, to drinke it the next morning, which thus being drunke often, and often auoyded, became in a while exceeding red, in all this time wee had no raine, nor any good meanes to ſaue it, if it had fallen, whereupon, ſeeing our ſelues in ſo great extremitie, wee deuiſed how we might get vnto the Mayne, and by good fortune, found a planke of ſome ten foot in length, which of likelihood had driuen from the Riuer of Plate, whereunto with withes, wee bound ſome other wood, and furniſhing our ſelues with the foreſaid fruit, Eeles and Crabs, wee committed our ſelues to God; hoping with the ſetting in of the tyde, and with the helpe of two poles, which we vſed in ſtead of Oares to attayne vnto the Mayne, which was ſome three leagues off, but wee made it three dayes and two nights before we could come to the Mayne.

No freſh water. They drinke vrine. Red vrine. Paſſage to the Mayne.

At our comming firſt on land, we found a little Riuer of very ſweet and pleaſant water, where William Pitcher my onely comfort and companion (although I diſwaded him to the contrary) ouer dranke himſelfe, being pinched before with extreame thirſt, and to my vnſpeakeable griefe and diſcomfort, within halfe an houre after dyed in my preſence, whom I buried aſwell as I could in the ſand.

The next day following, as I trauelled along the ſhoare towards Braſill, hauing mine Arming Sword and Target with me, I met with ſome thirtie of the Sauages of the Countrey, called Tuppan baſſe, which being armed with Bowes and Arrowes, and hauing two or three great Rattles with ſtones in them, and a kind of Tabrets that they vſed in ſtead of Drummes, they went dancing before me about a Musket ſhot off, and then they ſtayed and hanged vp a piece of a white Net of Cotton-wooll, vpon a ſticks end of foure foote high, and went from it about a Musket ſhot off: then I comming vnto it, tooke it in my hand, viewed it, and hung it vp againe, then many of them, beckning and weauing with their hands, cryed vnto mee, Iyorie, Iyorie, which (as afterward I vnderſtood, by hauing long among them) was as much as Come hither. Then I came to them, and they friendly led me a long ſome halfe a mile, all the way dancing, aſwell men as women, whereof there were ſome eight in the company, vntill we came to another Riuer ſide, where they hanged vp their Beds, tying them faſt to a couple of Trees, being a kinde of white Cotton Netting, which hanged two foot from the ground, and kindled fire of two ſticks, which they made on both ſides of their Beds, for warmth, and for driuing away of wilde beaſts, and hauing fed me with ſuch as they had: we tooke our reſt for that night.

Tuppan baſſe Sauages. He goeth with them.

The next day earely in the morning they tooke downe and truſſed vp their beds, crying tiaſſo, tiaſſo, which is to ſay, away, away, and marched that day towards Braſill ſome twentie miles, and came to their Towne where their chiefe Gouernour was. This Towne was built foure ſquare, with foure houſes onely, euery houſe containing aboue two Bowe ſhot in length, and the houſes made with ſmall trees like an Arbour, being thatched ouer downe to the ground with Palme tree leaues: they haue no windowes, but ſome thirtie or fortie doores on euery ſide of this ſquadron, by which each Familie paſſeth in and out; their chiefe Lord, whoſe name was Caiou, being a man of ſome forty yeares old, had nine wiues; but the reſt haue onely one wife, except ſuch as are counted more valiant, then the reſt which are permitted two wiues, one to looke to their children at home, and the other to goe to the warres with them. This Towne contained very neere 4000. perſons of all ſorts. The next day the Gouernour ſent diuers of his people abroad to bring in all ſorts of victuall which the Countrie yeelded, and offered them vnto me to ſee which of them I liked beſt, among which there was great ſtore of fiſh, as well Sea-fiſh as freſh water-fiſhes, many ſorts of Fowles, many ſorts of Rootes, and diuers Land-beaſts, as Armadillos, which afterward I found to be very good meate. Of all theſe at the firſt, I onely tooke one Fowle, and a couple of fiſhes, and beſtowed the reſt among their children, which procured me no ſmall good will among them.

Sauage towne deſcribed. Caiou their Lord. Hoſpitall entertainment.

Here I ſtaied among them (being well entertained) for certaine moneths, vntill I had learned moſt part of their language, in which meane ſpace I noted their manners, which were as followeth. They went out to the warres armed at my firſt comming, onely with Bowes and Arrowes, ſome three or foure hundred at a time, and when they had the victory of their enemies, they tied one of their Captiues to one of their company with Cotten cords faſt arme to arme, and bringing them home, within two or three daies after they would tie them to a poaſt, and with a maſſie club of red wood one of the ſtrongeſt of the company (after they haue drunke a certaine ſtrong drinke with dancing round about him) at one blow ſlits his head a ſunder: this drinke is made by their women of a certaine roote called I. P. which first they seeth, and afterward chew in their mouthes, and then spit it out againe into a long trough and mingle it with water, and there let it worke two or three daies, and gather yeest vpon it, like to our Ale: which done, they take the liquor and put it into broad mouth Iarres of earth, and of this both their men and women doe drinke at their feasts, till they be as drunke as Apes. Their drinke and drunkennesse.

I could obserue no Religion amongst them, but onely that they reuerence and worshippe the Moone, especially the new Moone; whereat they doe reioyce in leaping, dancing, and clapping their hands. The Merchantable commodities of this Countrie, are Brasill-wood, Tobacco, red Pepper, and Cotten Wooll. They haue also great store of Apes, Monkies, Armadillos, Hogges without tailes as bigge as ours; their Birds are Parrats, Parraketos, blacke Fowles as bigge as Doues, and Ostriches as high as a man. After I had liued about halfe a yeare amongst them, and learned their language, the King requested me to goe to the warres with him against his enemies the Tapuyes, which I granted, but before we set out, I shewed them a way for making of certaine Targets of the barke of a Tree some three quarters of a yard long for defence against Arrowes, whereof we made some hundred; and withall I wished them to make some two hundred of Clubs. Which being done we marched forward some 700. in number, which by mine aduice were all marked with a red kinde of Balsome from the knee downeward vpon one legge, to be known from our enemies (by the way it is to be noted that there are three sorts of Balsamum in that Countrie, to wit, White, Red and Blacke very odoriferous and excellent good for a greene wound, and the White I esteeme to be best.) In three dayes march we came to another Towne built foure square, as before I haue declared, but much lesser; we set vpon the Towne about foure of the clocke in the morning, the enemy standing vpon defence of their Arrowes, were much deceiued by reason of our Targets, which being seconded by our Clubbes, wee immediately knocked downe to the number of two hundred, the rest, except some twenty prisoners escaped into the woods. Here the King staied one day, and caused many of thir carkales to be broyled vpon the coales and eaten. The chiefest riches which we found here was their drinke which they vsed to make themselues drunke withall; their Cotten Beddes and their Tobacco. As for Gold and Siluer they neither seeke, nor make any accompt thereof. This is to be noted, that how many men these Sauages doe kill, so many holes they will haue in their visage, beginning first in their nether lippe, then in their cheekes, thirdly in both their eye-browes, and lastly in their eares. Those twenty prisoners which we brought home, were afterward killed, rosted and eaten.

Notes of gentrie.

While I remayned here amongst these people, certayn Portugals accompanied with certayn Negros and Brasilians, came within some ten leagues of our town, to see whether they could surprise any of our Sauages, and to harken what was become of me, for that they had heard by this time that some of Sir Francis Drakes company were east ashoare amongst the Sauage people, but there comming was not so secret, but that two of the Portugals and certayne Negros were taken, and after their confession, of the intent of their comming thither, they were brained with clubs, broyled and eaten. These things thus passing, I became sutor to the King to giue mee leane to depart his Countrey, and to goe to some Riuer of Brasil not planted by the Portugals, to see if I could spy out any English or French ship to passe me into my Countrey, which hee in the end fauourably granted; and sent foure of his people with me to furnish me with victuals, which they did very plentifully of Birds, Fish, and Roots, for the space of nine or ten weeks, all which time they did accompany me, and I desiring to goe toward the Line, they brought me into the towne of Bahia, Detados los Santtos.

His departure.

But about foure or fiue miles before we came to the towne, I yeelded my selfe to a Portugall, called Michael Ionas, declaring vnto him that I was an Englishman, and enquired whether there were any Englishmen dwelling in the towne, hee told me that there was one Antonio de Paua in the towne which could speake good English, and was a louer of our Nation, and brought mee directly vnto his house. This Antonio de Paua, pittying my case, and aduising mee not to bee knowne, that I vnderstood the Portugall Tongue, brought mee to the Gouernour, whose name was Diego Vas, this Gouernour told me by Antonio de Paua, which became my Interpreter, that seeing I was found in the Inland of their Countrey Westward, being a stranger, contrary to their Lawes, he could doe no lesse then commit me to Prison, and send me into Portugall to be committed to the Gallies for tearme of life, to this I answered by the aduice of my good friend Antonio de Paua, that I came not willingly into those Dominions, but beeing by casualtie once come there, I was not taken Prisoner, but sought them out and came and yeelded my selfe into their hands, laying downe my weapons at one of his Nations feet.

He yeeldeth himselfe to a Portugall.

Neuertheless he sent me to Prison, whereby the meanes of Antonio de Paua, and other of his friends, I was sufficiently relieued, and within one fortnight after brought againe publikely to the barre in the Towne-house to mine answere. There I answered the second time by Antonio de Paua, my Interpreter, that I thought it sufficient, that when I might haue kept out, yet of mine owne free will I had made a long tourney, with great hazard of my life through the Countries of Sauages, being Man-eaters, which fauoured me to seeke the Portugall Christians out, and peace-peaceably to put my selfe into their hands. Hereupon the Gouernor and his assistants consulted and concluded together, that I should be committed to the house of Antonio de Payne, & there remaine vntill they might write into Portugall to know the Kings pleasure concerning me. Within one yeare they receiued answer from Lisbon concerning me, that I should be forth comming, and that hereafter the King would send further order for my transporting into Portugall. But aboue two yeares passed before this order came: In which meane space, first I spent part of my time in going into the fields as ouerseer of my friends Negros and Sauages in their planting and dressing of their Sugar Canes, and in planting of Gingers, which grow there exceeding well, but is a forbidden trade to be transported out for hindering of other places, and in cutting downe of Brasil-wood, and in bringing it downe by Riuers vpon ratts vnto the Port where the Ships doe lade it, and in seeing them gather their Cotten wooll, and picking the seedes out of it, and packing the same, and in gathering of the long Pepper both white and red.

His employments.

After I had spent, some yeare and an halfe in this businesse, my friend Antonio de Payne hauing a small Barke of his owne, which he employed in carrying of wares from Port to Port, and for bringing of Sugars to places where Ships should lade, vsed me, knowing I had bin brought vp to the Sea, in these his businesses. Our first Voyage was to Ilheos, where we left some wares, and staied there some moneth: then we went to Puerto Seguro, and there tooke in some Sugar for Linnen Cloath, Bayes, Wine and Oyle. Then returning home, shortly after we were set forth againe in the same Barke to Spirito Sancto, and Saint Vincent, and the Riuer Ienero, where discharging our wares to certaine Factors, and receiuing Sugars and Cotten Wooll aboord, we returned safely home. In my first Voyage one Master Dauid Leake an English Surgeon, lost there out of an English Shippe in the Countrie, being much sought for because of his skill, had passage with vs from Bahia to Spirito Sancto. Vpon my returne of my second voyage, my good friend Antonio de Payne aduertised me, that a Shippe was shortly to arriue there to carry me into Portugall prisoner, telling me that he should not be able any longer to helpe me, and therefore wished me to looke to my selfe; but kindely offered me his helpe to conuay me away: whereupon I tooke his Boate and foure of his Negros, pretending to goe on fishing to the Sea; and so of purpose going much to Leeward of the place, I put in to Fernambuc: where the Negroes being examined whence we came, and for what cause, being vtterly ignorant of mine intent, answered that they were drawn thither by force of weather, and for their Masters sake were well intreated, and returned home with the next winde, my selfe remaining secretly behinde them.

Within certaine moneths there came thither a Hulke with eight English men and foureteene Portugals, who after some three moneths had laden the same with English and Portugall goods to come for England. The English goods belonged to M. Cordal, M. Beecher, and M. Sadler, worshipfull Merchants of the Citie of London; which had bin left in the Countrie before by the Merchant Royall. Thus passing homeward in our course as far as the Iles of the Acores, within sight of the Ile of Pike, being fiue Portugall Ships in consort, we met with Cap. Raymond, and Cap. George Drake of Exeter, with two English Ships of warre, who because the peace betweene England and Spaine was broken the yeare before, commanded vs to yeelde our selues to them as their lawfull prises, which we did all fiue accordingly without any resistance. But by contrary weather we were driuen into Baltimore in Ireland, and within a while after we arriued in the narrow Seas in the hauen of Chichister, in the end of Nouember 1586. nine yeares and foureteene dayes after my departure out of England with Sir Francis Drake in his Voyage about the World.

My strange aduentures, and long liuing among cruell Sauages being known to the right honorable the Lord Charles Howard, Lord high Admirall of England, he certified the Queenes Maiesty thereof with speede, and brought me to her presence at White-hall, where it pleased her to talke with me a long houres space of my trauailes and wonderfull escape, and among other things of the manner of M. Dowties execution; and afterward bestowed 22. angels on me, willing my Lord to haue consideration of me; with many gracious words I was dismissed; humbly thanking the Almighty for my miraculous preseruation, and safe returne into my native Countrie.

Maſter Lane there relateth, that Aug. 26. 1591. Captaine Candiſh ſet forth from Plimmouth with three tall Shippes, the blacke Pinnace, and a Barke. Nouemb. 29. they fell with the coaſt of Braſile. They tooke the Towne of Santos, and burnt Saint Vincent. After a cruell ſtorme they arriued at Port Deſire, and after fell with the Magellan ſtraites. Occaſionally (ſaith Lane) they loſt Captaine Candiſh, and were backe to Port Deſire to ſeeke him: and whiles Captaine Danis further intended to ſeeke out the Generall, a dangerous conſpiracie was plotted to murther him by Parker and Smith. There is alſo a teſtimoniall ſubſcribed by fortie men. Thence they returned to the Straits, and had ſight of the people, which were very ſtrong, nimble, and naked. Sep. 13. they came in ſight of the South Sea, and being forced backe, the next day put forth againe, and being eight or ten leagues free from land, were repelled into the Straits. Octob. 2. they put into the South Sea againe, and were free of all land, and there in a ſtorme loſt the blacke Pinnace. The Shippes company were in deſpaire of life, but by Gods grace recouered the Straits, and a third time came to Port Deſire; and there loſt nine of their men (of which Parker and Smith were two) being on Land for Wood and Water: they knew not what became of them, but gueſſed that the Sauages had deuoured them. For the eleuenth of Nouember, while moſt of the men were at the Ile of Pengwins, onely the Captaine and Maſter with ſixe others left in the Shippe, there came a great multitude of Sauages to the Shippe (there on ground on the ooze) throwing duſt in the ayre, leaping and running like bruite Beaſts, hauing vizors on their faces like Dogges faces, or elſe their faces are Dogges faces indeede. We feared they would ſet our Shippes on fire, for they would ſuddenly make fire, whereat wee maruelled, ſeeing the buſhes on fire, but ſcared with Peeces they fled. Here they found much Seruie-graſſe which recouered them; and dried 20000. Pengwins, making ſome ſalt by laying the ſalt water on rockes in holes. The ſixt of February, many reported to each other their dreames of killing, and the like, and that day they loſt 13. men at Placentia. Their dried Pengwins, when they came neerer the Sun, began to corrupt, and there bred in them a moſt loathſome and vgly worme which deuoured their victuals, cloathes, timbers, and all but Iron, not ſparing their fleſh when they were aſleepe, ſo that they could ſcarcely ſleepe. Their multitude was ſuch that they could not deſtroy them. Another diſeaſe tooke them with ſwelling in their anckles, two daies after which, ſhortneſſe of breath, then falling into their gods and yards, ſo tormenting them that diuers fell mad and died: on fiue onely did the labour of the Ship relye; and Iune 11. 1593. without victuals, lanes, or men God guided them to Beare-hauen in Ireland.

CHAP. VI.

Master THOMAS CANDISH his discourse of his fatall and disastrous voyage towards the South Sea, with his many disaduentures in the Magellan Straits and other places; written with his owne hand to Sir TRISTRAM GORGES his Executor.

MOst louing friend, there is nothing in this world that makes a truer triall of friendship, then at death to shew mindfulnesse of loue and friendship, which now you shall make a perfect experience of: desiring you to hold my loue as deare dying poore, as if I had beene most infinitely rich. The successe of this most vnfortunate action, the bitter torments thereof lye so heauie vpon mee, as with much paine am I able to write these few lines, much lesse to make discouerie vnto you of all the aduerse haps, that haue befallen me in this voyage, the least whereof is my death: but because you shall not be ignorant of them, I haue appointed some of the most sensibleſt men that I left behinde me, to make discourse vnto you of all these accidents. I haue made a simple will, wherein I haue made you sole, and onely disposer of all such little, as is left.

The Roe-bucke. The Roe-bucke left me in the most desolate case that euer man was left in, what is become of her I cannot imagine: if shee bee returned into England, it is a most admirable matter; but if shee bee at home, or any other of my goods whatsoeuer returne into England, I haue made you onely Possessor of them. And now to come to that villaine that hath beene the death of me, and Captaine Dauis blamed. the decay of this whole action, I meane Danis, whose onely treacherie in running from me, hath beene an vtter ruine of all: if any good returne by him, as euer you loue mee, make such friends as he of all others, may reape least gaine. I assure my selfe you will bee carefull in all friendship, of my last requests. My debts which be owing be not much, &c. But I (most vnfortunate villaine) was matched with the most abiect minded and mutinous companie, that euer was carried Mutinous companie. out of England by any man liuing. For I protest vnto you, that in going to the Streits of Magellan, after I was passed to the Southward of the Riuer of Plate, and had bidden the furie of stormes, which indeed I thinke to bee such as worser might not bee indured: I neuer made my course to the Straits-ward, but I was in continuall danger by my companie, which neuer ceased to practise and mutinie against me. And hauing gotten the appointed place called Port Desire, Port Desire. I met with all my companie, which had beene there twentie dayes before me: and had not my my most true friends beene there (whom to name my heart bleedes) I meane my cousin Locke, I had been constrayned either to haue suffered violence, or some other most disordered misse-hap. I came into this Harbour with my Boat, my ships riding without at Sea: where I found the Roebucke, the Desire, and the Pinnace, all which complayned vnto mee, that the Tyde ranne so violencly, as they were not able to ride, but were driuen aground, and wished me in any wise not to come in with my ship, for that if shee should come on ground, shee would be vtterly cast away: which I knew to be most true.

And finding it to bee no place for so great a ship without her vtter ruine: I forthwith commanded them, to make themselues readie to depart: they being fresh, and infinitely well releeued with Seales and Birds, which in that place did abound, and my companie being growne weake and feeble, with continuall watching, pumping, and bayling. For I must say truly vnto you, there were neuer men that endured more extremities of the Seas, then my poore companie had done. Such was the furie of the West South-west, and South-west windes, as wee were driuen from the shoare foure hundred leagues, and constrayned to beate from fiftie degrees to the Southward into fortie to the Northward againe, before wee could recouer neere the shoare. In which time, we had a new shift of sailes cleane blowne away, and our ship in danger to sinke in the Sea three times: which with extremitie of mens labour wee recouered. In this weakenesse, wee departed for the Straits, being from that Harbour eight leagues, and in eighteene dayes, wee got the Straits: in which time, the men in my ship were growne extreamly weake. The other ships companie were in good case, by reason of their late reliefe.

Tempests.

The Streits.

And now we had beene almost foure moneths betweene the coast of Brasile, and the Straights, being in distance not aboue sixe hundred leagues, which is commonly run in twentie or thirtie dayes: but such was the aduersenesse of our fortunes, that in comming thither wee spent the Summer, and found in the Straits, the beginning of a most extreame Winter, not durable for Christians. In despight of all stormes and tempests, so long as wee had ground to anchor in, and Tydes to helpe vs, we beate into the Straits some fiftie leagues, hauing (for the most part) the windes contrarie. At length being forced by the extremitie of stormes, and the narrownesse of the Straits (being not able to turne wind ward no longer) we got into an Harbour, where wee rid from the eighteenth day of Aprill, till the tenth of May: in all which time, wee neuer had other then most furious contrarie windes. And after that the moneth of May was come in, nothing but such flights of Snow, and extremities of Frosts, as in all the time of my life, I neuer saw any to be compared with them.

Extreme winter.

They enter fiftie leagues.

This extremitie caused the weake men (in my ship onely) to decay; for in seuen or eight dayes, in this extremitie there dyed fortie men, and sickened seuentie, so that there were not fiftie men that were able to stand vpon the hatches. I finding this miserable calamitie to fall vpon me, and found that besides the decay of my men, and expence of my victuall, the snow and frost decayed our sailes, and tackle, and the contagiousnesse of the place to bee such, for extremitie of frost and snow, as there was no long staying, without the vtter ruine of vs all. What by these extremities, and the daily decay of my men, I was constrayned forthwith to determine some course, and not (for all this extremitie of weather) to tarrie there any longer.

Death of men.

Miserable distresse.

Vpon this, I assembled my companie together, and shewed them that my intention was to goe for China, and that there were two wayes thither, the one through the Straits, the other by the way of Caput bone spei; which course shewed them, as was well knowne to mee, as the way I had vndertaken. And although that fortune had denyed vs this passage, yet I doubted not, but soone to recouer to this Cape, where I shewed them, I made no doubt, but we should releeue our selues, and performe to their contents our intended voyage. These perswasions with many others, which I vsed, seemed to content them for the present: but they were no sooner gone from me, but forthwith all manner of discontents were vnripped amongst themselues, so that to goe that way, they plainly and resolutely determined neuer to giue their willing consents. Some of the best and honestest sort hearing this their resolution, wished them rather to put vp a supplication to me, then thus priuately among themselues to mutinie and murmur, which course might cause an vtter ruine to fall vpon them all: affirming, that they knew me to be so reasonable, as I would not refuse to heare their petition. Vpon this, they framed an humble supplication vnto me (as they termed it) the effect whereof was: That first they protested, to spend their liues most willingly for my sake, and that their loue was such to me, as their chiefest care was for mee, and they grieued very much to see mee put on a resolution, which (as they supposed) would be the end of my life, which was their greatest griefe. And next their owne liues would immediately follow, both by reason of the length of the course, all which they must performe without reliefe. And further, we had not left foure moneths victuall, which might very well be spent in running a course not halfe so long. But if it would please me to returne againe for the Coast of Brasile (where they knew, my force being together, was able to take any place) there we might both prouide victuall to returne againe, and furnish our selues of all other such wants, as these extremities had brought vpon vs, and in a seasonable time returne againe, and so performe our first intention.

Consultation.

Now, I knowing their resolution, and finding, that in some things their reasons were not vaine, vaine, began more seriously to looke into all my wants. First, I found my greatest decay to bee in ropes, and sailes, wherein (by meanes of such mightie extremities) I was vtterly vnfurnished, for I lost a new shift of sailes comming thither; and further the Desire had bidden the like extremitie, which I furnished: so as I had left no store at all: for no ships carry three new shifts of sailes, all which, had beene little enough for me: and last of all, our victuals to be most short, I was to fall into consideration what to doe. I knew well that the windes were such, and so continually against vs, as by no meanes it was possible to passe through: for the violent showes were such, as in two dayes together we should not be able to see fiue houres, the place not a league ouer in breadth, our ships not to be handled in such extremitie of winde: no, nor Canuas to hold the furie of the winde, our men so weake, as of one hundred and fiftie men, I had not in my ship fiftie in health. And this ship comming with all her companie, was like three times to haue been vpon the shoare, by reason of her vnyarie workings. These causes made mee vtterly despaire of any passage at this season: so I resolued the companie I would put out of the Harbour, and beat to get through, so long as the furious and westerly windes would suffer vs: but if they came vpon vs, so as we could not hold it vp wee would then beare vp againe, and so (according to their request) goe for the Coast of Brasile, which they so much seemed to desire, and I so much hated.

Windes and showes violent.

But in truth I was forced to take that way, for that there was no place, where this ship could come into, to tarry out a winter. For Port Saint Iulian is a barred Harbour, ouer which two of my ships would not goe; and Port Desire hath neither wood, nor water: and besides that, the Tyde runneth so extremely, as it is not possible for anchors to hold, the ground being so bad. But the last cause of all to be considered, was the sicknesse of my men, hauing no clothes to defend them from the extreme cold. These causes, and their ardent desires of being out of the cold, mooued me to goe backe againe, for that most wicked Coast of Brasile, where I incountred all manner of misfortunes, which as I haue vnripped these former, so I will briefly declare the latter.

Port S. Iulian. Port Desire.

His returne from the Strait.

We were beaten out of the Strait with a most monstrous storme at West South-west, from which place we continued together, till we came in the latitude of fortie seuen, in which place Dauis in the Desire, and my Pinnasse lost me in the night, after which time I neuer heard of them, but (as I since vnderstood) Dauis his intention was euer to run away. This is Gods will, that I should put him in trust, that should be the end of my life, and the decay of the whole action. For had not these two small ships parted from vs, we would not haue miscarried on the coast of Brasile: for the onely decay of vs was, that we could not get into their barred Harbours. What became of these small ships, I am not able to iudge, but sure, it is most like, they went backe againe for Port Desire, a place of reliefe, for two so small ships. For they might lye on ground there without danger, and being so few men, they might releeue themselues with Seales, and Birds, and so take a good time of the yeere, and passe the Streits. The men in these small ships were all lustie, and in health: wherefore the likelier to hold out. The short of all is this: Dauis his onely intent was vtterly to ouerthrow me, which he hath well performed.

These ships being parted from vs, wee little suspecting any treacherie, the Roe-bucke and my selfe, held our course for Brasile, and kept together, till wee came in the latitude of thirtie sixe, where we incountred the most grieuous storme, that euer any Christians indured vpon the Seas to liue, in which storme we lost companie. Wee with most extreme labour, and great danger, got the Coast of Brasile, where we were fifteene dayes, and neuer heard of the Roe-bucke. Wee came to an anchor in the Bay of Saint Vincent, and being at an anchor there, the Gentlemen desired mee to giue them leaue to goe ashoare, to some of the Portugals Farme-houses, to get some fresh victuals, which I granted; willing them to make present returne, knowing very well, the whole Country was not able to prejudice them, if they willingly would not indanger themselues. They went to a Sugar mill hard by mee where I rode, (for that was my speciall charge, that they should neuer goe a mile from the ship) where they got some victuall, and came aboard againe very well.

Saint Vincent.

The next day in the morning betimes, an Indian came vnto me with Captaine Barker; which Indian ran away from his Master, at my last being there: this Sauage knew all the Countrie. He came vnto me, and said, that beyond a Point, not a Culuering shot off, there was a very rich farme-house, and desired ten or twelue men to goe thither. Captaine Barker being one whom I most trusted in the conduction of men, and (who euer was the most carefull in such matters of seruice) I appointed to goe, and to take some twentie or thirtie men with him: and willed him (as he had any respect or regard of my commandement) not to stay, but to come presently away, finding any thing or nothing. He forthwith tooke fiue and twentie men of the most principall men in the ship, and then your cousin Stafford would by no meanes bee left behinde. They departed by foure of the clocke in the morning, so as I did not see their companie. But what should I write more then this vnto you? they were all such, as neither respected me, nor any thing that I commanded. Away they went, and by one of the clocke, they sent my Boat againe with Gunny wheat, and sixe Hennes, and a small Hogge. I seeing no returne againe of the companie (for they had sent away the Boat onely with men to row her aboard) was very much grieued, and presently preſently returned the Boat againe with meſſage: That I much marualled they would tarry at a place ſo long, with ſo few men; and further, that it was not a Hogge, and ſixe Hennes could releeue vs: and ſeeing there was no other reliefe to bee had, I charged them ſtraightly to come aboard preſently. Thus hauing diſpatched away my Boat for them, I ſtill expected their preſent comming aboard: all that night, I heard nothing of them, the next morning I ſhot Ordinance, yet I ſaw no Boat come. Then I waighed anchor, and made aboard into the Bay, yet for all this, I heard nothing of them: then I doubted with my ſelfe very greatly, knowing there were no meanes left to make any manifeſter ſignes to them to haſten away. All that day I heard nothing of them, in the euening I ſet ſailes againe, and ran into the ſhoare: all that night I heard no newes of them.

The next morning, I ſaw an Indian come downe to the Sea-ſide, and weaued vnto the ſhip: we being deſirous to heare ſome newes, cauſed a raft to be made, for Boat wee had none, and ſent it aſhoare, and ſet the Indian aboard. When we ſaw him, we found him to bee our owne Indian, which had eſcaped away, being ſoare hurt in three places; who told vs, that all the reſt of our men were ſlaine with three hundred Indians, and eightie Portugals, which (in the euening) ſet vpon them ſuddenly. Then I demanded, why they came not aboard? the Indian anſwered mee, that ſome were vnwilling to come, and the reſt, did nothing but eate Hennes and Hogs, which they had there in abundance, and that they minded nothing to come aboard. I leaue you to iudge, in what griefe I was, to ſee fiue and twentie of my principall men thus baſely and wilfully caſt away: but I leaue you to inquire of others, the practiſes of theſe men, leſt in writing vnto you it ſhould be thought I did it of malice, which (I proteſt) is farre from me, they being now dead, and my ſelfe looking imminently to follow them.

Captaine Barker and foure and twentie others ſlaine.

Thus I was left deſtitute of my principall men, and a Boat, and had I not (by great hap the day before) taken an old Boat from the Portugals, I had beene vtterly vndone. This Boat I ſent to an Iland fifteene leagues off, to ſee if they could heare any newes of the reſt of my ſhips: ſhee returned within eight dayes, all which time I remayned without a Boat. Thus I was ſixe dayes before I heard newes of any of my conſorts. The ſeuenteenth day came in the Roe-bucke, hauing ſpent all her Maſts, but their Miſon, their Sailes blowne cleane away, and in the moſt miſerable caſe that euer ſhip was in: all which miſſe-haps falling vpon me, and then miſſing my ſmall ſhips wherein (vpon that Coaſt) conſiſted all my ſtrength, hauing no Pinnaces nor great Boats left to land my men in, for they were all caſt away going to the Strait. I (notwithſtanding the want of Boats and Pinnaces) determined rather then not to bee reuenged of ſo baſe Dogs, to venture the ſhips to goe downe the Riuer afore their Towne, and to haue beaten it to the ground, which forthwith I put in execution. And hauing gotten downe halfe the way, wee found the Riuer ſo narrow by reaſon of a ſhoald, as all the companie affirmed plainly, it was both deſperate and moſt dangerous. For the Riuer is all Oſe, and if a ſhip come aground, it is vnpoſſible euer to get off, for there riſeth not aboue a foot water, and no anchors will hold to hale off any my ſhips, in ſo narrow a place, as we were almoſt aground in wending.

The Roe-bucke commeth in.

Braſilian Coaſt full of ſhoalds and barres. Maſter Candiſhes high ſpirit.

Seeing this apparant danger, I forthwith bare vp out of the Riuer, where we eſcaped no ſmall danger to get well out, for we had not little more water then we drew: and if ſhee had come aground, it had beene vnpoſſible euer to haue gotten her off. By theſe meanes of not paſſing the Riuer, we were conſtrayned to let our reuenge paſſe: for our Boats were ſo bad and ſmall, as wee durſt put no men in them. Notwithſtanding wee landed, and did them much ſpoile vpon their Farme-houſes, and got ſome quantitie of freſh victuals. This place being not for vs, conſidering our ſhips were not able to paſſe to their Towne; and further our great wants did conſtraine vs to ſeeke ſome courſe of reliefe, which being not to bee had there, both for that wee had ſpoyled it a little before, and alſo for that we could not conueniently come to doe them any preiudice, without moſt loſſe to our ſelues: I determined to part from thence, and to goe to a ſmall Iland ſome twentie leagues off, and there to haue fitted all my neceſſaries, and to haue caſt off the Roe-bucke, for that by no meanes her wants could by mee bee furniſhed, and ſo at a ſeaſonable time, to haue gone for the Straits of Magellan againe.

His intention.

Which intention (I muſt confeſſe) I kept moſt ſecret, for feare of ſome mutinie, but ſhewed the whole Companie, that I would goe for Saint Helens, where wee ſhould meet with the Carracks: which courſe I well knew did not much pleaſe them; for they deſired nothing more then returning home into England, and if I had but named the Straits, they would forthwith haue fallen into a moſt extreme mutinie: for ſuch were the miſeries and torments they had indured, as all the beſt ſort had taken an oath vpon a Bible, to die rather then euer to yeeld their conſents to goe backe that way againe. I knowing this, ſeemed to ſpeake nothing of that courſe, but comforting their deſpairing mindes as well as I might, ſeeing their greateſt griefe was for the wants of the ſmall ſhips, without which, they all affirmed (and that truly) wee were able to doe nothing. For the Ports where their Townes ſtand, were all barred Harbours, and that it was not poſſible to get any of theſe ſhips ouer them, whereby we could releeue our ſelues of ſuch wants, as we were in. Theſe things being alleaged, I ſeemed to paſſe ouer as ſlightly as might be, but yet comforted them, that we would preſently ſeeke ſome place of reliefe with all ſpeede.

Portugal Pilots vndertaking for Spirito Sancto.

There was a Portugall aboord me, who tooke vpon him to be a Pilot, who came vnto me, and told me vpon his life, that he would take vpon him to carry both my Shippes ouer the barre at Spiritus Sanctus, a place indeede of great reliefe, and the onely place in Braſile for victuall, and all other wants, that we were in. I knowing very well, that if I could bring my Shippes within ſhot of the Towne, I ſhould land my men, and further, it could not be in them to make reſiſtance. The whole company deſired this courſe, affirming that there was no way left to relieue all our wants but this: and that there they were in hope to finde ſome Shippes, to repaire the Roe-bucks againe. I finding their willingneſſe, and charging the Portugall vpon his life, to tell me truely, whither the Ships might paſſe ouer the barre without danger; he willed me to take his life, if euer the Shippes came in leſſe water then fiue fathome, with ſuch conſtant affirmations as he deſired not to liue, if he ſhould not performe this. I conſidering the greatneſſe of our wants, and knowing right well, the place to be the onely wiſhed Towne on all the coaſt to relieue vs, forthwith gaue my conſent, and thither we went, leauing all other intentions. We anchored before the barre, and ſent my Boate to ſound the barre, and found the deepeſt water to be but fifteene and ſeuenteene foote (the Portugall himſelfe going with them, all ouer the bar) the moſt water to be but three fathome. They comming aboord, brought me word of the truth, I called for the Portugall, and demanded of him why he had ſo lied vnto me? who affirmed that he neuer ſounded the barre before, and that he had brought in Ships of 100. tuns, and that he made accompt, there had not bin leſſe water then fiue fathome.

His ignorance.

This miſ-hap was no ſmall amazement to me, and all the company, conſidering our diſtreſſe for water and other neceſſaries, and that the roade was ſo ill, as we were ſcant able to ride there, ſo as we could neither take in water, nor doe any other buſineſſe. In this meane time while wee were ſcanning of theſe matters, the Roe-bucks Boate rowing further into the Baye, ſaw where three Shippes were at an anker, not farre from the Towne, and came aboord, and brought mee word thereof: at which newes the Companie ſeemed much to reioyce, and all affirmed that they would goe with our Boates, and bring them out of the harbour. I ſhewed them how much the taking of them imported vs, and told them, that although the day was ſpent, yet I thought the night not to be altogether inconuenient, if they would put on mindes to performe it. Reſolutely my reaſons were theſe: firſt they were not ſo ſufficiently prouided to defend themſelues at that inſtant, as they would be in the morning; and further I told them, that if they were not able to defend them, they would take the principall and beſt things out of them, being ſo neere the ſhoare, and that if they had wherewith to defend themſelues, it would be leſſe offenſiue to vs in the night, then in the day, and we in greateſt ſecuritie, and more offenſiue to the enemy, eſpecially this exploit being to be done on the water, not landing.

Three Ships.

His counſell not followed.

Theſe perſwaſions ſeemed a little to moue them, for they all deſired to ſtay till morning: yet ſome of them prepared themſelues. Comming amongſt them, I found them, all, or for the moſt part vtterly vnwilling to goe that night: vpon which occaſion (I confeſſe) I was much moued, and gaue them ſome bitter words, and ſhewed them our caſe was not to make detractions, but to take that opportunitie which was offered vs, and not to feare a night more then a day, and told them plainely, that in refuſing of this, I could ſtay there no longer, for ouer the barre we could not goe, and the roade ſo dangerous, as neuer Shippes rid in a worſe. And further, we ſaw all the Countrey to be fired round about, and that to land we could not without vtter ſpoile to vs all, for our Boates were naught; and further, we could by no meanes be ſuccoured by our Shippes, ſo as I intended to depart. The next morning, there was almoſt an vproare amongſt them, the moſt of them ſwearing that if I would not giue them leaue, they would take the Boats and bring away thoſe Shippes of themſelues. I comming among them, beganne to reprehend them for their raſhneſſe, and told them that now all opportunity was paſt, and that they muſt be contented, for goe they ſhould not. They much importuned me, and ſome of the chiefeſt of them deſired me with teares in their eyes, that they might goe, affirming, that there was no danger to be feared at all; for if they were not able to take them, they would returne againe, and that to depart without attempting to doe this, was a thing that moſt greatly grieued them.

Their vnſeaſonable eagernes

I knowing right well, that if they landed not they could receiue no preiudice: for if their Ships had beene able to withſtood them, it was in their power to goe from them, being ſtarke calme. And further I knew that no Shippes vſe Braſile that be able to defend themſelues from a Cock-boate: much leſſe that they ſhould be of force to offend thoſe Boates, wherein there were ſo many Muſketteeres as could ſit one by another. I ſeeing their great importunitie, was contented to giue them leaue to goe: and this was my charge to Captaine Morgaine (to whom at that preſent I left my directions) that firſt, vpon paine of his life, he ſhould not land at all what opportunitie ſoeuer was offered; and that if he ſaw any danger in comming to theſe Shippes, he ſhould attempt no further, but returne aboord againe; but contrariwiſe, if he ſaw that the place was ſuch, as we might land without too much diſaduantage, and if we might land on plain ground, free from woods or buſhes, hard before the Towne, that then he would preſently repaire vnto me againe, and I, and ſo many as theſe bad Boates would carrie, would preſently land vpon them.

His inſtructions to Captain Morgan.

Thus my Boates departed from me, hauing ſome eightie men, as well furniſhed with weapons, as it is poſſible to ſort ſuch a number withall. Now you ſhall vnderſtand, that in the night the Portugals had hailed the Shippes hard afore the Towne: the Riuer where the Towne ſtood was not aboue a Bird-bolt-ſhot ouer, and halfe a mile from the Towne where the Shippes rode: The place deſcribed.
the night wee came in, they had new caſt vp two ſmall trenches, on each ſide the Riuer one, where they had planted ſome two ſmall baſes a peece vpon an hill. Right ouer them were thicke woods, and great rockes, ſo that if any were poſſeſſed of them, they might but tumble ſtones downe, and beate away 1000. men. The trench on the Weſter-ſide of the Riuer ſhot at our Boats, once or twice; vpon that they began to thinke with themſelues what to doe, Captaine Morgan affirming the place to be verie narrow, and that they could not well paſſe it without danger; conſidering the many men in their Boats, and alſo the charge which I had giuen, was ſuch, if they ſaw any danger, they ſhould prefently repaire aboord, and certifie me, and not to paſſe any further, till they had vnderſtood my further determination: This Maſter Morgan made knowne amongſt them, whereupon ſome of the harebraine Sailers began to ſweare, that they neuer thought other, but that he was a coward, and now he will ſhew it, that durſt not land vpon a bable ditch, as they tearmed it. Vpon this, the gentleman was very much moued, and anſwered them, that they ſhould finde him to be none ſuch as they accounted him, and that, come what could happen him, he would land. Mad Mutiners.

Vpon this, in they put the Boats betweene the two ſconſes (that on the Eaſter-ſide they had not ſeene) and the Boats being hard vpon it, were ſhot at, and in the biggeſt Boat they hurt two, and killed one with that ſhot. Vpon this, they determined, that the ſmalleſt Boate with their company ſhould land on the Weſter-ſide, and the other to land on the Eaſter-ſide. The ſmall Boate landed firſt, and that place hauing but few in it, they being not able to defend themſelues, ranne away, ſo that our men entred peaceably without hurt of any. The other Boate drawing much water, was agrounde before they came neere the ſhoare, ſo as they that landed, were faine to wade aboue knee high in water. Now the place, or Sconſe, was in height ſome ten foote, made of ſtone (Captaine Morgan more reſolutely then diſcreetely) ſcaled the wall, and ten more with him, which went out of the Boate together. Then the Indians and Portugals ſhewed themſelues, and with great ſtones from ouer the trench, killed Morgan and fiue more, and the reſt of them being ſore hurt, retired to the Boate, which by this time was ſo filled with Indian arrowes, as of 45. men being in the Boate, there eſcaped not eight of them vnhurt, ſome hauing three arrowes ſticking in them, ſome two, and there was none which eſcaped without wound. The furie of thoſe arrowes comming ſo thicke, and ſo many of them being ſpoiled, they put the Boat from the ſhoare, leauing the reſt on land, a ſpoile for the Indians. They land. Captaine Morgan ſlaine. Many others ſlaine or hurt.

By this time, there came two Boates full of luſtie Portugals, and ſome Spaniards, who knowing the ſconſe on the Weſter-ſide to be weakely manned, came with their Boates to the forts ſide: one of them ran aſhoare which was fulleſt of men, then our men let flye their Muskets at them, and ſpoiled and killed all that were in that Boate. The others, ſeeing their fellowes ſpeede ſo ill, rowed backe againe, with all their force, and got the Town againe. In this meane time the great Boat being gotten of, they called to them in the Sconſe, and willed them to forſake the Fort, and to come and helpe them; for they told them that all their men were ſpoiled & ſlaine. Vpon this they ſtrait came out of the Sconſe againe, and retired to their Boat; who ruſhing in all together into the Boat, ſhe came on ground, ſo that off they could not get her, but ſome muſt goe out of her againe: tenne of the luſtieſt men went out, and by that time the Indians were come downe into the Fort againe, and ſhot at our men. They which were a land (perceiuing the arrowes flye among them) ranne againe to the Forts ſide, and ſhot in at the lower hold with their Muskets. By this, the Boat was got of, and one that was the Maſter of the Roe-bucke (a moſt cowardly villaine that euer was borne of a woman) cauſed them in the Boat to rowe away, and ſo left thoſe braue men a ſpoile for the Portugals, yet they waded vp to the necks in the water to them, but thoſe mercileſſe villaines in the Boate, would haue no pitty on them. Their excuſe was, that the Boat was ſo full of water, that had they come in, ſhe would haue ſunke with all them in her; thus vilely were thoſe poore men loſt. Ten braue men loſt. Cowardly baſeneſſe.

By this time, they which were landed on the other ſide (the great Boate not being able to rowe neere the ſhoare to relieue them) were killed with ſtones by the Indians, being thus wilfully and vndiſcreetely ſpoiled, which you may well perceiue, if you looke into their landing, eſpecially in ſuch a place, as they could not eſcape killing with ſtones. They returned aboord againe, hauing loſt fiue and twenty men, whereof tenne of them were left aſhoare, in ſuch ſort as I haue ſhewed you. When the Boates came to the Shippes ſide, there were not eight men in the biggeſt Boate, which were not moſt grieuouſly wounded. I demanded of them the cauſe of their miſhappes, and how they durſt land, conſidering my ſtrait commandement to the contrarie; they anſwered mee, that there was no fault in Captaine Morgan, but the greateſt occaſion of all this ſpoile to them, happened vpon a controuerſie betweene the Captaine and thoſe Souldiers that landed with him, and were killed at the Fort, for their ill ſpeeches and vrging of Captaine Morgan, was the cauſe that hee landed contrary to my commandement, 25. men ſlaine, others wounded.

mandement, and vpon ſuch a place, as they all confeſſed fortie men were ſufficient to ſpoile fiuehundred.

I leaue it to your ſelfe to iudge, what a ſight it was to mee, to ſee ſo many of my beſt men, thus wilfully ſpoiled, hauing not left in my Shippe fiftie ſound men: ſo as wee were no more then able to waye our Ankers, which (the next morning) wee did, and findiug it calme wee were conſtrained to come to an Anker againe; for my onely intention was, to get out of that bad roade, and to put of into the Sea, and there to determine what to doe, for that place was not for vs to tarrie in, for the roade was ſo bad, as wee were not able to helpe our ſelues with a Boates loading of freſh water, whereof wee ſtood in no ſmall want. In this dayes ſtay in the Roade, I comforted theſe diſtreſſed poore men, what I might, and found moſt of their deſires, to returne againe into England. I let them vnderſtand, how wee would goe backe againe to the Iland of Saint Sebaſtian, and there wee would water, and doe our other neceſſary buſineſſes, and there make a reſolute determination of the reſt of our proceedings. This courſe ſeemed to like them all very well, but the companie in the Roe-bucke, inſtantly deſired nothing more, then to returne home, all affirming, that it was pittie ſuch a Shippe ſhould be caſt of. But in truth, it was not of any care of the Shippe, but onely of a moſt cowardly minde of the Maſter, and the chiefeſt of the company to returne home.

Purpoſe for S. Sebaſtian.

Now you ſhall vnderſtand that the Captaine was verie ſicke, and ſince the time that the Ship loſt her Maſts, ſhe became the moſt labourſome Ship that euer did ſwimme on the Sea, ſo as he was not able to indure in her, and at that preſent he lay aboord my Shippe, ſo as there was none of any truſt, or accompt left in her. But ſuch was the caſe of that Shippe (being without ſailes, maſts, or any manner of tackle) as in the ſenſe & iudgement of any man liuing, there did not liue that deſperate minded man in the world, which (in that caſe ſhe was then in) would haue ventured to haue ſailed in her halfe ſo farre as England: and if ſhe doe returne, it is (in my opinion) the moſt admirable returne that euer Ship made, being ſo farre of, and in her caſe. Theſe villaines hauing left in my Ship, all their hurt men, and hauing aboord of them both my Surgeans, I, hauing not one in mine owne Shippe, which knew how to lay a plaſter to a wound, much leſſe to cure any by ſalues: and further, hauing in their Shippe three times the proportion of my victuall (wherein conſiſted the onely reliefe and comfort of all my company) theſe moſt hard harted villaines, determined that night amongſt themſelues, to looſe mee at their next conuenient time they could eſpie, and in this caſe to goe for England, leauing vs in the greateſt diſtreſſe that euer one Chriſtian left another in: for wee had all her hurt men in vs, and we had taken out of her the beſt part of her men not long before: ſo as in running from vs, they not onely carried away our Surgeans, and all their prouiſion, but alſo our victuall, wherein conſiſted all our reliefe and comfort: hauing in them at their departure but ſix and fortie men, carrying away with them the proportion for ſix moneths victuall of one hundred and twenty men at large.

Damnable deſigne.

I leaue you to conſider of this part of theirs, and the miſerable caſe I was left in, with ſo many hurt men, ſo little victuall, and my Boate being ſo bad, as ſixe or ſeuen men continually bailing water, were ſcant able to keepe her from ſinking; and mend her we could not by any meanes, before we recouered ſome ſhoare: for had not theſe villaines in the Roe-bucke (that night wee rode in this Baye) ſuffered their Boate to run aſhoare with Iriſh men (which went to betray vs) I had taken her Boate, and ſunke this great naughtie Boate. Such was the greatneſſe of our miſhaps, as we were not left with the comfort and hope of a Boate to relieue our ſelues withall; we not hauing left in the Ship ſcarſe three tuns of water for 140. men, the moſt part whereof being hurt and ſicke. We putting out of the road the next day, they, the ſame night in this caſe left vs, and (as I ſuppoſe) they could not accompt otherwiſe, then that wee ſhould neuer againe be heard of.

The Roe-bucke forſaketh him.

The next morning looking for the Roe-bucke, we could no where be ſeene. I leaue to you to iudge in what plight my companie was, being now deſtitute of Surgeans, victuals, and all other reliefe; which in truth was ſo great a diſcomfort vnto them, as they held themſelues dead men, as well whole as hurt. The ſcantneſſe of water made vs that we could not ſeeke after them, but were inforced to ſeeke to this Iland, with all poſſible ſpeede, hauing to beate backe againe thither two hundred leagues: which place, God ſuffered vs to get with our laſt caske water, the poore men being moſt extreamly pinched for want thereof. Where (after we had a little refreſhed our ſelues) we preſently mended our Boat in ſuch ſort, as with great labour and danger, we brought fortie tunnes of water aboord. And in the meane time ſearching our ſtore of ropes, tackle, and ſailes, we found our ſelues vtterly vnfurniſhed both of ropes and ſailes: which accident pleaſed the company not a little, for by theſe wants, they aſſuredly accounted to goe home. Then making a ſuruay of the victuall, we found to be remaining in the Shippe (according to the rate we then liued at) foureteene weekes victuals large.

He commeth to S. Sebaſtians.

Their manifold wants.

Hauing rigged our Shippes in ſuch ſort, as our ſmall ſtore would furniſh vs, which was moſt meanely, for we had but foure ſailes (our ſprite-ſaile, and foretoppe-ſaile being wanting) which which two, the Ship (moſt principally loueth) and thoſe which we had (except her maine ſaile) were more then halfe worne. In this poore caſe being furniſhed, and our water taken in, my company knowing my determination (which was to haile my Boate a ground, and build her a new) they forthwith openly began to murmure, and mutinie: affirming plainely, that I neede not mend the Boate, for they would goe home, and then, there ſhould be no vſe of her. I, hearing theſe ſpeeches, thought it was now time to looke amongſt them, calling them together, and told them, that although we had many miſhaps fallen vpon vs, yet (I hoped) that their mindes would not in ſuch ſort be ouercome with any of theſe misfortunes, that they would goe about to vndertake any baſe, or diſordered courſe; but that they would cheerefully goe forward, to attempt either to make themſelues famous, in reſolutely dying, or in liuing, to performe that, which would be to their perpetuall reputation: And the more we attempted, being in ſo weake a caſe, the more (if we performed) would be to our honours. But contrariwiſe, if we dyed in attempting, we did but that which we came for, which was either to performe or dye.

And then I ſhewed them my determination, to goe againe for the Straits of Magellanus: which words were no ſooner vttered, but forthwith they all with one conſent affirmed plainly, they would neuer goe that way againe; and that they would rather ſtay aſhoare in that deſart Iland, then in ſuch caſe to goe for the Straits. I ſought by peaceable meanes to perſwade them, ſhewing them that in going that way, we ſhould relieue our victuals, by ſalting of Seales, and Birds: which (they did well know) we might doe in greater quantitie, then our Ship could carry. And further, if we got through the Strait (which we might now eaſily performe, conſidering we had the chiefeſt part of Summer before vs) we could not but make a moſt rich Voyage, and alſo meete againe with the two ſmall Ships which were gone from vs: and that it was but ſix hundred leagues thither; and to goe into England they had two thouſand. And further that they ſhould be moſt infamous to the world, that being within ſix hundred leagues of the place, which we ſo much deſired, to returne home againe ſo farre, being moſt infamous and beggerly. Theſe perſwaſions tooke no place with them, but moſt boldly, they all affirmed, that they had ſworne, they would neuer goe againe to the Straits; neither by no meanes would they.

And one of the chiefeſt of their faction, moſt proudly and ſtubbornely vttered theſe words to my face, in preſence of all the reſt: which I ſeeing, and finding mine owne faction to be ſo weake (for there were not any that fauoured my part, but my poore couſen Locke, and the Maſter of the Ship) I tooke this bold companion by the boſome, and with mine owne hands put a rope about his necke, meaning reſolutely to ſtrangle him, for weapon about me I had none. His companions ſeeing one of their chiefe champions in this caſe, & perceiuing me to goe roundly to worke with him, they all came to the Maſter, and deſired him to ſpeake; affirming they would be ready to take any courſe that I ſhould thinke good of. I, hearing this, ſtayed my ſelfe, and let the fellow goe: after which time, I found them ſomething conformable, at leaſt in ſpeeches, though among themſelues they ſtill murmured at my intencions. Thus hauing ſomthing pacified them, and perſwaded them, that by no meanes I would take no other courſe, then to go for the Straits, I tooke aſhoare with me thirtie Soldiers, and my Carpenters, carrying foureteene dayes victuall with me for them. Thus going aſhoare, I hailed vp my Boate, to new build her in ſuch ſort, as ſhe might bee able to abide the Seas, leauing aboord all my ſailers, and the reſt, to rigge the Ship, and mend ſailes, and to doe other buſineſſe.

Mutiner puniſhed.

And now to let you know, in what caſe I lay aſhoare among theſe baſe men, you ſhall vnderſtand, that of theſe thirtie there were verie few of them, which had not rather haue gone to the Portugals, then to haue remained with me; for there were ſome, which at my being aſhoare, were making rafts to goe ouer to the maine, which was not a mile ouer, whare the Portugals had continuall watch of vs, looking but for a fit opportunity to ſet vpon vs: being in this caſe, alwaies expecting the comming of the Portugals, againſt whom I could haue made no reſiſtance, and further the trecherie of ſome of my companie, which deſired nothing more, then to ſteale ouer, ſo to betray me, I proteſt, I liued hourly, as he that ſtill expecteth death. In this caſe I made all the ſpeed I could to make an end of my Boate, that we might be able to rowe her aboord, which in twelue daies we mainely finiſhed, which being done, I came aboord, and found all my buſineſſe in good forwardneſſe: ſo I determined withall poſſible ſpeede to diſpatch, and be gone for the Straits of Magellane.

But ere euer we could get in all our water and timber-wood, and other neceſſaries, an Iriſh man (a noble villaine) hauing made a raft, got ouer to the maine, and told the Portugals which were there (watching nothing but an opportunitie) that if they would goe ouer in the night, they ſhould finde moſt of our men aſhoare, without weapon, and that they might doe with them what they would: vpon this, the next night, they came ouer, and hauing taken ſome of our men, they brought them where the reſt lay, which they moſt cruelly killed, being ſicke men, not able to ſtirre to helpe themſelues. Thoſe which were aſhoare, more then the ſicke men, had ſtolne out of the Shippe, for it was all my care to keepe them aboord, knowing well, that the Portugals ſought to ſpoile vs, the place being ſo fit for them, all ouergrowne with woods and buſhes, as their Indians might goe and ſpoile vs with their arrowes at their pleaſures, and we not be able to hurt one of them. In the morning perceiuing their comming; I sent my Boate ashoare, and rescued all my healthfull men, but fiue, which they found out in the night, without weapons to defend them: whereof (besides the losse of our men) we hauing but foure sailes, left one ashoare, which was no small mishap among the rest.

An Iriſh raſcall and traitor to his fellowes.

The Portugals went presently againe ouer to the maine, but left their Indians to keepe in the bushes. About the watering-place, our men going ashoare, were shot at, and hurt, and could by no meanes come to hurt them againe, by reason of the wood, and bushes. Wherefore finding my men hurt, and that by no meanes I could doe any thing there, without more losse of men (whereof I had no neede) for I had not aboue ninetie men left, or little ouer, notwithstanding my wants of wood and water, and my Boate (not being sufficiently mended) was in no possibilitie to doe me pleasure, in this case was I forced to depart; fortune neuer ceasing to lay her greatest aduersities vpon me.

Cap. Candishes weakenesse.

But now I am growne so weake and faint, as I am scarce able to hold the penne in my hand: wherefore I must leaue you to inquire of the rest of our most vnhappy proceedings, but know this, that (for the Straits) I could by no meanes, get my company to giue their consents to goe. For after this misfortune, and the want of our sailes (which was a chiefe matter they alleadged) and to tell you truth, all the men left in the Shippe, were no more then able to weigh our ankers. But in truth I desired nothing more, then to attempt that course, rather desiring to dye in going forward, then basely in returning backe againe; but God would not suffer me to dye so happy a man, although I sought all the wayes I could, still to attempt to performe somewhat. For, after that by no meanes I saw they could be brought to goe for the Straits, hauing so many reasonable reasons to alleadge against me, as they had: first, hauing but three sailes, and the place subiect to such furious stormes, and the losse of one of these was death: and further, our Boate was not sufficiently repaired, to abide the Seas: and last of all, the fewnesse, and feebleneese of our company (wherein we had not left thirty sailers) these causes being alleadged against me, I could not well answere: but resolued them plainely, that to England I would neuer giue my consent to goe, and that (if they would not take such courses as I intended) I was then determined, that Shippe and all should sinke in the Seas together. Vpon this, they began to be more tractable, and then I shewed them, that I would beate for Saint Hellens, and there, either to make our selues happy, by mending, or ending. This course (in truth) pleased none of them, and yet seeing my determination, and supposing it would be more danger to resist me, then in seeming to be willing, they were at quiet, vntill I had beaten from 29. degrees, to the Southward of the Æquator to 26. At which time, finding that I was too far Northerly, to haue good winde, I called them to tacke about the Shippe to the Southward againe. They all plainely made answere, they would not, and that they had rather dye there, then be starued in seeking an Iland, which (they thought) that way we should neuer get.

His purpose for S. Helens.

What meanes I vsed to stand againe to the Southward, I leaue you to inquire of themselues: but from the latitude of 20. I beate backe againe into 28. with such contrary windes, as (I suppose) neuer man was troubled with the like, so long a time together. Being in this latitude, I found the winde fauourable, and then I stood againe to the Northward, willing the Master & his company to saile East North-east, and they in the night (I being a sleepe) steered North-east, and meere Northerly. Notwithstanding all this most vile vsage, we got within two leagues of the Iland, and had the winde fauoured vs so, as that we might haue stemmed from 18. degrees to 16. East North-east, we had found the Iland: but it was not Gods will so great a blessing should befall me. Being now in the latitude of the Iland, almost eighteene leagues to the Westward of it, the winde being continually at East South-east, the most contrary winde that could blow: I presently made a suruay of my victuall, and found, that according to that proportion (which we then liued at) there was not left in the Ship eight weekes victuall; which being so farre from reliefe, was (as I suppose) as small a portion, as euer men were at in the Seas.

Scarsity of victuall.

Being so vncertaine of reliefe, I demanded of them, whether they would venture (like good minded men) to beate to the Southward againe, to get this Iland, where we should not onely relieue our selues, but also to be in full assurance, either to sinke, or take a Carracke: and that by this meanes, we would haue a sufficient reuenge of the Portugals, for all their villanies done vnto vs: or that they would pinch, and bate halfe the allowance they had before, and so to goe for England. They all answered me, they would pinch to death, rather then goe to the Southward againe. I knowing their dispositions, and hauing liued among them in such continuall torment, and disquietnesse; and now to tell you of my greatest griefe, which was the sickneese of my deare kinsman Iohn Locke, who by this time was growne in great weakeneese, by reason whereof, hee desired rather quietnesse, and contentednesse in our course, then such continuall disquietnesse, which neuer ceased mee. And now by this, what with griefe for him, and the continuall trouble I indured among such hel-hounds, my Spirits were cleane spent; wishing my selfe vpon any desart place in the world, there to dye, rather then thus basely to returne home againe: which course, I had put in execution, had I found an Iland, which the Cardes make to be in 8. degrees to the Southward of the line. I sweare to you, I sought

it with all diligence, meaning (if I had found it) to haue there ended my vnfortunate life. But God suffered not such happinesse to light vpon me, for I could by no meanes finde it, so as I was forced to goe towards England: and hauing gotten eight degrees by North the Line, I lost my most deerest cousin.

Master Locke's death.

And now consider, whether a heart made of flesh, be able to indure so many misfortunes, all falling vpon me without intermission. I thanke my God, that in ending of me, he hath pleased to rid me of all further trouble and mis-haps. And now to returne to our priuate matters, I haue made my Will, wherein I haue giuen speciall charge, that all goods (whatsoeuer belong vnto me) be deliuered into your hands. For Gods sake, refuse not to doe this last request for mee, I owe little, that I know of, and therefore it will be the lesse trouble: but if there be any debt, that (of truth) is owing by mee, for Gods sake, see it paid. I haue left a space in the Will for another name, and (if you thinke it good) I pray take in my Cousin Henrie Sackeford; hee will ease you much in many businesses. There is a Bill of Aduenture to my Cousin Richard Locke (if it happen the other ship returne home with any thing, as it is not impossible) I pray remember him, for he hath nothing to shew for it. And likewise Master Heton the Customer of Hampton, which is 50. pounds, and one Eliot of Ratcliffe by London; which is 50. pounds more, the rest haue all Bills of aduenture, but the ruine in the victuall, onely two excepted, which I haue written vnto you. I haue giuen Sir George Cary the Desire, if euer shee returne, for I alwayes promised him her, if shee returned, and a little part of her getting, if any such thing happen, I pray you see it performed.

Cap. Candishes Will.

To vse complements of loue (now at my last breath) were friuolous, but know: that I left none in England, whom I loued halfe so well as your selfe: which you, in such sort deserued at my hands, as I can by no meanes requite. I haue left all (that little remayning) vnto you, not to be accomptable for any thing. That which you will (if you finde any ouerplus of remayned, your selfe specially being satisfied to your owne desire) giue vnto my sister Anne Candish. I haue written to no man liuing but your selfe, leauing all friends and kinsmen, onely reputing you as deerest. Commend me to both your brethren, being glad, that your brother Edward escaped so vnfortunate a voyage. I pray giue this Copie of my vnhappy proceedings in this Action, to none, but onely to Sir George Cary, and tell him, that if I had thought, the letter of a dead man would haue beene acceptable, I would haue written vnto him. I haue taken order with the Master of my ship, to see his peeces of Ordnance deliuered vnto him, for hee knoweth them. And if the Roe-bucke bee not returned, then, I haue appointed him to deliuer him two brasse peeces, out of this ship, which I pray see performed. I haue now no more to say but take this last farewell. That you haue lost the loungest friend, that was lost by any. Commend mee to your wife, no more, but as you loue God, doe not refuse to vndertake this last request of mine. I pray forget not Master Carey of Cockington, gratifie him with some thing: for hee vsed mee kindly at my departure. Beare with this scribling: for I protest, I am scant able to hold a pen in my hand.

Mistris Anne Candish.

CHAP. VII.

The admirable aduentures and strange fortunes of Master ANTONIE KNIVET, which went with Master THOMAS CANDISH in his second voyage to the South Sea. 1591.

§. I.

What befell in their voyage to the Straits, and after, till he was taken by the Portugals.

WE departed from Plimmouth with fiue saile of ships, determining to goe for the South Sea (the names of our Ships were these) the Gallion Leicester, which was our Admirall; the Roe-bucke, Vice-admirall; the Desire, the Daintie, and the Blacke Pinnasse. Sixe or seuen dayes after that wee were departed from the Coast of England, we met with nineteene saile of Flemmings in the night. Not regarding what they were, our Vice-admirall tooke one of them, and all the rest escaped. In the morning the Master of our Flemmish prize was brought before the Generall, and of him wee had newes of a fleet of ships, that was departed out of Lisbone for Brasile, the which newes we were very glad of. The Flemmish ship was laden with Salt, whereof the Generall tooke three Tunne for his prouision. This Flemming also shewed vs a licence that hee had to passe the Seas, vnder her Majesties hand and seale, the which as our Generall had seene he presently commanded, that euery man should returne all such things as they had taken from the Flemming, and hee himselfe payed for the Salt that he had taken, and so we departed from them with a faire winde, holding our course from the Coast of Portugall to the Ilands of Canaria. Thus in twentie dayes we had sight of the said Ilands, which when our Generall knew of troth to be the same, he commanded his two smallest ships, the Daintie and the Blacke Pinnesse, to be sent along the shoare, to see if they could espie any Caruels fishing, or any ships betweene the Ilands, and not discrying any thing, the next morning they returned backe vnto vs.

Scorbute. Vnder the Equinoctiall line, we lay seuen and twentie dayes driuing too and fro without puffe of winde: In which time most of our men fell sicke of the Scurvie by reason of the extreme heat of the Sunne, and the vapours of the night; notwithstanding our great danger of sickenesse did not appause the hardnesse of our hearts, being in as great extremitie as euer men were, it happened that two men of Iapon which the Generall had taken in his first voyage (bearing enuie to a poore Portugall that went with vs from Plimmouth, accused him to the Generall) hauing before conspired his death in this sort: The Generall being at dinner, these two Iaponers came to his Cabbin, telling their tale so loud that euery one might heare the report (which was thus) that the Portugall of the ship was a Traytor, and that he had often giuen them counsell to run away with him at Brasil: moreouer (quoth he) if it so had pleased God wee had taken the Towne of Santos, as our Generall had pretended, from thence that hee would guide them to the South Sea, where they should be well rewarded for their intelligence; vpon the which accusations, the poore Portugall was hanged. And as for his going from Santos by land through America, to the South Sea, had beene a thing impossible, for the Countrie is all Wildernesse, and full of Sauages.

Portugall hanged.

After we had beene so long becalmed vnder the Line, we had a faire North-west winde, and in twentie dayes saile we had sight of Land on the coast of Brasile, but no man knew certainly what part it should be. At length comming neere the shoare, we espied two small ships, the one of them we tooke, the other escaped; that wee tooke was laden with Blackamores, and some merchandise; they came from Fernambaque, and were determined to haue gone to the Riuer of Plate. By the Pilot of this ship we knew we were at Cape Frio, that is, Cold Cape. This Cape lyeth twelue leagues from the Riuer of Ienero, and thirtie leagues from Santos, which was the Towne we meant to take. In this ship we tooke a Friar that hid himselfe in a Chist of meale; the night following by the directions of our new taken Pilot, wee came to a place called Ilha Grande, twelue leagues from Santos, at this place we tooke fiue or sixe houses with Portugals and Sauages of the Countrie. Here wee had good store of Potatoes, and Plantons, diuers kindes of good rootes, with some Hogs and Hennes, which was very good and comfortable for the refreshing of our men. Here we had such disorder amongst our selues, that if the Portugals had beene of any courage, they might haue killed many of vs, for our men would fight for their victuals as if they had beene no Christians but Iewes, and they that got the best, would get them into some hole, or into the Wildernesse vnder some Tree, and there they would remaine as long as they had meat. For mine owne part (there was such sharking) I could in that place get neither meat nor mony, and pure hunger compelled me to goe into the Woods, to see if wee could kill any thing with our peeces, or if we could finde some Potatoes. And as wee went, wee encountred with seuen or eight of our companie that were together by the eares about a Hogge they had killed, and the strife was, who should haue the best share; we comming in at that time, when euery one vsed their fists, stole away a quarter, and went a good way into the Wildernesse, where we were merry for that night; the next day wee came backe againe with good store of Potato rootes; and going into the house where the Generals musicians were, wee found them dressing of eight yong Whelpes for their dinner; wee giuing them of our rootes they were contented that wee should dine with them.

Portentuous presages of ill end from so ill beginning.

In the afternoone we set fire on a new ship, and burned all the houses, leauing the Merchant and all his Moores ashoare, we departed from thence, and hauing a faire winde about sixe of the clocke we came to the Hand of San Sebastian, where wee anchored, being fiue leagues from Santos. As soone as the ships were in the Harbour, euery Master and Captaine came aboard of the Generall, to know how hee pretended to take the Towne of Santos, and they all resolued that our long Boat and our Shallop onely with one hundred men was enough for the taking of it. For the Portugall Pilot told vs, that it was of no strength. On Christmas-eue about ten a clocke in the night, when the Boats were to goe ashoare there were so many that would haue gone, that wee began to fight and cast one another ouer-board into the Sea; but as soone as our Generall heard the noise, he commanded euery man to come aboard the ship againe. I fearing the Generall, and being desirous to goe ashoare with the first (for I had seene before that they which came last got nothing) crept vnder the seate of our Shallop, where I was for the space of two houres, and the Boat being full of men, I could not get out, but there had beene smothered, if it had not beene beene for William Waldren that was our Boatsman, and steered the Boat, who hearing me crie vnder him, tore vp the boords, and saued my life. About three a clocke in the morning, wee met with a Canoa (which is a Boat that they make of a whole Tree) in which wee tooke foure Portugals and two Women; the one of them was going to be married that morning. After we had taken this Boat we went close to the shoare; and hauing tarried for our Boat an houre, we heard the Portugals ring a Bell, presently Iasper Iorge the Portugall Pilot told vs, that now was the time to land, for he knew by that Bell that they were in the middle of their Masse, and at that instant the Friar was holding vp the Bread of Sacrament before the people to worship it.

He had no sooner spoke, but we were all on shoare, and so marching to the Church, we tooke euery mans sword without resistance, and there we remayned till it was seuen of the clocke, for the comming of our long Boat, and the rest of our companie (for we were but twentie three in all) and we durst not take sack of the Towne with so few. By that meanes some of the Portugals that were in their houses escaped with their persons and mony. Here was good store of victuall and great store of Succats, Sugars, and Cassauie meale, of the which wee made very good bread. In the Church there were three hundred men beside women and children. Assoone as wee had taken the sack of the Towne, and placed all our men in order, word was sent to our Generall of all that had beene done. After the Generall had sent answere againe to the Towne, all the Portugals were set at libertie, and we fortified our selues in the Towne, keeping onely seuen or eight of the chiefest and principall prisoners, Master Cooke Captaine of the Vice-admirall, went Captaine of all the companie that went ashoare; he fauoured me very much, and commanded mee to take a Friar's Cell to lodge in, in the Colledge of Iesus, where hee himselfe lodged with many Captaines and young Gentlemen. It was my chance going vp and downe from Cell to Cell, that I looked vnder a bed standing in a darke hole, where I found a little chist fast nayled, and the seames thereof were white with wheat flower. I drew it forth, and finding it of great waight, broke it in pieces, wherein I found 1700. Rials of eight, each whereof containeth foure shillings English. This hole I tooke for my lodging, and no man knew of my good purchase; cloth, shirts, blankets, and beds, and such stuffe no man regarded.

The next day following, being S. Stephens day, the Portugals gaue vs a false alarum; the Generall came also with all the ships into the Road, and presently landed with two hundred men, and commanded all the outward part of the Towne to bee burned. Then hee gaue order for the building of a Pinnasse to row with twentie Oares, and commanded all the ships that were in the Harbour to be set on fire. At this Towne we tooke an English man, called Iohn King, which had beene there fifteene yeeres. Our Generall lay in the Colledge of Iesus all the time that we were at Santos. This Colledge had many back-wayes to the Sea-side, and it happened one night, that two Sauages being abused by the Portugals ran away, and knowing the passages of the Colledge, came in the night to the Generals bed-side, and brought with them Turkies and Hennes: The Generall being awaked by them cryed out for helpe. One of them that could speake Portugall, fell downe on his knees, and said, that hee came to craue his fauour, and not to offend him. The morning following the Generall had discourse with these two Sauages, and by them he knew of what strength the Portugals campe was, and how that at his going out of the Towne they were determined to giue battaile: likewise they told him of three great bags of mony, and a jarre, that was hid vnder the roote of a Fig tree, and guided vs where we had three hundred head of Cattel, which serued vs all the time we were there.

Iohn King English man.

The Generall by two sauages first scarred, and after instructed.

The Daintie being a small ship made a good voyage to Santos, for shee came in before any of our fleet, by the which meanes they laded her with Sugar, and good commodities of the Portugals ships that were in the Harbour; this ship went voluntarily with vs, and hauing made a good voyage, the Captaine told the Generall that he would returne for England, the Generall answered, that he was determined to send him into the Riuer of Plate, and then with all his heart hee should returne. We continued two moneths at Santos, which was the ouerthrow of our voyage. In the time that we were there many Canibals came vnto vs, desiring the General that he would destroy the Portugals, and keepe the Countrie to himselfe, protesting to bee all on his side; the Generall thanked them for their kindnesse, and told them that at that time he had a farther pretence. We found store of gold in this Towne, that the Indians had brought from a place, called by the Indians, Mutinga, and now the Portugals haue mynes there. Many of our companie counselled the Generall to winter at this Towne, but he would not by any meanes.

The Daintie would haue returned from Santos to England.

Mutinga mynes.

From our first setting forth from England, till we came to Santos, I had great loue to Christopher the Iapon, because I found his experience to bee good in many things. This Indian and I grew into such friendship one with another, that wee had nothing betwixt vs vnknowne together. I a long time hauing found him true, I told him of the money I had found vnder the Friers bed; with that hee told mee of some money that hee had got, and wee swore to part halfe from thenceforth whatsoeuer God should permit vs to obtaine: some foure dayes after that, when we were ready to depart, he told me that that time of the yeare was past, wherefore it was best to hide our money in the ground, and remaine in the Countrey. I beleeuing his perswasions, agreed to doe what he thought best; thus we determined both, that the same day we were to goe a ſhipboord, that then he ſhould take all the money in a Canoa, and hide it by a Riuer ſide; in the morning I deliuered all the money into his hands, and he ſwore that in leſſe then two houres he would returne, but I ſtaied aboue fiue houres, and might haue tarried all my life, for he was gone aboord the Ship, afterward by good meanes I got mine owne againe, and ſo our former friendſhip was parted. Our men marched by Land from Santos, to another

S. Vincent. Towne called San Vincent, and in the way our men burned fiue Engenios, or Sugar-mils, the diſorder of our men was ſuch at their imbarking, that if the Portugals had beene of any courage, they might eaſily haue cut our throates, the two Indians which came at night to the Generals chamber went with vs to the Straits.

We departed from Santos, with a faire winde for the Straites of Magellan, fourteene dayes we had faire weather, the fifteenth day all the Maſters and Captaines of the fleete comming aboord, the Admirall wonne a great ſumme of money. Two dayes after wee were becalmed, and the Pilotes taking their height, found it to be in the altitude with the Riuer of Plate. And we being farre from the ſhoare did beare roome for Land, determining to ſend the Daintie, the Blacke Pinnaſſe, and the into the aforeſaid Riuer of Plate, but it was not the will of God that we ſhould execute our pretence. For the ſame day wee thought to haue deſcried Land, the winde
At the riuer of Plate we had a great ſtorme. beganne to blow South-weſt, and the Seas were very darke, ſwelling in waues ſo high, that we could not perceiue any of our accompanied ſhips, although we were very neere one to another, the Seas brake ouer the Poope of our ſhippe, and waſhed our men aſtoniſht with feare into the Skippers, the Roe-bucke in this ſtorme ranne her againſt our Poope, and brake downe all our Gallerie: all things were caſt into the Sea that ſtood aboue Hatches, heere miſerable Fortune began to frowne on vs all, eſpecially on mee, for all that I had, both in clothes and money, were caſt into the Sea, all our ſhip with the Seas that brake ouer her ſides. Here our Generall ſhewed himſelfe to bee of a noble courage, for hee did nothing but runne vp and downe encouraging his men which were all amazed, thinking that to bee their laſt houre, this ſtorme continued three dayes, in which time wee loſt moſt of our ſayles blowne away from the yards.

In this ſtorme the Crow a ſmal Boat of 20 tun ſunke before our eyes, with twelue men & a boy. The Roe-bucke loſt her boat with two men, and wee loſt ours with three men.

It was the will of God, that after we had been three dayes in the ſtorme, the wind ceaſed, but the Seas continued ſo great, that wee were not able to beare any ſayle. We lying thus toſt with Seas, without ſight of any of our fleet, the company murmured, and wiſhed themſelues againe at Santos, and indeed we al thought that the reſt of our company were driuen back with the ſtorme to the Coaſt, thinking it beſt for vs to returne againe. The Generall hearing what ſpeeches paſſed in the ſhippe, came forth vpon the halfe decke, and commanded all the company to come before him, and after he had heard them ſpeake, he anſwered that he had giuen directions to all the Maſters and Captaines of the fleete, that what weather ſoeuer ſhould part them, that they ſhould vſe their indeuour to take Port Deſire, and that they ſhould tarry a fortnight, ſo if none of the company came, they ſhould leaue ſome marke on the ſhoare, and goe on their Voyage, with that euery man was ſatisfied, the Generall promiſing twentie pounds to whomſoeuer could firſt ſpie a ſayle, we made our courſe to Port Deſire, and in ten dayes we ſafely arriued at our deſired Port, where we found all our fleet but the Daintie, which was no little comfort to vs all, becauſe the time of our yeere was almoſt paſt, we ſtayed here but two dayes taking a few Penguins, from an Iland right before Port Deſire.

And at the Straits we took the Deſires long Boat for the Admirall. Murmuring.

Port Deſire.

When we came to the mouth of the Straits wee found the winde contrary, and were forced to lye beating before the Harbour of Port Famine, three dayes ere wee could double that Cape, for many times we did caſt anchor without the Cape in twentie fathomes water, but on a ſudden, the current would carrie away the ſhips with Cables and Anchors afloat in the night, in this current the Roe-bucke driuen with the current, fell croſſe ouer the haze, there wee had no other remedy, but were forced to cut our cables, and ſo loſe our Anchors. In the end with much adoe we doubled the Cape, and got into Port Famine, where wee lay a ſeuennight for want of winde and weather to goe forward. It the time that wee were at Port Famine, euery day our men went on ſhoare, to get Muſcles and Fruits of the Countrey to eate, and the barke of a tree that was like Sinamon. One day the Boate being aſhoare, there came to vs aboue a thouſand Canibals naked, with feathers in their hands, but they would not come ſo neere vs, as we could touch them. If we offered them any thing, they would reach to vs with a long Pole, and whatſoeuer we gaue them, they would returne vs feathers for it, wee made our ſignes to them for victuals, and they would ſhew vs by ſignes, that they had none, but what they could kill with their Darts. I haue told you how my chiſt, and all my clothes were caſt ouer-boord, now comming to this cold Climates, and wanting clothes my hope of life was little, for here men were well at morning, and by night frozen to death. It was my fortune to goe aſhoare to get ſome food, for the allowance of our ſhip was little, and comming aboord againe with my feete wette, and wanting ſhift of clothes, the next morning I was nummed, that I could not ſtirre my legs, and pulling off my ſtockings, my toes came with them, and all my feete were as blacke as ſoote, and I had no feeling of them. Then was I not able to ſtirre.

Thus I continued for the space of a fortnight, till wee came into a faire Bay, where there were many faire Ilands, and on the rockes of some of these Ilands, wee found Scouts made of the barkes of trees, and afterwards wee found many Indians, but none of them would come to vs. On the South-west side of the Mayne we found a Riuer, which wee thought had gone to the South Sea: Our long Boate was sent vp this Riuer, and found it to be very straite and deepe. On the sides thereof they found great Muscles, and in them good store of Pearles, and we named it the Riuer of Pearles; the Bay had the name of the Master of our Pinnasse, because he first found it and did discouer it, called it Tobias Bay. From this place wee went further into the Straites hauing the winde against vs, and with the cold there died euery day out of our ship eight or nine men. Here one Harris a Gold-smith lost his Nose: for going to blow it with his fingers, cast it into the fire. This Iohn Chambers, Cæsar Ricasen, and many that are now in England can testifie. The Generall hauing experience, that the wind would tarry at the least two moneths, his men died so fast, that hee thought best to returne for the Coast of Brasil, and there to separate our fleete to the Hauens, of Santos that lye on the Coast, Riuer of Ianuary, Spirito Santo; determining by this meanes, to furnish himselfe with Ropes, Sayles, and Victuals of such prices as hee did not doubt but to take, and likewise determining to take Santos againe.

Strait and deepe Riuer. Muscles with Pearles.

Harris his hard hap.

How we returned from the straits of Magellan.

The Generall came backe with this pretence for Brasil, came to Port Famine, where wee anchored two dayes, and there tooke a note of all his men, that were liuing, and finding some of them very sicke, commanded them to be set on shoare, I was so ill in the Straites that no man thought I would haue liued, and twice I was brought vpon the Hatches to bee cast into the Sea; but it was the will of God, that when they had said Prayers, as they accustomed when any man died, and that they laid hands on me to cast me ouer-boord, I spake, desiring them not to cast me ouer-boord, till I was dead. At this Port Famine comming backe, the Generall would haue set me on shoare, but Captaine Cocke entreated for me; so I remayned in the ship. I had very sorie clothes, the toes of my feet full of Lice, that (God is my record) they lay in clusters within my flesh, and of many more besides my selfe; I had no Cabbin, but lay vpon a chist. Now we come out of the Straits with all our fleet, but the Dainty that lost vs in the Riuer of Plate, in the storme that we had, and the Crow that was sunke. After that we came out of the Straits, wee came before Port Desire againe, and there our Boats went to Penguin Iland for Penguins; at this place the Generall tooke a Chirurgion who cured with words; This man comming aboord our ship, said some words ouer my feet, and I had feeling in my legges and feete which I had lost before, for the space of a fortnight, many times before this man came; I had hot Irons laid to my feet, but I had no feeling were they neuer so hot.

Generall Candish comm th againe to Port Famine, where hee setteth eight men on shoare and would haue set mee on shoare with them, had it not beene for Captain Cocke.

How I got feeling againe of my limmes after we came out of the straits.

That day that we departed from Port Desire, the Generall sent for all the Masters of the ships, and commanded them that till midnight they should keepe there course with him, and that when he should shew them two lights, then they should cast about and beare in with the shoare, but Dauis which was Captaine of the Desire, and Tobie Master of the Pinnasse did deceiue vs, and went for the Straits, as I was enformed afterwards by some of there men that were taken at Brasil, after that I was taken. Three or foure dayes after this wee had a great storme, in the which the Roe-bucke lost her mayne Mast, and we lost her. Now were wee all alone in a great ship, and we knew not what wee were best to doe, but in the end wee determined to come for Santos, hoping there to find the rest of our company. In this storme I sate on a chist, and was not able to stirre, for still as the ship seeled on one side, the chist went from starboord to larboord, and it was the will of God, that it fell betweene a piece of Ordnance, and the Carpenters Cabbin on the one side, and on the other side betweene another Peece, and the Chirurgions Cabbin. Thus all the night I lay very cold, and it was the will of God that the chist neuer turned ouer, for if it had, I could not haue escaped death, the next day the storme ceased, and most of our young Saylers, which we call men of top a yard, being wearied with their nights worke that was past, were vnder Hatches asleepe, and would not come vp to doe some businesse that was to bee done. With that the Generall came downe, with the end of a Rope as bigge as mine arme, and one of the Saylers hid himselfe behind me; the Generall spying him, strooke at him, and hit me on the side of the head, and halfe an houre after, finding me in the same case that the Generall had left mee in, they tooke me, and would haue cast mee out of one of the ports of the ship, but it was the will of God that I spake and was heard. Here one of the Indians, that came to the Generall in the night at Santos, fell ouer-boord by a mischance and was drowned.

How the Desire and the Black Pinnasse goeth away from vs.

Of a great storme we had comming backe.

How the Generall tooke mee dead against his will.

Wee with much adoe in the end got to the Harbour of Santos, where wee found none of our company, we anchored right before a Sugar-mill, that stood hard by the Sea side, the Generall asked if there were any that would goe ashoare, then Captaine Stafford, Captaine Southwell, and Captaine Barker offered themselues to goe on shoare, and twentie more with them, the Boate that they went in was made of Sugar chists and barrell boords, they landed and tooke the Sugar-mill, in the which they tooke a great Barke, and sent it laden with victuals, aboord our shippe, which was more welcome vnto vs then if it had beene gold. Here wee continued all that day, and the next day they sent the great Boate againe laden with Sugars and Guinee Wheate, then the Generall sent them word that they should come away, but they sent him word againe, that they they had more prouision on shoare, and before all was aboord they would not come. The third day, that our men were on shoare, the Portugall set on them. They had the little Boate ashoare, but the wind being from shoare, the great Boat went not from the ship side that day, the next day that our men were slaine, our long Boate went ashoare, and brought vs newes how the little Boat was broke and how all our men were gone. One of the Indians that I haue told you of landed here with our men, and hauing experience of the Countrey, when our men were in the hottest of their fight ranne away, hauing one Arrow shot thorow his necke, and another in his mouth and out at his poale, this Indian swamme aboord vnto vs vpon a logge, and told vs that all our men were slaine.

S. Sebastian.

The Generall thought good to goe from hence to the Iland of San Sebastian, and there if he did not meete with some of the ships, that then he would returne for England, the same day that we were to depart from Santos, the Roe-bucke past by the mouth of the Riuer of Bertia: where we were, and shot a Peece, and we answered with another, then the Roe-bucke came into vs with her Masts broken. After the Roe-bucke came to vs, we went neerer the Towne, determining to haue beaten downe the Towne with our Ordnance, but wanting water, the Galleon Leicester toucht ground, and we had much adoe to get her cleere againe. Then wee landed eightie of our men, at a small Riuer neere the Towne, where we had great store of Mandioca Roots, Potatoes, Plantons, and Pine Apples. The Portugals seeing our men going into the Riuer, sent six Canoas to meete them, we seeing them, made a shot at them with the chaine of our Pumpe, with that they returned, and our Boats came safely aboord with good store of the aforenamed Roots. In our ship there was a Portugall whom we tooke in the ship taken at Cape Frio, this Portugall went with vs to the Straits of Magellanus, and seeing of our ouerthrow, told vs of a Towne called Spirito Sancto, this Portugall laid that we might goe before the Towne with our ships, and that without danger, we might take many Sugar-mils, and good store of cattle.

The Roe-bucke come to vs at Santos.

Spirito Santo.

The words of this Portugall made vs breake off our pretence that wee had for San Sebastian, and we went to Spirito Sancto, in eight dayes we got before the mouth of the Harbour; at length we came to an Anchor in the Roade, and presently we sent our Boats to sound the Channell, and we found not halfe the depth that the Portugall laid we should finde, the Generall thinking that the Portugall would haue betrayed vs, without any triall caused him to bee hanged, the which was done in a trise. Here all the Gentlemen that were liuing, desired that they might go ashoare to take the Towne. The General was very vnwilling, & told them of diuers inconueniences, but all would not suffice them, they were so importunate, that the Generall chose out one hundred and twentie men, of the best that were in both the ships, and sent Captaine Morgan a singular good Land-souldier, and Lieutenant Royden, for chiefe Commanders in this action. They landed before a small Fort with one of the Boats, and draue the Portugals out of it, the other Boate went higher, when they had a very hot skirmish, and their liues were quickly shortned, for they landed on a Rocke, that stood before the Fort, as they leaped out of the Boate, they slid all armed into the Sea, and so most of them were drowned. To be short wee lost eightie men, at this place, and of the fortie that returned, there came not one without an Arrow or two in his body, and some had fiue or sixe.

80. men slaine: 40. wounded.

When we saw we could doe no good at this place, wee determined to come againe for the Iland of San Sebastian, and there we meant to burne one of our ships, and from thence we determined to goe for the Straits againe, the company that was in the Roe-bucke, hearing of it, in the night runne away from vs, and we were left alone againe, well we came to San Sebastian Iland, all this while I lay vnder Hatches lame, sicke, and almost starued: I was not able to stirre, I was so weake. After we came to this Iland, the first thing that was done, the sicke men were set on shoare to shift for themselues, twentie of vs were set on shoare, all were able to go vp and downe although very weakly, but (Alas!) my toes were raw, my body was blacke, I could not speake nor stirre. In this case I was layed by the shoare side, and thus I remayned from fiue of the clocke in the morning, till it was betweene eleuen and twelue of the clocke, that the Sunne came to his highest, and the extreme heate of the Sunne pierced through my bodie, whereby I came to my selfe, as a man awaked from sleepe, and I saw them that were set on shore with me, lye dead and a dying round about me: these men had eaten a kind of Pease, that did grow by the Sea side which did poyson them. When I saw all these men dead, I prayed God that had eld them out of their miserable estate, and cursed my hard fortune, that Death in spite did refuse to end my tormented and most miserable life. I looked towardes the shoare, and saw nothing but these Pease, and if I did eate them, I was sure of death, if I did not eate them, I saw no remedie but to starue.

Venemous Pease.

Seeing in this manner, I looked towards the ship, to see if the Boate came ashoare, but (alas) all my hopes were with speed to end my life, but that it was the will of God, I saw things stirre by the Sea side, and it was a great ebbe: then I went creeping on my hands and my feete like a childe, and when I had gotten to the Sea side, I saw many Crabs lye in the holes of the mudde; I pulled off one of my stockins, and filled it with Crabs, and as well as I could, I carried them to a hollow figge tree, where I found a great fire made, so hauing them on the coles, I did eat them; and and so I lay downe to sleepe till the next day; and then I watched for the ebbe to get some more meate. Thus I liued eight or nine dayes without sight of any man, the stinke of some of the dead men that the Sea came not to, was so noysome that I was faine to remoove from that place, and as I went along the shoare to seeke some place to abide in, I passed by a faire Riuer that went into the Sea; where I thought it good to make my abode because of the fresh water; I had not beene there scarce the space of halfe a quarter of an houre, but I saw a great thing come out of the water, with great scales on the backe, with great vgly clawes and a long tayle, this beast came towards me, and I had not the power to shun it, but as it came towards me, I went and met it, when I came neere it, I stood still amazed to see so monstrous a thing before me. Hereupon this beast stood still and opened his mouth, and thrust out a long tongue like a Harping-Iron. I commended my selfe to God, and thought there to haue bin torne in pieces; but this beast turned againe, and went into the Riuer, and I followed to the Riuers side.

Anthony Kniuet terrified with a terrible beast that came out of the water.

The next day I went farther into the Iland, fearing to tarrie in this place, and I found a great Whale lying on the shoare like a ship with the keele vpwards, all couered with a kinde of short mosse with the long lying there. At this place I made a little house, and fed on the Whale for the space of a fortnight. In this time the Generall set forty men more ashoare, at the place where I was set first on land, likewise the Generall trimmed his Boate at this place, and had a Net continually a fishing, of which Iohn Chambers his Cooke had charge, who is this day liuing in London. After that these men came ashoare, I left the place where I was with the Whale, and came to our men and liued with them, beeing at this time reasonable well, and able to goe very well, for the vse of going into the Sea did heale my toes. After these men had beene on shoare seuen or eight dayes, we had taken wood and water for the ship, the Portugals of the Riuer of Ianuary, landed on the North point of the Iland hard by the Whale, they took two of our men and one escaped, who came to vs in the night, and told vs that the Portugals and the Sauages were landed. That day wee had taken a great Tortois ashaore, and wee did bid the Sayler to bee of good cheere, for if it were true, it was the better for vs, for wee were sure, that the Generall would not take vs againe into the ship, with that we all commended our selues to God, and dranke to our friends in faire water, and so we determined to march along the shoare with a white shirt instead of a flagge of truce, but the Sea was so high that we could not, then we determined to watch quarterly, till such time as we could espie them, I had the first watch, and watched till I was wearie, so called one of my fellowes, to watch, and he answered angerly, Tut, tis a lye: with that I lay downe by the fire as well as the rest. Before I was asleepe, the Portugals were at our doore, then I started vp, and one of them tooke me by the legge, presently wee were all led to the shoare side, there all that were taken with me, were knocked on the heads with fire-brands, the Indian that had hold of me, strooke twice or thrice at me with a short Bill, but I striuing, cryed out in Portugall, That if they would saue mee I would tell them newes, with that a Portugall passed by, and I caught hold of him, so well as I could I told him a Tale which saued my life at that time, this Portugall gaue me againe to a Sauage, & I cryed to him that I would go whersoeuer he went, then he bid me not fear, for that Sauage was his slaue, and that he would carrie me to the Captayn, so I was content perforce to goe I knew not whether, this Canibal carried me along the ashore, and when wee came where any Rockes reached into the Sea; hee would take mee on his backe, and swimme with mee round about the Rockes, till wee were free from the Rockes, thus we went almost all night, til at length we came by a great Cliffe that stood by the shore. Then the Sauage whistled, and another Sauage answered him from the Cliffe, whereupon fiue or six Portugals came forth, and amongst them came the Captaine with a piece of bread and Marmallet in his hand, and assoone as he saw me, he asked me what newes, I answered that I was very hungry, and desired him that hee would giue mee some meate, and then I would tell him all the newes that I could, with that all the Portugals brake out in a laughter, and gaue me bread and fish to eate, after I had eaten that which they had giuen me, I told them the truth of all that they asked me, heere they killed eight and twentie of our men, and saued only my selfe, and Henrie Barrawell, who was saued by my meanes.

§. II.

ANTHONY KNIVET his comming to the Riof Ianero, and vsage amongst the Portugals, and Indians: his diuers trauels thorow diuers Regions of those parts.

THe next day our ship weighed Anchor, and whether shee went I knew not, wee were carried by the Portugals to the Riuer of Ianero, I went with a Mestizo, which is halfe a Portugall, and halfe a Sauage that saued my life in the night when I was taken. When we came to the Citie of San Sebastian in the Riuer of Ianero, the Portugals in the Canoas, made such a noyse, with Pipes and Drummes, that all the people of the Citie came to shoare to see vs, with that the Canoas going round, as if they were in fight, two Portugals tooke mee, and cast me towards the shoare, saying, here is our prize; the tyde being strong carried mee to the mayne, where I had beene drowned had it not beene for a woman, who seeing the tyde carry me away, sent two or three slaues, and they saued mee. When I came ashoare, all the Portugals were at the Church of our Lady, and I would haue gone into the Church, but the Portugals would not let me, saying, that I was not a Christian. Then I was brought before the Gouernour, and he gaue me to the man that had saued mee, and I was very well contented, for hee vsed mee very kindly as I came with him from the Iland of San Sebastian. For the space of three moneths that I was with this man, I kept a house, and went to the Sea-side with his Hogs, and there I euery day brought him home a basket of great Crabs that lie in the holes of the mud, as deepe as youcan thrust in your arme. This w s a good life, my Master called me sonne, and I dined and supped with him: also I had a hanging Net to lie in, and lay in the same roome which hee lay in.

It happened one day being by the Sea-side washing of little Dogs, there came a Canoa full of Portugals, and they tooke me to the Towne with them, but as soone as I landed I remembred my Masters house and ran to it. As I went I met with Henrie Barway: the next day the Gouernour sent for mee and examined me what I was, I told him that I was a poore ship boy; with that Henrie Barway reproued me, asking what I meant to say so to the Gouernour; I replyed, that I was no other but what I had told him, then the Gouernour commanded mee to bee carried to the Sugar mill, where I was three moneths, till all the clothes that I had were torne in peeces, with working in a Barke going day and night vp and downe for Sugar canes and wood for the Mill; the miserable life that I was in made me careless what I did. I had neither meat nor clothes, but blowes as many as Gally slaues. Then I determined to run away into the Wildernesse, for I was ashamed to be seene naked of the Portugals. I made me a Cottage in a great Caue in the Wildernesse, where I was seuen moneths. In the day I fished for to liue, and in the night I came to some Indians houses, and for fish they gaue me Cassauie meale, and many kindes of Roots, that serued me for bread. In the end the Gouernour caused me to be sought out, and gaue mee a suite of blue clothes, and commanded me to worke in a Garden, where I carried earth, and digged the ground to plant Cabidges and Turneps.

Henrie Barway.

He is sent to a Sugar-mill.

He fleeth.

After that I was commanded againe to take charge of the Sugar boat, where I was worse vsed then euer I was before, for the Factor was a man that hated English men, and would vse me more like a Dogge then a Man. When I had continued foure moneths in the Barke, it happened that one of the Gouernours sonnes, called Martin de Saa, came from Spiritu Santo. This man pitying my poore and miserable life, desired his father that he would giue mee vnto him, which his father granted, and I was very well vsed of my new Master, two yeares after I had serued him. It happened that hee and his Mother in law fell out, whereupon the Gouernour his father sent him to a Towne, called Wyanasses, which were in peace with the Portugals, and for Kniues and Hatchets, they sell their Wiues and Children. This iourney I went with him, and we came to a Towne called Iawarapipo (that is to say), Is this the Dogge? He seeing me forward to doe him seruice, sent me from this Towne with eight of his slaues laden with Hatchets and Knines, to another kinde of Canibals, called Paries, which had beene likewise friends with the Portugals, but it was long before any Portugall had beene there, I came to the Townes of Paries, where I was saluted in this sort.

His new Master.

Wyanasses.

Iawarapipo.

Paries.

As soone as I came into a great house, which I thought was their Kings, which they call Morouichaua; presently, they had hanged vp a faire Net betweene two postes, in the which I was commanded to sit downe, and as soone as I was set, there came at the least twentie women, and some laying their heads on my shoulders, and others on my knees, they began to crie out making such a pitious noise, that I was amazed: yet I determined to sit still till they had done. As soone as the women were gone, an old man came in, all painted with red and blacke, and hee had three great holes in his face, one in the vnder lip, and one on either side of his mouth, and in euery hole stood a faire greene stone. This Canibal came through the house where I was, with a woodden sword in his hand, and as hee came hee spake very loud, and looked as though hee had beene mad, ~~striking his hand on his breast, and on his thighes, still crying out~~, he walked vp and downe. After this Sauage had ended his speech, he stroke me on the head, and bad mee welcome; and commanded such things as were in his house to be set before me to eate. After I had beene there two or three houres, neuer went through all the Towne of my being there, and from this Towne to others that were hard by.

Strange entertainment of strangers.

Whilest I continued in this Towne a Sauage called Wannombuck, who bare a great grudge to the Portugals, came where I was, with two women, and when hee came into the house where I was, he laid his hands on their necks, and so came dancing before mee, thus after hee had danced some quarter of an houre, he spake to me, saying, Doest thou see these women, by my valour I got their loues, and now their desire I am sworne to fulfill, which is to kill thee, as I haue done many more. I answered him that I came not as an enemie against him, or any of his, but as a friend that brought him many things that I was assured hee wanted, and that if nothing would satisfie him but my life, life, I assured him, that hee and all his Countrie would pay for it. To this hee made no answere, but went to separate my things that lay by mee to his Concubines, withall I started out of my bed, and tooke my sword in my hand, and thrust the Caniball from my things, that I had almost ouerturned him, and he durst not touch them nor me any more, but stood raying, and threatning to kill mee, and with the noise that hee made, the old man came into the house, and seeing mee stand with my sword in my hand, asked mee what was the matter; and I told him all that had passed betwixt mee and the foresaid Caniball. After hee had heard mee, hee turned to the Caniball that had offered me abuse, and asked him what reason he had to doe him so great a discredit, and to meddle with any friend of his in his Towne, and angerly commanded him to auoid his Town, if not he would make him repent that euer he came thither; with that, for feare of afterclaps, he went away with his Concubines: the next morning newes came to the Towne, that Wanambuth was comming with three hundred Canibals, and that perforce he would haue me to his Towne, and that there I should be killed according to the order of the Countrie; and how hee left order with his wiues to prepare wine through all the Townes in readinesse.

When the old man heard of this, hee presently commanded all his people to take their weapons, and desired them to goe with him into the field to meet them that were comming to wrong him; whereat they all gaue a great hoope, saying, that they would all die rather then they would bee disgraced. The old man embraced mee many times, and desired mee that I would tarry in his house. I thanked him for his loue, and told him that in any wise I would not tarry behinde him; so I went with him to meet the Caniball in the field; we being a great many more then they, they sent three or foure vnto vs as messengers, that they came to be merry, and to buy and sell such things as they had, then the old man gaue leaue for them all to come into his Town, except the Caniball that had mis-vsed him the day before; that night I gaue all my merchandise to the old man, and desired him for it, that hee would cause mee to bee conducted out of his Countrie; the next day following the old man gaue me seuentie slaues, and caused three hundred Bow men to goe with me till I was past the Riuer of Paraeyua; from whence they returned to their Towne, and in forrie-dayes iourny with ease I came againe to Ilha Grande, where I found my Master, Martin de Saa, who was very glad of my returne, and for recompence of my paines, he promised me one of them to bee my slaue, but when hee came to the Riuer of Ianero, hee sold them, and gaue me nothing.

Hospitall fidelitie in Sauages.

Riuer Paraeyua.

After wee had beene at home two moneths, hee would haue sent mee againe into the sauage countrie for more slaues, but I knew that thereby I should get nothing and refused to goe. Whereupon hee returned me againe to his father, thinking I would rather choose to goe then serue his father in the Sugar boat. But I was contented to goe againe to his father, hoping to be better vsed then I was before: then his father commanded me to goe a fishing in a small boat, for to make oile for the Sugar mill. One night being vpon a Rocke fishing for Dog-fish, which the Portugals call Tubaraones; I tooke my line, laid it vnder me, and fell asleepe: about mid-night with the beginning of the floud a Dog-fish tooke my hooke, and the line being vnder mee, I awaked, tooke the line in my hand, and running about the Rocke (I know not how) the line tangled about my legge, and the fish drew me into the Sea; and assoone as I fell into the water the Sharke swam at me as if he would haue deuoured me, but assoone as I saw him come neere mee, I caught hold on the hooke that was in his mouth, and striking downwarke with my hand the Sharke swam away againe. I now remembred a knife, that I had about my necke tyed with a string, as the Canibals vse, and therewith cut the cord, or else there had I ended all my miseries; all my body was torne with the Crags of the Rocke, so that for the space of a fortnight I was not able to stirre.

He returneth to his old Master.

Endangered by a Sharke.

After I was healed the Gouernour commanded mee againe to goe a fishing: wee had newes in the Riuer of Ianero that Master Hawkins was at Cape Frio, which made me the more desirous to be on the Coast in hope to get to him. It happened that one day being a fishing by an Iland that lay two leagues from the shoare, Master Hawkins passed by the Sea as farre as well hee could bee descryed, but it was a very faire day: assoone as I saw the ships I set the Indians that were with me on shoare on the Iland, commanding them to seeke prouision for vs, for that night I did assure my selfe that Master Hawkins would refresh his men at the Iland of San Sebastian, and seeing the winde faire, and all the Indians ashoare, I hoysted saile, and tooke my course towards the Iland of San Sebastian, but fortune was so crosse to me, that being in sight of the ships, a contrarie winde blue with such a storme, that perforce I was driuen vpon an Iland so full of Rocks, that my Boat was broken all in peeces, and my selfe all cut and bruised with the Rocks. Getting to the shoare vpon this Iland I remayned three dayes without meat, or meanes to get away from the Iland, the Indians that landed vpon the Iland where we were a fishing, got to the Towne and told the Gouernour how I had beguiled them. Presently vpon that newes the Gouernour sent two Canoas to descrie the ships, these Canoas came on shoare at the Iland where I was, and there they found me almost starued, and all my face hurt beaten vpon the Rocks.

Master Hawkins at Cape Frio.

Another double disaster of sense and losse.

From this place they went to the Iland of San Sebastian, and Master Hawkins was gone; then they returned againe to the Riuer of Ianero, and I was brought bound with my hands behinde me,

His imprisonment.

Condemnation to be hanged.

Iesuites saue him!

all the Towne rayled at me, calling me Run-away, then I was brought before the Gouernour, and he looking very angerly vpon me sent me to prison, where I was vsed like a Dogge for the space of a fortnight: for I lay on the ground, and had no meat giuen me, but Cassaui meale and water. After I had endured this miserie, I was condemned to be hanged for a Run-away and a Lutheran, and as I was going by the Colledge of Iesus, all the Friars of the Colledge came forth with a great Crucifix, and falling on their knees before the Gouernour they craued pardon for me, and I was carried againe to prison, where I remayned three dayes longer, then I was brought forth on a Market day, with my hands and feet bound, and there in publike beaten with cordes, that I had not a whole spot of skin on all my body. After they had punished mee, as you haue heard, I was commanded to be put againe in prison, where I was for the space of a fortnight, with no meate but Cassaui meale and water, my lodging was the earth, my body was all bruised and full of wormes with lying on the ground.

Dissolute resolution.

After this the Gouernour commanded great hoopes of Iron to bee clinched to my legge, of thirtie pound weight, the which I carried nine moneths, continually working in the Sugar mill like a bond-slaue. The Factor vsed me more like a Dogge then a Man, for his hatred was so much to me, and to all strangers, that I neuer came by him but I was sure of blowes. Now was my life so intolerable, that I grew desperate and careless what I did to end my life. Many times I would tell the Gouernour how like a Tyrant the Factor vsed me, but for all that he saw my body black, and bruised with blowes, he had no compassion on me. I had no meanes nor hope of any release of my miserable life, but to kill the Factor. Now occasion came fitly to execute my pretence, and it happened thus; I comming in the night with a Barke laden with Sugar canes, after the Barke was vnladen, the night being cold, I lay vpon the boards before the Furnaces, and had not rested halfe an houre, when the Factor came into the Sugar house, so finding me asleepe (as you haue heard) hee strooke mee with a withe on the naked ribs, with such force, that I thought hee had broken all the bones of my body. I started vp, and seeing him before mee readie to second his malice with another blowe, I embraced him in mine armes, and with a great knife that I had, I hurt him in the side, the backe, and the arme; hee cryed out I had slaine him.

He fleeth againe.

I thinking no lesse ran away into the chiefest of the wood, and the fauourable night being darke, no man knew which way to follow mee. When day came I went wandring vp and downe, praying to God to send some Leopard, or Lion, to deuoure mee, rather then to bee taken againe by the Portugals, for I knew if the Gouernour once got mee againe, I should endure the most extreame torture that euer was inuented for man. Wandring in the Wildernesse, I did heare a great noise of people, then I was amazed, knowing not what to doe to saue my life, sometimes I run like a mad man, then would I sit downe and listen if I could heare any noise, and which way soeuer I went I heard still the noise of people neerer me. Thus seeing my selfe at the last cast, I espyed a great Tree, in which grew a thing of thick long leaues, called by the Indians, Caruala; as bigge as the nest of an Eagle, I got me into that, hauing not beene there a quarter of an houre, many Indians came to seeke mee, and shot many times with their arrowes at the thing where I was, when they saw that I did not stirre, they went their waies, and I remayned all that day in the Tree, the night following, and the next day and night, I came downe very weake, for in two dayes I had eaten nothing, then the night being darke, I came to the Sea side, so going along by the shoare side, I espyed a Canoa drawne to shoare, and hard by it on the ground lay three Sauages asleepe, by them lay bowes, arrowes, and rootes, with hookes to fish with, of those things I tooke what I thought best, and went along the Sea side till I came to a Point of the Iland, where I found a Sauage asleepe vpon the sands, when I had viewed him well I knew him to be one of my Masters slaues, who killed one of his fellowes, wherefore hee durst not goe home, I tooke his bow and arrowes lying by him and awaked him, when he saw me he began to lament, and desired that I would not carry him home to my Master, I answered him that my cause was ten times worse then his, and desired him to tell mee if he knew any place whither wee might goe to saue both our liues, and with that told him what had befallen me.

Danger of taking in a Caruala.

Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris.

His wandrings.

This Sauage was a great man in his Countrie, his name was Quoraspiuca, that is, the yellow Sunne. Neuer man found truer friendship of any then I did of him. This Canibal and I after many discourses determined to swim from the Iland to the mayne. When we had escaped the danger of passing the arme of the Sea, at least two miles in breadth, we both landed very feeble, with the long being of our naked carkasses in the water. Now wee are at the foot of the Mountaine called Paranapiacaba, a desart, where many haue beene deuoured with Leopards, Lions, Crocodiles, and Surococous, and diuers other Serpents. Notwithstanding all these fearfull inconueniences, we chose rather to fall into the pawes of a Lion, and the clawes of the Serpent, then into the bloudie hands of the Portugall. Seuen and thirtie dayes we two trauelled through this desart, euery day we were in danger of our liues, for we met many Leopards, Lions, and huge Serpents, but God deliuered vs from them. In this iourney we eate wilde Honie and Palmetos, and a kinde of Snakes, called by the Canibals, Boacyna. After we had passed this desart, we came into a chama champaine Countrie, where we had great store of Pine nuts. Wandring vp and downe in this Countrie, one morning we espyed smoke in a wood not farre from vs. Then wee trauelled that wayes, and comming neere, I knew where we were, and presently I told Quariſiſacupa, that the Towne was called Pianita, and that this was the place where Iawaripipo had vsed mee so well, when Wanambuth would haue killed me. Now come we to the Towne, where we are very kindly receiued, especially of mine old friend Iawaripipo. Pianita.

I suppose by Leopards he meaneth that spotted beast, which others call a Tigre.

Hee commeth to his old host.

After we had rested a little while among these Canibals, I desired them that they would ioyne themselues together; for in publike I would rehearse somwhat vnto them of my comming into their Countrie. Now when they were all together, I began to rehearse vnto them, how cruelly the Portugals did vse their Nation, in making them bond-slaues, marking them like Dogs, whipping and tormenting them, as if they were not of flesh and bloud. I rehearsed vnto them the course of mine owne life, and desired them to remember how my Countrimen had vsed them in former times, encouraging them to bee valiant, and to pull vp their spirits, and perswading to defend themselues against such Tyrants, who vnder the colour of friendship vsed them most villainously. Then I told them that I had killed a Portugall, and that I was determined to end my life with them, if they would promise to defend mee and themselues from the Portugals. With that many of them embraced me, all together giuing a great hoope, saying, as long as their liues lasted, and their Bowes brake not, that they would defend themselues and me. Here I continued nine moneths, till it happened that Martin de Saa came againe to buy more slaues. He came to a Towne hard by the Iland of San Sebastian, called Iaquerequere, where vsing the Canibals kindly, and giuing them Knues and Hatchets and Beades, hee won their hearts so much vnto him that they gaue him their Sonnes and Daughters to bee his slaues; and moreouer told him, that I and Quariſiſacupa was at a Towne hard by. Then Martin de Saa sent foure Portugals and twentie Sauages for me to the Towne. When the Sauages of Iaquerequere came to Pianita, they gaue such report in all the Towne of the liberalitie of Martin de Saa, that without any deliberation they bound my hands, and brought me backe againe to my Masters sonne. Senate of Sauages. Iaquerequere. Sauage faith. Antonie Kniuet is bound by the Canibals and brought to his Master.

When the Canibals brought mee before Martin de Saa, all those that protested before most friendship vnto mee, are now become my greatest and most mortall enemies, and with hooping and hollowing deride mee, striking mee on the head, and declaring to the Portugals, how I vsed great perswasions to haue them become their enemies. Martin de Saa made no answere to all their exclamations, but commanded certaine Portugals and Indians to see that I runne not away. Being brought the next morning before him, hee told mee that hee did pittie my hard fortune to come to so bad an end as I was like to come to, making mee beleeue that the Factor was dead, and therefore hee thought that the Law would condemne mee. When hee had spoken, I desired him to bee fauourable vnto mee, and that hee would consider what seruice I had done him and his father, and to thinke how vnreasonably the Factor had vsed mee a long time. Then hee promised mee, that wherein hee might hee would stand my friend; then I entreated him to giue mee leaue in that desart to end my life amongst the Canibals, where hee might well bee assured I could neuer hurt him nor any of his Nation: hee would not condescend thereunto, but promised hee would saue my life, if I would but goe to a place in that Countrie, called Paraeyua Wereob, and there to trafficke with the Canibals for Women, Boyes, and Girles. Paraeyua Wereob.

Although the danger of going into the Countrie of wild Man-eaters where I neuer had beene, was no lesse then the value of my life, yet considering with my selfe that my offence deserued death among the Portugals, I chose once againe rather to stand to the Heathen mercy of sauage Man-eaters, then at the bloudie cruelty of Christian Portugals. And seeing my selfe in such extremitie, I shewed my selfe very willing and diligent to doe the Captaine seruice; but God knowes, my hope was neuer to haue seene him againe. Now goe I alongst in the Wildernesse, with twelue Sauages, I know not whither, but as they guide mee ouer huge Mountaines, and many great Riuers, passing many dangers of our liues by land of Lions, Leopards, diuers great Snakes: in the Riuers, Crocodiles, Iararaquas, and Capiuaras, with many other Serpents that vse the water. After wee had trauelled fiue and twentie dayes in the Wildernesse, wee came to a faire Riuer as broad as the Thames, and the Canibals that went with mee said that the Towne stood by that Riuer side, where wee were to trafficke, but certaintie they knew not where about. Then wee made vs a Boat of the barke of a Cedar Tree, going downe the streame in it. Wee had not beene there long a going with the swiftnesse of the Current, before wee espyed a Boate of the same fashion that ours was, with two Canibals in it, who as soone as they had espyed vs would haue runne away, but wee beeing better manned then they ouertooke them before they got to the shoare. With mee there went one of their owne Nation, by name Morosoeij, who had beene taken by the Wayanasses, and they sold him to the Portugals. This Morosoeij spake the language of the Tamayas, which I vnderstood very well. The two Canibals that wee tooke in the Boate, were amazed to see men apparelled, insomuch that they knew not their owne Countriman that was with mee, when they saw him apparelled like a Portugall; if they were amazed at vs, I was no lesse at them, for in all my trauell I neuer saw the like fashion of Canibals. For when I saw them first I thought His next aduenture thorow the desarts. A faire Riuer. Two Sauages. Apparell strange. Their strange habite.

they had beene borne with feathers on their heads and bodies, like fowles of the aire, they had anointed their bodies with gumme of the oiletusees of Balsome, and couered themselues so artificially with feathers of diuers colours, in such order, that you could not haue seene a spot of their skins but their legs: after wee had beholden them well and they vs, I commanded Morosoeij, their Countriman to disclose himselfe to his Countrimen, and to tell them the cause of our comming, desiring them to goe to their Towne, and tell of our being there, lest our sudden comming should raise an vprore among them, the which they were very willing to doe; so giuing either of them a knife, and a few beades, they departed very ioyfully.

His entertainment.

Two houres after that they were departed from vs, there came at the least fiue hundred of them singing and rejoycing, shewing themselues very glad of our comming to traffick with them, entreating vs to goe to their Towne, the which we did, where wee were receiued with dancing and singing of great and small, and in euery house I was receiued with great ceremonies, and long speeches of the chiefest that were in the Towne. The next day I began to traffick with them for slaues, and I bought ninetie; all which I brought to Martin de Saa, who remayned at Ilha Grande till I returned againe. Assoone as I came vnto him, I deliuered all vnto him, desiring him to stand my friend, and to giue mee leaue to tarrie among the Canibals, till such time as hee had spoken with his father in my behalfe. Laughing, hee answered that I neede to feare to goe home, for the man was recouered, and gone to the Riuer of Plate, and that his father was very sorry, thinking I had beene eaten by some Serpent, Leopard, or Lion. When I came before the Gouernour; he blessed himselfe to see mee, meruailing where I had beene so long, and sent me againe to his Sugar mill, where I continued a twelue-moneth, and I had the charge to chist all the Sugar, in which time I got two hundred crownes. I determined to goe to Angola in Aethiopia; and the Gouernour gaue me his word that I should, and that what fauour he could shew me, I should bee sure to haue, but when the ship was readie to depart, the Gouernour sent mee out of Towne on a sleeueless errand, and I remayned ashoare, and lost all that I had scraped together for my voyage.

Ambitious malice in sauages.

A moneth or two after this, it happened that the Wayanasses were set on by a kind of Canibals, called Taymayas, the Wayanasses haue traffick and friendship with the Portugals, and the most mortall enemies that the Portugals haue in all America, are the Taymayas. The Wayanasses hauing lost a great many men in a battell, not being able to make any head againe of themselues, craued succour againe of the Portugals. My Master being Gouernour of the Towne, sent his sonne Martin de Saa with seuen hundred Portugals, and two thousand Indians. The Wayanasses certified vnto vs that the most that wee should bee, before wee come to the Taymayas, would bee a moneth.

Expedition against the Taymayas.

Thus the fourteenth day of October 1597. we departed on our way with sixe Canoas by Sea, some thirtie miles from the Riuer of Ianuario, for a Port called Parates. The first day that we departed, we had a great storme, where we thought we should all haue beene drowned, but it was the will of God to saue our liues, with the generall losse of all we had, the Canoas turned vpside downe with the storme, wee holding fast on the bottom of them, were driuen on shoare with great hazard of our liues. From the place where we drove on shoare to the Riuer of Waretesma it was three miles, which we went by land, and sent the Canoas to the Riuer of Ianuario for victuals. We tarried two dayes at Waretesma till the aforesaid Canoas returned, the third day wee went to a place of Great Iland, called Ippoa, where there dwels two or three Portugals. Here we had great store of Potatoes & Plantons to eat. At this place we remayned fiue dayes for fiue hundred Canibals, that were to come from an Iland called Ianamipa. When these Indians were come we departed in our Canoas for our desired Port called Parates. As we went in the night: wee cut a great Bay of the Sea, where a Whale did ouerturne one of our Canoas, notwithstanding wee tooke the men that were in the Sea, and went on for the Harbour aforesaid. The next day the Captaine commanded all the Canoas to be pulled out of the water, and to couer them well with boughes, determining immediately to depart by land.

A Caniball captaine with eightie followers.

That night that we came to Parates, there came a Caniball to vs, called Aleeio, from a Towne called Iequerequere, this Town lyeth by the Sea-side right ouer against the Iland of San Sebastian. This Indian brought eightie Bow-men with him, offering himselfe with all his companie to goe with our Captaine. The next day we departed on our voyage, through the Mountaines, at night the Captaine seeing Aleeio the Caniball lying on the ground, tooke away the Net that I had to sleepe in, and gaue it to the Caniball, I being faine to lie vpon the earth. I complayned to some of the Portugals of the wrong that the Captaine did vse vnto mee: they answered, that his father sent me in that voyage onely to be made away; I replyed, Gods will be done. After wee had gone on our iourney three dayes, we came to the bottom of a great Mountaine, called by the Indians, Paranapacanna, that is in our language, The fight of the Sea; this Mountaine is so high, that wee were three dayes going vp, and three dayes also going downe. Two dayes after wee were descended we came into a faire champaine Countrie like meadow ground with long grasse, and great store of Pine trees, where we lodged that night in a bottom, in which we killed aboue sixe hundred Snakes; it was the will of God that one Indian, called Ieronimo, was bit by them, and not any more. This Indian presently swelled, and his bloud sprung out of his eyes and his nailes, and so he died.

After that we came to trauell againe through the Mountaynes some forty dayes, then wee came to a great Riuer called Paracuena; which Riuer wee passed with things made of Canes tyed togethet with withes, which the Portugals call Iangadas. We were foure dayes before we passed ouer this Riuer it was so great, and ranne so swift. After that, wee trauelled againe some 20. dayes till we came to a great Mountayne called Panaçoyuuo apacone, we were foure dayes going vp this Mountayne by reason of the great showres of raine that we had, besides wee were very weake, and all our victuals were done. But hoping to find our enemies very soone, we did our best to hold out comming vp this hill, from sixe of the clocke in the morning, till it was two of the clocke in the afternoone on a rainie day, the Captaine commanded euery man to make his abode for that night; whereupon I set downe my burthen, and went into the Mountaynes to cut some boughes of a Tree called Cammambaya, to couer vs from the raine, the weather was so cold, and I hauing trauelled all day without meate was so feeble, that going to cut a bough, my sword fell out of my hand, and I sate vnder a Tree, where I had made mine end, if it had not bin for my deere friend Henry Barrawell; who seeing that I carried long came to seeke me, and found me in such case, that I was not able neither to speake nor stand. After he had brought me to the Campe, he layed me by the fire, I recouered and was very well.

Mountayne of foure dayes iourney.

His danger of death.

After we had passed this Mountayne of Paracuena, wee trauelled in a kind of low wash ground; there were great store of Canibals called Paries. Vpon a sudden there would come one 100 of them out of the Wood, and assoone as they had gotten any thing from vs, would be gone, wee knew not whether: and presently there would come as many more. There we kept very good order, and had alway very good watch, for feare they should worke vs any Treason; for all our men were very weake; within foure dayes iourney from the aforesaid Mountayne, we came to the Riuer of Paraena, where we had great store of fish, but nothing else to eate withall. At this Riuer, one day I going a fishing, being a very rainie day, three Indians that went with mee returned againe, and left me alone. As I would haue come backe, I lost my way that I had gone with the Indians through the Wilderneſſe, then I returned againe to the Riuer side, knowing thereby I could not misse my way, still going by the Riuer side homewards where the Captaine was, being somewhat late, suddenly I came to a place where there were at least a 100. men and women of those Paries. I thought I should haue died no other death, but these Canibals did mee no harme, but only tooke away my Knife and my fish-hooke, and gaue me of their meat they were eating, which was rosted Monkeyes. After I had eaten as much as I would, they made mee a thing of dry Canes that they had to swimme vpon the water, which in a meane space carried me where the Campe lay by the Riuer side. These Canibals told vs of a Towne within two dayes iourney, where we might get Peaſe and Guinie Wheate, and some Roots of Cassane.

R. Paraena.

He loseth his way.

In one day we passed Paryena, and the next day wee came to trauell towards the Towne that the Paries had told vs of. We were seuen dayes betweene the Riuer and the Towne, and when we came there, we found almost nothing but women, and asking for their Husbands, they told vs that they had gone to warre against the Tamoyes, and that they had killed them all at this Towne. We found a little Guinie Wheate, but it was not ripe, of the which we fed a weeke being there, these Canibals are called Tapuyas. Wee went forward to other Townes of a kinde of Canibals, called Waanawasous, that were hard by the Tapuyas. Comming to one of their Townes, there came twentie old men with woodden Swords in their hands, whooping and reioycing, which is (as I haue said) their manner of bidding welcome. After they had done, they asked what was our determination; wee told them that wee came to warre against the Tamoyes, then there came an old man vnto vs all painted with red and blue, with Bow and Arrowes in his hand, and a paire of slippers on his feete, and with one of his Daughters that had beene captiue to a Portugall of Santawsetoco, which had runne away from her Master, with other Captiues, and so came againe to her father. This old man, by name Caryuaſou, came before our Captaine, and at this Towne all our men both Indians and Portugals fell sicke by eating of a kinde of sweete pleasant fruit that was poyson, and had it not beene for a Gentleman called Enefrio de say my Masters Kinsman, who had a piece of Vnicornes horne, we had all died. At this Towne we had nothing to eate but a few Potatoes. As we came through this Towne, all the Canibals Waanaſſees ranne away from vs, with all our clothes. Now the old man with tenne lustie young men were with vs, and guided vs betweene two Mountayns continually vp a Riuer from morning till night, for the space of forty dayes, we were neuer out of the water from morning till night that we should make our abode, and entred in the morning againe.

Our men were very weake, and almost starued with hunger. The Indians died, amazed (as some of them said) with a Spirit which they call Coropio, which did kill them, many would complaine that they were possessed with Spirits called Anasaly. Those that were tormented with this Spirit, would command themselues to be bound hand & foot with their Bow strings,

Of Spirits that possessed the Indians, and killed them. Master Knivet told mee that he heard one Indian vpon occasion of such possession, conferring with the Spirit and threatning, if the Spirits vsed them so ill they would turne to the Christians: and thereupon the Spirit left the person so possessed.

and then desire their friends to beat them with the cords, that they hang their beds withall, but for all their Ceremony, I saw not one of them escape after they came to that estate. The most of our Indians died with a kinde of sicknesse, that is common in all hot Countreyes, that is, with a sweate and wearinesse of the body; with Wormes in their fundament, that consume their guts, and they so consume away, knowing not what hurteth them. Against this the Indians do take slices of Lemons, and greene Pepper, and put it in their fundament, likewise Salt-water is good; questionlesse all our Englishmen that died on the Coast of Guinea and Brasil perished of this Disease: it breedeth with head-ache and burning Feuers, then wee presently let bloud, and that killeth vs.

Strange disease.

After we had done travelling vp the aforesaid Riuer, wee came into a faire Champion Countrey, all full of Pine Trees, but the Apples were not ripe, and we could find nothing to eate, but here and there a little wilde Honey; wee travelled at least a moneth; the Portugals beganne to dispaire, and threw away their Peeces, being not able to carrie their clothes. In all this misery, the Captayne made me carry two Muskets (as I hope to be saued) and I was faine to waite vpon him euery day to helpe to make his lodging, and my friend Henry Barawey, was so ill, that I was many times faine to carry him on my backe, and continually to leade him by the hand. In this march wee were forced to eate all our Targets, which were made of raw Hides of Buffes; likewise we did eate a Cowes skinne, which the Frier carried with him (as he went with vs) to couer his things which hee said Masse withall from the raine, happie was hee who could get a Toad or Snake to eate. After wee had passed those Champion Countreyes, where wee lost 180. of our men, we came againe into the Mountaynes, and travelled a great Hill called Etapwa, that is to say, the Mountaine of long stones, for there we found blacke stones of a yard long, as round as if they were made of wood. When we came to the top of this Mountayne, wee were not able to goe downe, but as you shall heare. In those Mountaynes there are great store of withes that hang from the sides and the Iaquetyua Trees, wee tooke of those withes, and making them fast to a great Tree, wee were faine to slide by them at the least one hundred fathomes. In those Mountaynes, we had great store of Palmitos and wilde Honey, and many kinde of Fruites.

The Canibals that guided vs told vs, within foure dayes wee should bee with our enemies the Tamoyes, but wee were aboue twentie dayes, wee came into a dry blacke Champion Countrey, not hauing in it almost any grasse, there we found good store of Honey that the Bees made in the ground, likewise we found a kind of great Beast as bigge as a Beare, and like a Beare in the bodie, but it hath a nose of a yard long, and a faire great tayle all blacke and gray, this beast putteth his tongue through Ant-hils, and when the Antes are all vpon his tongue, hee swalloweth them vp. After we had passed this place, we came to a Mountayne called Etaambe, that is to say, the Mountayne of greene stones; we were in as great misery as euer we were. Then the Portugals assembled together, and told the Captayne that they thought that the Canibals did leade them vp and downe of purpose to destroy them. The Captayne called the old Canibal, and told him how long we had followed him, and how he told vs before, that in twenty dayes we might easily goe from his Towne to the Towne of our enemies the Tamoyes. The old man answered, that within two dayes he would bring vs to the Towne of our enemies, if not he would lose his head, and that all his company should be our slaues.

R. Iawary which floweth from Potossi.

Within two dayes according as the old man said, wee came before the Towne by a Riuer side, which Riuer is called Iawary, it taketh the head from the Mountayne Potosin in Peru, the Towne was on the farther side from vs, and on the side that we were on, they had good store of Mandioqua and Reasen. Wee came before the Towne in the Euening, and lay all night in ambush, thinking to take some of them the next morning comming for their meate. That night our men eate so much Mandioca, that when we thought we should haue had some skirmish, they lay all vomiting that they were not able to stand, and thirteene of them died. The next morning, when we saw no bodie stir, we maruelled, thinking that they were in ambush for vs, the Portugale durst not goe ouer the Riuer, for feare thereof. Then the Captayne commanded me to passe ouer the Riuer, the which I did vpon a woodden Target, when I came into the Towne, there was nothing but a few great pots that the Canibals had left full of greene Wheate, great store of Pumpions, and two great Estridges, I tooke most of the prouision that I found, and layed it altogether for the Captayne, then I called for the company that they might not feare, for there was no body. At this place wee remayned two moneths, here the Captayne reaped the grounds, that the Indians had planted with Mandioque, commanding euery man to make meale for his prouision homewardes, for hee said that from thence hee would returne. Wee had nothing to eate at this place but Potatoes and Casani Meale that wee made our selues, and of that very little.

Vomits and death.

The enemies town forsaken.

By this Towne there was a bogge, and when it rained, there would bee great store of Frogges, of them wee would take in the night with Torches of Waxe to light vs. It fell out one night that I should haue beene Sentinell at midnight, and about eleuen of the clocke it rained, then I sayd to my friend Henry Barrawell, I would to God that one night you would goe and take some some Frogges, for you know presently I shall bee called to watch, with that hee went and presently returned againe without any thing, and told vs, that a great Snake was by the bogges, and that it leaped vp and downe after him. Then the Indians said, that it was a kinde of Snake that flyeth at the fire, I asked Henry Barraway where I might finde the Snake, hee told me at such a place, then I tooke the handle of an Axe being of a heauie blacke wood, and a little Waxe Candle in a guard, because the Snake should not spie mee, and made it very readie. When I came to the place that my friend had told mee, I lighted my Torch, and was so neere the Snake, that if I would, I could not shunne her, this Snake had a great Frogge in her mouth, and assoone as shee saw the fire, shee put the Frogge out of her mouth, and raysing vp her skinne like the scales of a great fish with her mouth open, shee offered to flye at mee, as soone as her mouth was open, I strooke at her, and hit her on the head and the teeth, that I crushed her braines. Assoone as I had strooke her, I threw my Torch one way, and ranne halfe a dozen steps another way, the Snake made a great noyse in the water, but I looked still towards my Torch, to proone if it were true that they would flye in the fire, but when I saw no such thing, I went and tooke my Torch againe, and very warily went to the place, where I had strooke the Snake, where I saw all her head bloudie, and her eyes broken, and so I killed her. When I had done, I tooke a withe and bound it to her forequarters, and dragged her home to the house where I lay, when I came home I asked if I had beene called to watch, the Portugall and Henry Barraway said that no man had asked for me, then I tooke a Knife, and beganne to cut a piece of the Snake for the Captayne, and would haue parted the rest among the rest. As I was parting, the Ensigne of our company came to the doore, I went and opened the doore, and assoone as hee came to mee, hee strooke mee with a cudgell. I not knowing why hee should vse mee so, came and closed with him, so both of vs went to the ground, with that the Portugals that were in the house came and parted vs, and asked him wherefore hee strooke mee, then the ensigne answered that the Captaine had risen and found no body in the watch, to that they all answered, that no man had called mee, then hee commanded mee to goe before the Captaine; hee without hearing me speake, commanded two Indians to binde mee to a poste, and commanded them to take the cords of their beds and whip me, I desired that the Captaine would heare the truth, and if hee found any fault in mee, I would according to Marshall Law bee hanged. Before the Indians had vntyed their beds, there came in an ancient old man, by name Iohn de Soso, Captaine of our Rere-guard, and with him some twentie Portugals, that lay in the same house where I lay. When they saw mee bound they told the Captaine that I was not in fault, for no man had called mee. Then the Captaine commanded mee to bee vntyed, and bade mee goe to my Watch, I went home and fetched my Sword, and presently came againe where I should haue watched, and when I came there, I found him that had gone his way before, and said to the Captaine before my face, that hee had called mee, and that I made him no answere, when I saw him there, I asked him if hee was not ashamed to auouch that which was a Lye: with that hee beganne to abuse mee in vile words, calling mee English Dogge and Heretique, when I saw my selfe disgraced by a paultry Mestico, I tooke my Sword with both my hands, and strooke him on the head with the Hilts, that I made a great wound.

Then the Captaine commanded mee to bee set in the Stockes, and bound my hands, where I lay all that night, and the next day in the afternoone, there came two Portugals and read certaine Articles against mee, which the Captaine had caused to bee made, saying, that I had killed many sicke Indians when I had found them alone, and that I had deserued death by making a mutinie in the Court of Guard by striking, that was sufficient to make an vproare. After they had read all this, they bid mee prepare my selfe for death, and so went their wayes. Within halfe an houre after the Frier came to mee, and asked mee whether I would confesse or no, I told him that I had stolne nothing from no man, and as for my sinnes God knew the secrets of all hearts, wherefore I had nothing to confesse to him. With that after many Orations that hee made to mee, hee went his way. All the Portugals went to the Captaine entreating him to pardon me, but hee would not heare them, desiring God that he might neuer come into Christian Countrey if hee did not hang mee. I lay all day and night in the Stocks, till it was foure of the clocke the next morning. Then the Frier came to me againe, and told mee that my houre was very neere, and desired mee to prepare my selfe to dye like a Christian, I told him I hoped the Lord would haue mercie vpon me.

Betwixt six and seuen of the clock, there came the ensigne, and a Scriuener, and two or three Portugals with them, and an Indian with a cord in his hand, and by the command of the Portugals put it about my necke, then I was carried to the place of execution: all the Portugals being about me, I said, Gentlemen, the Captaine putteth mee not to death for the offence that lately I haue done, but a grudge he holdeth against me falsely rumored by his Cosen, who is now present, because I would not saue him; and for that, and no other matter I am condemned at this present. As I was speaking, the Indian that should haue beene my executioner, came from the top of the house, where I should haue bin executed, and thrusting me on the side of the head said, What doest thou prate, knowest thou not that the Captaines Father sent thee hither, that thou mightest neuer returne? with that the Portugals checkt the Indian, and Iohn de Soso standing with Graned del Galbo, and Festino Abanos, yea, a great many Portugals said, what authoritie hath the Captaine to hang this man, we come not in the Kings seruice, but for our owne profits, and he is but the Gouernours bastard Sonne; so they commanded the execution to be staied, then Iohn de Soso went to the Captaine, and told him, Sir, we know not where we are, and many of our men are dead, wherefore it is not conuenient at this time, that we should weaken our selues, for we know not if any of vs shall returne againe or not, wherefore wee desire you to pardon this Englishman, for he is as good a Souldier as any of vs, and the man that is hurt is not in danger. The Captaine swore a great oath, that I should dye; then Iohn de Soso, and the rest of the Portugals, bid him shew what authoritie he had to put me to death, and if he shew not authoritie from the King, I should not dye at that time, for they were to answere for me as well as he. The Captaine came out very angerly, and made great protestations against Iohn de Soso, that hee was an vpholder of mutinies. Iohn de Soso said, that he would answere to all that he alleadged, and so I was released from death.

After we had beene at this place, two moneths making our prouision, we went forward to another Towne, we found great store of Guinie Wheate newly planted; here we remained three moneths, till the Wheate was ripe, from thence all the Company returned home but my selfe, and twelue yong men; we asked leaue of the Captaine to goe to seeke our aduenture, the Captaine gaue vs leaue to doe what we would; for mine owne part, I asked leaue onely for feare to goe homewards, lest the Captaine should worke me some mischiefe; likewise wee did all thinke we should hardly get home, for we knew not where we were, and the way that we did come, we durst not returne againe, for feare of the Paries, and Lepos Tominenos, and other Canibals, lest they seeing vs weake, should betraie vs.

His strange trauailes with twelue Portugals, whom the Sauages did eate. His life with the Canibals: and after that with the Portugals, from whom hee fleeth to Angola, is brought backe, and after manifold chances, is shipped to Lisbone.

And the twelue aforesaid, tooke our leaue of the Captaine, determining to goe to the South Sea, rather then returne againe without any thing. The names of the Portugals were these, Francisco Tauares, Lewes de Pino, Gonsalo Fernandes, Tomas Delmare, Lewis Loello, Matheus del Galo, Iohn de Siluesa, Petro de Casta, Antonio fernandes Gorgedias, Maxwell Caldera, and my selfe Anthony Knuet. After we had departed from our Captaine, we made a great Canoa of a barke of a tree, and went downe the Riuer called Ianary for the space of a weeke, that we came where we found a little Village of sixe houses, and it seemed it had beene a long time sithence any inhabitants were there; when we came to this Village we left our Canoa, and determined to goe by land. In this Towne we found great store of earthen Pots, and in some of them peeces of Gold tied at lines that the Indians fish withall, likewise we found Stones as greene as grasse, and great store of white glistering Stones like Christall, but many of them were blew and greene, red and white wonderfull faire to behold: when we saw the peeces of Gold and those Stones, we made accompt that we were very neere Potasin, then we tooke our way South-west, and went vp a great Mountaine of Wildernesse. After that, we came to a place of dry Browne earth, full of hils, rocks, and many small Riuers at the head; by many of these Riuers we found little peeces of Gold, as bigge as an Hasell nut, and great store in dust like sand. After which, we came into a faire Countrie, and we saw a great glistering Mountaine before vs, ten daies before we could come to it, for when we came into the plaine Countrie, and were out of the Mountaines, and the Sunne began to come to his height, wee were not able to trauile against it, by the reason of the glistering, that dazeled our eyes. At the last, by little and little we came to the foote of this Mountaine, where we found great store of Tamandros.

We went along by this Mountaine at the least twenty daies, before we could finde any way to passe ouer it; at last we came to a Riuer that passed vnder it, here we determined to make some shift to get through, some of our company said that they thought it best to goe still along by the foote of the Mountaine, rather then to venture to goe through; for they said, if this water goe not through, we are all cast away, for it is impossible to returne againe against this current. Then I answered, friends, we may as well aduenture our liues now as we haue done heretofore in many places, if not, we must make accompt to liue here like wilde Beasts, where we shall haue life as long as pleaseth God, without credit, name, or Religion: wherefore I thinke that our best way is to goe through if we can, for no doubt but God that hath hitherto deliuered red vs from dangers infinite, at this time will not forsake vs, and questionlesse if it be our fortunes to passe on the other side, we shall finde either Spaniards or Indians, for I am sure, that each of you haue heard, that on a faire day it is to be discerned from the top of Potasin to this Mountaine. After I had thus spoken, the Portugals determined to venture to goe through; we made a great thing of great Canes, three yards and a halfe broad, and six yards long, that we might lye downe and sleepe vpon it: we killed good store of Tamandroes, and rosted them very dry for our prouision, for we knew not how long we should be in the vaute.

After we had made all ready, taking good store of wood with vs, commending our selues to God, we put our selues into the vaut, which made such a noise with the running of the water, that we thought it had beene some inchantment. We went in on munday morning, and we came out on a morning (whether we were two dayes or one in the vault I know not.) As soone as we perceiued light we were very glad, but when we came out, we saw on euery side houses, then we tooke counsell what was the best for vs to doe, to hide our selues, and see if we could passe the Townes in the night, or to goe and submit our selues to the Indians: we all agreed, that the best was to goe to them; then I said, well friends, sithence we haue agreed, let vs fully determine here what we shall doe and say, for questionlesse, they will examine vs what we are, and from whence we came; then the Portugals said, we will tell them that we are Portugals; then I answered, I will tell them that I am a French man. We went towards their houses, who as soone as they had perceiued vs came out hooping and hollowing with their Bowes and Arrows; and when they came vnto vs they bound our hands, and tied cords about our middles, and so led vs to their houses: presently there came two or three old men, and asked what we were, then the Portugals answered, that they were Portugals, and I, that I was a French man. Charons Ferry.

Within two houres after they had examined vs, they tooke one of the Portugals, and tied a new roape about his middle, and carried him into a yard, with three Indians holding a cord on the one side, and three on the other side, and the Portugall in the middest, there came an old man, and bid him looke on all things, that he liked, and told him that he should bid them farewell, for hee should see them no more: then there came a lustie yong man, with his armes and face died red, and said vnto him, doest thou see me, I am he that hath killed many of thy Nation, and will kill thee. After he had spake all this, he came behinde the Portugall, and strooke him on the nape of the necke, that he felled him to the ground, and after hee was downe gaue him another that hee killed him; then they tooke the tooth of a Conie and opened all the vpper skinne, so they tooke him by the head and the feete, and held him in the flame of the fire: after that, rubbing him with their hands, all the vpper skin came of, and the flesh remained white, then they cut off his head, and gaue it to him: they tooke the guts, and gaue them to the women, after which they iointed him ioint by ioint, first hands, then elbowes, and so all the body. After which, they sent to euery house a peece, then they fell a dancing, and all the women made great store of Wine: the next day they boiled euery ioint in a great pot of water, because their wiues and children might eate of the broth; for the space of three dayes they did nothing but dance and drinke day and night: after that they killed another in the same manner as you haue heard, and so serued all but my selfe. The Indians kils the Portugals, and after eate them. Diuelliſh Butchers.

When I saw all the Portugals dead, I looked for the same, but after the Indians had done with the Feasts, they came vnto me and said, Feare not, for your ancestors, haue beene our friends, and we theirs, but the Portugals are our enemies, and make vs slaues, wherefore we haue done with them as you haue seene. After I had heard what they said, I told them I had no reason to feare, for I knew they were my friends, and not mine enemies, and that I had bin a long time prisoner to the Portugals. Hatred of the Tamoyes to the Portugals.

When I had bin two moneths with these Indians called the Tamoyes, they went to warre against Tomominos, and comming to fight, we had almost lost the field, for the Tamominos were a great many more, so that we were faine to take the Mountaine: when I saw the rusticall manner of their fight, that without any order they would set vpon their enemies like Buls, I taught them how to set themselues in Battaile, and to lye in ambush, and how to retire and draw their enemies into a snare: by this meanes, we had alwayes the vpper hand of our enemies, and I was held in great accompt amongst them, for they would neuer goe to the field, except I went with them: in a short time we gaue so many battailes to the Tomominos, that we made them leaue their Countrey, and flye further from vs: so wee liued in peace. The Tamoyes offered mee many wiues, but I refused, saying it was not our custome to take wiues out of our Countrey. After wee had conquered the Tomominos, wee liued in peace for the space of foure moneths, and then there came another kinde of Canibals, called Topinaques. These made their Towne very neere vs, at a Mountaine called by the Indians Tamimus (that is) the Mountaine of Gold. Tamominos. He teacheth them to fight. Topinaques. Mountaine of Gold.

When we heard of them, we prepared to make warre against them, wee went fiue thousand strong, in fiue dayes iourney we came before the Towne; but we being espied, they left their Towne and fled, we followed them tenne daies, taking many old men and women, which as we tooke them we killed: we followed them till we came to a great Riuer side, where we durst not not passe for feare lest the enemy should ouercome vs at the landing, so we returned home againe, from the Riuer called Morgege, where we remayned still in peace, for the space of eight moneths till we remoued our selues.

His rich apparell.

At this place I went all naked with out any thing, onely a few leaues I tied before mee for shame. One day going all alone a fishing for pleasures sake, I sat downe remembring my selfe in what state I was, and thinking what I had beene, I began to curse the time that euer I heard the name of the Sea, and grieued to thinke how fond I was to forsake my naturall Countrey where I wanted nothing: then was I out of all hope either to see Countrey or Christian againe; sitting by the Riuer in these passionate thoughts, there came on old Indian one of the chiefest of them, and beganne to talke with me saying. It was a good time with them when they dwelt at Cape Frio, for then they had trade with the Frenchmen, and wanted nothing, but now they had neyther Kniues nor Hatchets, nor nothing else, but liued in great necessitie, with that I answered I did heartily wish, that he and his company would goe and dwell by the Sea-coast, without danger of Portugals, whereupon hee and I went home together, and the Indian reported in the Towne what I had said vnto him: the next morning there came (at the least) twenty of the chiefest of them into the house where I lay, and asked me if I knew my Place certaine, where they might finde any French Ships: I told them that I was sure betwixt the Riuer of Plate, and a Riuer called by the Portugals Dos Patos, we should finde French men, and if we did not, that here the Portugals could not hurt vs. Moreouer, it were better to dwell by the Sea side, where we should haue plenty of al things, then where we did, where we had nothing to liue vpon but roots. These old men went and told the people, which all desired to see the coast, so they resolued, and making prouision, we departed from our abode, being thirty thousand of vs.

He perswades them to seeke new habitations.

New discouries of this wandering Nation.

After we had passed many a Hill, all Wilderneese and Riuers, where wee found many precious stones, we came to a faire sandie Countrie, through which we trauelled some twentie dayes, and we went Northward for feare of comming into the Countrie where there are great store of Spaniards, and this Countrie is it selfe very populous, and are friends with the Spaniards. Therefore we changed our course and trauelled all Northward, till we came into the Countrie of the Amasons, which the Indians call Mandiocusyanas, then we tooke our course Southward againe. I would haue perswaded the Tamoyes to haue warred against the Amasons, but they durst not, for they said, we know that their Countrie is very populous, and we shall be all killed. After wee came to the head of the Riuer, called Patos, there we found Canoas of barkes of trees that came downe the Riuer some eight dayes, then wee found the Riuer very broad, and many trees cut by the Riuers side, whereby we suspected that we were neere the Sea side, or some Town of the Waanasses, for the Waanasses neuer inhabit far from the coast. When the Indians saw these tokens of abidance; they asked me what I thought was best to doe: I answerd, I thought it best to hide our selues, and to send some nine or ten yong men to see if they could spie any Towne, so we to circle them in their houses in the night: to that they all agreed, and ten of them were sent, they returned again at night without sight of any Towne, but they said there went a great path by the Riuer side, and brought peeces of Cords that they found in the way with them. Hence we iudged that we should finde some Towne by the Riuer side, and determined to goe downe the Riuer in the night with our Canoas, to see if we could finde the Towne.

Battell of Sauages.

About foure of the clocke we came to a faire Bay, and saw the Sea; and doubling a point of the shoare we espied a Towne, then as fast as we could we landed our men, and the day began to be cleare, and one of the Town comming out to the Sea side, espied vs, whereupon all the Town rose vp in armes, and we had a great skirmish. We were many more in number, and had farre better order, so we put them to flight killing a great many of them: wee tooke three hundred prisoners men and women, which the Tamoyes killed and did eate afterwards. These Indians are called Cariyos. After we had put them to flight they went to Saint Vincents by land, and craued succour of the Portugals. At this Towne of the Cariyos we found great store of prouision, Cassaui, Gimio Wheate, Potatoes, Plantons, Pumpions, and all other such like that the Countrie yeeldeth, and in great plenty: there likewise we found great store of Ryals of eight, for there had beene a Caruell cast away in that place not long before, and the Spaniards were gone before by land to Bonas Ayres in the Riuer of Plate: with these Indians the Portugals had peace, but now they are in warre with them againe.

Cariyos.

They are assailed by the Portugals.

Some of the Cariyos went to the Riuer of Plate to craue succour, others, as I said before, came to the Town of Saint Vincents: from Saint Vincents, newes was sent to the Riuer of Ianero, from thence the Portugals made a Nauie of Canoas and Caruels, of the which the Gouernours sonne Marten de Sasa (which was come home from the Riuer of Ianary, where I departed from him) was come againe as Captaine of all the Portugals, and comming vpon vs in the night, they seized our Towne: about three of the clocke, an Indian that came with the Portugals beganne to speake very loud to the men of the Towne, that they should not stirre, for if they stirred they should be all put to the sword. When the Tamoyes heard the Indian speake, they began to russell with their Bowes and Arrowes, making a great noise, with that the Portugals shot of a Peece, then they all lay downe in their beds, like men without liues or soules; when the day was cleare, cleare, and my Masters Sonne saw me alive, he blest himselfe, and asked me what was become of my companions, I told him that the Indians had killed them, and eateh them. After that, about ten of the clocke, all the Indians were brought out of their houses, and being examined, some of them said that I bid them kill them, & if many of them had not been, I had died for it, but it was Gods will to discouer the truth by their own mouthes: then the Portugals killed all the old men and women, and all these that had beene particuler actors of the Portugals deaths, which were in all 10000. and 20000. were parted amongst them for their slaues.

He returneth to his Master.

The Portugals kill 10000. and captiue 20000. Indians.

I came againe to my old Master, and was sent with the Tamoyes to a Sugar Mill that my Master had newly made. There I went still to the woods with the slaues to draw out great peeces of Timber for the space of three moneths: then was newes brought from Cape could, that the Canibals, called Vaytacasses, were come to make their abidance a little Southward of the Cape, in certaine places, where before the Tamoyes had inhabited. The Saluador Corea de Sasa sent his Sonne Gonsalo Corea de Sasa, with whom I went against my will. We trauelled eight dayes by the Sea side, where we had alwayes great store of Fish. After that we came to a place, called Etaoca, that is to say, the Stone house, as strong a thing as euer I saw, for it was a great huge rocke, and it hath an entrance like a great doore, within it, as any Hall in England: the Indians say that there Saint Thomas did Preach to their forefathers there: hard by standeth a Stone as bigge as foure great Canons, and it standeth vpon the ground vpon foure stones little bigger then a mans finger, like stickes; the Indians say that was a miracle which the Saint shewed them, and that that Stone had beene Wood: likewise by the Sea side there are great Rockes, vpon them I saw great store of prints of the footing of bare feete; all which prints were of one bignesse. They say that the Saint called the Fishes of the Sea, and they heard him.

Vaytacasses.

Tale of Saint Thomas, sauouring like Saint Francises Legend.

From thence we went through the Wildernesse, foure dayes till we came to a great Mountaine, called Abousanga retam; by the Sea side of that Mountaine, we found a small Towne of Tamoyes, that had escaped in the time of the first conquest, that Saluador Corea de Sasa made against that kinde of people, and neuer were heard of till now that wee found them by chance. The Captaine of them was (as they shewed by signes) one hundred and twenty yeares old, and yet was very lustie: he had in his lippe a great hole, and on either side of his cheekes a great hole, and in either of them a faire greene Stone. After we had taken this small Towne, wherein there were fiue hundred soules, we asked if they knew where the Waytacasses were, they told vs all that they knew very well, so in three dayes they guided vs into a low leggie Countrie, where the Waytacasses were: when we came to their habitation, this Abousanga came among the thickest of the Portugals, and said these words; He that neuer saw Abousanga let him looke on me now, and they that dare follow me shall see my valour: and so with his Bowe and his Arrowes, he ran amongst the thickest of the enemy, where he was shot with one and twenty Arrowes. In that enterprise we all saw him kill three of the Waytacasses. When we came to the fight, all the Waytacasses ranne away, & we tooke but one of them: for all that Abousanga was so hurt, he liued foure houres: the Portugals asked him why he had beene so desperate? he told them that he had liued all his life a free man, and that he had beene a great warrier, and would rather dye then be their Captiue. Then he asked Baptisme, and desired them that they would tell him somewhat of God, for he said whatsoeuer they told him he would beleeue; the Portugall Frier told him that God was the sauer of soules and the giuer of life, and that if he truely repented and would be Baptised he should be saued; he answered, that all that was told him he truely beleeued, and desired that with speede he might be Baptised, and so died, calling to God for mercy till his last houre: from this place we returned home.

Old Captaines

High spirit of a Sauage.

After we came home again, his son Gonsalo Corea de Sasa, reported so well of me, that his father commanded me to waite on him whither soeuer he went: newes came at that time from Portugall of a Nauie of Shippes out of England, that were come to Brasil; whereupon the Gouernour commanded a Fort to be made of his owne cost vpon a rocke that standeth on the mouth of the hauen, so neere the Riuer side, that three moneths after it was done, the Sea carried it away, with all the Ordnance in it. I haue told you before that three moneths after I was taken, the Desire came from the Straits to a great Iland, where sixteene of her men were slaine, and one taken, by name Andrew Towre: this man was a Phisitian, and did many cures, the Portugals tooke him for a Sorcerer, for he would prognosticate many things; he had but one eye, and the Portugals said, that in his eye which was out, he had a familier: this man tooke vpon him to make a deuise to take the peeces of Ordnance out of the Sea, which was this; he caused to be made a suite of Leather all greased and pitched, that no water could enter into it, then he caused a great head to be made all pitched, with a great nose, & at the nose were three bladders, and at the mouth two; he intised me to vndertake to goe down into the Sea in that, saying it was very easie to be done. I told him, that if I might be well recompensed, I would venture my life to doe it; then he made it known me to the Gouernor, that if I were well paid, I would venture my life, then the Gouernour called me and said, I will giue you ten thousand Crownes, and a Pasport to goe for your Country, or whether you will, if you put a Ring into the eare of one of the Peeces. I told him, I would doe my best by Gods helpe.

What became of the 13. men (so many M. Lane reckoneth) lost out of Cap. Danis his Ship.

After

His mad aduenture.

After the deuiſe of Leather was made, moſt of the Portugals went to the place, where the pieces were loſt with great ſolemnitie, praying to God to ſend me good lucke. Putting on the ſute of Lether, I was caſt into the Sea in eighteene fathome deepe, with a mightie great ſtone tyed about me. The head was ſo bigge, all pitched and tarred, that the weight of the ſtone (for it was great only) carried me downe, and it was a great paine vnto me, for the weight of the ſtone carried me downeward, and the water by reaſon of the head bare mee vpward, that I thought the cord I was tied withall, would haue cut me in pieces. When I felt my ſelfe ſo tormented, I tooke a Knife that was tyed in my hand, and cut the cord, and aſſoone as I came aboue water, I tore the bladders from my face, and cut my ſute before, for I was almoſt ſtifled, and for the ſpace of a moneth, I knew not what I did.

His eſcape to Angola.

Continually I deſired my Maſter, to giue me leaue to get my liuing, intending to come into my Countrey, but the Gouernour, would not let me goe from him. When I ſaw no meanes to get leaue of my Maſter, I determined to runne away to Angola; for to ſerue the King as a Souldier in Maſſangano, till ſuch time that I might paſſe my ſelfe to the King of Anyeca, which warreth againſt the Portugals, and ſo haue come through Preſter Iohns Countrey into Turkie. On the ſeuen and twentieth day of Iune 1597. I embarked my ſelfe vnknowne to my Maſter in a ſmall ſhip of one Emanuell Andrea, for to come for Angola. In this Voyage wee were driuen ſo neere the Cape of Good Hope, that we thought all of vs ſhould haue beene caſt away, the Seas are there ſo great; and by reaſon of the current they brake in ſuch ſort, that no ſhippe is able to endure. There we brake both our mayne maſt and our Meſen. It pleaſed God to ſend vs the wind Eaſtward, which brought vs to our deſired Harbour Angola. Wee had beene fiue monethes in our Voyage, and by that meanes other ſhippes that departed two monethes after vs were there before vs, when I heard that there were ſhips of the Riuer of Ienero, I durſt not goe aſhoare for feare of being knowne of ſome of the Portugals, the next day after that wee came into the Harbour; there came a great Boate aboord vs, to aske if wee would ſell any Caſſaui meale, wee told them we would, and asked them whether they went with their Boate, they anſwered, that they tarried for the tyde to goe vp to the Riuer of Guanſa Tomaſangano, then I thought it a fit time for my purpoſe, and ſo embarked my ſelfe in the Barke, the Portugals maruelled to ſee mee goe willingly to Maſangano; for there men dye like Chickens, and no man will goe thither if he can chooſe.

Nine dayes we were going vp the Riuer of Guanſa, in which time two Portugall Souldiers dyed, the Countrey is ſo hot that it pierceth their hearts, three dayes after I had beene in Maſangano, Don Franciſco de Mendoſa Fortado, the Gouernour of the Citie of Congo, hauing receiued a Letter from Saluador Corea de Saſa, who was his great friend, ſent a Purſuiuant for me, who brought me by Land through the King of Congos Countrey, and in ſixe dayes we came to a Towne called Saint Francis, (where the Gouernour was) hard by the Kingdome of Manicongo, when I came before the Gouernour hee vſed mee very kindly in wordes, and asked mee, what I meant to caſt my ſelfe away wilfully in Maſangano, then I told him, how long I had ſerued Saluador Corea de Saſa; and in how many dangers I had beene for him and his Sonne, without euer hauing any recompence of any of them, and therefore I thought it better to venture my life in the Kings ſeruice, then to liue his Bond-ſlaue. The Gouernour commanded me to be carried to Angola, and charged a paire of bolts to bee put vpon my legges, becauſe I ſhould not runne away. About a fortnight after I was ſent backe againe in a Caruell of Francis Lewes, and in two moneths we arriued in the Riuer of Ienero, and I was carried with my bolts on my legges before the Gouernour; when he ſaw me, hee beganne to laugh and to ieaſt with mee, ſaying, that I was welcome out of England. So after many ieaſts hee ſpake, hee bade pull off my bolts from my legges, and gaue mee cloth, and vſed mee verie well.

He is taken & ſent backe to Braſill.

Captain Cocke.

After I had beene with the Gouernour againe ſome two monethes, then came a ſmall man of Warre to great Iland, the Captaines name was Abram Cocke, he lay in waite for the ſhips of the Riuer of Plate, and had taken them if it had not beene for fiue of his men, that ranne away with his Boate, that diſcouered his beeing there, for within a ſeuennight after hee was gone, three Caruels came into the ſame Road where he was. Theſe fiue men were taken by a Frier that came from San Vincents, and were brought to the Riuer of Ienero, I being at this time in ſome account with the Gouernour, fauoured them aſwell as I could, eſpecially one of them, by name Richard Heixt, becauſe that they all ſaid, that hee was a Gentleman, after that wee had beene in the Towne together about ſome three moneths, one of them called Thomas Cooper, being married, had his houſe by the Sea ſide, where he vſed his Trade, we were then nine Engliſhmen, and three Dutchmen, and wee determined when the ſhipping came from the Riuer of Plate, that wee would take one of them comming into the Harbour, this Heixt alwayes went with me to a Portugals houſe where I was very well beloued. One night hee comes into the houſe, and ſteales away a boxe; that had ſixtie Rialls of eight in it, and two or three pieces of Holland, I deſired him to reſtore the ſame, but this Heixt being a ſwaggering companion vſed me moſt vilely in words, and went and told the Gouernour, what wee all had determined, and ſaid that wee were Here-tickes, and that he himselfe was a Catholicke, that day at night I should haue stolne the Key of the Kings Store-house to haue taken Muskets and Powder, and haue carried it to Thomas Coopers house, but it was Gods will that he had accused vs before I had done it, or else we had beene all hanged for it. We being all before the Gouernour, and denying that we had euer meant any such matter, Heixt said, Sir, send to Thomas Coopers house, and you shall find 20. Muskets and powder, that Anthony hath stolne out of the Kings Store-house for that purpose, if your Worship find it not so, say that I am a lier, and a false dealer. Then the Gouernour sent vs all to Prison, & himselfe and Heixt, went to T. Coopers house, where they found no such matter. He went to the Kings Store-house and saw that nothing was stirred: whereupon hee was somewhat angry with Heixt, because he had taken him with an vntruth, and said, that he neuer saw men of so peruerse and vile condition as we were to seeke the destruction of each other. Vpon occasion of this Heixt his ill demeanure not long after, the Gouernour sent him to Angola, and from thence Don Francisco sent him to Masangano, where he dyed in a miserable estate. Presently after that Andrew Towres, was accused for eating flesh on the Friday, and for that was put in prison, and paid 100. Rials of eight, and was set at libertie, within a moneth after he had bin out of prison, he ran away to Fernambacke, the Gouernour being informed of it sent two small Caruels after him to bring him back againe: in one of the small Caruels went his sonne Gonsalo Corea de Sasa, and the High Priests Nephew, and a great many more young Gentlemen. After they were out on the Mayne, and almost aboord of the ship that Andrew Towers was in, on a sudden, there came a great storme, that the small Caruell that the Gouernours sonne was in, could not endure the Sea, but was fain to run on shore on the Coast, where three of their company were cast away, one of them beeing the High Priests Nephew, and I thinke that they had bin all drowned, if it had not bin for Martin de Sasa, that was at that place with 100. slaues making Brasil ready for a ship of his Fathers, the other Caruell followed him to Fernambuque, and brought him backe againe to the Riuer of Ienero, where hee was put in prison and should haue bin hanged, but that all the Towne begged him, he was sent to Masangoma where he dyed.

Heixts miserable death.

Anno Dom. 1598. there came two Dutch ships being Captaine of them, Iasper Fernandes a Dutchman, and leaue of the Gouernour after he had shewed his Licence out of Portugall, set all his goods on shore, and had bought and sold for the space of three monethes in the Towne, and made great store of money. At the time of his going away, the Kings Officers said that his Licence was not good, and would haue stopped his ships, then the Gouernour said, why looked you not to that before, seeing I gaue them leaue to come in vpon your words, saying, that his dispatch was good, answere it how you can, for seeing he came in with leaue and vpon my word he shall goe out without any hearing, and so he departed for Angola.

Two Dutch ships.

After that, the Gouernor General of all the Coast of Brasil, Don Francisco de Sasa, came to the Riuer of Ienero, with two Hulkes, and being enformed that Iasper Fernandes was at Angola, hee sent a Caruell thither, that his ships should be kept for the King, hee hearing of it went aboord his ships, and went away in spight of the Portugals; the same yeere there came Francisco de mondousa de vasconsales for Gouernour to my Masters place, that day the Hulke which the new Gouernour was in, came to the mouth of the Hauen, the Gouernour Saluador Corea de Sasa; was at a Sugar-mil that he had newly finished. The aforesaid, when she came to the mouth of the Hauen beganne to shoot off her Ordnance, the Gouernour not knowing what it should bee, presently caused a great Canoa to bee made readie, for immediately, hee would goe to the Towne to see what was the matter, within halfe an houre after we had bin out at Sea, to come to the Towne, a great tempest rose and ouerturned the Canoa, there my Master had bin cast away, if God first, and I had not laid hands on him, for all his slaues swamme away to the shore, and Henry Barraway with them, only I, and Domingos Gomes a Molato slaue that my Master carried with him in the Sea, and betweene vs, we got him to the Canoa, where he held fast, till wee drew neere the shore, where the Sea brake like Mountaynes, there we had like to haue bin all cast away, for the Sea would cast vs against the Hils of sand, and carrie vs backe againe to the Sea; after I had got my selfe ashore, I looked towards the Sea, and saw my Master come in a great waue, and as the waue brake, I and my deere friend Domingos Gomes tooke hold of him and dragged him out of the Sea; but we both thought that he would haue dyed, for hee could not speake, then wee tooke him betweene vs by the legges vpon our shoulders, and made him vomit a great deale of water, and so recouered him, when I saw him well, I told him that the Sea knew no Gouernours better then other men, the next day the Gouernour went home by land, and found the other Gouernour in the Towne, for whose comming I did not a little reioyce, for then I thought the time was come that I long had desired, hoping shortly to come into my Countrey.

He saueth his Master.

In the same yeere there came foure Hollanders, and anchored before the Citie in the mouth of the Hauen, then all the Towne rose vp in Armes, my Master was at his Sugar-mill, and I remayned in the Towne to wayte on my Mistris. When shee saw the Portugals runne vp and downe with their Armes, she commanded me to take a Musket, and bade mee goe to one of the Forts, the which I did according to her command: the new Gouernour came to the Fort where I was, and viewed the men that were in the Fort, and commanded one of his men to giue vs Powder and shot. After I had spoken with the new Gouernour (who liked mee very well, because he said I was ready with my Peece, and prayed the English Nation to be very good Souldiers.) One Iohn de Selnera told him, that he were best take heed of me, that I ranne not away to the Hollanders, for I had done greater matters then that, and that he knew I made no account to swim aboord of them in the night vpon any piece of wood, and rehearsed many things that I had aduentured in the time that my Master was Gouernour. The new Gouernour came and tooke me by the hand, and carried mee to Prison, where I lay 27. dayes, till the Hulkes were departed from the mouth of the Hauen, and went to Great Iland, then I was set at libertie. After that the Gouernour Generall had beene at San Vincents some two moneths, there came a great Hulke of Amsterdam, called the Golden World, and a Captaine that was called Lawrence Bitter, the Hulke had beene at Saint Thomas Iland, and an Iland called the Prince, and from thence to the Straits of Magellan, where many of her men dyed, and by contrary wind they were compelled to returne to the Coast of Brasil, this Hulke comming to San Vincent, sent her Boate to tell the Gouernour that they were Merchants, and that if they would giue them leaue, they would traffique with them, the Gouernour Generall made them a Certificate vnder his hand and Seale, that they should haue no wrong, but pay the Kings Custome and goe their wayes when they would, and whether they would: with that the Captaine of the Hulke put into the Harbour; & commanded his goods to be set on shore. Euery day he was visited by the Gouernour Generall aboord his ship, and promised him great courtesie. After that the Captayne had landed all his goods, and most of all the Hollanders were ashore, a great many Portugals went aboord the Hulke with Gitternes singing and playing. When the Flemmings saw them come in that sort they mistrusted nothing, the Portugals danced in the ship and dranke with the Flemmings, and vpon a sudden when the Flemmings thought least of them, they drew their Swords and killed two of them, and possest themselues of the Hulke for the King.

Perfidiousnes of Portugals.

Flemming taken trecherously.

In the beginning of the yeere of the Lord 1599. there came nine Hulkes before the Citie of Bacia, but they could do no good. After the Gouernour Generall had been some foure moneths at San Vincents, my Master had some businesse thither, and I went with him, when we came to San Vincents the Gouernour Generall was departed fiftie leagues within the land, at a place where he was informed of some Mynes of Gold, but when he came thither, he found that they were not worth the working, then he determined to send farther into the Land to a place called Etapuſick, I being there, and knowing the place was commanded by the Gouernour Generall to goe thither, when we came to the aforesaid place, we found very singular good Mynes, and wee broughe of the soyle to the Gouernour Generall, and many small peeces of Gold that we found in many places where the water washed away the Earth, the Gouernour Generall tooke it, paying vs for it more then it was worth, and sent it to the King with a Sey, for to consider whether it should be wrought or not, the Gouernor Generall sent likewise 40000. pounds worth of Plate, that he had wrought out of the Myne of Saint Paul, which is twelue leagues from San Vincents, In the time that I went to Etapuſicke, my Master was gone home, then I serued as a Souldier for the space of three moneths, that shipping went to the Riuer of Ienero; then the Gouernour Generall requited my paines very honourably, and sent me backe againe to my Master. After that my Master sent to a place called the Organs, which Hill is to bee seene from the Riuer of Ienero, where we found a little Myne of Gold, and many good stones. There came a Hulke out of Spaine that brought a Bishop, and a Spanish Gouernor to goe from thence in small shipping to the Riuer of Plate, and from thence to Summa. A little after that, this Hulke arriued at the Riuer of Ienero, where fell a disease in the Countrey like the meazels, but as bad as the plague, for in three moneths their dyed in the Riuer of Ienero, aboue three thousand Indians and Portugals: this disease was generally in all parts of the Countrey. At this time going vp and downe from the Sugar-mill to the ship, in the night with a Barke lading of Brasil for the Hulke, with the Ayre one of my legges swelled, that I could not stirre: it is common and very dangerous in those Countries when a man is hot, to come in the Ayre, especially in the night, for being a hot Countrey, it hath a piercing ayre, and suddenly striketh in any part of the bodie. I was very ill for the space of a moneth.

The fourteenth of August 1601. Saluador Correa de Saſa; Gouernour of the Riuer of Ianuary, embarked himselfe in the aforesaid Hulke with his Wife Donenes de Soſo, determining to make his Voyage to Fernambuque, we sayled East to Seaward. The fifteenth day wee kept still Eastward to the Sea. The sixteenth day we kept North-east, and about tenne of the clocke we had sight of the Cape

The seuenteenth, eighteenth and nineteenth, hauing the wind North-west, we kept stil Eastward for feare of the sands and cliffes called Aberollas, they lye betweene the Cape and Spirito Santo. The twentieth day hauing the winde South, wee sayled our course North-east. This course we kept till the fiue and twentieth of the moneth, then the winde turned Northward, we made East to Sea; this course we were faine to keepe till the last day of the moneth, the first of February, the winde being at South-west wee sayled North-east along the Coast, till the seuenth day of the moneth. The eight day the Master and the Pilot tooke the height of the Sun, and and were ten degrees and an halfe Southward of the Line. As the Master and the Pilot were talking together concerning the Voyage, there came a Sea-foule, and sitting vpon the backe stay, cast out two or three little fishes, with that a Spaniard called Iasper Conquero, who had some experience of the Coast, said to the Master take heed, for I am afraid you are neerer the shoare, then you take your selfe to bee, for you know not how the current drieth you Westward vpon the Coast, the Flemmings bade him meddle with his owne businesse, and that they knew what to do without his counsell, the Pilot made himselfe forty leagues from the shore, & directed his course North. The ninth day at midnight wee descried Land, the Pilot presently cast his Lead, and found but eight fathomes water, then he commanded the Saylers to cast about, the which they did, the wind being at North-east, and wee being neere the shore, could not beare vp to Sea; for wee saw Clifts both on the starboord and larboord side of vs, and before wee could get out our Anchor, we were driuen so neere the Clifts on the lee side of vs, that wee had no other remedie, but to runne vpon the Rockes, where we had beene all cast away, but that it was the pleasure of God to deliuer vs, for wee lay with the Prow of our ship vpon one of the Rockes for the space of halfe an houre, and we were faine to cut off both our Masts, and to cast many chists ouer-boord, thinking it had beene impossible to saue any thing, but it was the will of God when wee least thought of it, that a great Sea brake ouer the Rocke, and put vs into eight fathomes water, betweene the Rockes and the Cliffes, so by the prouidence of God, wee were deliuered out of the aforesaid danger. Danger at Sea.

The next day we saw Canibals along the shore, then the Gouernour commanded mee to be set on shore to talke with the wilde people, and to know of them vpon what Coast wee were, or if we might goe to Fernambuque by land, the Captaine commanded a Mamaluke, called Antonio Fernandes to goe with me athore, but when we came to land, this Mamaluke durst not goe on shore, for feare of the wilde Canibals, so I went alone, and saluted them according to the fashion of the Countrey, then I enquired of them, how they called the place where they were, they told me that it was called Cororeyespe, which is the Riuer of Toades, likewise they said that we were very neere the Riuer of Saint Francis, and Northward, we had the Riuer called Saint Michell, and that they were slaues to the Portugals of Fernambucke, hauing driuen cattle to Baya; and now they returned home againe. One of these bond-slaues went aboord the shippe with mee, and talked with the Gouernour, the next day, the Gouernours Wife entreated her husband, that hee would leaue the Hulke, and goe by land, the which he did at his wifes request, so commanding all his Treasure to be set on shore, we left our ship, the Gouernour commanded the Master to take Fernambuque if it were possible, if not that he should goe to Baya, and from thence into Portugall, with any ships that should depart from thence, this Hulke had nine tunnes of Siluer in her, the which incharged to Diego de Guadro, by the Gouernour Generall Don Francisco de Sasa; and at Fernambuque, the charge of it was giuen to my Master Saluador Correa de Sasa, from the place where we were driuen on shore to Fernambucke, is fortie leagues. In this iourney from the Riuer of Toades, or from the Clifts called Bayshas Deanrobrio did I and Domingos Gomes alway carrie a Boxe of pure Gold of my Masters, some twelue leagues, from the aforesaid Riuer of Toades to a place called by the Indians Vpanasou; are three leagues, this Vpanasou; is a very singular good place to take fresh water, from Vpanasou to another Riuer called Casuays, is one league from the Casuayes, to the Riuer of Saint Michell are foure leagues, at this Riuer dwelleth a very rich Mamalucke, Iohn de Rocho, at this Riuer we rested three dayes. The Gouernour Generall fraughted a small fisher Boate at this place, and determined to goe to Fernambuque in it. Mamaluke. or Mestizos. Riuer of toads. Nine tuns of siluer. Places on the Coast.

The same day that wee made sayle in the smal Barke from the Riuer of Saint Michell, there arose a great storme from that North-east, and we were faine to take the Riuer of Saint Michels againe with great hazard of our liues, for the winde being very great, wee were driuen vpon a Rocke that lyeth South-west from the mouth of the Riuer very neere the shore, all those that could swimme leaped into the Sea; and so the Barke was lighter, and swamme off the Cliffe, then the Gouernour and his Wife said that they would goe by Land, so the day after we departed from the Riuer of Saint Michels to another great Riuer called Vua, this Riuer is three leagues from Saint Michel, heere my small ship may enter and take fresh water, and kill great store of fresh fish, from thence we went to another Riuer called Iaquareasicke, from this place the Gouernour sent me and Antonio Fernandes before to a small Village to prouide some prouision against his comming, there was in our company a Portugall called Rafiel Penera, that perforce would go with vs, we told him that we had many great Riuers to passe, and that it were better for him to tarrie with the Gouernour and his Wife, he not regarding our words went with vs, so we departed all three of vs, the next day after wee had departed from the Gouernour, wee came to a very faire Riuer called Saint Antonio, that which we passed vpon a Iangarie made of Canes, from thence wee went to a place called by the Indians Amrecuua Prisema, this is the Harbour of Frenchmen, from thence wee came to a great faire Riuer called Camarijnua, wee went on to the Riuer of Stones. We departed from thence vp the Riuer on a Mangada, made of three dry posts pinde together, the next morning we landed in a faire Champaine Countrey, where we saw great store of Cattle, and a Sugar-mill grinding of Canes, to which wee went, the Owner of the Mill A storme.

was a high Dutchman, to whom we deliuered the Gouernours Letter, the which as soone as hee had read, presently he commanded two Beeues to be killed, and sent away with tenne bushels of Cassani meale, and many Hens and Turkeyes, and wee two were very honourably vsed for the space of a weeke that we were there, from thence wee departed to a place called Porto do Calua, three leagues from the Areseene, this is an excellent Hauen for all weathers, and all the yeere long, there is at the least two thousand chists of Sugar. At this place Manuell Masquerennas met vs with two hundred Horse, and then after two dayes rest we came to Fernambuquo.

Twentie dayes after we had beene in the Towne Ielisiano Cuello, sent word to Manuell Masquerennas, how that he was beseeched in Rio Grande, by the Putewaras, and that if he were not presently ayded by him, he should be forced to lose the Kings Towne, with the losse of all their liues, Masquerennas presently determined to goe himselfe, and left the Towne of Fernambuquo in charge to my Master Saluador Corea de Saa; and thus we departed from Fernambuquo with foure hundred Portugalls, and three thousand Indians, and in seuen dayes iourney we came to Rio Grande, hauing many a braue skirmish, with diuers Canibals in the way. As soone as wee were come before the Towne our Captaine made a long speech to all the Portugals and Indians, incouraging them against those Infidels whose Armie was at the least fortie thousand strong, and desired them all to confesse to their Ghostly Fathers and to take the Communion, for the next morning he was resolued to giue the onset on his enemies, the which was very brauely performed, for the Canibals the day before in a skirmish that they had, did take two hundred prisoners, and hauing killed many of them to eate, not expecting our comming in the chiefest of their feast, and their drinking we set vpon them, the people of the Towne on the other side, hearing the rumour, issued forth, thus taking them on the sudden, wee made such slaughter among them, that they were forced to remoue their siege, with the losse of three thousand prisoners, and fiue thousand that were slaine. The King of these Canibals was called Pirainwath that is to say, the finne of a fish, when this Heathen Prince saw himselfe ouerthrowne with so small a number as wee were, in comparison of his multitudes, he sent certayne of his men to Manuell Masquarennas to treate of peace, vpon these conditions, that if he would release all those prisoners, and admit him and all his Nation to liue as free men, that then hee and all his would submit themselues as subiects vnto him and be baptized, which offer indeed was accepted of by Masquarennas, and thus one of the greatest Prouinces of all the North part of Brasilia, became subiect to the King of Spaine. This conquest beeing ended, our Captaine Generall Masquarennas presently built two strong Forts hard by the Towne, on the Riuer side, and sent to Fernambuquo for forty cast Peeces of Iron, placing twentie in either Fort, many Souldiers, got at this conquest very rich stones, both Diamonds, Rubies, and great store of blue Saphires, in some small Villages that stood by the Sea side. We found great store of Ambergreece, which the Indians call Pirapoun Arepoty, here fortune was somewhat fauourable vnto me, for I got aboue fiue hundred Crownes in this iourney.

Army of Sauages.

Ambergreece.

After this conquest was ended, Manuell Masquarennas returned againe to Fernambuquo, where I found my Master Saluador Corea de Saa, readie to ship himselfe for Portugall, in the same ship that brought him from the Riuer Ianero, which by this time was come from Bayeya, after wee were set ashore at the place, called Ous Busshes de don Rodrigo, where we had all like to haue beene cast away, at my returne from Rio grande to Fernambuquo, I met with two Englishmen, the one of them a Gentleman called Thomas Turner, the other Musgrane, Pilot of a Fly-boate of Master Newtons a Merchant of London, Master Turner by my aduice, went to the Riuer of Ianero, and from thence to Angola, where he made great profit of his Merchandize, for which hee thanked me after we met in England. Now to my storie. The thirteenth of August 1596. Saluador Corea de Saa, Lord Gouernour of the Riuer of Ianero, Captaine Generall of Spirito Santo, Porta Segura, Santos, and San Vincent, departed from Fernambuquo, with fifteene Hulkes of Hamborough, seuen Fly-boates of Omden and Hamborough, and at the least twentie Caruels, all of them being laden with Sugars. The old Mary of Hamborough wherein the Gouernour came was Admirall, a ship of seuen hundred tunnes, the Owner whereof was called Hans Burgo, the new Mary Vice-admirall a ship of fiue hundred tunnes, the Owner called Adrian Cornelias, Rere-admirall a ship of fiue hundred tunnes, the Owner called Conrado, likewise another great ship came with vs, called the George of one Hans Duke, the David and others, with this fleete we departed from Fernambuquo, the fifteenth of August 1599. and in two monethes sayle wee arriued at Lisbone, where I continued with the Gouernour in his house for the space of nine moneths, after which time I fell very sicke, and by this time hauing spent all that I brought with me from Brasill, my misery great, and had beene a great deale greater, had it not beene for a vertuous English woman, which I met withall in a Nunnery, and in that time that I was there, shee made her approbation. By God first, and by her meanes I was saued from dying a most miserable death.

This Thomas Turner I was acquainted with, and receiued of him some nores, which follow after M. Kniuet

A. Kniuet ariueth at Lisbone.

His sickneſſe.

After my comming to Lisbone, I fell very sicke in my Masters house, where I lay in a backe roome hauing only a piece of an old mat for my bed, thus I lay for the space of sicke weekes, in the greatest misery that could be, for first I was sicke of a burning Feuer, none came at mee but a poore slaue of my Masters, for before this time my deare friend Domingos Gomes was dead, this

slaue in loue to me, sometimes would bring me meate and water, sometimes I was two daies without either meate or drinke: in the end of this sixe weekes, Thomas Musgraue and Master Thomas Turner came to me with some Dutchmen, and they amongst them gaue me twelue shillings: I had receiued so many bountifull gifts before of my vertuous friend Mistris Foster, that I would haue chosen rather to haue died, then she should haue knowne my want; but Thomas Musgraue of Ratcliffe, knowing how much she fauoured me, did perswade me to write vnto her, the which (although vnwillingly) I did; presently vpon the receit of my letter, I receiued from her fiftie Crownes, and euery day was visited from her, yet for all this my sicknesse grew to be such, that those that saw me thought that I could not escape, except I had the helpe of some Doctor, then by her meanes, reporting that I was her kinsman, I was carried to the Kings Hospitall, where in two moneths I recouered, being one and twentie times let bloud, and shortly after that I was past all danger, I was very kindely discharged out of the Hospitall, with ten shillings in my purse.

After I came forth of the Hospitall, I thought with my selfe, that the best way was to leaue my Masters house, and determine how to get my liuing by some other meanes: with this determination I went to the Kings Custome house, where I met with many men of all Countries, there I met with some Scotchmen, seeking of one that could speake the language; I hearing them, offered my seruice, & after that, I had as many customers as I could turne my hands vnto, and got by them for interpreting verie good maintenance: many Dutch Merchants would haue had me gone backe againe in their affaires for Brasil, and the Indies, but I still had a desire first to come to England, thinking that there I should finde some meanes to set forth my selfe in some good fashion, but alas I finde that want hath no preferment: now for my comming into England, my determination was to haue tarried somewhat longer then I did, but that my fortunes were and are euer like to be crost, for liuing as I haue told you in verie good fashion, maintaining my selfe verie well by foraine Merchants, that could not speake the Spanish tongue: one day amongst the rest in the Kings Custome house I met with one who told me that my Master Saluador Corea de Saa, did command me to come to him againe, if not, that he would make me be brought whither I would or no: in briefe, I made little account of his message, and held on my course with them by whom I liued, but now my old friend, imprisonment, and miserie comes againe, and I am as farre from my long desired home as euer I was, for Saluador Corea de Saa, seeing I would not come at him, incenst the Viceroy Christopher de Moues against me, telling him what harme I might doe if I got into my Countrie, I presently vpon this was taken in the streete as if I had beene some notorious villaine, carried to prison, cast in a dungeon, where I lay (God be my witnesse) three dales without meate, or sight of light; in the end I espied a little glimpse of the light, and clambering vp the wall, in despaire and halfe madde, I broke downe a peece of a boord that stood before an Iron grate, there I cried out in such sort that a great many came to the window, where many pitied me, but none could helpe me, &c.

§. IIII.

The diuers Nations of Sauages in Brasil, and the adioyning Regions: their diuersities of Conditions, States, Rites, Creatures, and other things remarkeable, which the Author obserued in his many yeares manifold peregrinations.

THe Petiuares are not of so vilde and barbarous conditions as many other Prouinces are in Brasil; for if you come as a Merchant vnto them, they will trafficke with you, if as a Warrier, they will fight very valiantly. They are men of good stature, their bodies are all carued with very fine workes, and in their lips they make a hole with a Roe-bucks horne, and when they come to mans estate, they cut the hole of their lippes with a Cane, and then the hole being bigge they weare a groene Stone therein, and he that hath not this fashion is counted a pesant. These Canibals haue no religion, they may take as many wiues as they will, or as they can get: the women can take no more husbands but one, except her husband giue her leaue in publike before them all, then she may take whom she will. When these Indians goe to the wars, their wiues carry all their prouision in Baskets on their backes: these Canibals goe all naked, and inhabit on the Northerne parts of Brasil from Baya to Rio Grande: they haue no certainty of meate but rootes, and if they kill any wilde Beast or Foule in the Mountaines, when he comes home, looke to which of his wiues he giueth that which he bringeth, with her he will lye that night; then she presently goeth to the water, and washeth her selfe, and lying downe in a net, commandeth all the rest of her husbands wiues to serue her; which they doe very obediently for that day. When the time commeth that any woman is to be deliuered of Childe birth, she will

These Indians when they trauaile through the Wildernesse, doe carry great store of Tobacco with them, and continually they haue a leafe laid along their mouth betweene the lip and the teeth, and as they goe the rume runneth out of the hole, that they haue in their lippes.

Man-eaters. These Canibals warre against the Portugals, and against all other Prouinces of Canibals, and eate all kinde of people that are their enemies, when they take any man, and if they take any prisoner they kill him not, but he that tooke him giueth him to his brother or his friend to kill: and as many men as any Indian killeth, so many names he taketh. When they kill a man, they take a new cord made of Cotten wooll, and binde him that shall dye about the middle, they Manner of their Butchery bring him forth of the prison, and three men holding one end of the Cord, and three the other, he that must dye remaineth fast tied in the middle. Then he that must kill him commeth forth with all his wiues dancing, being painted all in red, and gallantly attired with Feathers of diuers colours on his head, knees, and armes, with a great Sword made of wood in his hands. Comming before him that must dye, he maketh him a long oration, telling him that he must dye, with these words, You must behold the Sunne, and all things that like you, and so bid them farewell, for you shall see them no more. After he hath said these words, he goeth away dancing with his wiues, and presently commeth backe againe hooping and crying, saying, I am he that commeth to kill thee, defend thy selfe: and thus comming behinde him that is to dye, he striketh him in the pole of the necke; and when with that blow he is fallen downe, he breaketh the scull of his head, then they beleeue that he is dead. After that they haue killed him, they take the tooth of a Conie that is set in a peece of wood, and with that they scratch all his body raising the vpper skin, holding the dead man in the flame of the fire, all the vpper skin commeth off, and the flesh remaineth very faire and white. Then they roast and boile it, and feede of it, thinking that mans flesh maketh them strong and valiant.

Townes and houses. These Canibals haue great Townes, their houses are two hundred and twenty yards long, couered with Palmita boughes without any partition. They hang their nets vpon beams that they lye in, and make their fire in the ground: euery morning men, women, and children, doe wash themselues: they haue good store of Ginnie Wheat, and Mandioca, whereof they make Bread. They part their grounds, and are setled, keeping good orders among themselues. In this Countrey there are many good Fruites, and Hearbes of great vertue, and many wilde Serpents, the which as neere as I can I will describe vnto you. In this Countrie I saw Serpents both dead and aliue, or Snakes, that the Indians call Ieboya, you shall finde these Serpents in the Mountaines Serpents called Ieboya. of Rio grande, lying on the ground like the body of a Tree: when anie wilde beast commeth neere him, he striketh out two sinnes out of his forequarters with such force, that whatsoeuer he hitteth he killeth. This Iaboya hath foure legges like a Crocadile, or an Aligator, and a great taile, the which hee hideth vnder him when he lieth in the woods for his pray for the wilde beasts, because that they shall not know him. Likewise in this part of the Countrie, I saw a Strange Munkie Orators. kinde of Munkies, called by the Indians Wariua, they are as bigge as a water Dogge, all blacke, their faces are like a mans; they haue long broad Beards, you shall see twentie of them together in a Tree, and one of them will walke vp and downe alwaies with his hand on his Beard making a great noise, and all the rest sitting still and harkening for the space of an houre.

The Mariquites Tapoyes is a name (as in the Portug. Friers treatise which followeth, appeareth) giuen to 76. Nations. Amerones. On the coast betweene Fernambuque, and Boya inhabite a kinde of Canibals, called Mariquites, which all other Indians call Tapoyes. Tapoyes in their language is a Wilde Man: among all the Canibals that name is held in great disgrace, except among themselues, or another kinde of Canibals, called Vaanasses, like the Mariquites in their behauiour. The Mariquites are men of a good stature, the women are very proper of person, and fight with their Bowes as well as the men. They haue no dwelling, but runne vp and downe the Wildernesse like wilde Beasts: they haue no Religion, nor friendshippe with any Nation, but warre; whersoeuer they come (but now they are in peace with the Portugals.) They haue holes in their lippes, as the other Canibals haue, but they are not carued in their bodies as the Petiuares are: they take wiues as the other Canibals doe, as many as they will. Their language differs from all other Indians, they take a kinde of Gumme to rubbe their bodies with, and then they take the young Feathers of Parats, and other Birds, and paint their bodies. These Canibals are verie tawnie of complexion, verie swift, will neuer come to the field to fight as other Canibals will, but alwaies keepe in the Mountaines, lying in holes, and hiding themselues behinde Trees: and when they see that they haue aduantage of their enemies, they will start out, and hurt, and kill as manie as they can haue aduantage of. Thus when these Caniballes haue done what mischiefe they can, they will runne away, and hee that can runne fastest is accounted most valiant. You shall haue of these Canibals at the Riuer of San Francisco, San Miguell, Saint Antonio. These Caniballes likewise eate mans flesh, but they vse not those Ceremonies which the Petiwares, and other Caniballes doe.

From the Riuer of Saint Francisco to Baya de Todos Santos, inhabit Topinambazes; like the Petiwares in their behauiour: all their bodies are carued from the face to the feete: the women are of better complexion then the Petiwares: they goe all naked as the other Canibals doe; they let their Beards grow long, and so doe no other kinde of Canibals, but still as their haire groweth they pull it away with a likewise they pull away all the haire of the eye-browes, and of their priuie parts: they doe sing and dance like the Petiwares, and doe speake the same language. Topinambazes.

From Baya to the Elews inhabite a kinde of barbarous people, called Waymores: these are men of great stature: they are verie resolute and desperate; as swift of foote as any Horse. These Canibals haue driuen the Portugals from the Ilands, and are so desperate, that fiue or sixe of them will set vpon a Sugar house, where there are at least one hundred persons; and I haue seene one of them, take a man a liue, and defend himselfe with his prisoner, as if one of vs would defend our selues with a Target. They haue long blacke haire like wilde Irish: haue no Townes nor Houses, but runne vp and downe the Wildernesse like wilde Beasts: care not what Prouince they come into, for they are so swift of foote, that no people can hurt them. These feede verie greedily on mans flesh, and are verie filthie people, for their bodies are alwayes foule with dust and durt, lying on the ground and in the ashes. Waymores, strong, tall, swift Sauages.

At Spirito Santo inhabite a kinde of Canibal, called Tomomynos; these are men of good stature, I haue gone to warre against them, many times with the Portugals, at a place called Morogege; they had many Townes in the Ilands that stand in the Riuer of Paruena; their Townes were all serled with great stones set together like pales, of a good height: & within that there are walls made of clay and stone, their houses are long all couered with the barks of trees, and the side of their houses are like hurdles made of Canes, in such sort that they may shoot out of them. We were at least fiue hundred Portugals, and three thousand Indians, in the siege against the Citie of Morogege, and many times the Tomomynos did set vpon vs with such violent force, that wee thought we should all haue beene slaine there, we were forced to settle our selues vnder a walke made with stone, clay, and logs, sending for succour to Spirito Santo. The Indians Tomomynos would stand vpon the wall of their Citie, all decked with feathers, and their bodies all painted with black and red, most vgly to be seene, with things in their hands like a wheele, all done with feathers, the which they would set on fire, and waue it about their heads, crying out to the Portugals, Louas eyane pomembuna, that is to say, Euen as this you shall be consumed. After the fresh men came from Spirito Santo, they began to feare, and to steale out of the Towne. But when we saw that, we made things that the Portugals call Paueses (they are made of Canes, of seuen or eight yards long, that no arrow can passe them) and those the Portugals and Indians that were on our side did carrie before them like a wall, and so came to the wall of their Citie and brake it downe, with hurt and death of many on our side. The Tomomynos. Their Townes walled. Morogege.

Here our Captaine Martin de Sasa, was cast into the Riuer by a Canibal, that tooke him in his armes, and in despight of vs all carried him a stones cast, and threw him into the Riuer, where he had beene drowned if it had not beene for a very famous Indian, called Pataumuyeu, which was the same Martin de Sasa his slaue. This Pataumuyeu (that is to say, Long Tabacco, for the Indians take such names) killed the Canibal that would haue drowned his Master, and so saued him. That day wee had the victorie, and tooke 16000. of them, of the which wee put to the sword 1600. and all the rest we parted among the Portugals. After that, we tooke many small Townes, killing all the old men and old women; likewise we parted the rest that were seruiceable, and so wee returned home; after we had destroyed the Countrie, comming for the space of a weeke downe the Riuer of Paraguna. Then we came to a Towne of Canibals which was called Moron, and from thence to the Hill, called by the Indians, Paranapuacuena, that is to say, the sight of the Sea; and from thence to a place, called by the Canibals, Tupanbopera, that is, the Beades of God; the Portugals call this place the Organes: it hath certaine Halls that lie ouer the Riuer of Ienero, then wee came downe a Riuer called Macuin, and from thence to the Citie of San Sebastian in the Riuer of Iamarin, from whence euery man went with his slaue to his owne house. Valiant Sauage. 16000. taken. Moron.

The Wayaquazes inhabite at Cape Frio, called by the Indians, Iocoua, they dwell both on the North and on the South side of the Cape, in low marish grounds: they are men of bigger stature then the Waymores. I went with Gonsalo Correa de Sosa to warre against these Canibals, and at one time we tooke thirteene of them and laid them bound hand and foot in a house, going forward to take more of them, and when wee returned they were all gone, wee left them fire, and they burned the Cordes from their hands, and so got away. They weare their haire long like wilde Irish; the women doe warre with their bowes and arrowes as well as the men, their houses are very low and little, they doe not lie in Nets as the Tamoyes and other Canibals doe, but on the ground like Hogs, making a fire in the middle of their houses. These Canibals haue no peace Wayaquazes. Women warriors.

with any kinde of Nation, but doe eate all kinde of people, Frenchmen, Portugals, and Blackamoores. Many times whileſt I was at the Riuer of Iannaris, ſome ſhips were caſt away at this Cape, and all the Portugals and Blackamoores were eaten. I haue ſeene them take great dog-fiſhes by the taile, and dragge them aſhoare. In this place I haue ſeene very great water Aligartos (which we call in Engliſh Crocodiles) ſeuen yards long. This Crocodile hath great ſcales, and long clawes very vgly to be ſeene. The Portugals, when they know where any of theſe great ones are, doe fiſh for them with a chaine, and a great Iron hooke, and for bait they tie a Cock or a Hen to the hooke, they take this paines to take him becauſe his Cods are very great, and better then any muske. At this place, the Mountaines are ſo full of Crab-lice, that wee knew not what to doe, they would ſtick in our skins that we could not get them off, but were faine to take drie ſtraw and ſinge our ſelues, as you would ſinge Hogs, and ſo rid our ſelues of them. Here alſo wee had great ſtore of wilde Hogs, and a kinde of wilde Fowle as bigge as Turkies, called Mutas.

Abauſangeream.

Abauſanga, is the name of a valiant Canibal, that is adioyning hard by the Wataquazes, theſe Canibals are a kinde of the Tamoyes. Some twentie yeeres agone there was a Gouernour among them, called Mendeſaa, in the Riuer of Iannaris, who made warre againſt the Tamoyes, and in the end ouer-run all their Countrie or Prouince; onely this Abauſanga remayned hidden in Dungeons and great Holes with ſome fortie or fiftie of his Countrimen. It was our chance going to warre with the Wataquazes to come through this Towne, and there we had newes by Abauſangas people, that he was at warre againſt the Wataquazes; whereupon we made Spies to ſee if we could take him, before that we would ſet vpon the Wataquazes. One euening, we heard a great noiſe of Canibals, then the Captaine ſending out ſome Spies, my ſelfe being one, wee ſaw that it was Abauſanga, and his companie, that had taken fiue Wataquazes, and with great ſtirre were killing of them to eare. Aſſoone as we had eſpyed all that we could, wee returned againe to the Captaine, and told him what we had ſeene, and that night circled Abauſanga, and tooke him priſoner, with ſixtie young men of his companie; wee asked of him our beſt courſe, to warre againſt the Wataquazes, he told vs, that he was rather to take our aduice, then we to aske his, that he vſed no policie but to fight in open field, and if we would, we ſhould ſee how he made warre againſt his enemies: the next day, we being hard by the Inhabitants of the Wataquazes; Abauſanga came forth, and ioyned all his companie together with leaue of our Captaine, and aſſoone as they were all readie vvith their bowes and arrowes, hee ran into the thickeſt of his enemies, with all his companie, where eighteene of his companie were preſently killed, and moſt of them ſore hurt, he himſelfe being ſhot in one and twentie parts. In our ſight he killed three Wataquazes before hee fell; the Portugals kept ſtill by the woods ſide, and with their peeces killed one hundred and thirtie Wataquazes, the wilde people were ſo amazed when they heard our peeces goe off, that they thought the Deuill had beene amongſt them, and euery one began to flie as faſt as he could, the Portugals following them, found Abauſanga in the field hurt, as you haue heard. This Abauſanga aſſoone as he perceiued the Portugals to ſtand amazed at him, deſired them to tell him ſomewhat of God, for he ſaid, that Frenchmen had told him that there was a God, and that he which beleeued in him ſhould be ſaued. The Portugals telling him of their faith, hee ſaid that hee beleeued in that God, and deſired to bee baptiſed, and had his name giuen him Iohn. For the ſpace of two houres that this Indian liued, hee did nothing but call vpon God, and ſo ended his life, being one hundred and twentie yeeres of age, as he ſhewed vs by ſignes.

See the former §.

The Wayanaſſes, inhabite eighteene leagues Southward of the Riuer of Iannaris, at a place called by the Portugals, Ilha Grande, that is to ſay, The great Iland. Theſe Canibals are of low ſtature, great bellies, and broad feet, very Cowards, of a reaſonable good complexion. They doe not carue their bodies, neither doe they glorie ſo much to eate mans-fleſh, as the Tamoyes, the Tomymenos, and other Canibals doe. The Women are bigge in the body, and very vgly, but they haue very good faces. The Women of this Countrie doe paint their bodies and faces with a thing called in their language Vrucu; it groweth in a round Cod like a beane, and that maketh a red inke like Oker; which maketh them ſeeme moſt vgly. The haire both of men and women groweth long by the ſides, and on the crowne all ſhaued like Franciſcan Friars. Theſe Canibals lye in Nets made of barkes of trees, and likewiſe when they trauell through the Wildernesſe, ſuch prouiſion as they haue, they carrie in little Nets at their backs; they are neuer without Tabacco, they eſteeme it more then any thing that they haue in their Countrie, and with it do heale their wounds, when they are hurt. When the Portugals doe ſtand in need of ſlaues, they doe come to Ilha Grande, and there they ſhall be ſure to meet with ſome of the Wayanaſſes a-fiſhing, then they ſhew them Kniues, Beades, and Glaſſes, telling them what they would haue for merchandiſe, and preſently they will goe to a place called in their language Iaouarapipo, which is their chiefeſt Towne, and from thence bring all ſuch as they meane to ſell to the Sea ſide, and as good cheape as you can you may buy of them.

The Topinaques inhabite at Saint Vincents, they are men of good ſtature, and of reaſonable good complexion; their women are all painted with diuers colours, and on their heads, they weare a thin barke of a tree like a Ribband: the Canibals eate mans fleſh as other Canibals doe, they adore no Idoll, neither haue they any kinde of Religion, onely when they kill any man, they they all paint their bodies with a kinde of fruit, called Iunipaua, and all their heads are set with feathers, and great stones in their vnder-lips, with Rattles in their hands, and thus they will dance for three dayes together. I was amased to see how they would drinke a filthy drinke without breaking of their bellies, and asked them how they were able to stand so long and drinke so much of that filthy drinke: they answered me, that Tabacco did make them as fresh as if they had done nothing. Among these Canibals there is great store of gold in many Hills hard by the Sea side, and now the Portugals haue some of those places, I would wee had the rest. Here I end to discourse any farther of the Canibals that dwell by the Sea side, till I haue told you of such Nations as I met withall when I went through the Countrie, and how I came againe to the Sea; I haue told you in the first booke of my trauell, how that fiue or sixe yeeres after I had beene taken by the Portugals, I went to warre against the Canibals with the Portugals. Now by the grace of God, as neere as I can I haue told you of all the Nations, that I saw, and conuerst with in nine moneths, that I trauelled through the Wildernesse with the Portugals, and a yeere and eleuen moneths that I passed with the Canibals themselues.

Canibals called Paries.

THe Canibals called Paries, inhabite at the least one hundred miles within the land, they are most like vnto the Wayanasses, men of low stature, they liue onely on Pine nuts, and small Cocos that are as bigge as Apples, but they haue shells like Wall-nuts, somewhat harder, the Indians call them Eyrires. They are of good complexion, and esteeme very much of clothes if they can get them; the women are all painted with diuers colours, as red, blue, and yellow; they are in peace with the Portugals, and warre with no Nation, neither will they eate mans flesh, if they haue any other meate; they lie in little Nets made of barkes of trees, they haue no houses but two or three boughs tyed together, couered with Palme leaues if it happen to raine. In this part of the Countrie I saw great store of Leopards, and Lions; the Indians call the Leopard, Iawaryte, and the Lions, Iawarosou; and many great Cats of mountaine, which the Indians call Marcayabite, here you may haue of the Indians for a Knife or a Combe, fiue or sixe Gallons of Balsome oile.

Small Cocos.

The Molopaques, bearded Sauages, and ciuiller then others.

After you haue passed the famous Riuer of Paraeyua, you shall come into a Countrie of Canibals, called Molopaques; they are much like vnto Dutchmen in bignesse, very faire of complexion, they haue all beards like other men; so hath not any other kinde of Canibals, except it bee here and there one. Most of them doe couer their priuie parts, they are very ciuill in their behauiour: their Townes are very strong, all circled with walls made of earth and great logs, they haue houses seuerall euery man with his familie. They haue one amongst them whom they call Moronishana, which is their King, but we saw no difference betweene him and the rest, but only the name, and he had (as I remember) thirteene wiues, and no other had so many. Amongst these Canibals we found good store of gold, the which they doe not esteeme, neither doe they vse it for any thing, but to tie on their fishing lines, when they goe a fishing in the Riuer of Para, where they take great store of good fish. Para is beyond Paraeyua eightie leagues: these Indians doe not worke in the mynes for gold, as the Spaniards doe, but onely take such peeces as they finde when the raine hath washt away the earth: for where the mynes of gold are there are no trees, but are drie Mountaines of black earth, which the Indians call Tainquara; and the Mountaine where the Molopaques doe finde this great store of gold, is called Esteparange: if these Canibals had the knowledge of God, I might boldly say, that there are not any in the world like them. The women are goodly of person, faire of complexion, as our English women are, they are very modest and ciuill in their behauiour; you shall neuer see them laugh, they are people very capable to conceiue any thing, they haue their haire so long, that they tie it about their middles with the barke of a tree, wherewithall they couer their nakednesse, they esteeme very much of it. Their haire is of colours like our English women, some yellow, some white, some browne: the women that haue not long haire, to couer their nakednesse, doe weare a kinde of Furre, which they call Sawyathwason. These Canibals doe eate mans flesh, I was not past nine or ten dayes among them, therefore I cannot resolue you further of their customes. In that time I was with them I saw no manner of Religion among them, they doe keepe very good order, obseruing times to eate their meate, at noone, and at night, and that doth not any other Nation amongst them, they are very cleanly in whatsoeuer they doe.

Then wee came to a faire champaine Countrie, where wee found a kinde of Canibals, called Motayas. Assoone as these Canibals heard of our being in their Countrie, they all left their houses, and came to meet vs dancing and singing, telling vs that they were very glad of our comming into their Countrie; they brought Ginny Wheat, Pepper, and diuers kinde of rootes to present vs, and craued our friendship, desiring vs, that we would aide them against the Tamoyes. We desiring nothing more, told them that to that purpose we were come. Assoone as wee came to the houses of these Canibals, all the women would sit about vs, and laying their hands on our bodies, they would weepe most bitterly. After that, euery one of them would bring such victuals as they had; some brought boyled Frogs, others brought Serpents, and Snakes, which wee found very good; other some brought Munkeis, and a kind of wilde Dogge that they kill in the Mountaines.

taines. The men brought vs mans fleſh roſted, drie, as black as a coale, and told vs that it was of a Tamoya that they had killed, and deſired vs that we would eate of it, thinking they had preſented vs a great and daintie diſh. When they ſaw that wee refuſed to eate mans fleſh, they fell a laughing and ſome of them ſaid that we knew not what was good meat. Theſe Canibals are men of ſmall ſtature, browne of complexion, they goe all naked, they weare their haire (as now we doe in England) below their eares, and ſo doe the women. As their haire groweth long, they burne it with fire, making it equall ſo artificially, that you cannot perceiue but that it was cut with Sizors. They will not haue any haire grow on their eye-browes, not on their chin, but ſtill as it groweth they pull it away with a ſhell: their food is Ginny wheat, and Roots, Frogs, Snakes, Serpents, Crocodiles, Monkeis, Dogs that they kill in the Wilderneſſe, Leopards, and Cats of Mountaine; all this is good meat amongſt them, and we found them very good, and were very glad when we could get them to eate.

The Lopes. Then we came to a kinde of Canibali, called Lopes, the Portugals call them Bolreros, theſe Canibals are alwayes in the Mountaines of Pine trees, and haue not any other thing to liue on: I neuer ſaw any houſes that they dwell in, but boughs tyed together with rines of trees, theſe Canibals would come to vs, and tell vs of many things, and would goe with vs two or three dayes, and then would run away from vs, and many times when they did meet with any of our Indians, or our Portugals, they would take away ſuch things as they had about them, and ſend them away without any hurt to their perſons. As wee went through this Countrie we found many mynes of gold, and amongſt theſe Indians our Captaine got good ſtore of it, and many good ſtones. In all America, there is not a richer part then this, but it is ſo farre within the Land, and that Countrie is ſo populous that as yet neither Portugall nor Spaniard can inhabite there. They are men of ſmall ſtature, and very browne of complexion, their bodies are all painted as the other Canibals before named. The women are as browne of complexion as the men, and very rude and ſhameleſſe, for in their behauiour they differ not from wilde beaſts, but in all things liue like them.

Gold in plentie.

The Wayanawaſons, ſimple ſauages. After we had paſſed this Prouince, we came into the Prouince of the Wayanawaſons, where we found them in ſmall Townes built by a Riuers ſide, and found theſe the ſimpleſt Nation of all other: for theſe Canibals would ſtand and gaze vpon vs like herds of Deere, and neuer ſay any thing vnto vs. Here we found great ſtore of Ginny wheat, and pompions that wee did eate. In many Bogs hard by their Towne we killed good ſtore of Crocodiles, and did eate of them, for in this iourney we were almoſt ſtarued. Theſe Canibals are of a good ſtature, bigge, and tall of bodie, and very cleane made of their lims, very ſufficient to behold; but they are a kinde of laſie people, that care not for any thing, but will lie all day laſing in their houſes, and neuer goe abroad but for their victuals. The women are of good ſtature, they are of a dunne pale complexion, and they doe prouide Pompions and Rootes for their husbands. Here we were all, or moſt of vs very ſicke with eating of a kinde of fruit, which the Indians call Madiopuera, this fruit is as bigge as a Horſe plum, as yellow as gold, the kirnell of it is as ſweet as any Almond, of this fruit did moſt of our companie eate, and of them dyed ſixteene, and many others ſicke for a fortnight after.

Venemous plum.

Aſſoone as our companie had recouered we went on our way to ſeeke out the Tamoyes, hauing for our guides ſixe of the Motayes, who carried vs at the leaſt two moneths vp and downe the Wilderneſſe, euery day making vs beleeue, that we ſhould come vnto our enemies Countrie. They brought vs at laſt to the ſight of two Townes along by a Riuer ſide. The Portugals after they had ſeene how great the Townes of the Canibals were, durſt not aduenture to paſſe ouer the Riuer, for feare leſt the Indians had eſpied vs, and were layne in ambuſh. There was not any of all the companie, Portugall nor Indian, that durſt to goe ouer the Riuer; the Captaine and the chiefeſt of the Portugals agreed together and made me goe to the Towne, whether I would or no. When I ſaw that there was no remedie, I tooke my leaue of them all: for I thought verily that I went to the ſlaughter houſe, or at leaſt to haue liued a Canibali with them during my life. With theſe two extremities in my thought, commending my ſoule and bodie to Almightie God: I ſwam ouer the Riuer vpon a little Target made of Corke, and aſſoone as I had landed I went ſtraight to the Towne, where I found nothing but two tame Eſtridges: he people had eſpyed vs, and were run away. When the Portugals had newes from me that there was no body, then they were ſo valiant as Lions, ſtriuing who ſhould get firſt into the Towne, this was the Riuer of Iawarie, the Towne is called Menuare. Here it was that I ſhould haue beene hanged, for ſtriking of Antonio Martines in the Court of guard, after I had killed the great Serpent, called Sorocuen. In this Towne we found great ſtore of Ginny wheat, and Pompions dried in the ſmoke. In this Towne likewiſe we had great ſtore of drie Tabacco, and Potato rootes: wee found great ſtore of gold in peeces, and alſo ſtore of Criſtall, and many other good ſtones; ſome found Diamonds, and a kind of blue ſtones that the Portugals did eſteeme of very much, and called them Pedras de Sangua, bloud-ſtones.

Many ſtraits.

The Serpent Sorocuen deſcribed, his ſtrange forme and qualities. The Serpent that I killed was thirteene ſpan long, it had foure and twentie teeth, as ſharpe as any naile, about the necke it had greater ſhels then the other parts of her body; the ſhels were blacke blacke and ruſſet like a coller, and on her body they were ruſſet and darke greene; vnder her belly all ſpeckled with black and white. It had foure ſharpe feet, no longer then a mans finger, it had a tongue like a harping Iron, her taile was like a ſtraight Bull horne, all black and white liſted. From one of theſe did the Lord defend me, and permitted me to kill one of them with the helue of an axe in the night. The Indians dare not goe to kill one of them except they goe fiue or ſixe of them with bowes and arrowes. All kinde of wilde beaſts, Lions, or Leopards, all kinde of Snakes, but only this, doe feare the fire, and if they come where the Indians leaue any fire trauelling through the Wilderneſſe, if any of theſe Serpents doe finde it, they neuer leaue beating themſelues in it, till they either kill themſelues or put out the fire. Theſe Serpents when they ſeeke their prey will ſtand about a ſmall tree or a bough, and when any wilde beaſt paſſeth, hee falleth vpon him, thruſting his taile into the fundament of whatſoeuer it ſeizeth on.

After we had remayned at this place a fortnight, or three weekes, the Portugals did reſolue to come back againe without any purchaſe, there the Captaine gaue vp his authoritie, and ioyned himſelfe with his friends to ſeeke the neereſt way home, then did I and twelue young men of the Portugals determine to goe to the South Sea by land, for we knew by the Notes of the Motayes, that we were not farre from Peru, and Cuſco, and we knowing how poore our eſtates were, and the great famine we had paſſed comming to the Towne of Menuare, made vs afraid to goe back againe, that way which we had come, and for mine owne part, I encouraged the twelue young Portugals all that I could to goe forward, for I had ſurely beene knocked on the head if I had gone back in my Captaines companie. With much adoe, wee thereon reſolued to ſeeke our fortunes in the Wilderneſſe. After we were departed from our companie, wee came to many Mountaines, where we found good ſtore of gold, and many precious ſtones; when wee came into this Countrie, wee thought wee had beene in the Prouince of Peru, wee had ſuch plentie of mynes, and there was not one of vs but had ſtore of ſtones, that thoſe which we tooke as to day, wee would throw away to morrow to take other better then them which we had before. Thus wee trauelled ſome two moneths in the golden Countrie, till at the laſt wee came to that great and moſt ſtrange Mountaine of Criſtall. This Mountaine is of a huge height, that it ſeemeth to be within the cloudes, and ſo ſteepe that it is impoſſible to goe ouer the top. Here it was that wee paſſed through the Vault, and in truth it was one of the greateſt dangers, and the moſt deſperate that euer I was in.

Aſſoone as we had paſſed this danger, it was the pleaſure of God to deliuer vs into the hands of our mortall enemies the Tamoyes, where my twelue companions were killed and eaten, onely my ſelfe remayned among theſe Canibals a yeere and eleuen moneths, in the which time I went many times to warre againſt other Prouinces that were ioyning vpon the Conntrie of Tamoyes, and (I thanke God) proſpered ſo well that I was very much eſteemed of them, and had a great command ouer them when they went to the field. Theſe Tamoyes be as proper men as any bee in all Europe; they vſe to make holes in their vpper-lips like the Peteuares; moſt of them are of a very faire complexion. The men haue their heads alwayes ſet with feathers of diuers colours which ſheweth very pretily, they goe ſtarke naked. The women are as proper as any Nation can be, tall, comly, well legd, cleane made of body, very ſmall in the waſte, very faire of complexion, fine handed, and very comly faces. They vſe a kinde of caruing ouer their breaſts, which becommeth them very well. Here the Canibals eſteeme not any more of gold, or precious ſtones, then wee doe of any ſtones in the ſtreets: if the Spaniards had knowne of this Countrie, they needed not to haue gone to Peru, there is not like vnto this for all kinde of rich metals, and many kinde of precious ſtones. In this place I liued eighteene moneths, and went naked as the Canibals did. After I had liued with theſe Canibals the time that you haue heard, I was in great fauour and credit with them, inſomuch that they would not doe any thing before they had made me acquainted withall: I haue told them many times of the comming and going of our Engliſh ſhips to the Straits of Magellan, and how well we did vſe all kinde of Nations, and what kinde of all things neceſſarie wee had for their vſe. Theſe wordes made the Canibals deſire to come to the Sea coaſt, and asked of mee how it were poſſible for them to come to dwell by the Sea without being ſlaues to the Portugals: I told them that I knew many places where Engliſh men and French men did vſe to come, but that neither Portugall, nor Spaniard was neuer there. After I had told them what I thought beſt, we all agreed to come through the Prouince of Tocoman, and ſo to the Sea, betweene the Riuer of Plate and Saint Vincents. This Countrie of Tocoman is all ſandie, and in it inhabite the Pigmeys; I haue ſeene many of them amongſt the Spaniards at the Riuer of Plate. They are not altogether ſo little as wee ſpeake of them here in England: their inhabitation in Tocoman is in Caues of the ground. In this Countrie the Inhabitants in many places haue ſuch Wheat as we finde in England, and Caſſaui meale.

This Tocoman is iudged by the Spaniard to be the end of Braſill, and the entring into Peru; for in Tocoma there are all kinde of Braſila Rootes, and all kinde of Corne, aſwell as Peru; this Countrie yeeldeth nothing to the Spaniards, but wilde Horſes, and the Indians of Tocoman are mortall enemies to all the Inhabitants of Peru; therefore the Spaniards doe keepe this Countrie becauſe they keepe the Prouinces of Peru in feare, or elſe they would riſe vp againſt the Spaniards.

niards. After we had passed this Countrie, we came to a Riuer that runneth from Teroman to Chile, where we tarried foure daies making Canoas to passe the Riuer, for there were so manie Crocodiles, that we durst not passe it for feare of them: after we had passed this Riuer, we came to the Mountaine Detodas Metalas, that is, of all Mettals. At this place diuers Spaniards and Portugals haue beene, and certain lawlesse men were set on shoare on this coast by one Pedro de Charamento, which came to this place, and set vp a great Crosse, and on it writ, that the Countrie was the King of Spaines; the which I put out, and writ that it was the Queene of Englands. This hill is of diuers kinde of Mettals, Copper and Iron, some Gold, and great store of Quicke-siluer. It is verie high, and all bare without any Trees. Here likewise was a little Church made, where we found two Images, one of our Lady, and another of Christ crucified. When the Tamoyes saw those signes, they thought that I had betraied them, and (indeede) I was amazed, thinking that we had beene in some part of the Riuer of Plate, and because the Indians should not be discouraged, I shewed my selfe to be very glad, and told them that I knew those were signes that my Countrie men vsed to make when they came into strange Countries: with these perswasions I made the Tamoyes to come on their iourney to the Sea; where otherwise if I had told them it had bin set vp by the Spaniards, the feare that the poore Canibals stood in of them had bin enough to haue made them all returne againe from whence they came. At the last we came to the Sea, as I haue told you, to the Towne of the Caryobs: this Towne standeth in a fine pleasant place, hard by the coast in a faire Bay, where one hundred Ships may anker without any danger. And in this place you shall alwaies haue great store of fish. In this Countrie, for a Knife or a fish hooke, you may buy a dozen of skinnes of very good Furre; and if you will, these Indians will goe (for any trifle) and fetch two or three baskets of Mettals, and some haue had such good lucke, that for two or three Glasses, and a Combe or two, with some Kniues, they haue got the value of foure or fiue thousand Crownes in Gold and Stones. The Towne stood vpon a hill, but we puld it down. But when we were taken by the Portugals, and that the Caryobs were restored againe to their Countrie, they did situate againe within the same place where they were when we draue them out of their Countrie. Here the Portugals did binde mee, and would haue hanged mee for the twelue Portugals that the Canibals had killed and eaten.

The Caryobs.

The Caryobs are men of good stature, and very valiant: they make holes in their vnder lippe as the other Canibals doe. These Canibals likewise eate mans flesh, and speake the same language that the Tamoyes doe: the women are very comely, the most of them are of a faire complexion; they weare their haire loose about their eares, and all their bodies are died with blacke, and their faces withered, and yellow, their brests are all carued with diuers colours, which beseemeth verie well. Here is the end of my trauell through America, with the Canibals, from whence I returned againe to my Master Saluador Correa de Sasa; where I was worse then euer I was before.

The Giants of Port Desire, and inhabitants of Port Famine: also Angola, Congo, and Massangana, and Angica, Countries of Africa.

AT Port Desire, which is the next hauen to the straits of Magelan, inhabited Giants of fifteene or sixteene spans of height. I affirme, that at Port Desire I saw the footing of them, by the shoare side, that was aboue foure foote of one of our mens in length; and I saw two of them that were buried newly, the one of them was foureteene spannes long. After I was taken with the Spaniards, the Desire, one of our Shippes that had beene all alone at Port Desire, lost nine men and a boy, and two or three of them that had beene taken on the coast of Brasil, said that these Giants did throw stones of such bignesse at them out of strings, that they were faine to weigh anker, and to lye further from the shoare. I saw another of these in Brasil, that was taken by Alonso Dias a Spaniard, that with foule weather was driuen out of Saint Iulians; this was but a young man, yet aboue thirteene spannes long. This Port Desire is a faire pleasant Countrie, it hath many fine Riuers, and the Spaniards doe affirme, that from this place it is easie to goe to the Indians Chele, which is a very rich Countrie. In Port Desire, in many small Riuers there is great store of Pearle, and Currall. Here you may haue great store of Penguins and Seales at an Iland that lieth a mile Southward of the mouth of the hauen. These Giants whereof I haue spoken, goe all naked, they weare their haire long to the shoulders. He whom I saw at Brasil, was a man of faire complexion, and very well proportioned according to his long stature: and this is all that I can report of them, for I know not their behauiour, but as the Portugals and Spaniards iudge, they are no better then the Man-eaters of Brasil.

Port Famine in the Straits of Magelan.

Wide mouthed men.

At Port Famine the Generall would haue left mee. Here inhabit a kinde of strange Canibals, short of body, not aboue fiue or six spans high, and very strong and thicke made: their mouthes are verie bigge, and reach almost to their eares; they eate their meate in a manner raw, for they doe nothing but scorch it a little in the fire, and so eate it, and with the bloud that runneth from their mouthes, they smeare all their faces, and their breasts, and lay yong feathers on their bodies to the bloud that clingeth to their skinnes like Glue. When we were at the straits in this place, place, there came aboue foure or fiue thousand vnto vs of them; but they neuer brought vnto vs any thing but Feathers and Pearle as much as we would (for there is great store in this Port Fasmine) all the while that we were at it. These Canibals would neuer let vs come so neere them, as to touch any of them, for feare we should take them; when they would giue vs any thing, they would tie it at the end of a long staffe, and so likewise we did to them. Here our Generall left seuen sicke men ashore: the Snow lyeth all the yeare on the Mountaines, and it is so cold in Iune, and Iuly, that our men did freeze, and many of them lost their toes, as I my selfe for one, for in one night that I lay moist of my feete, I lost three of my toes on one of my feete, and foure of the toppes of the other foote; some had their feete frozen, some their noses, as Harris a Gold-smith, Henry Barrawell, that was taken with me, lost his haire from his head, and was all bald for a yeare or two in Brasil: yet for all this cold, all the Inhabitants goe naked, except here and there one weare seale skinnes, or the skins of some wilde Beasts, of the which there are many, as Leopards, Lions, and a kinde of Beasts bigger then Horses, they haue great eares aboue a span long, and their tailes are like the tailes of a Cowe; these are very good, the Indians of Brasil call them Tapetywason: of these Beasts I saw in Ethiopia, in the Kingdome of Manicongo, the Portugals call them Gombe: farther within the Straits at Tolisbay, we found many barkes of trees, that the Indians of the Straits doe fish in, these Indians would not come neere vs, but still as they spied our Boates they would runne away, but we plainely saw that they were men of good stature, and of white skinnes; they goe all naked both men and women. And thus I end my trauell of America.

Extreame cold and naked people.

Beasts bigger then Horses at the Magellan straits, called Tapetywason, in Ethiopia: whether he meaneth Zebra or Danteca, see Tom. 1. p. 1002.

Angola is a Kingdome of it selfe in Ethiopia, where first the Portugals did begin to inhabit: the Countrie of Angola commeth along the coast, as Portugall doth vpon Spaine, so doth Angola runne vpon the Kingdome of Longa and Manicongo. In Angola the Portugals haue a Citie, called the Holy Ghost, where they haue great store of Merchandise, and the Moore doe come thither with all kinde of such things as the Countrie yeeldeth, some bring Elephants teeth, some bring Negro slaues to sell, that they take from other Kingdomes which ioyne hard by them: thus doe they vse once a weeke, as we keepe Markets, so doe all the Blackamoores bring Hens and Hogs, which they call Gula, and Hennes they call Sango, and a kinde of Beast that they take in the Wildernesse like a Dogge, which they call Ambroa: then they haue that Beast which before I haue told you of, called Gumbe, which is bigger then a Horse. The Blackamoores doe keepe good Lawes, and feare their King verie much: the King is alwaies attended with the Nobles of his Realme, and whensoeuer he goeth abroad, he hath alwaies at the least two hundred archers in his guard, and ten or twelue more going before him singing and playing with Pipes made of great Canes, and foure or fiue yong Moores comming after him as his Pages, after them follow all his Noblemen. When there falleth out anie controuersie among them, they craue battell of the King, and then they fight it out before him. They come before the King and fall flat on their breasts, then they rise vp and kneele on their knees stretching out their armes, crying Mahobeque benge, benge; then the King striketh them on the shoulders with a Horse-taile, then they goe to the Campe, and with their Bowes they fight it out, till they kill one another. After the battell is done, if any liueth, he that liueth falleth downe before the King in the same manner as he did when he went to the field, and after a long oration made, he taketh the Horse-taile from the Kings shoulder, and waueth it about the Kings head, and then laieth it on his shoulder againe, and goeth away with great honour, being accompanied with all the Nobles of the Court: the Moores of Angola doe know that there is a God, and doe call God Gari pongoa, but they worship the Sunne and the Moone.

Of Angola to which he fled out of Brasil, as is before deliuered.

The King's pompe.

Rites of the people.

The Countrie is Champain plaine, and drie blacke earth, and yeeldeth verie little Corne, the most of any thing that it yeeldeth is Plantons, which the Portugals call Baynonas, and the Moores call them Mahonge, and their Wheate they call Tumba, and the Bread Auon; and if you will buy any Bread of them, you must say Tala Cuna auen tumbola gimbo, that is, giue me some bread, here is money. Their money is called Gull gimbo, a shell of a fish that they finde by the shoare side, and from Brasil the Portugals doe carrie great store of them to Angola. These Moores doe esteeme verie much of red, blew, and yellow cloathes, they will giue a slaue for a span of cloath in breadth I meane, and the length of it of the breadth of the peece, those peeces of cloth they weare about their middles, and vnder it they hang the skin of a great Weasell before them, and another behinde them, and this is all the garments that they weare. A Weazell in their language is called Pucen. You can doe a Blackamoore no greater disgrace, then to take away his Skinne from before him, for he will dye with griefe if he cannot be reuenged: the Portugals doe marke them as we doe Sheepe with a hot Iron, which the Moores call Crimbo, the poore slaues stand all in a row one by another, and sing Mundele que sumbela be Carey ha belelelle, and thus the poore rogues are beguiled, for the Portugals make them beleeue that they that haue not the marke is not accounted a man of any account in Brasil or in Portugall, and thus they bring the poore Moores to be in a most damnable bondage vnder the colour of loue. The Countrey of Angola yeeldeth no stone, and very little wood: the Moores doe make their houses all couered with earth; these houses are no bigger then a reasonable Chamber, and within are many partitions, like the Cabbins of a ship, in such sort that a man cannot stand vpright in them. There beds are made of great Bulrushes sowed together with the rindes of a Tree. They doe make cloth like Sparke of Veluet (but it is thinner) of the barke of a Tree, and that cloth they doe call Mollelleo.

Taking of Elephants.

The Elephants doe feed in the Euening and in the Morning in low marishes as there bee many. The Moores doe watch which way they come, and assoone as the Elephants are at meat, they digge great holes in the ground, and couer them with sticks, and then they couer the pits with earth, and when they haue made all readie they goe to the Elephants, and shoote at them with their Arrowes, and assoone as the Elephants feele themselues hurt, they runne at whatsoeuer they see before them, following after the Blackamores that chase them, then they fall into the deepe pits where after they are once in, they cannot get out. The Moores of Angola are as blacke as Iet; they are men of good stature, they neuer take but one Wife, whom they call Mocasha. These Moores doe cut long streakes in their faces, that reach from the top of their eares to their chinnes. The women doe weare shels of fishes on their armes, and on the small of their legges. The Law amongst them, is, that if any More doe lie with an others wife, hee shall lose his eares for his offence. These Moores doe circumcize their children, and giue them their names, as wee doe when we baptize. Angola may very easily be taken: for the Portugals haue no Forts to defend it of any strength.

Circumcision.

Of Conga.

The King of Congo is the greatest King in all Aethiopia, and doth keepe in the field continually sixtie thousand Souldiers, that doe warre against the King of Vangala, and the King of Angola; this King is a Christian, and is brother in Law of Armes with the King of Spaine, his seruants of his house are most of them all Portugals, and hee doth fauour them very much. The King is of a verie liberall condition, and verie fauourable to all Trauellers, and doth delight verie much to heare of forreigne Countries. He was in a manner amazed to heare how it was possible her Maiestie had liued a Maiden Queene so long, and alwaies reigned in peace with her subiects. When I was brought before the King, and told him of my Countrie; what plentie of things we had, if the Portugals had not liked of it, they would interrupt my speech, and the King would shew himselfe verie angrie, and tell them that euerie man was best able to speake of his Countrie, and that I had no reason but to tell him that which was true. The King of Congo, when hee goeth to the Campe to see his Armie, rideth vpon an Elephant in great pompe and maiestie, on either side of the Elephant he hath six slaues two of them were Kings, that he himselfe had taken in the field; all the rest were of noble birth; some of them were brothers to the King of Ancica, and some of them were of the chiefest bloud of the great King of Bengala. These noble slaues at euerie command of the King of Congo; doe fall flat on the ground on their brests. When the King doth ride as you haue heard, they carrie a Canopie as it were a cloth of State ouer his head. His two Secretaries, the one a Nobleman of Spaine, the other a More, doe ride next after him. Before him goeth at the least fiue hundred Archers, which are his Guard, then there followeth a More, which doth nothing but talke aloud in praise of the King, telling what a great Warriour he hath beene, and praising his wisdome for all things that hee hath accomplished verie honourably to his great fame of such as knew him. When this King of Congo commeth to his Host, all the Souldiers as he passeth, fall flat on their faces to the ground. He neuer commeth into his Host after any battell, but hee dubbeth at the least twentie Knights Portugals, and as many Moores, giuing them verie great liuing according to their callings, and the seruice that they haue done. The brother of this King was in Spaine, at my comming from thence for Ambassadour from his brother.

The King.

Here the Portugall Captaine would haue taken mee perforce, to haue beene a common Souldier, but the King commanded that they should let mee goe whether I would, and my determination at that time was to haue gone for the Countrie of Prester Iohn, for I had a great desire to see the Riuer of Nilo and Ierusalem (for I accounted my selfe as a lost man, not caring into what Countrie or Kingdome I came) but it was not the will of God, that I should at that time obtaine my desire. For trauelling through the Kingdome of Congo, to haue gone to the Kingdome of Angila, It was my fortune to meete a companie of Portugall Souldiers that went to a Conqueste, that the King of Spain had newly taken, called Masangana; which place is on the borders of Anguca. Here they made me serue like a Drudge, for both day and night I carried some stone and lime to make a Fort. It lieth right vnder the Line, and standeth in a bottome in the middle of foure hils, and about are many fogges, but not one Riuer. It is the vnfirmest Countrie vnder the Sunne. Here the Portugals die like Chickens; you shall see men in the morning verie lustie, and within two houres dead. Others, that if they but weat their legges, presently they swell bigger then their middle; others brake in the sides with a draught of water. O, if you did know the intollerable heate of the Countrie, you would thinke your selfe better a thousand times dead, then to liue there a weeke. There you shall see poore Souldiers lie in troupes, gaping like Camelians for a puffe of winde. Here liued I three moneths, not as the Portugals did, taking of Physicke, and euerie weeke letting of bloud and keeping close in their houses when they had any raine, obseruing houres, and times to goe abroad morning and Euening, and neuer to eate to eate but at such and such times. I was glad when I had got any thing at morning, noone or night, I thanke God I did worke all day, from morning till night, had it beene raine or neuer so great heate. I had alwaies my health as well as I haue in England. This Countrie is verie rich, the King had great store of Gold sent him from this place: the time that I was there, the King of Angica had a great Citie at Masangana; which Citie Paulas Dias, gouernour of Angola, tooke and scituated there, and finding hard by it great store of Gold, fortified it with foure Forts, and walled a great circuit of ground round about it, and within that wall, now the Portugals doe build a Citie, and from this Citie euerie day they doe warre against the King of Angica, and haue burnt a great part of his Kingdome.

Angica.

The Angicas are men of goodly stature, they file their teeth before on their vpper Iawe and on their vnder Iawe, making a distance betweene them like the teeth of a Dogge; they doe eate mans flesh, they are the stubbornest Nation that liues vnder the Sunne, and the resolutest in the field that euer man saw; for they will rather kill themselues then yeelde to the Portugals: they inhabit right vnder the line, and of all kinde of Moores these are the blackest; they doe liue in the Law of the Turkes, and honour Mahomet, they keepe manie Concubines as the Turkes doe, they wash themselues euerie morning vpwards, falling flat on their faces towards the East. They weare their haire all made in plaits on their heads, as well men as women: they haue good store of Wheate, and a kinde of graine like Fetches, of the which they make Bread: they haue great store of Hennes like Partridges, and Turkies, and all their feathers curle on their backes: their houses are like the other houses of the Kingdomes aforenamed. And thus I end, shewing you as briefe as I can, all the Nations and Kingdomes that with great danger of my life I trauelled through in twelue yeares of my best age getting no more then my trauell for my paine. From this Kingdome Angica, was I brought in Irons againe to my Master Saluador Correa de sa sa, to the Citie of Saint Sebastian in Brasil, as you haue heard. Now you haue seene the discourse of my trauels, and the fashions of all the Countries and Nations where I haue beene, I will by the helpe of God, make you a short discourse in the language of the Petiwares, which language all the Inhabitants of Brasil doe vnderstand, especially all the coast from Fernambucque to the Riuer of Plate, the which I hope will be profitable to all trauellers, and of them I trust my paines shall be well accepted of.

Of Riuers, Ports, Harbours, Ilands of Brasil: for instruction of Nauigators.

Rio Grande, is called by vs the great Riuer, lately was conquered by a Portugall, called Manuell Masquarenhas. It is aboue two leagues broad in the mouth, and on the South-east side standeth a great Fort made by the foresaid Manuell Masquarenhas: that Countrie is plaine and sandy in many places, especially neere the Sea, and yeeldeth Sugar Canes in abundance. On the coast are many great Bayes, where the Indians doe oftentimes finde great store of Ambergreese: within this place, there is also store of Wood, Pepper, Ginger, and Waxe. Here inhabit a kinde of Canibals, called Petywares: these Canibals haue had trafficke a long time with France, and amongst them there are many that can speake French, which are Bastards, begotten of Frenchmen.

Rio Grande.

Ambergreese.

On the coast of Brasil there are three Riuers of Paraeyua: one is this that lieth next to Rio Grande, the other is a great Riuer that runneth through the Countrie almost as farre as Lymo, and commeth out betweene Cape Frio and Spirito Sancto: the third is a faire Riuer that lieth betweene the Riuer of Plate and Saint Vincents. This Pareyna whereof we speake, is a faire great Bay, where shipping being neuer so great may enter, within this Bay vpon a hill, you shall see a faire Citie, and on the Sea side standeth two small Forts. You may anker neere the shoare, at the entrie of this Bay, you shall see three hils of red earth on either side of the harbour, which the Portugals call Bareras Mermelhaes.

Paraeya three Riuers.

A Riuer called Guyana, I mean not that of Sir Water Rawly.

Guyana, is a small Riuer that lieth by Paraeua, it belongeth to Iasper Desiquerd, who was chiefe Iustice of all Brasil. In the mouth of this Riuer standeth a great rocke, which is continually couered with Sea Foules. This Riuer hath two fadome water in the mouth, a quarter of a mile within this Riuer, on the South-west side, you may take fresh water, and great store of Cattell: vpon this Riuer there are great store of Sugar-Mils, and continually you shall haue in this Riuer small Caruels that fish, and carry Sugar from thence to Fernambuquo: likewise here is great store of Brasil, Pepper, Ginger, and Cotten, Cocos, Indian Nuts, here likewise inhabit Petywares.

The description of a place, called by the Indians Etamariqua.

Etamariqua in the Indian language is a bed, it is a point of the land like a Cape: the point runneth halfe a mile into the Sea, and vpon it the Portugals haue built a Towne, you may anker very neere the shoare, both on the South-west and on the North-east side of the Towne, in seuen and eight fadome water. All the Countrie till you come to Cape Augustin, is low land, and to saile from thence to Fernambuquo is no danger, but the clifts which lye along the coast, as farre as the Riuer Saint Francis, which are alwayes seene, the Seas when there are any Spring tides, doe ouerflow the land behinde: moreouer if any winde blow from the East, it beateth the Sea into hils of the Clifts, that it maketh a great noise. Wherefore the Indians call it the Land of the Bell. Here are reasonable store of Sugars, and great store of Coco Nuts.

Fernambuquo and the Citie of Olinda.

On the North side of Fernambuquo, you shall see white Downes, and when you are past all the Downes on the South, you are by Capiguramirinj, which is a place where alwaies you shall see Fisher-men in small Boates or Iangades; and from thence to Fernambuquo, are fiue or six miles, and so if you be vnder 8. degrees, you shall see a flat land euen and bare, called Capitunja; then you must take heede you runne not Southward, for then you runne vpon a point of the land, called by the Portugals Punta de Olynda, which is foure leagues from the Cape, and stretcheth into the Sea as farre as Cape Augustin. As soone as you haue doubled this point, you must take heede you put not in with the Towne of Olynda, which you shall see; for if you doe, you will runne vpon the Sands, called by the Portugals Baxos de S. Antonio, which lye at least foure or fiue miles into the Sea, being neere the shoare, you shall see the Shippes that lye at anker ouer the Clifts, called by the Portugals Arecias: this place is a league from Fernambuquo, being the harbour where all the Shipping that goes from Fernambuquo doe arriue: from this place to the Cape yon shall see the Clifts, as if it were a wall made by Bricklayers, no higher in one place then in another, but all euen. The Towne of Fernambuquo is scituated vpon a hill, and very strongly entrenched round about, on the Sea side euery twelue score, standeth a small Fort or defence for Soldiers, with foure cast Peeces, and so they scoure all the shoare from the Arecias, where the Shippes lye to the point of Olynda, which is the farthest part of the Towne Northwards, from the Arecias where the Ships lye commeth a Riuer through the land, a Harquebusse shot from the Sea coast, and runneth right behinde the Towne from the South to the West and East, which maketh the Towne almost an Iland, all but a little part of the North side.

Cape of Saint Augustine.

The Cape of Saint Augustin is a Point of land that runneth into the Sea two or three miles: from the Sea you shall see three hils, called by the Petywares, Aquare Wasen Remitum, they will seeme vnto you like the backe of a Camell, and now you may easily know it, for you may see a Church that the Portugals haue built; and halfe a league towards the South, you shall see the Iland of Saint Aleyxo.

Il. of S. Aleyxo.

The Iland of Saint Aleyxo is long and narrow: it lieth within a league of the shore, and stretcheth North-east and South-west, you may anker betweene the shoare and it all weathers, for the Iland hath very faire Baies, where you may lye in ten or twelue fadome water. Vpon this Iland you may take wood or fresh water.

Porto Decalon.

Porto Decalno lyeth Southward of the Iland of Saint Aleyxo, it is a flat land, you neede not feare the comming in by the rockes, for hard by them you shall haue fourteene fathome water. Here you shall haue great store of Cattell, and Sugars. This Countrie is plaine low land, and all planted with Sugar Canes: you shall know this harbor very easily from the Southerne point of the Iland Saint Aleyxo, for when it ebbeth, you shall see a faire Bay, and all the shore bare almost to the Cape, being blacke ground.

Riuer of Bones

Eight leagues Southward from the Porto de calno, is the Riuer of Bones. Southward of it you shall see three great red Hills, which stand ouer the Riuer of Camaryiuma, which is a league from this Riuer, you shall see from Sea a great Bay run within the Land, and before the mouth of it many great Rocks, to come to this Bay you must come close to the shoare on the South-west side, and after you bee in the Bay keepe full West, and it will bring you to a Riuer that runneth into the Land at the least twentie leagues. In the mouth of this Riuer dwell sixe or seuen Portugals, that keepe Cattell for Iohn Pays, but they are of no strength. Here you may take water at pleasure, and alwayes in these houses, that stand in the mouth of the Riuer, you shall haue good store of Cassaui meale. If you be of any strength, that you dare goe ten or twelue miles vp the Riuer you shall take good store of Sugars, for there standeth three or foure Sugar mills onely, an other on the Riuer side; likewise here is good store of Brasill, and Pepper, Cotton, and many other merchandise.

Camaryiuua (as I haue said) lyeth a league Southward from the Riuer of stones, to know it you shall see three Hills of red ground, called by the Portugals, Barcos Vermellos, this place is not inhabited: the mouth of this place is narrow, and hath not aboue fiue foot water, but you may anchor in the Bay hard by the Riuer, and send your Boat safely for fresh water without danger, or to fish with your Net, for there is great store of fresh fish of all kindes. Camaryiuua.

The Riuer of Saint Antonio lyeth seuen leagues from Camaryiuua, it is a faire great Riuer, lyeth some fiftie leagues within the Land, hath foure fathom water at the comming in, but is so narrow that no ship can come in. It is a very good place for you if you stand in neede (hauing salt) to make your prouision, for there you shall haue great store of all kinde of fish, especially of a kinde of fish, called by the Indians, Varana, which is as bigge as an Oxe. After you are within this Riuer, you shall haue high land on both sides, and you must be carefull and keep good watch, for vp this Riuer dwelleth a kinde of people, called Caraÿas, these people if they see you vnprouided will fight with you, but if they see you able to defend your selues, then will they bring such things as they haue to traffick. The Riuer of Saint Antonio. Salt. Fish Varana.

The Harbour of French-men, called by the Indians, Aiurema piasaie, lyeth two leagues Southward from the Riuer of Saint Antonio. It is a small Bay, that may be knowne by a high Hill that standeth ouer it, which is all full of Brasill trees. To enter into this Harbour, you must marke the Cliffes, and when you are to the North of them all but one, you may safely come within a stones cast to the shoare. When you haue landed if you want fresh water, you must seeke on the South side of the Hill, and you shall finde a streame that runneth out of the Hill into a great Cisterne of stone, which is made out of a Rocke, you cannot misse of this place if you seeke for it, for all the way you shall see small Rocks, and mens names written in them. A place called the Harbour of Frenchmen.

This Riuer in our language is called the Riuer of Crocodiles, for in it there are many, which the Indians call Iaquares; it is narrow, and in the mouth of it standeth a white Rocke. To enter it you must take heed you keepe on the North side of this Rocke, and you shall finde nine and ten foot water; after you be within it you shall come to a great Bay, and on the North-east side you shall finde a small Riuer, where you may take fresh water, but let euery man take heed how hee leapeth into the water, for the Crocodiles lie by the banke-side hidden, and if any thing fall into the water presently they kill it. Here is nothing to bee had vnlesse you will fish for the Crocodiles, and take the Bladders or Cods of muske from them: here you need not feare any Inhabitants, except you be espyed by some passengers that goe to Fernambuquo. Riuer called Iaquareaſicke.

Alaqua is a very faire Riuer, that lyeth foure leagues Northward from the Riuer of Saint Michael, and three leagues Southward from the aforesaid Riuer of Crocodiles. On either side of it you shall see a great Hill, called by the Portugals, Os Caiuas. You shall finde but seuen or eight foot water at the comming, and very cleere from any Rocks, but after you bee within, you shall finde many bankes of sand, where you shall kill good store of fish, and alwayes you shall bee sure to haue Caruells fishing in this place, at the comming in on both sides you may take fresh water. Alaqua.

Before the Riuer of Saint Michael you shall see the Cliffes like Arecines of Fernambuquo; you must enter at the end of the Cliffe, hard by the shoare on the South-west: and you must marke a small Cliffe that lyeth betweene the mouth of the Riuer and the shoare, this Cliffe you leaue betweene you and the shoare, and betwixt this Cliffe and the great Rocks you may enter it; three fathom water. But take heed when you enter, that you saile not towards the North-east, although you see the Bay great, for you shall run vpon many great bankes of sand, therefore you must keepe West still within a stones cast of the shoare, so shall you be sure to keepe in the Channell. Thus you must saile till you discouer a house, that you shall see doubling a Point full South from you, then your best is to anchor, for if you goe farther, you are in danger except you know the Channell very well. In this place dwels a Portugall, called Iohn de Rocho: and vp a Riuer that you shall see runne into the Land dwell many Portugals, where they haue a Church with Friars to say Masse. Here you shall haue good store of Cartell if you need, and Brasill wood, Cassaui meale: and in this Riuer you shall haue good store of Oisters, and in them you shall find many great Pearles: likewise here is good store of Balsom oile, and trees of All Nesico, which is a very precious and rich wood, singular good for bruises, or old hurts: also here is good store of Tabacco. This place is eight leagues from the Riuer of Toades, where we were driuen on the Rocks, because we knew not where wee were, for it is a singular good Harbour to enter, if a man know the comming in betweene the Rocks, called, Os Bayos de Don Rodrigo. Riuer of Saint Michael.

Because the Indians indeed doe kill many Toades, therefore they call it Cororoen, that is to say, the Riuer, or water of Toades, I tell you the name in the Indian language. Because in all places you shall haue of them, and so you may know when they tell you where you are. When you are in ten degrees and an halfe Southwards of the Equinoctiall Line, you shall see fiue hils and the three that standeth on the North side of this place whereof wee speake are round and high, the other two that stand on the South, not farre in distance one from another, are long and lower then the other, if you come neere the shoare, you shall see a great many of small Rockes, and a great Bay which is the place I speake of, right before this Bay you shall see two great Rockes, to The Harbour, called The Riuer of Toades.

goe into this Harbour, you must passe betweene these Rockes which are called Bayos de don Rodrigo, when you are entred you may anchor hard by the Rockes, and sound the Channell, which will lye North-east from you. Here you may haue fresh water vp the Riuer, but it will be hard for you to find, therefore your best is to goe a quarter of a mile by the Sea side, and you shall see a faire Riuer, where you may take water at pleasure, and kill good store of fish. At this place comming from the Riuer of Ienero, in the night we were driuen vpon the Rockes for want of a Pilot that knew the Coast.

I doe not set downe the places betweene this and the Cape Frio, because I know them not, but by report of other Trauellers, and therefore I leaue it to them, for I will write no more but what I haue seene, and am able to proue when time shall serue, and thus I end shewing you all that I haue seene on the Coast Northward of Cape Frio, which is in our Language Cape Cold.

Cape Frio is a point of the Land that runneth into the Sea at least twelue mile, it lyeth vnder 22. degrees. At this Cape you may haue sight of a great Mountaine, that you may see ouer it called Abausango Retambuera, here you may anchor on the East-side of this Cape in a Harbour called Abayia formoze. Here you may haue great store of Brassell-wood, and in this Bay you shall find oftentimes good store of Amber-greece, and on the North side of this Bay you shall see a great Riuer called vparasou, where you may kill good store of many kinde of fishes, and in the mouth of this Riuer you shall haue great store of Corall, if you will dragge for it.

R. Saquarema. Saquarema is a Riuer, where the Frenchmen did traffique with the Canibals called Tamoyes; it floweth foure leagues Southward from the Cape. This Riuer is narrow at the comming in, you shall find twelue foote water, till you be three or foure leagues vp the Riuer. You shall find fresh water on either side of the Riuer, and great store of Brassell-wood, all along the Riuer side. On the South side of this Riuer you shall see a great hill which the Indians call Boypeua, that is, The rotten Whale, for you shall see the top of it like a dead Whale. If you want refreshing, you may haue good store of Potato Roots there, Plantons, Lemons, Orenges, and many other good Roots as bigge as great Turnips, which the Indians call Caranasou.

Etioca. Etioca is a league Southward of the Riuer of Saquarema, It is (as I haue said in the description of my trauell) a great and huge Rocke, hollow within, where the Indians say that the seruant of God did preach vnto them, which they call Topannayapera, before the mouth of this Rocke towardes the Sea standeth another flat Rocke, that reacheth somewhat into the Sea; vpon it you shall see the prints of bare feet, here if you fish with Lines, you may quickly lade your shippe. A little behind this stone house, you shall see a fine Riuer of water, where you shall finde many pretie greene stones that Indians doe vse to weare in their lips. You may anchor within a Musket shot of the shore, but it is verie dangerous if the wind be in the East.

Piratininga. Piratininga is fiue leagues to the Southward of Etioca, right before it standeth a small Iland, it is inhabited by the Portugals, It is a Bay that runneth betweene two Mountaines a mile and more within the Land. There I haue seene a Mermaid and many other strange fishes. You may lie with your shipping at the Iland, and send your Boates ashore, where you shall find great store of Cattle; and you may take good store of all kind of fishes if you will, either with Hook or Net. Here you may haue Oranges, Lemmons, and Cassaui Meale, and all other such things that the Countrey yeeldeth, but you must be alwaies sure to keepe good watch, for feare of the Portugals of the Riuer of Ianuary, which are hard by you.

Mermayd seen by the Author.

The Riuer of Ienero, and Citie of Saint Sebastian. The Riuer of Ianuary lieth three leagues from Piratininga, it is a great Arme of the Sea, that runneth into the Land at the least fourteene miles; on the mouth of this place, stand foure Ilands, and now the best marke that it hath to be knowne, is a Fort that standeth on the North side of the comming in of the Harbour, vpon a Rock. On the South side standeth a Hill that reacheth into the Sea, which the Portugals call Cano, that is, The top of a ship, for it seemeth like the maine top-saile of a ship from Sea. Hard by the Sea side on the foote of this Hill on the North side of the Hill as you saile into the Harbour; standeth a Rocke of great height made like a Sugar-loafe, and is called by the Portugals the Sugar-loafe. In the midst of the going in, in the mouth of this Riuer lieth a Rocke plainly to bee seene, to goe in you must keepe betweene the Rocke and the Fort, that standeth on the North side of you. When you are entred the mouth of the Riuer and are past the Fort, you shall see an Iland lie right before you, and euen with a Church called Santa Lucia, this Iland is called the Iland of Brigalion. You must be sure to passe on the North side of this Iland, and assoone as you haue passed it, you shall see all the Citie both on the Hill, and on the Sea side. Then you must take heed that you goe not right to the Towne, for you shall run vpon certaine shelues of sand, that lie right before the Towne all along to a small Iland called the Iland of Saint Bent, this Iland lieth a quarter of a mile from the Iland of Bragalion, and Eastward of this Iland of Saint Bent, standeth a great Rocke, you may saile betweene the Rocke and the Iland, and assoone as you haue entred, betweene them you may anchor hard by the Iland, and then you shall see a Church standing vpon a Hill which is called Saint Bent, then you need not feare to goe right before the Towne, within a Caleeuer shot of the shore from the Towne, you shal see on the North-east shore a towne of Canibals, called Saint Lorenzo, which is in peace with the Portugals, and within the Bay you shall finde many Riuers and Sugar-mils, where there is great profit to be made.

Iland of Brigalion.

Iland of Saint Bent.

Waratina lieth three leagues from the Riuer of Ianuary, you may know it by two Ilands that lie right before the mouth of the aforesaid Riuer. At the mouth of the Riuer likewise standeth a high Hill, and on either side both on the South-west and North-east is low Land, in this place you cannot enter with any ship, but you may anchor betweene the Ilands, and send your Boats ashore. If you goe vp, you shall find good store of Potatoe Roots, Plantons, great store of Oranges and Lemmons, and many other kind of fruits, which are very good to releeue sicke men. If you will fish with your Net, heere you shall kill all kinde of good fishes, but alwayes bee sure to keepe good watch, for the Portugals are very neere you. The Riuer called Waratina.

From the Riuer of Waratina for the space of foure leagues is all sandy low Land, you shall see a high Hill which the Indians call Marambayapuam, that is in our Language, the end of Warre; right ouer against this point you shall see a great Iland at the comming in of this Harbour, you need not feare, for hard by the shore, you shall haue twentie fathome water. When you are in the mouth of this Harbour right before, you shall see a white Rocke, which will lie full West from you: you must leaue the Iland Southward from you, then shall you descrie another great Iland called Epeoya; at a point of this Iland that lieth full West, towards the firme Land, you shall see two small Ilands, and when you are right against those two Ilands you shall see a faire Bay, where you may anchor at pleasure to come into this Bay, you must enter between those two Ilands that I haue spoken of. I doe describe this Harbour vnto you aboue many good Harbours that you may find, because you may depart from hence with any wind, for the mouth of Marambaya lieth South-east from you, when you are in this Harbour, then you haue another going out that lieth North-east from you, from this Port where you shall anchor called Epeoya. If you want victuals for your ships, you may take your Boat or your Pinnasse, and goe out betweene the two Ilands that you entred, and when you are betweene those Ilands you shall see a flat broad Iland, which will lye flat South-west from you; this Iland the Indians called Sapeawera; that is, the morning, and this is the Iland that I was driuen vpon, when I runne away to Master Hawkins, as I haue told you in the discourse of my troubles, you must come with your Boat to this Iland, and you must be sure to passe betweene the West shore and the Iland; and assoone as you haue passed the point of this Iland, you shall see three Hils of red Earth one hard by another. You must leaue one of them West from you, then may you land your men at pleasure, when you haue landed, you must goe through a little Copps, for the space of a Harquebusse shot, then shall you come into a faire Lawne, where you shall find great store of Cattle, and a house or two that standeth vpon a Hill where you shall haue alwayes good store of Cassani meale, if you will haue Roots and Plantons vpon the Iland where you anchor there are good store, but there is an Iland called the Long Iland, where you shall haue of all these things in abundance. To know this Iland, row with your Boate to the Iland of Epeoya that lieth full South from your ship, and then you shall see a long Iland hard by the firme Land, which is this whereof wee speake, and because you shall bee sure not to misse it, be attentiue. When you come neere the shore, beholding a Rocke that lieth a quarter of a mile from the shore, vpon which Rocke standeth a Crosse, this is the place where a Portugall called Manuell Antones dwelleth, but now there is no bodie, but a kinde of Canibals that come and goe, therefore be sure alwaies in those parts to keepe good watch and be carefull; if you can speake their language you may haue many things. From this Iland Southwards you shall see two small Ilands halfe a league from you, these Ilands are called Anambuquano, right against them lieth a faire Riuer, where you shall haue alwaies great store of fish, and by the Riuer side you shall see the Mandioca plainly, and many other Roots very good to refresh your companie. Southward from this place some two leagues you shall see a faire Bay called Paratecy there dwelleth a kind of Canibals called Vaimasses, of them you may buy skins of diuers wilde beasts, and sometimes they haue good store of Amber, which they call Pira ponia ergaty. Certaine Ilands called by the Illa grande; Great Iland.

Saint Sebastian lieth some three leagues from Great Iland, It is a long and a faire Iland; you may anchor betweene it and the shore. After you haue entred at the North point of this Iland, you shall see a great white Rocke, right ouer against this Rocke, you shall see a point of the firme Land runne into the Sea, and right before this point lie three Rockes, where commonly you shall see Indians shooting fishes with their Bowes and Arrowes, if you goe with your Boate to that point, you shall see a great Bay called by the Indians Iequerequere. There likewise standeth a great Towne of Canibals, such as those that dwell at Great Iland, halfe a league from Saint Sebastians standeth a small Iland right into the Sea, called by the Indians Vraratan, and by the Portugals Alquatrasses, heere you shall finde great store of Seafoules and Seales; Alegators that liue on the Land called by the Indians Fisewasou. Right ouer against the South point of the Iland of Saint Sebastian standeth a great white Rocke called by the Portugals Paidemilio, that is, the life of Ginnie Wheate; then shall you see an Iland hard by the shoare called by the Indians Boysouconga, that is, the Whales head, this Iland standeth in the mouth of Pertioqua, which is, the Riuer that goeth to Saint Vincents, as you goe to this place after you haue passed the Iland, you shall see North-east from you certaine houses where there dwell a kind of Canibals called Caijoses, there you may haue good store of Cattle, Orenges, Lemmons, and many kinds of Roots and Fruits. The Iland of S. Sebastian.

Right

The description of S. Vincents & Santos.

Right against this Towne of Canibals called Caribos, standeth the Towne of Saint Vincents called by the Indians Warapiumama; as you goe farther vp the Riuer you shall see a small Iland Southward, where you shall see a Sugar-mill of the Captaines of Santos called Ieronimo Letou, where our Gentlemen were slaine. Farther vp the Riuer, you shall see a Castle stand at the foote of the Hill; then you come to the Towne of Santos, which standeth hard by the water side. Right behind the Towne of Santos standeth a Hill wher Brascubas had a house, from the top of this Hill did Iohn Danies make a Plate of the Countrey. Now the Portugals haue found Mynes of siluer in this place.

The description of the third Pariena; now called by the Portugals Os patos, and by the Indians Vwason.

The third Pariena is a good Harbor for ships, and here are great store of Canibals called Caribos, which very lately are inleagued with the Portugals, you may buy of them great store of Pepper and Ginger, very rich Furres, and Cotton-wooll, and Waxe, this is the place that I came vnto after I had beene taken by the Tamoyes within the Land. Here the Tamoyes were taken by the Portugals, and I was giuen againe to be my Masters slaue, when 10000. of the Tamoyes were slaine, and 20000. of them parted among the Portugals for slaues.

The description of the Riuer of Plate.

The mouth of the Riuer of Plate is wide, and within it there are many Downes of sand, you must bee sure to keepe very neere the North shoare, till you shall see a high Mountayne white at the top; then must you saile Southward at least foure leagues, and shall you see another small Hill on the Northside, you must saile right with it; then shall you come into a faire Bay, where you must be sure to keepe still along the shoare, and after you haue passed the Westerne point of this Bay, you shall haue the Riuer Mareer; then you need not feare any shallowes till you come before the Towne of Bonos Ayres. There the Riuer runneth full Southward, and along the Riuer side from Bonos Ayres is a small Village built by the Spaniards of Lime and stone that they brought from Brasil, for all the Countrey is sandie: the Indians doe make their houses all couered with earth. Here are great store of wilde Horses and Cattle, sheepe and Goats, but for siluer and gold, there is none but that which commeth from Cordoua and Potosin. Here likewise the Indians haue great store of Wheate, twentie leagues within Land lyeth a Prouince called Tocoman, now it is a Bishopricke, this Countrey is the diuision of Brasil, and all the Prouinces of Noua Hispania. Here the Indians haue Wheate and Cassani, Apples, Peares, Nutts, and all other fruites of Spaine, likewise they haue all the fruites of Brasil. But after you trauell Southward of this Countrey, you shall not find any thing that groweth in Brasil, nor any wild beasts, as Leopards, or Capiuaras, Iauaseuings, Cat of Mountaines, Aqueques, Mariuas, Moroquies, Ioboyas, Surucuons, Iararcas, Boyaeua, Boyseuinga, Boybeua. Brasil is full of all these wilde and dangerous beasts, and diuers others; But the Prouinces of Peru are cleere of them, except it bee some chance. From Tocoman to Saint Iago is eightie leagues, and you shall trauell it as you doe by Sea with a Compasse, for the Countrey is all sand, and as the wind bloweth, so shall you haue the Mountaynes of sand, to-day on one side of you, to morrow on the other, in this passage you shall passe through many Riuers, which to your thinking are not aboue a foote deepe, but if you haue not good guides and great experience, your waggons and horses will quickly be cast away in them, and at an instant be couered with quicke sand. After you haue passed this Countrey, you shall come to Saint Iago, then till you come to Beteseu, you shall trauell through great Mountaines and Valleyes, and all the way as you goe, you shall haue great Townes of Indians, who are all in peace with the Spaniards, you shall haue fiue hundred of these Indians by the way as you trauell readie with Nets to carrie you, eyed on a Cane from Towne to Towne, for a fish-hooke or a few beads of glasse, or any such trifle; and there is no trauelling in the World so easie as this, for you may lye, or sit, and play on a Cytterne all the way if you will, for so the Spaniards doe; you shall passe by many Mynes of Gold and traffique with the Indians for Gold, and diuers kinds of precious Stones, but not in that plentie as you shall at Potasin, by reason that there the Mynes are open and wrought on, and those betweene Santiago and Potossin are not. At Potossin there is no want of any thing, although the Countrey of it selfe bee very barren, but by reason of the great traffique that they haue from Lima, and all the Townes of the South Sea; they haue alwayes prouision enough, for from those Townes, they bring Oyle and Wine in great Iarres of earth vpon great sheepe, which are called sheepe of fiue quarters, for their tailes haue almost as much as a quarter. To tell the particulars of the Mynes, would bee a new Storie, only this: they find the Oare like blacke Lead, then they grinde it in Ingines, then they wash it through fine Sieues in paued Cisternes that are made for the purpose; the Moores are all naked as long as they worke, because he shall not hide any precious stone. The Spaniards here are all very rich, and in truth as gallant fellowes as can be. The Francisco Friers carrie a great sway in this Countrey, by reason that they were the first that preached in this part of India.

Relations of Master THOMAS TVRNER who liued the best part of two yeeres in Brasill, &c. which I receiued of him in conference touching his Trauels.

IN Saint Michael one of the Açores, they ascend vp in a forenoones iourney vnto a hill into a Chappell, wherein they need a fire in Summer for the cold: there being a little off three Springs, the one whereof casteth vp waters in a continual boyling with a terrible noise, and of great heate, the second of heate intolerable, which in short time scalideth any liuing thing to death, the ground also hote to stand on: but the water calme. The third is warme, and a fit Bathe. In these Ilands in Caues bee found men buried before the Conquest, whole, &c. Brasilian Indians are Canibals, and not for reuenge only, but for food also deuoure mans flesh. The Portugals make not slaues of them, nor can enioyne them worke, by reason of a commission to the contrarie obtained by the Iesuites: neither doe they winne of them ought but by faire meanes. They are most excellent Archers, goe starke naked, the womens haire long and blacke, harsh as a Horse-taile. He did see vp the Riuer of Plate, one twelue foot high, and report was of higher in that Countrey. Their Weapons are two massie bowles at the two ends of a string cast, &c. He saw also men there with the hinder parts of their heads, not round but flat, (and a little before this Relation, about Anno 1610. he said that at London he had seene carried to the Court a thigh bone of a man a yard and halfe in length.)

Saint Michaels.

Brasill.

Iesuits Sauages friends.

Giants.

Flat heads.

Their beasts in Brasill are great Apes with beards and Mustachioes. Kine like vnto ours of both sexes, but liuing in the waters and resorting to land to feed. Hauing no Vdders, nor hornes, long legs, harmelesse, lesse somewhat then ours, their flesh like beefe, but eaten in the name of fish.

Strange Kine.

Tigres like Grey-hounds spotted like Ounces exceeding swift, the force of whose paw at a blow killeth his prey. Their beast by some called Hay, which yet he saith, eateth leaues of trees and not Aire only: the louely prettie Segonin. The Serpent Cobras: whereof he saw one almost as bigge as himselfe, twentie foot long, killed by their Indian boy, of colour like an Adder. Of whom they report (and a Father gaue him instance of the proofe) that watching his prey, what is whatsoeuer commeth by, it windeth about and getteth the taile into the fundament drawing the guts after it: and so preyeth on the same, deuouring all, till that it be not able for fulnesse to stirre, but rotteth as it lyeth, the flesh quite away, the head and bones remaining, in which the life continuing recouereth at last his former state. One was thus found in the rottennesse, and being bound for proofe by the Portugals, with a withe to a Tree, at their returne was so found repaired. The beast that baggeth vp her young ones, &c. (as in others Relations, heere therefore omitted.)

See before in Oviedo Strange Serpent.

The number may perhaps seeme incredible and iustly: yet hee tels the report, which in some one yeere after some great battle, may also be probable: but the general report is of diuers thousands shipped thence yeerly: the Portugals making their gaine by the Negroes foolish and frightfull wars vpon each other.

The Indian is a fish in the Sea, and a Foxe in the Woods, and without them a Christian is neither for pleasure or profit fit for life or liuing.

Out of Angola is said to bee yeerely shipped eight and twentie thousand* slaues and there was a Rebellion of slaues against their Masters, tenne thousand making a head and barracadoing themselues, but by the Portugals and Indians chased, and one or two thousand reduced. One thousand belonged to one man, who is said to haue twelue thousand slaues, Eighteene Ingenios, &c. his name is Iohn de Paiis, exiled out of Portugall, and heere prospering to this incredibilitie of wealth.

There are Apples called Ananas, pleasant in colour and exceedingly in taste, and holesome, but eating Iron as Aqua fortis.

Brasill is full of Mines, if the King would suffer the digging them.

CHAP. IX.

The taking of Saint Vincent and Puerto Bello, by Captaine WILLIAM PARKER of Plimmouth, the seuenth of February 1601.

IN the beginning of Nouember 1601. I departed from Plymmouth with two ships, one Pinnasse and two shallops in quarters toward the West Indies. My chiefe ship wherein I went my selfe as Admirall was named the Prudence, of an hundred tuns, wherein I had an hundred and thirtie tall men, the second was the Pearle, a small ship of sixtie tunnes, wherein went as my Vice admirall Master Robert Rawlin, accompanied with sixtie lustie fellowes, my Pinnasse of twentie tuns was manned with eighteene men. In this Consort were Master Edward Giles, and Philip Ward Gen-

Gentlemen Captaines by Land, with Captaine Antonie Fugars, Captaine Loriman, Captaine Ashley, and diuers other Gentlemen of much towardlinesse and valour as they made good proofe in the successe of this Voyage. In our passing by the Cape of Saint Vincent in Spaine, commonly called the South Cape, I was encountred with such a terrible Ternado or gust of winde that my Pinnasse with fifteene of our men, to our great griefe was vtterly cast away, wee being not able with the vttermost of our endeauours to saue aboue three of the rest. From thence I shaped my course to the Iles of Cape Verde, and immediately vpon my arriuall there, I set vpon one of them called Saint Vincent, with an hundred men, and tooke the Iland and the Towne thereof, which was a prettie place, the spoile whereof I gaue to my Souldiers, which after they had pillaged it, set the same on fire.

Pinnasse lost in a Ternado.

Iles of Cape Verde.

The Ile and Towne of S. Vincent taken.

Hence we haled ouer to the Coast of Tierra firma, and arriued first at the Ile of Margarita, and comming to the Rancheria or fishing of Pearles in the small Iland of Cubagua, we found the Gouernour of Cumana, there with a company of Souldiers: neuertheless we made bold to land, and in our landing we receiued a great fight wherein diuers of our men on both sides were wounded; but in the end I tooke the place with diuers of the stoutest of our Enemies Prisoners, and thirteene Periaguaes and Canoes, which are Barkes and Boats of the Countrey: for ransome of all which I receiued fiue hundred pounds in Pearle. This done I proceeded on my iourney, saying directly for Cape dela Vela, and there meeting with a Portugall shippe of two hundred and fiftie tuns laden with three hundred and seuentie Negros, brought from Congo or Angola, and going to Cartagena with little resistance I tooke the same. And saying along with my prize Westward, not able to double the Iles, called Las Cabeças, I was driuen farre downe to the Southward into the Gulfe of Acle, in Spanish called Ensenada de Acle, where we landed all our Portugals and Negros, keeping only the Captaine which afterward paid me fiue hundred pounds for his owne and their ransomes. Within a while after we stood Westward with our shippes, and went into the Iles called the Cabeças, where I embarked an hundred and fiftie of my men in two small Pinnasses and two fine shallops, and went for the Iles de Bastimentos, and landing there vpon the said Iland, which are peopled and very fruitfull, I tooke fixe or seuen Negroes for guides, and so presently with our Pinnasses and Boates entred the mouth of the Riuer of Porto bello, the seuenth of Februarie about two of the clocke after midnight, the Moone shining very brightly.

Ranchera in Cubagua, with diuers prisoners taken and ransomed.

R. of Puerto bello.

At our first entrance into the Hauen, which is aboue twelue score ouer, and very deepe at the mouth and farre vpward, we were hailed by the strong and stately Castle of Saint Philip, hauing thirtie fiue great pieces of Brazen Ordnance and fiftie Souldiers in the same, to know whence we were: we hailing aboord vs such as could speake Spanish excellent well, answered that we were of Cartagena: then they commanded vs to anchor, which we did accordingly. About one houre afterwards with my two shallops which lay close by my Pinnasses, and some thirtie of my principall men, I went vp the Riuer hauing some of the smaller Fort, called the Fort of Saint Iago, which is directly ouer against the great Castle of Saint Philip, running still on the shoare, and crying out on me to stay: but neglecting their out-cryes, I landed at the first Towne called Triana, where the alarme was presently giuen: which neuertheless I set on fire, and marched ouer a little Brooke into the great rich Towne of Porto bello; and comming directly vp to the Kings Treasure-house, which is very faire and large, we found a squadron of souldiers (whereof there are two hundred and fiftie alwayes belonging to the Towne and another company of the Inhabitants) with two brasse Pieces of field Ordnance well mounted on their carriages, which we presently possessed, and fiercely set vpon the Souldiers.

The great Castle of S. Philippe, with 35. pieces of brasse, and 50. Souldiers.

The Towne Triana.

Porto bello.

At which alarme Captaine Antonie Fugars, and Captaine George Lawriman of Ratcliffe, came vp with my two Pinnasses with an hundred and twentie men to my rescue, which was very hardly laid vnto. At this house at our first comming into the Towne, my Lieutenant Samuel Barnet was shot on the side of his head, and through his eare, and Captaine Giles comming to second him, was likewise shot ouer the brest and through his arme. In this meane space Pedro Melendes the Gouernour of the Towne, had gathered sixtie Souldiers together, and was comming toward a certaine bridge to encounter me, I hauing not then aboue eight or nine men with mee to withstand them: but God did prosper our proceedings mightily. For the first two shot that went from vs, shot Melendes through his Target, and went through both his armes: and the other shot hurt the Corporall of the field. Whereupon they all retired to the house, which they made good vntill it was almost day. Against whom I sent Captaine Ward with some Souldiers, who entred the house, killing diuers of them, and wounded Melendes in eight places more; himselfe being shot through both his thighes in entring, and some of his men hurt: but in the end he tooke Melendes Prisoner, and became Master of the house.

Pedro Melendes

Melendes the Gouernour taken prisoner.

My selfe with others went to the Kings house, wherein were many of the Souldiers, who would not come to any composition, but stoutly defended the same against Captaine Giles and our Lieutenant Samuel Barnet: who in the end slue diuers of them and hurt many others, taking the Kings Scriuano prisoner. This fight endured for the space of foure or fiue houres. The fight being ended, and we being Masters of the Kings Treasure-house and all the Towne, and hauing the Gouernour Melendes, and the Scriuano with many others of the chiefest my Prisoners, except the Alcalde which fled out of the Towne with a chaine of Gold about his necke. Such Treasure as was found in the Kings house to the value of some nine or ten thousand Duckets, I reserued to my selfe, which was nothing to that which wee did expect (that being the receite at one time of the yeere of all the Treasure that commeth from Peru and Chile, amounting at least to fiue or sixe Millions of Duckets) and had I come but seuen dayes sooner, I had taken heere an hundred and twentie thousand Duckets which were newly laden in two Frigats for Cartagena. The rest of the spoile of the Towne, which came to no small value in Money, Plate, and Merchandize, I gaue wholy to my Souldiers: which being done, I disposed my Corpses du guard in diuers places, for keeping the Towne all that day: and at the end of the streete leading toward Panama on the South Sea, being full of all Artificers, we made a barricado where Captaine Giles stood with another Corps du guard being diuers times assaulted by the enemy: whom still hee valiantly repulsed and put to the worse.

Pedro Melendes the chiefe Gouernour of the Towne being my Prisoner, in regard that he had valiantly carried himselfe in making resistance vntill he had tenne or eleuen wounds vpon him, I did not only at length dismisse without any peny for his ransome, but also caused my Chirurgion very carefully to dresse and trimme his wounds: vsing him and his, farre otherwise, then Pedro Melendes his great Vncle vsed Iohn Ribault, Landoniere, and the French Nation in Florida, whom they most cruelly murdered and massacred as many as they could lay any hands vpon. Braue spirit & liberall minde of Captaine Parker.

Thus being Master for one whole day of the stately and new builded Towne of Porto bello, which had two goodly Churches in it fully finished, and sixe or seuen faire streets, whereof two were full of all necessarie Artificers, and of Merchants, with three small Forts on the Townes sides, besides the great Fort of Saint Philip on the other, when I might haue speedily haue consumed it all with fire, I willingly abstained from the same: knowing that though I could haue done the King of Spaine exceeding great hurt, and haue vndone a number of the Inhabitants, yet the good that I should haue done my selfe, and mine thereby should haue beene very small in comparison of their damage. Only certaine out houses wherein their Negros dwelt, I caused to be burned to amaze and put them in feare: I also tooke two Frigats of theirs which roade far vp within the Riuer, the one of them hauing in her three pieces of Ordnance, the which I likewise tooke and brought away from thence with mee, with the which Ordnance we beate vpon the enemy marching vnto vs from the Wester Fort. Porto bello described. He abstaineth from setting the Towne of Porto bello on fire. Two Frigats taken and brought away.

The day being spent, at the beginning of the night I embarked my men, enriched with the chiefe spoile of the Towne, and set saile to depart with my owne two Pinnasses and two shallops and the foresaid two Spanish Frigats which I had wonne: but in going out I was shot in at the elbow, and out at the wrist with a Musket shot which came from the Wester shoare, whereof there were many shot ouer vs: besides eight and twentie great shot from the chiefe and Easter Fort, which did endanger vs often. But God so wrought for vs, that we safely got forth againe contrarie to all our enemies expectation, who made full account to sinke vs in going forth. Being safely come forth wee rode with our Pinnasses, and shallops behind a small Iland which lay betwixt vs and the Wester most Fort of Saint Iago, vntill my Vice-admirall Captaine Rawlins brought two ships thither, which rode somewhat to the Eastward of the Castile of Saint Philip, vnder the Rocke where Sir Francis Drake his Coffin was throwne ouer-boord, all the while that we were busied in gaining, sacking, and possessing the Towne. Our whole fleet beeing assembled together in the place aforesaid, I set the Kings Seruants, and the rest of my prisoners on shore, suffering them to depart without paying any kind of ransome. Their departure. Sir Fr. Drakes buriall.

And the next day being the ninth of February, I set saile and stood off to Sea, leauing the goodly Hauen and beautifull Towne of Porto bello, which standeth in ten degrees of Northerly latitude: and directed my course backe againe toward Cartagena, and about twelue leagues to the Eastward thereof, I came into a good Bay called Sambo, where I watered and staied some twelue or thirteene daies, and riding there tooke certaine Frigats which were bound for Cartagena. Whereupon the Gouernour Don Pedro de Coronna, armed out two Gallies and a Brigandine, with some two or three Frigats, with a purpose to assault vs; but beeing better aduised they would neuer come neere vs. When he heard that I had taken Porto bello, one of the chiefest places of the West Indies, with so small forces, he pulled his beard, and sware that he would giue his Mules lade of siluer, but to haue a fight of mee and my companie. From this Bay of Sambo wee stood ouer for the Iland of Iamaica, and so doubled the Cape of Saint Antonio, beeing the most Westerly part of Cuba, and dismboked through the Gulfe of Bahama, the last of March 1602. and came with good weather to the Iles of the Açores, where victualling my Vice-admirall and two Pinnasses out of mine owne ship for two moneths, and leauing them at Sea to take some farther purchase, with mine owne ship I tooke my course for Plimmouth, and arriued there in safetie the sixt of May 1602. Certaine Notes of a Voyage made by mee DAVID MIDDLETON into the West Indies with Captaine MICHAEL GEARE, An. Dom. 1601.

Grand Canarie. THE fiue and twentieth day of May, wee set saile from the Lyzard, and the tenth day of Iune we fell with the Grand Canarie: the Towne standeth on the North-east point of the Iland, and the Road is one league to the Northward of it. That night we stood of South South-west. And the fiue and twentieth day of Iune we were in the latitude of twentie two degrees thirtie minutes.

Punta delaraya. The sixe and twentieth day of Iune wee came in companie of seuen saile of Hollanders, that were bound for the West Indies, to Punta delaraya to lode Salt, and the seuen and twentieth day we lost sight of them.

S. Vincents. The second day of Iulie we fell with Saint Vincent. When you came from Saint Vincent to the Testoges, you must make the way South-west by West, or else you shall not fetch it, for the Current lets North and by West from them.

Being to leeward from Caracus, two leagues we stood ouer North North-west, the wind being at East North-east, we fell twelue leagues to the Eastward of Boinara, beeing the twelfth of Iulie. If you stand ouer from Boinara to Quraſao, minded to goe to the South ward of the Iland, you must stand South and by West, or else you cannot get about, because there is a Current that sets North-west, and may set you vpon the Iland.

Boinara.

The three and twentieth day of Iulie wee anchored to the Westward of Quraſao, and there the Land lies North and South.

Aruba. The nine and twentieth of Iulie we landed vpon Aruba, for to get fresh water, and there we had seuen men slaine by the Indians of the Iland: and we rid with our ship in fiue fathomes water, halfe a mile from the shoare. One point of the Land bare North, the other South-east and by South, and there is an high Hill in the middle of the Iland, and that bare East and by South. Betwixt Coque and the Maine the course is East and West.

Seuen men killed.

Puntal. The shoale of Puntall lieth two leagues off: the best of the Channell betwixt that Point, and Coque is in eight, nine and ten fathomes.

Bracheo. From Bracheo to the Parretaes is fiue leagues course West and by South.

Cape Caldera. From the Parretaes to Cape Caldera is twentie fiue leagues course North-west and by West, and betwixt the Parretaes and the Maine, you shall haue foure, fiue, six and seuen fathoms water.

Morecapana. The Road of Morecapana lieth betwixt the Maine and Borachco, within the Ilands.

The eight day of August we set saile from Aruba, and we stood ouer South for the Maine, the wind being at East and by South, wee fell with Mecola, being nine leagues from Aruba. Saint Ann is an high Hill vpon the Maine neere vnto Mecola.

M. S. Ann.

Portete. The seuen and twentieth day of August we came to anchor at Portete, that is to the Eastward of Cape La uela, foure leagues. The Cape bare West a little to the Southwards, at the going to Portete. And on your Larboord side going into Portete, there is a round Hill: being in the offing it sheweth verie blacke. The going into this Harbour is verie narrow, but within it is a verie broad Sound, and two thousand saile of ships may ride there in verie good ground, and you may ride from fiue fathomes to twentie, but wee ridde in three, a little within the point, on our Larboord side going in.

Cape S. Anthony. The eighteenth of Ianuary wee parted from our Man of Warre at Cape Saint Anthony, and set saile for England, in a Prize, a ship of some one hundred and fortie tunnes, laden with Campeche Wood and Hides, the Master of the Prize, was William Goobreath: and from Cape Saint Anthony we stood off North-west and by North.

Organes. The nine and twentieth day at noone, we had sight of the Westermost Land of the Organes, being East South-east from vs, and then we stood North-east, and the twentieth day we were in latitude 23. degrees 15. minutes, the winde being at East North-east, we stood off North, and from the twentieth day to the one and twentieth day wee made our way West and by North, and this day we were in latitude 23. degrees 20. minutes, then we stood to the Eastward.

Cuba. The two and twentieth day, we were North-west and by North, from the Crowne in Cuba, fourteene leagues, then we stood to the North-ward: these fourteene leagues we turned vp and downe with the winde Easterly. The three and twentieth day, wee were in latitude of 24. degrees no minutes, the wind being at East North-east, and we lay North with the stemme, and this night we came in twelue fathomes, being then in latitude of 24. degrees 35. minutes, the winde being at East and by South we stood to the Southward. The fiue and twentieth day, wee fell with Cobey twelue leagues to the Eastward of the Hauana, and this day about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, we had the Pan of the Matanças South-east, and by South from vs some sixe leagues, the winde being at East, and we stood North North-east three Watches, and brought the Pan vpon the Matanzas South of vs: the winde being at East North-east, we stood to the Northward, for so we made the ships way. The seuen and twentieth day at foure of the clocke in the afternoone, wee fell with the South-east part of the Martyrs: then wee stood off South-east and by South three watches with a low saile, and so cast about, and stood North-east and by North three watches, and then obserued, and found the ship to bee in the latitude of 24. degrees and 55. minuts, being then South-west and by South of the Cape of Florida about three leagues: the winde being at South-east and by East, we stood off South and by West three watches, and then cast about, and stood North-east two watches, and then obserued, and found the ship to be in 25. degrees 36. minutes being the nine and twentieth day of Ianuarie, 1602. and then two watches North and by East, and foure North North-east: and the thirtieth day at noone wee had the Cape Canaueral West and by North from vs sixe and twentie leagues: by supposition being now in latitude 28. degrees 14. minutes, the winde being at South, wee stood North-east and by East into the Sea. The eighteenth day of March at noone (being Thursday) wee fell with Silley, and wee were South from it three leagues or ten miles, the winde being at West South-west, wee stood for the Lizzard, and the twentieth day of this moneth we came to winde being at anchor in Dartmouth, this was my first voyage which I haue made to the West Indies.

The description of the Ile of Trinidad, the rich Countrie of Guiana, and the mightie Riuer of Orenoco, written by FRANCIS SPARREY left there by Sir WALTER RALEIGH, 1595. and in the end taken by the Spaniards and sent prisoner into Spaine, and after long captiuitie got into England by great suite. 1602.

The description of the Ile of Trinidad.

PORTA la Spanola lyeth North-east. The Spaniards name themselues Conquerabians. Anaperima is the name of the Riuer, which goeth to Corona the Spanish Towne. The North part is very mountainous. The Indians of Trinidad haue foure names. 1. Those of Parico are called Iaios. 2. Those of Punta, Carao Arnacas. 3. Those of Curiadaes are called Saluages. 4. Those betweene Punta Carao, and Punta de la Galera, Nepoios. But those which are seruants to the Spaniards, name themselues Carinepagotes. The chiefest of the Indians, I meane the Kings and Lords of the Ilands in times past, named themselues Asiarewanas, but now Capcanis.

The description of Guiana, and of the great Riuer Orenoco.

GUiana beareth directly East from Peru, and lyeth almost vnder the Equinoctiall Line. The entrance to the Riuer Orenoco through the Riuer Capuri at the mouth at a full Sea hath nine foot water, and at the ebbe but fiue foot. The water floweth but a small time, but increaseth much; and the ebbe goeth but slowly: for it continueth sixe houres. In the bottome of the Gulfe of Guanipa there is the Riuer of Amana, which leadeth into Orenoco also. In this Riuer, which wee named the Riuer of the Red Crosse, wee tooke an old Tiuitiuan for our Pilot to Orenoco.

Orenoco.

The Riuer of Orenoco or Baraquan hath nine mouthes, which lye on the North-side of the mayne land: but I could heare but of seuen mouthes vpon the South-side. So that betweene Ilands and broken Lands it hath some sixteene mouthes in all. The Ilands are somewhat bigge, so as I can hardly ghesse how many leagues it is from the North-side to the South-side. At the entrance of this Riuer are two great Lords Tiuitiuans, which hold warre one with the other continually: The one Nation are called the Tiuitiuans of Pallamos, and the other of Hororotomaca. He that entreth the Riuer of Amana from Curiapan, cannot possibly returne the same way hee came, by reason of the Easterly windes and the great Currents, but must of force goe in a Riuer within the Land, which is called Macureo.

Tiuitiuas.

The Riuer Macureo.

To goe from the Ile of Trinidad to the great Riuer Orenoco the Riuer of Amana beareth South: But parting from that Riuer by a branch which beareth to the West we entred Orenoco. Toparimaca is the chiefe Gouernour vnder Topiawari, of the entrance of the Eastermost part of the Riuer Orenoco. The Towne of this Gouernour is called Arwacan. These are friends to the Carapanaes, Tiuitiuans, and all Nations, the Caribes excepted. Carapana lyeth in the Prouince of Emeria: and the Eastermost part of Dorado is called Emeria.

Riuer Salma.

Athul, a most sweet & pleasant Iland.

Assapana is the first Iland in Orenoco: it is but small. The second Iland is called Iwana. There is another entrance into Orenoco, which I discouered not: but the Indians name it Arraroopana. Europa is a Riuer which commeth into Orenoco; but the head of it I know not. In the middest of Orenoco there is a pretie bigge Iland, which is somewhat mountainous; and the name of it is Ocawita. One Putima commandeth vnder Tapiawari, in the Confines of Morrequito, which lyeth in the Prouince of Arromaia. The Iland of Putapaima is farre vp within the Riuer of Orenoco, and standeth right against the high Mountaine, called Oecope. Ouer this Mountaine lye the Playnes of Samia. Through these Playnes you may goe to Cumana, or to the Caracas; which are at least one hundred and twentie leagues iust North. In these Playnes are foure Nations, which are held for great men. The Samias, the Assawais, the Wikeries, and the Arroras. These Nations are something blacke.

On the left side of this Riuer Orenoco are two small Ilands, a small distance the one from the other. The one is called Aroami, the other Aio. In the morning before the Sunne bee high the winde is still Easterly in this place. Manoripano lyeth in the middle of Orenoco. Aromaio is the name of Morrequito. Orenoco reacheth to the Mountaines of Wacarimoc, which is to the East in the Prouince of Emeria, or Carapana. The Vallies are called Amariscapana, and the people by that name also. Vpon this Riuer Orenoco there is a pleasant Riuer for many kindes of victuals, which is called Caroli, and the people Cassipagotos.

This Countrie of Morrequito lyeth in some fiue or sixe degrees to the North of the Equinoctiall Line. At the Point of the Riuer Caroli is the small Iland called Caiama. The Inhabitants of this Iland Caiama are enemies to the Epuremi. Here is a very great fall of Land water. Canuri lyeth in the Prouince of Morrequito. The Gouernour is called Wanuretopa.

The Epuremians are richest in gold onely. These people called Epuremi haue many enemies, but three especially which are very strong: which are these; the Cassipagotos, Eparigotos, and Arawagotos. Hee that will passe the Mountaines of Curaa shall finde store of gold; which is farre to the West.

The Riuer Arui runneth continually North, and so to the Riuer Cassipa, and from thence into Orenoco: neere vnto the Riuer Arui are two Riuers, the one is called Atoica, the other Caora: and also one branch which is called Caora. To the Westward of Caroli is a fourth Riuer, which is called Cassero: it falleth into Orenoco on the side of Amapaia.

The first Riuer that falleth into Orenoco from the North, is called Cari. Beyond it on the same side is the Riuer Limo: to the West of it is the Riuer Paoo: and beyond that are the Riuers Caturi, and Voari; and another called Caputi, which is dangerous to enter. To the Westward of Caputi in the Prouince of Amapaia, is most vile, vnwholsome, and bad water to drinke; it is of a bad tawnie colour; it hath killed many a man, both Indians and others. They say this water commeth from Anobas.

On the North part of Peru is a way to enter into Orenoco, as I haue heard by the Indians. The first place whereby they are to passe, is called Guicar: the second Goauar; and so to the Riuer of Papemena; which is the Riuer that runneth toward the Iland of the Amazones. Neere vnto the Iland of the Amazones is the famous Iland of Athul.

The Riuer Vbra, bearing to the West of Carthagena, beareth to the Southward of the Iland of the Amazones. This Riuer Vbra, if you stand to the South-west, leadeth to a part of Aromaio, which is called Eregoodawe. This Countrie of Eregoodawe is very Mountainous, and nothing fruitfull: it is inhabited by the Coman Ibes. They haue Ginny wheat but no store, and very little Cassaui: Venison, Hogs, and Conies they haue in great abundance. The King or chiefe Gouernour of this Prouince or part of Aromaio, which is called Eregoodawe, is one which beareth great sway in those parts, whose name is Oromena. But all are chiefly commanded by Tapiawary King of Morrequito.

In mine vndertaking the discouerie of the North part of Orenoco, I was aduertised by certaine Indian Pilots, that I should finde a perfect and readie way to goe to Peru. In which my trauell, I fell, by reason of a great storme, into a Riuer, which is called by the Indians Salma. This Riuer is not great: in three dayes I passed through this Riuer, and entred into the Riuer of Papemena. This Riuer of Papemena is more in my iudgement then fiue or sixe Leagues broad.

North North-west of this Riuer is the Iland of the Amazones. But leauing that course, I came to the most sweete, pleasant, and temperate Iland which is called Athul. If I had had companie to my liking, I could haue found in mine heart to haue stayed there and spent my life. Athul is not rich in mettals: but some stones I found in the fresh-water Riuers: for there are great store of fresh-water Riuers; and no want neither of Fish, Tortoyses (which the Indians name Catsepames) Foules, nor other good things. It hath Wood great store, Fruites all the yeere in abundance, many good places to make a Towne if you will, Cotton, and Balsamum, Brasill, Lignum vitæ, Cypresses, and many other sweete trees. The earth of this Iland doth promise to the eye to be good, it is very fad, and much like to Oare, which I found in diuers places.

ces. I cannot report of the goodneſſe of the ſtones, becauſe my knowledge in them is nothing. Athul is not inhabited by any. The Iland is ſmall, and for feare of the Caribes, there is no body.

I returned from this good Iland Athul toward the Riuer of Orenoco, becauſe I found my labour was loſt: For to finde the way to Peru that way was impoſſible. And to make my iourney the ſhorter, I returned by the Riuer Papemena, but left the Riuer of Salma cleane, and came my directeſt way to Orenoco: which mine Indian Pilots held to bee through the Riuer of Limo; and ſo I came into the Riuer of Orenoco. Then I went from Orenoco, and held my courſe altogether Weſterly: becauſe I found the Weſt moſt rich; although it was moſt dangerous to trauaile thither, I meane farre into the Countrie, by reaſon of the Epuremi, which liue continually in armes, and hold warres againſt many Nations, but againſt three Nations eſpecially. Theſe are, as I wrote before, the Caſſipagotos, the Epatigotos, and the Arawagotos. My deſire was to goe to Curaa; and from Orenoco I firſt entred into the Riuer of Coſnero, and ſo coaſted to Amapaia, where is the bad tawnie water, which before I mentioned: from thence I went to the Riuer Paoo; and within ſixe weekes after I departed out of the Riuer of Orenoco I came to the rich Countrie of Curaa.

The Countrie of Curaa is in the Prouince of Guiana, or Manoa, where are the mynes of white ſtone; in which mynes is much naturall and fine gold, which the Indians call Callicurij. The gold in this place, I ſay in Manoa, or Guiana, runneth betweene the ſtones like veines; of which gold I had ſome ſtone: but now the Spaniard is the better for it. In Curaa is alſo gold in ſmall graines, which lye in the ſands in the little Riuers or Brookes. I alwayes tooke thoſe graines for the fineſt gold. In theſe Riuers where gold lyeth, are many Aligattos or Crocodiles. I heard by the Nation of the Tiuitinans, that a place called Tulahe, had many good things in it: but I found it nothing ſo. Some bad freſh-water pearles I found there: which were nothing round, Orient, nor very great. I brought of them with me to the Spaniards; and they ſaid they were no Pearles, but Topaſſes.

Camalaha is a place where they ſell Women at certaine times, in the manner of a Faire. And there you ſhall buy colours, ſuch as the Sauages paint themſelues with. In this Faire, which is called Camalaha, which is to the South of Orenoco, I bought eight young Women, the eldeſt whereof I thinke neuer ſaw eighteene yeeres, for one red-hafted knife which in England coſt mee one halfe-peny. I gaue theſe Women away to certaine Sauages which were my friends, at the requeſt of Warime the Kings Daughter of Murrequito.

Tar or Taroo is an Iland, which is to the South South-weſt of Orenoco. To which place I went, becauſe they ſaid there was neuer any that inhabited in this Iland, but that it was in the manner of a bayting place for the Caribes, when they had ſtollen people, which they meant to eate. One Captaine Caramatoy was my guide to this place: whither we went ſomewhat ſtrong, with intent, if wee could finde any Caribes on this Iland, to kill them; but wee found none. Many houſes wee found there couered with ſtraw, which wee ſet on fire. And there I found cloſe by the water ſide, going about the Iland, which was but ſmall, many ſtones of diuers colours.

Tar or Taroo, an Iland.

To the Weſt of this Riuer and Iland, which is called Tar or Taroo, is a Riuer, which is called Habuc: There are about this Riuer in moſt places eight, ten, ſeuenteene, and thirtie fathomes water. This Riuer of Habuc commeth from the Sea. The entrance of this Riuer at the mouth is barred; but at a full Sea you ſhall haue fourteene and fifteene foot water; but in the Channell in which the Canoas enter, which is but narrow; there is more then ſixe fathoms: but I doubt that ſhips cannot enter there. This Riuer Habuc is the beſt and ſureſt harbour that I could finde for our ſhips, and freeſt from the danger of the enemie; and is not full eight dayes iourney from Orenoco.

The Riuer Europa lyeth to the Eaſt of Orenoco as you come from Trinidad: you may, as I certainly know, going ſome twentie leagues in the Riuer of great Amana, diſcouer the great and high Mountaine which is called Oecopa: being there you ſhall plainly ſee the Playnes or Downes of Sanio; through which Playnes you may ſafely march ouer the Land within ten or twelue leagues of Caruana, or to the Caracas.

From Orenoco alſo it is very eaſie to goe to the Towne of Santo Domingo, which beareth North-North-weſt directly: but you muſt paſſe of force the Riuer Amapaia, leauing the Iland called Amazones South: and beare your courſe as neere as you can North-weſt, or North North-weſt. By this courſe you ſhall paſſe and eſcape the force and danger of the Towne, and land ſome ſixe dayes iourney from Santo Domingo.

The Riuer Wiaumli is to the North of Orenoco. To goe into this Riuer, which is little worth, you may goe in the Land till you come to another ſmall Riuer, which is called Maccab: directing your courſe South, you ſhall within two dayes, if your Canoa bee good, enter the Riuer of Wiaumli. The Land taketh the name of the Riuer. The Gouernours name is Woripur Worrok Halaba. Carrabouca is in the firme Land of the great Iland, called Murrequito: it is the common trade to goe to the rich Guiana or Manoa.

Drano Riuer. Drano is a faire Riuer, but it is dangerous to goe farre in it, by reason it lyeth due South-east from Orenoco: and the Southermost part of the Moores of Anebas is very low, so that the same waters issue in great abundance into this Riuer of Drano. The danger for entring this Riuer is nothing, but the doubt is onely of the bad water, and most terrible dewes which fall from the Moores, which are vnhealthfull, and kill the Indians daily; for that continually when they trauell they lie in the open aire.

Anebas Moores.

Vnhealthfull dewes.

Emeria. The Eastermost part of Dorado is called Emeria. There is a small Riuer, which lyeth farre East in Emeria, and beareth North North-west. Through this Riuer called Capurisol is a sure, a perfect, and most safe way to goe to Peru: but the iourney will aske eight or ten weekes to finish it. Through these Riuers of force wee must passe with Canoas or Ship-boats, or such like: for there is alway very little water.

Capurisol Riuer. The Riuer of Capurisol lyeth in eight degrees and two terces to the North of the Equinoctiall Line. But the North starre keepeth his degree and altitude 11. degrees and two terces. In this Riuer is still a fine small brise of winde, which lightly bloweth at West: but at noone you shall hardly finde any winde.

CHAP. XII.

Captaine CHARLES LEIGH his voyage to Guiana and plantation there.

THe one and twentieth of March, 1604. Captaine Charles Leigh in the Olive Plant, a proper Barke of some fiftie Tunnes accompanied with six and fortie men and boyes, departed from Wolwich with intention to discouer and inhabit some part of the Countrie of Guiana, where he had beene in a former voyage, they stayed in the Downes vntill the eight and twentieth of the said moneth, and passing thence they touched in the Ile of Mogador on the coast of Barbarie in the moneth of Aprill, where we stayed about some fiue dayes, and watered on the mayne land in despite of the rebell Moores, which would haue had money for our watering. Thence with prosperous winde coasting the Iles of Cape Verde, we passed quer to the West Indies, and vpon the tenth of May comming in change of water, which shewed thicke and white, by the next day we were in fresh water, and the next day following about fiue in the morning wee saw two Ilands in the mouth of the Riuer of Amazones, making account that we were fortie leagues vp the Riuer, and came to an anchor in three fathoms vnder them, which wee found low land couered with high Trees. Then the Captaine with some eight of the best men of the ship went toward the shoare, and finding many Indians comming toward them they returned aboard, and found the ship almost aground, but sounding the Bay brought their ship into the Channell which they found very narrow.

Within awhile after foure Indians in a small Canoa shewed themselues vnto vs, to whom we sent our Boat with some of our commodities, as Hatchets, Knives, Glasses, Beades, they had nothing but Maiz and small blue-headed Parrots, for which we gaue them some of our trifles. Not long after another Canoa comming out, our Boat clapt betweene them and the shoare to take some of them, to learne the state of the Riuer by them, but they freed themselues all saue one youth, which was brought aboard, which next day after escaped leaping into the Sea twelue leagues as we iudged from land. Thus we tooke our leaue of the Riuer of Amazones, and hauing vncertaine shoaldings all the way in our way, about ten a clocke in the night wee strooke vpon a sand before we could let fall our anchor, where wee beat off a piece of our false keele, before wee could get off. Being gotten off, wee came to an anchor in foure fathom and a halfe water, and rode there vntill the next morning, where wee descryed the land sixe leagues from vs with the entrance of a Riuer.

Riuer Wiapoco. The two and twentieth of May, wee arriued in the Riuer of Wiapoco, in the latitude of three degrees and a halfe to the North of the Line, where wee found the people readie to giue vs the best entertainment they could, bringing vs Hony, Pines, Plantons, Potatoes, Cassaui (whereof they make their bread and wine) Fish of many sorts, Hennes, Conies, Hogs, and such like. This day he tooke an oath of all his people to be true to him as long as he abode in the Countrie. Then after diuers conferences with the chiefe Indians, and namely with two of their Countrie, which had beene before in England, and could speake some English, he found them very willing to haue him and his people abide in their Countrie: who pretending want of many necessaries, whereof indeed he stood in need, and especially of victuals, hee went vp the Riuer in his Boat with some fourteene men to take perfect view of a fit place to inhabit in, and to sound the depth of the Riuer as they went. At his returne he caused his ship to be brought vp hard vnto the falls of the Riuer: but after they had stayed there one day, finding sundrie inconueniences, they came backe againe to their first road; with a determination to plant and seate themselues vpon the first

The Falls.

Mount or high ground, at the entrance of the North side of the Riuer. But the Iayos and Sapayos seeing him and his company come downe the Riuer againe, entreated him earnestly to stay among them, offering him their owne dwelling Houses and Gardens alreadie planted to their hands, whereof he accepted: to wit, of two Houses and of as many Gardens as they thought conuenient to serue his turne, with condition that he should ayde and defend them against their enemies the Caribes and others. Hereupon they made a great Feast, desiring our Captaine to bee at it, and they demand of their generalitie of the staying of our men in the Countrey or no. Whereunto they gaue their free consent, and desired him withall to send into England, for men to teach them to pray. This done, the next day he brought all his furniture on shoare, and bestowed it in the aforesaid houses. And for the better assurance of the performance of the Saluages promise, he demanded pledges of them to be sent into England: whereunto they willingly condescended: which where in number fiue, whereof two were of good account. Hee retayned thirtie fiue Englishmen and Boyes with him, sending the rest home in Iune, with the fiue Saluages which were plentifully furnished with their Country victuals, with Letters to the right Worshipfull Sir Olaue Leigh his brother, of his successe and desire to supply his wants, which he most kindly twice supplied to his great charge, within short time after. They desire to learne religion

The Caribes in eight warlike Canowes came to surprize them as farre as the Mount Comaribo: whereof the Indians being aduertised by our fishers, desired Captaine Leigh to aide them: which he did with some foure and twentie of his men in eight Canowes. But the battell being begun after they had heard the sound of our Trumpet and Musket, they fled to Sea-ward, our Canowes chasing them: but the enemy being swifter escaped with casting of one of their Canowes which are able to carry twentie men and victuals for ten dayes, which Canowe they brought home. Caribes.

Within a seuenight after our Captaines returne, hee made a Voyage in an Indian Canowe hauing Indians to rowe him, accompanied only with Thomas Richardson, his Refiner of Metals, and Iohn Burt his Chirurgion 90. miles by water vp the Riuer of Aracawa, to a Nation called the Maiaranas, where he traded for Tabacco and Cotton yarne, and Cotton-wooll. There he left his Chirurgian being sicke, and with his Refiner and three Indians (whereof one William was his Interpretour) went vp to a Nation called Marraias the space of thirtie miles, where they passed thorough a goodly Plaine foure miles broad of much stonie ground, wherein they saw Deere. At length meeting with the people, they were kindly entertayned and fed with such as they had; as dried Tygres flesh, dried Hogges flesh, and small fish. Then after some discourse, they enquired for Gold shewing a Ring. An old man spake vnto him and pointed vp into the Countrey, and the Captaine asking the Interpreter what he said, he told him that he said there was no such that way. The Captaine perceiuing the falshood of his Interpretor would goe no further, and so returned home, where he found vs for the most part sicke, and the Indians not so kind vnto vs as they had promised: which he much maruelled and grieued at. A Canowe taken. R. Aragaua.

Within three dayes after his returne, his shipwright Richard Haward died before hee could make an end of his shallop. And in September our Captaine himselfe began to droope, partly of griefe to see the weake estate of his people, and the ill performance of the Indians promises: yet neuertheless he ceased not to take order for the Indians bringing in of victuals and such Merchandize as could be gotten, as Waxe, fine white long Feathers, Flaxe, Tabacco, Parrots, Monkeyes, greene and blacke, Cotton-yarne and Cotton-wooll, sweet Gummes, red Pepper, Vrapo, and Apriepo woods, Spleene stones, matiate stones, Roots and Berries, which we thought to be medicinable, Anato a Berrie or Cod, such as the Indians paint themselues red withall mingled with Oyle, Vrapo which is the heauie wood whereof they make their Swords and Bowes, Apriepo, a wood that the Frenchmen and Hollanders fetch away, a wood which they call Ayard, which they kill fish withall. The Commodities of the Countrey.

The fishers beate this wood with another piece of wood, till it shiuer into flakes, which smelleth exceeding strong like Garlicke, wherewith in sundry places of the creekes going in according to the depth of the water, they beate it vp and downe often in the Riuer, which the fish tasting, are intoxicated, and so distempered withall, that they flote and tumble vpon the vpper part of the water, and then with Bats and Poles they knocke them on the heads. Their bread they make of Cassania, a white Roble commonly a span long, and almost so thicke, which the women grate in an earthen panne against certaine grates of stone, and grate three or foure bushels in a day: The iuyce thereof they crush out most carefully beeing ranke poyson raw, in a hose of withe, which they hang vp vpon an hooke, and afterward with a weightie logge which they hang at the other end they squeeze out the water into an earthen pan or piece of a Gourd, and then seethe the same iuice with their red Pepper whereby it becommeth holesome, and if they will haue it sweete, they will seethe it but ordinary, if they will haue it sowre, they will seethe it extraordinarily, and vse it in manner of sawce, and when they be sicke they eat the same and bread only. The women also make drinke of this Cassana bread, which in their Language they call Arepapa, by baking of it blacke, dry, and thinne, then chewing it in their mouthes, they put it into earthen pots narrow in the bottome and broad aboue, containing some a Firkin, some a Kilderkin, some a Barrell, set in a small hole in the ground, with fire about them. Strange fishing. Cassani. The iuice.

Being well sod, they put it out into great Iarres of Earth with narrow neckes, and there it will worke a day and a night, and keepe it foure or fiue dayes till it be stale, and then gathering together an hundred and more, they giue themselues to piping, dancing and drinking. They make drinke also of Cassana vnchewed, which is small and ordinary in their houses. They vse also to make drinke of Potatos which they paire and stampe in a Morter being sod, then putting water to it, drinke it.

Sickenesse. Before and after the sickenesse of our Captaine, many of our men fell sicke, some of Agues, some of Fluxes, some of giddinesse in their heads, whereby they would often fall downe: which grew chiefly of the excessiue heate of the Sunne in the day, and of the extreame dampe of the earth, which would so moysten our Hamackas, or Cotton beds, wherein wee lay a yard from the ground, that we were faine to imitate the Indians in making fires on both sides vnder them. And for all that we could doe, some nine of our company were dead before our ships arriuall. Besides we were mightily vexed with a kinde of Worme, which at first was like to a Flea, and would creepe into the feet especially, and vnder the nayles, and would exceedingly torment vs, the time it was in, and more in the pulling out with a Pinne or needle, if they were few. But one of our men hauing his feete ouer-growne with them, for want of hose and shooes, was faine to submit himselfe to the Indians cure, who tying one of his legges first with his feete vpward, powred hot melted Waxe which is blacke vpon it, and letting it lye vpon it till it was throughly cold, they forcibly pulled it off; and therewithall the Wormes came out sticking in the same, seuen or eight hundred in number. This man was named Iohn Nettleton a Dier of London, which afterward was drowned.

The cause.

Niguas little Wormes, great torture.

Terrible cure.

In themiddest of all these extremities our Captaines Interpretor which hee had threatned for his false demeanour in his Voyage to the Marraias before mentioned, gaue counsell to his Master named Anaccauri, an ancient Captaine among them, to make a motion among the Indians at their next meeting to say, it is the best way for vs now to make an end of them while they are sicke either by staruing or otherwise. For when the ship commeth, hee will kill vs for keeping him without victuals now. This motion being made at their meeting, which was in Carisana his house, and among his and Martins kinred, (which then remayned pledges for our mens safetie in England) their wiues hearing the Interpretors Master Anaccauri broaching this matter ranne furiously vpon him and tare his clothes such as hee wore from him, and mightily beate him, the other of their kindred, keeping those Indians off from the women, which would haue taken his part.

Trecherie of a Sauage.

Some of our owne men lying at the next house where this was done, inquired of an Indian which owed this Anaccauri a grudge, what the cause was of the said tumult: who imparted the whole truth vnto them. Our men comming suddenly to the Captaine, acquainted him with the whole matter: who suddenly bethought himselfe and sent for all his men that were neere him; and for Eperiago and Pluaimma an Indian that had beene in England: which were two of the chiefest, and caused him to send for his trayterous Interpretor, which came bringing Hens, drinke and bread: Assoone as he came, shewing what hee had heard, requiring them to declare what wrong he had done them. Who answered, none. Then said he, this fellow, meaning the Interpretor hath sought my life; and therewith commanded his men to bind him hand and foot, which done, he dismissed them, desiring them to returne the next morning. In the meane time he caused his Prisoner to send for a Canowe to fetch three of his men. which were vp in the Riuer, who immediately did so. Now hauing all his men together, hee caused them to haue all their Furniture readie: appointing one William Blake to see the same diligently fulfilled, the watch carefully to be kept in the night, and two to ward at the doores all day with their Furniture, to take the Indians weapons out of their hands at their comming in at the doore.

This being ordayned, the Indians came the next day, to whome the Captaine said, In regard that I haue beene so carefull to punish the wrongs done vnto you, I would haue you readie to reuenge the wrongs done vnto mee, who seemed very vnwilling to doe any farther Iustice, esteeming his binding a sufficient punishment. At the which the Captaine beeing very much vexed, commanded the two foresaid Indian Captaines to depart, charging them to send him in, fish and other victuals for his company. In the meane time he and the chiefe of his men, consulting what course to take with the Malefactor, they thought it best that hee should lye so bound vntill the next day being the third of his bondage, and to send for the chiefe of the Indians, and vpon confession of his fault, and crauing pardon thereof, to be dismissed before them.

Captaine Charles Leighs Letter to Sir Olaue Leigh his Brother.

MOst louing Brother, I did write vnto you from Muggador, where I stayed vntill the nineteenth of Aprill, and on the fourteenth of May I had first sight of Guiana, in the mouth of the Riuer Amazones, mazones, The two and twentieth, I arriued (prayſed be God) in ſafetie in the Riuer Caroleigh, heretofore called Wyapoco, and the ſame day, I tooke poſſeſſion of the Countrey in ſight of the Indians. The Indians which doe inhabit this Riuer are about one thouſand fiue hundred men, women, and children, and they are of three Nations, viz. Yaioas, Arwarkas, and Sapayoas, which beeing chaſed from other Riuers, by the Caribes haue combined themſelues together in this place for their better defence, and are now at deadly warres with the Caribes. After that I had ſtored my ſelfe with Bread and Roots ſufficient vntill the Earth with Gods prouidence might yeeld me ſupply, I did then ſend for the chiefe Captaine of the Yayoas aboord, whom with gifts and good vſage, I eaſily entreated to ſtay aboord my ſhip vntill ſuch time as by his meanes I was prouided with all kind of Plants, which their Gardens doe affoord, yet all this while he knew not my purpoſe. The day before I purpoſed to make my intent knowne, their came another chiefe Captaine of the Yayoas aboord to dine with me, who together with the former after Dinner deſired to ſpeake with me, whereupon I ſent for an Indian who had beene in England, to bee Interpreter, and tooke them into my Cabbin. The twe Captaines told a long Storie of the wrongs the Caribes had done them, how they had driuen them from their ancient dwellings in other Riuers, killed many of their friends, carried their women and children away Captiues, and hurt many of their men, and thereupon they called one of their men to ſhew me how he was lately hurt in three places with their Arrowes, to conclude, they told me, how they purpoſed the next Moone to goe againſt the Caribes, with twentie Canoas, and earneſtly entreated me if I ſtayed ſo long to goe with them to their Warres. Vpon this good occaſion, I told them that I purpoſed to ſtay in the Countrey, ſeuen or eight moneths, to ſeeke out and make triall of Mynes. And in the meane time that I purpoſed to build Houſes aſhoare at the head of the Riuer, and there to plant Gardens, that my men might haue victuals of their owne labours, which done, I would build a ſhallop, and ſend twentie men in her with them to fight againſt the Caribes, withall this they ſeemed wonderfull well content, and thereupon they promiſed Indians to helpe mee to build and to plant, and the chiefe Captaine promiſed himſelfe to goe vp with me. The next day being the third of May, I ſet ſayle from the mouth of Caroleigh, and caſt Anchor in a Bay vnder Mount Oliphe, where I purpoſed to plant, and make my habitation: but my men diſcomforted with the ſight of the Woodes which they were to fell, grew generally diſcontented, and omitted no practices to ouerthrow the Voyage, being ſuborned vnder hand, by my vnfaithfull Seruant, the Maſter, his lewd conſorts he brought with him, being the only publike maintayners of the mutenie. How I haue beene troubled with him and his conſorts, (who intending ſpoyle and purchaſe in the Weſt Indies) haue from the beginning ſought the ouerthrow of this Voyage, this Bearer can certifie you at large. And vndoubtedly hee made full account with his headſtrong companions at ſuch a time to haue commanded the ſhip at his pleaſure. To conclude, amongſt other their practices, they ſo conſumed the victuals which ſhould haue maynteined vs vntill the earth had yeelded ſupply as that in ſixe dayes, our Potatoes which ſhould haue laſted vs two moneths, were wholly ſpent hereupon being farre diſtant from the Indians, who inhabit at the mouth of the Riuer, fortie miles from the falls, and it being very doubtfull, how wee ſhould bee furniſhed with victuals from them in our extremitie, I gaue conſent that the ſhip ſhould returne to the mouth of the Riuer, with this conditions that after I had refurniſhed them with victuals and other things ſufficient that then they ſhould plant vpon Mount Huntlay, two leagues to the Weſt of Caroleigh: which being neere the Indians, and betweene them and their enemies they would be readie and willing to furniſh vs with victuals, vpon any extremitie, to which conditions they generally conſented, that place being firſt moſioned by ſome of them. The ſhippe being returned, they had then brought mutinie to ſuch a head, as that to my face, they ſtood in defiance of the Voyage, and told me plainly they would not ſtay doe what I would or could, I vrged them with their promiſe to plant on Mount Huntly, one of them who ſeemed moſt forward of all men to yeeld to that motion: anſwered that he promiſed in policie, to draw me from Mount Oliphe. But in the end it pleaſed God, what by faire meanes and what by foule, I brought them all to conſent to ſtay one whole yeere, therew all extremities, if it were poſſible to make a full triall both of people and Countrey, and to plant vpon Mount Huntley, according to their promiſe. This agreed vpon, I went aſhoare to the Indians, to prouide victuals, and other neceſſaries for our Plantation, who being exceeding glad of my returne; offered me to chooſe the beſt of their houſes and gardens, to dwell amongſt them. For they were very vnwilling that I ſhould goe to any other place, to conclude, iudging their offers by many likelihoods, to be without deceit, I reſolued to abide with them vpon this condition: that they ſhould ſend foure principall Indians for England as pledges, for our ſafetie with them whereunto they willingly condeſcended, and if I would, I might haue twentie. For they make daily ſuite to me to goe for England. Beeing in conference with an aſſembly of two or three hundred, purpoſely met to craue my abode amongſt them, and demanding of them vowes and proteſtations, according to the cuſtome of all people, for the more ſecuritie of our peace and amity: their anſwere was that they knew not how to make vowes and proteſtations, and therefore generally they deſired (ſundry of their Captaines ſpeaking it together, with a low and humble voice) that I would bring them men to teach them to pray. Which motion of theirs, proceeding from themſelues and in that humble manner, ſtrooke me I aſſure you into an admiration of ioy, to thinke that it hath pleaſed Almightie God after ſo many dangers heretofore, and troubles in the Voyage, to preſerue me to be a meanes to this ſimple-hearted people of the knowledge of Chriſt. Vndoubtedly, it was the wonderfull worke of Gods Spirit in them, whereat all Chriſtian hearts ought to reioyce. And I am perſwaded, the like inſtance hath neuer beene before by any people in the World: I beſeech Almightie God to giue a bleſſed end to this hopefull beginning.

The

The foureteenth of Iune, concluding with the Indians vpon sundry conditions, I purchased of them the same day for a few Hatchets, Houses and Gardens planted with Cassuua, and Potatoes sufficient for all my company: the scituation of our Houses is in the pleasanteſt and most fruitfull place of all their habitations. And because it is a small Village of six or seuen houses; and the first place of our setled aboade I haue named it Principium: the Hill on which it standeth being part of the Mountaine on the West side of the entrance of the Riuer, I haue named Mount Howard, to honour the remembrance of my Lord Admirall, of whom heretofore I haue receiued many fauours: on the East side of the entrance of Caro Leigph, lieth the Riuer Oliuoleighe heretofore called Arrikowarye: and on the West side of Mount Howard runneth the Riuer Iotrameleighe, by the Indians called Wanarie. The commodities which this Countrie doth yeelde, and through industrie will abound in, are these; Sugar Canes, Cotten and fine Flaxe; also it would yeelde great store of long Pepper, if there might be vent for it in England: here is sundry sorts of Gummes, of Woods, and of Dies, which I hope will proue good commodities, of all which I haue sent you samples by Master Huntlie, especially one sort of Gumme, which I am perswaded will proue very rich. Also I haue sent vnto you a peece of a Stone taken out of a Manuate or Sea Cowe. I am giuen to vnderstand that a little thereof beaten into powder, and drunke in Wine or Ale, will in few houres cure any man that is troubled with the Stone, they say it dissolueth it instantly. I doubt not but to get a dosen of them before this time twelue moneths: my refiner hath made triall of sundrie Minerals, but cannot yet finde any Mettals. At my arriuall here I found a Dutch Shippe, and sithence here hath arriued another, they buye vp all the Flaxe they can get, and pay so deere that I can get none; they haue not gotten so little I thinke as ten tunnes of Flaxe within these two moneths.

I doubt not but I shall be able to returne a Shippe laden with Flaxe and other commodities the next yeare; the Flaxe yeeldeth a wonderfull encrease, and will grow any where, but especially in low moorish grounds: the Indians report that the Roote yeeldeth increase euery moneth, and euerie yeelde may be some foure ounces, by this accompt an acre of ground planted with these rootes, and distant three foote a sunder, will yeelde 17280.li. euerie yeare, which amounteth at sixe pence the pound to 432.li. I doubt this will not proue answerable to their reports, but I verily beleeue it will yeelde halfe the encrease they speake of. the Dutch men haue reported that it is worth in Holland but six pence the pound, but they confesse that Holland will vent 500. tunne thereof. Some of the Dutch men haue reported that it is worth in Holland sixteene pence the pound, which I rather beleeue, for my Weuers tell me that they will warrant it to dresse exceeding well, and then it must needes be excellent fine grounds for any stuffe; for Cotten here is little, not worth the speaking of, yet the Countrie will yeelde abundance, and in sixe weekes the seede will yeelde Cotten, and it beareth continually and plentifully. I pray you sir send me more Weauers, for I know not how to get any thing spunne for them, for the women here are put to that extreame labour, that they haue no time to spinne, for they onely fetch water, cut wood to burne, and bring it home vpon their backes, they gather all their rootes and bring them out of their Gardens, they make all their Bread which is verie labourſome, they dresse all the victuals, make all the drinke, attend vpon the men while they are at meate, and besides, they dresse vp their houses in their kinde, and nurse their owne children: so as they are alwayes toiled with labour, and haue little or no time to spinne. For Sugar Canes the world doth not yeelde better soyle for their encrease, and whereas in Barbarie it is fifteene or sixteene moneths before they come to perfection, here they grow vp in ten moneths. And in Barbarie they are planted onely in two Vallies, where they are watered euery weeke, but here they grow vpon the Mountaines, and neuer watered but with raine onely. A few yeares I doubt not will afford plentie of Sugars, if wee shall haue meanes to make them. My loose commodities, as Hatchets, Beades, Knines, Looking-glasses, &c. are almost all gone; a great part in buying of victuals, but the most part to stoppe the mouthes of my Mutiners and monstrous Sailours; to whom also I haue promised two third parts of my Iron.

Now for the prosecuting of this voyage, in such sort as that we be not preuented by the Spaniard nor any other Nation; I would entreate you with as much speede as possibly you can to send me a supply of one hundred men at least, to abide here, all labouring men and Gardners, for such are the fittest here for a time, with a few Carpenters; and with them three or foure good peeces of Ordnance with shot and powder; also fiftie Caliuers for the men that stay here: if you can send these men in two Shippes, I doubt not but to lade one of them backe in three moneths after arriuall, and the other which I wish may be the Oliue plant, I would keepe here and fit her for a Frigot to keepe and command the Riuer. I haue written to my brother Iohn Leighe to deliuer vnto you such monies as he hath receiued of Gifford, who I hope hath ere this time paid his debts. I hope you shall get store of voluntarie men to ease the charge of the Voyage, and looke what you shall disburse in my behalfe for the accomplishment of the Voyage, I will, God willing, see you honestly paid with aduantage; or else if it please you to put it in aduenture, it shall be accomplished in any sort to your owne desire. As I doubt not of your loue and forwardnesse, especially in so good an action, so also I make no question, but this Countrie will in few years yeelde you satisfaction beyond your expectation. If my wife haue not alreadie attained her suite of the Kings Maiestie, I hope she will the sooner speede vpon this newes, which if she doe, my desire is, that all shall be imployed vpon these proceedings; and to that effect I haue written to her. I haue written a Letter to the Kings Maiestie; another to the Lords of the Counsell, and one to my Lord Admirall.

The bearer hereof, Captaine Huntlie is the worthiest yong Gentleman that euer went to Sea, vpon any dangerous enterprize, he was neuer dismaid, neither with extreame dangers at Sea, nor with all the Mutinies tinies aboord, which had beene able to haue discouraged an old experienced Souldier; besides, I found him alwaies a most true, faithfull, and loyall friend, and therefore I pray accompt him for a right honest man. I haue made him my Lieftenant generall of these Countries during life, and therefore I pray let him returne chiefe commander in the first supply. I would pray you also to procure to come with him some honest and discreete men whom I might relie vpon as trustie friends, and vse as companions both for aduise and societie, for I am now very vncomfortably matched, hauing no worldly strength to trust vpon but my selfe onely. I haue sent vnto you foure Indians, principall men in their Countrie, which were deliuered vnto me as pledges of our safeties here, and they are to returne again the first, but I thinke some of them will be more willing to stay longer. The English man which was left here by Captaine Lea, is dead, I pray you procure Sir Walter Rawleighes Indian or my Lord Admirals, for I want an Interpreter exceedingly, here is but one, and he vnderstandeth but little to any purpose. I pray forget not to send Preachers, sober and discreete men, and such as are well perswaded of the Church gouernment in England, &c. From Principium, or Mount Howard this second of July 1604.

CHAP. XIII.

A true Relation of the traiterous massacre of the most part of threescore and seuen English men, set on land out of a Ship of Sir Oliph Leagh, bound for Guiana, in Santa Lucia an Iland of the West Indie, the three and twentieth of August, written by

IOHN NICOL.

SIr Oliph Leagh, a worshipfull Knight of Kent, sending a supply of good numbers of men in a Ship called the Oliph blossome to his brother Master Charles Leigh, which was planted in the Riuer of Wiapogo, within three degrees and an halfe Northward of the Equinoctiall line in the West Indies, which departed from Wolwich the foureteenth of Aprill 1605. vnder the conduct of Captaine Catelins, and Captaine Nicholas Saintt Iohn: I being desirous to see the world, comforted my selfe with that company. But by contrary windes and vnknowne currents of the Sea, and the vnskilfulnesse of our Master Richard Chambers, wee were put to leeward of our port, without any hope of recouering the same in any due time: And being not victualled, as it seemed for aboue foure or fiue moneths, after consultation had, we were faine to touch first at the Isle of Barbudos, and then at Santa Lucia in the West Indies. Where fearing to perish at Sea for hunger before we should be able being so many aboord to reach England; Captaine Nicolas Saint Iohn, with the rest of the passengers, which purposed to haue staied with Master Charles Leagh at Wiapogo in Guiana, resolued to stay and take their fortune in the aforesaid fruitfull Iland.

Saint Barbudos. Santta Lucia. Captaine Nicholas Saint Iohn staieth at Saint Lucia with 67. men.

Thus sixtie seuen of vs at our owne seeking were left on shore in the aforesaid Iland of Santa Lucia the three and twentieth of August 1605. with our Swords, Muskets, and Powder, and one Falcon, and one barill of Bisket onely for all our food. The next day our Ship departed from vs with some discontentment, because we had feased vpon her Boate to serue our turnes. After our Shippe was departed from vs, we liued very peaceably, daily trading with the Indians for victuals; which were Cassaui, Potatos, Plantans, Pinas, Popayes, Pompions, Calabassus, Tobacco, Pappies, Mammoyes, all very pleasant to eate. Also they brought vnto vs Hens and Gulls, and some Pelicanes, Woodcocks, and Snipes: we our selues did kill with our Peeces many of them likewise. And euery night we sate out fiue vpon the sands to seeke for Tortoyses, whereof we neuer missed night without one or two, and many times fiue, which was the greatest sustenance we found; for they are very large and great. I haue often taken out of one of them to the number of seuen hundred egges. Also the Indians had great store of Roan linnen cloathes, Serges, and other Stuffes, and Spanish wollen cloath: and iarres of Oyle which they tooke and saued at Sea with their Periagnas. For three Spanish Shippes had beene there cast away a little before our arriuall, if we had had a Pinnesse there we could haue laden her with many good commodities, which they had hid in their houses in the Woods. All which we could haue bought for Hatchets, Kniues, Beades, Thimbles, Fishhookes, and other such trifles.

Tortoises.

Thus for the space of fiue or sixe weekes wee went not much abroad, till our Captaine seeing certaine foure square Plates, which the Indians ware on the small of their armes, asked Browne, a Gold finer, his opinion, what he thought of them? who told him, that three parts thereof was Gold. And asking the Indians where they got them, they pointed vnto an high Mountaine on the North-west part of the Iland. This caused Captaine Nicholas Saint Iohn, and Iohn Rogers, who was our interpreter for the Spanish tongue, with as many of our chiefe men as could well goe in the Boate vpon a Munday to goe thither, promising his Brother Alexander Saintt Iohn, Master Garret, and Master Tench, whom he left to gouerne the rest at home, to returne the next Saturday.

Indian treacherie.

The Indians for three dayes after did not come vnto vs with victuals, for they perceiued when the Boate went, and as we thinke, they were then at the slaughter of our men at the Mountayne. Vpon Thursday morning we killed two Tortoyses on the sands: where wee found a great company of the Indians gathered together, for what purpose we knew not: And lest wee should suspect them of any bad intent towards vs, they willingly offered themselues to bring home our Tortoyses, which they tooke into their Periaguas, and brought them to our Houses.

All that forenoone wee kept good watch: for there were very many that came both by Sea and Land to the number of two or three hundred; and diuers of them were very merrie with vs, drinking of Tabacco and Aquauita, vntill ten of the clocke, and then they departed all saue one which was a Captaine of the Ile of Saint Vincent, called Augramert, and an old man which was his Father: who promised vs, if wee would goe to their houses, that wee should haue any thing that they had. For the day before I had beene at their houses with other two of my fellowes to haue bought victuals: yet they would not part with any, no not for any commoditie that wee had: and yet they had more store of victuals then euer I saw them haue before. But wee perceiued afterwad, that it was prouided for them, that came to take their parts against vs, whom they kept secret in the Woods. So we three returned, and trauelled farre into the Iland, and passed through sixe or seuen Gardens very full of Cassabe, Potatoes, and many other rootes and fruits, and by the way saw many tall trees of so huge bignesse, that wee three could not at twice fathome one of them about; and they were so hard, that wee could not cut them with our Kniues, and the Barke of them was white like Ash. Then we returned to our Sconce againe.

Vpon Thursday after dinner, Master Alexander Saint Iohns, Master Francis Kettleby the elder, Master William Tench, my selfe, and diuers others, to the number of eighteene, went with Augramert and his father, hauing neither Bowe nor Arrow, onely his father had a Brasill sword. They went thus meanly armed lest wee should suspect them. Augramert also promised Master Hamaca beds.

Alexander Saint Iohn, that he should see his wife, and we should haue Hamaccos, which are Indian beds of net-worke made of cotton yarne to lye in. So we trauelled along the Sands very securely, young Saint Iohn going a little space before playing and jesting with the Indian Captain, till they came within sight of their houses, where in the woods they had placed an ambush of three hundred Caribes: when suddenly Augramert tooke hold of his Rapier with the one hand and of his Poniard with the other, and the old man his father with his Brasill sword strooke him downe to the ground. Then out of the woods came the Arrowes so thicke about our eares, that wee had not the time to put our matches in our cocks. And many of our companie had their match to light, which gaue a great encouragement vnto the enemie; insomuch that we discharged not sixe peeces against them, which caused diuers of our companie to flie into the Sea vp to their necks, and some along the sands as amazed, seeing such a huge companie against so small a number; vntill young Saint Iohn recouering againe, encouraged vs to make a stand at a point of Land which went corner wise into the Sea.

But all was in vaine: for before wee could make our peeces readie, there came another companie on the back of vs, and filled our bodies full with arrowes: and then wee betooke vs to our swords and so runne through them; but still they encreased out of the woods, shooting their arrowes in great abundance, not daring to come neere vs vntill they saw vs fall; and then with their great Brasill swords they strooke out our mens braines. I my selfe being all this time running with young Saint Iohn, and Master Kettleby, who behaued themselues most gallantly, hauing at the least one hundred arrowes apiece before they fell, came as the last into the entrance of a narrow path, where fiue of my fellowes were gotten before I came, and thinking to haue passed through, there was another ambush who killed them all. I onely with three arrowes in me, by running into the wood and swimming ouer a standing Lake escaped home, giuing them warning before they came to assault them: and vpon my comming they all came in sight vpon the Sands, whom we soone sent away by shooting off our great Peece, so they came not in three dayes after.

Vpon Monday there came so the number of thirteene or fourteene hundreth both by Sea and Land, and there beset vs round, wee hauing nothing but our Chists to defend vs from their arrowes: thus for the space of seuen or eight dayes we fought with them, and of nineteene men which were left of all our companie, twelue were sore wounded with their arrowes. And the first day at twelue a clocke they shot fire in their arrowes and burned our houses, thinking then to haue entred in vpon vs, but with our Falcon wee droue them backe with most horrible cryes. After that our houses were burned, and all our Chists which before were our Fort, wee fortified our selues with the remnants of the stakes and thatch which we had saued from burning, setting them in the ground slopewise, couering it with sand and earth, which saued vs euer after from their arrowes.

The next day after they all departed in their Periaguas. And the Lord seeing what need wee had of food, contrarie to our expectation, moued the hearts of our very enemies to bring vs food. For when all the rest were out of sight, one returned very well prouided of victuall, and three three or foure comming out of their Piragua with asmuch as they were able to carry of Cassaui, Potatoes, and Plantans, cryed vnto vs to exchange with them, first holding vp their bowes and arrowes, and after laying them on the ground againe in signe of peace. Which wee perceiuing, sent out three likewise to bargaine without weapons, with Kniues and Beades, and other trifles: which traffick being done, they departed and we returned, giuing praise to God, for this miraculous feeding of vs. For we had no meanes of our selues to get any food: for they had bereft vs of our Net, with which we had wont to catch as much fish of many sorts as would suffice vs for a whole day. Thus they continued daily for the space of seuen dayes; and then our victuals began to faile againe, which caused vs to hold out a flagge of truce: which they perceiuing, came in peaceable manner vnto vs.

Then one Francis Brace, which could speake French, made them vnderstand that our desire was to giue them all that we had, if they would let vs haue a Piragua to carry vs away. Which one Captaine Antonie willingly consented vnto (contrarie to the will of his brother Augramert, Captaine of Saint Vincent) and the next day brought it, drawing it on shoare within the compasse of our Fort; for which we gaue them Hatchets, Kniues, and Beades, vntill they were contented: and to please them the more, we gaue them euery one a Shouell or a Spade, wherewith they were fully contented, and so departed. Then with all speede we went all to worke, some vpon the Saile, which we made of very good Roan-cloth, and some to make the Mast; and euery one did labour all he could to be readie against night. For Captaine Antonie, which was Captaine of Santa Lucia, told vs, that his brother Augramert would come the next day from Saint Vincent with twelue Periaguas all laden with arrowes; whose words we alwayes found true.

Thus on a thursday, the sixe and twentieth of September, at one of the clocke after midnight, hauing amongst vs all but one Barrico of fresh water to drinke, and one small Firkin of Rice, we embarked our selues being nineteene in the whole number, not one hauing skill in the Mariners art, and without Carde or Compasse to direct vs: wee sayled by the Sunne in the day-time, and by the Starres in the night, going alwayes betwixt South-west and by West. The victuals that wee had were not sufficient to serue that companie for three dayes. For wee had not aboue twentie Biscuits, three Cassaui cakes, a dosen Plantans, and some thirtie Potatoes, and some foure or fiue gallons of water, and a little barrell halfe-full of Rice. And as it pleased the Lord he had saued it vntill this our great necessitie, for the preseruation of our liues: for all our other victuall was gone in two dayes, and our water in three dayes. And then Master Garret gaue to euery two of vs a pottage dish of his Rice twice a day, which wee washed in salt water and so eate it raw. Thus we continued at Sea seeking for Land, for the space of ten dayes, where wee endured one great tempest, although to our great perill, looking alwayes when wee should be drenched. The raine which then fell, was vnto vs in the middest of our danger a great comfort: for we saued it with great ioy, and dranke it, thanking God for that good refreshing; who likewise did send the very Fowles of the aire to feed vs. For being wearie of their flight they would rest them vpon the side of our Boat, so that we tooke them and dryed them in the Sunne with a little gun-powder, and eate them. Our Boats brimme was so neere the water, that euery waue came ouer it, readie to sinke vs, but that foure of vs continually did lade the water forth by courses. Now, on the tenth day one Thomas Morgan dyed; not being able to liue of that small allowance, and at noone we threw him ouer board. Within an houre after it pleased God to glad vs (who were likewise readie to follow our fellow) with a ioyfull sight of Land; vnto the neerest part whereof we made as fast as we could.

Blind hungrie voyage.

But the winde being calme we were benighted before we could come to it. And so wanting the light of the day, we were vpon the shoare before wee were aware, and there split our Boat to the middest, and all our men were turned out saue my selfe, which held the helme, thinking the next waue would set her off againe, not knowing her to be split. But the breach was so great that it turned me vnder, putting me in great danger to be grinded to pieces with her weight lying vpon me against the great Rocks; yet at the last wee all recouered our selues, some sitting vpon the Rocks, others on the rootes of great Trees, thinking there to saue our selues vntill the morning. William Picks, and my selfe, went and haled the Boat on shoare, which was split to the very middest, and so farre with our Swords we cut off, and put in an head in the middest, and fastened it with our Daggers, Kniues, and Bodkins; stopping all the leakes with our shirts, and sent fiue of our companie ouer to the mayne land; which were Miles Pet, William Picks, Francis Brace, William Kettleby, and William Butcher. They haled their Boat foure or fiue dayes along the shoare, crossing diuers Riuers with their Boat, being sometimes pursued by Alligates or Crocodiles, and Sharkes.

Boat split.

God pittying their poore estate, guided them to a place, where they found a great earthen Iarre full of wheat flower set in a little Caue, which they boyled in the Iarre with fresh water, and satisfied their hungrie appetites, with thanks vnto God for the same. And within two dayes after they met with three Spaniards, with halfe a dosen Indians and Negroes, trauelling from Caracas to Coro, driuing Horses and Mules laden with merchandise: who seeing their weakenesse for want of victuals, vnloded their Horses to feede on the grasse, while they refreshed our hungrie men with plentie of their good cheere, and shewed themselues very courteous suffering them to ride, and went themselues on foot two or three dayes, till they came to a Towne of ciuill Indians, called Tocoya, where they stayed to refresh them, for they were very weake.

Miserable famine. And there they let the Spaniards know in what miserable case they left vs in a desolate Iland; where we endured the greatest miserie, that euer men did with life. For wee continued fifteene dayes hauing no kinde of meat but Wilks, salt Water, and Tabacco; which did nothing at all nourish vs, yet neuertheless it tooke away the desire of hunger, and saued vs from eating one another.

Vse of Tabacco.

Fiue died in the Iland. In those fifteene dayes fiue of our companie pined to death, because they could not take Tabacco; Iohn Parkins, Edward Greene, Thomas Stubbes, Andrew Smith, and an old man called Iohn. By noting two or three of our men to die, we knew by those tokens when we drew neere our death: which were these, first they would swell very bigge, and shortly after fall to the very bones, and wanting strength to hold vp their heads, they would fall downe, and droope into their bosomes, and in twelue houres after yeeld vp the Ghost.

At the fifteene dayes end, Francis Brace hauing more strength then the rest, guided the three Spaniards with sixe Indians to the Iland where we were, and they brought victuals with them:

Food almost kils aswell as penurie. which when we had eaten had almost killed vs, by reason of the weakenesse of our stomacks, being so farre spent that we could not digest it, although we fed thereof very sparingly. The next day they carried vs to the mayne land, where wee had horses brought vs to carry vs: and the goods wee had they tooke all to the King of Spaines vse, and so conueyed vs to Tocoya; where wee which were weake remayned fifteene dayes, and those which were strong went with the three Spaniards to Coro, which is some fiftie leagues from Tocoya: and at the fifteene dayes end, Tocoya.

Coro.

Kind Spaniards one of the Spaniards, whose name was Senior Corsinual, came for vs with horses, who shewed himselfe as carefull of vs, as if we had beene his owne Countrimen and friends, and brought vs to Coro to our fellowes: where we were brought before the Gouernour; and by a Flemming which Good Flemming. could speake a little English, which had beene a prisoner there sixteene yeeres, we were examined of the cause of our comming thither; who excused vs very well. For hee knew, that if we had confessed whether we were determined to goe, they would haue either put vs to death, or condemned vs to the Gallies. But he told them, that we neuer purposed to come thither, but were by misfortune and tempest of winde and weather driuen on that Coast, and told them of all the dangers which we had endured, which draue them into such great admiration, that some said, verily wee were Deuils and not Men: others, that we deserued to bee canonized, but that wee were Lutherans.

All the chiefe Seniors of the Towne beeing there, euery man was desirous to take one of vs. After we were deuided among them, they did not vse vs like prisoners, but were as carefull of vs

Spanish gentlenesse. as of their owne children, not suffering vs to want any thing necessarie for the procuring of our healths. My lot fell out to bee entertained by one whose name was Senior Francisco Lopez: and being extreamely sicke of a Calenture, or hot Feuer, one Captaine Peroso which had married his daughter hauing good skill in Phisicke, came daily to my Chamber, and there let me bloud, dieted me, and purged me, giuing his owne Wife in charge, not to let me want any thing that was there to be had. Thus by the will of God, and their tender care ouer vs, wee recouered our healths and strengths againe; only two dyed there, which were Thomas Fletcher, and Fulke Iones a shoomaker. In Coro eleuen of vs remayned aliue (being all that were left of sixtie seuen, which

Two more die. were put on shore in the Iland of Santa Luzia) for the space of fiue moneths, euery day going to one another when wee pleased: and wee rid often into the Countrey, where the Indians tooke great delight in our company. For against our comming, they would prouide all kind of delicious fruits: which were in most abundance in that Countrey, and would kill Deere and wild Hogs for Commodities of the Countrey. vs; and would bring vs Apes, Monkeyes, Parrots, and any thing that they thought wee delighted in.

The Countrey about Coro doth yeeld abundance of Sugar, Honey, Ginger, and Pitch. Also they haue very good Wheate growing there: but the bread is for the most part made of Maiz, whereof they haue great plentie, for they reape it three times in one yeere. This Maiz they do mingle with the iuyce of the Sugar-cane, which maketh an excellent kinde of bread, and it will

Drinke made of Maiz. keepe like Bisket. Also they make their drinke of this Maiz and of Potatoes; which is very sweet and strong: for the Indians will be quickly drunke with it. While we were there, a Spaniard rode to a Farme of his in the Countrey with his brother, where he had many Indians dwelling to make Tabacco. One of his chiefe Indians, which vsed to be familiar with him, tooke vp

The treason of the Indians. a new Hatchet, which his Master had brought him, asking him what it cost, and suddenly cloue his head therewith: which his brother perceiuing ranne for his Rapier: but the Indian women had stolne it away before; and so they killed him also with their Bowes and Arrowes, and three or foure Negroes, which seemed to resist them, and thereupon fled to the Mountaines, gathering a great company vnto him, promising them, that if they would aide him against the Spaniards in Coro, he would giue them the Spaniards wiues and daughters in marriage. But before they put this conspieacie in practise, Captaine Peroso by a Policie tooke him feasting among his fellowe and women, and tooke thirtie with him, and brought them all to Coro; where they were to suffer death with great torments, to terrifie the rest. And of some they cut off the thumbes, and cut the sinewes of their two fore-fingers, whereby they wanted the benefit of shooting.

Our entertainment there was such, that we could not desire to part from them to come into our owne Countrey without offending them. For a Frigat being readie at Coro to goe for Carthagena, foure of vs made intreatie for passage, which were Philip Glasstocke, Richard Garret, William Picks, and my selfe, (Iohn Nicols) for all the rest were in the Countrey vpon pleasure, some in one place, and some in another. And when the ship was readie to depart, they perswaded the Gouernour not to let vs goe. For they told him that there were many ships of Holland vpon the Coast; and that if we went all in the Frigate, we would betray it vnto them, causing the Fathers of their Churches to tell vs, That if we would stay, wee should be as themselues, and they would willingly bestow both their daughters and their goods vpon vs. Yet notwithstanding all their allurements, our desire was for our owne Countrey; and so three of vs procured meanes for to goe, and William Picks was stayed, by meanes his Master told the Gouernour, that foure were to many to venter in the Frigat. Thus we departed from Coro about the twentieth of Aprill, leauing all those with whom wee dwelt very sorrowfull for our departure: who gaue vs great store of prouision for our Voyage. They were very loth to let vs go to Carthagena, for feare we should be put into the Gallies: And the Gouernour of Coro himselfe, wrote vnto the chiefe men of Carthagena in our commendation, as to Don Pedro de Barres, who was his Sonne in Law; but it tooke small effect. By the way wee touched at Santa Marta, and watered there.

Within three dayes after we arriued at Carthagena, we were committed to Prison by the Teniente, for the Gouernour was dead not three dayes before we came in. Yet we brought out Letter from Coro, from one Sennor Gasper Sanchez Contador, or in our behalfe to one Sennor Antonio Cambero, who prooued a speciall good friend vnto vs. For we had not beene an houre in Prison, but hee came to vs and comforted vs, and bade vs not to feare, for wee should not want any thing. So he went to the Teniente, and proffered three of his Negroes to set vs at libertie, and if we made an escape, he should haue those Negroes for his owne vse. (The worst of those Negroes was worth three hundred Duckets.) But hee would not, neither would he allow vs any victuals. But this Cambero sent vs euery day at noone one very good meales meate. Also there were three Englishmen, who serued as Mariners in one of the King of Spaines Gallions which carrie his Treasure: which after that they were at Sea were by forcible tempest driuen back againe to Carthagena, in great danger to be sunk: for she had twelue foot water in her. Some escaped to Hauana, and fiue of the richest ships were sunke on the shoalds betwixt Carthagena and Hauana. These three Englishmen did allow vs twelue pence a day so long as wee remayned in Prison. Euery Saturday, the Teniente with his Alcaldes doe sit in iudgement within the Prison where the Teniente commanded that we should be sent to the Gallies. Then one Alcaldie, who was alwayes found to bee a fauourer of Englishmen, whose name was Sennor Francisco Lopez de Meralie, called for our Examination: which when hee had perused, hee told him, that hee could not with Iustice commit vs. Who answered againe, Then let them remayne in Prison vntill the Gallions come from Spaine, for the treasure.

Within two moneths after a Deputie Gouernour was chosen: vnto whom we framed a Petition; which was deliuered by Iohn Frendgam; whose answere was to him, that if wee could procure any Spaniards to bayle vs for our forth comming, we should be at libertie. Which Sennor Francisco Lopez and Antonio Cambero no sooner heard, but they entred into bond of a thousand Duckets for our forth comming. And at our deliuery, the Teniente told vs, that although by order of Law, they could iustly haue put vs to death; yet seeing God had so miraculously saued vs, and that we had endured so many miseries to saue our liues, and that we came to them for succour and reliefe, they were content to set vs at libertie. So Francisco Lopez brought a discharge from the Gouernour to the Iaylour for our deliuery out of Prison, and brought vs all three to his owne house: where was prouided for euery one of vs a seuerall bed: For the Country is so hot, that we cannot lie but one in a bed. Our entertainment was very great, and all our seruices in plate, with great varietie of meates, and of all the most delicious Indian fruits: and yet he thought we neuer fared well enough, without hee sent vs one extraordinary dish or other from his owne Table. Also many Gallants resorted to his house to play at Cards, who would bee very liberall vnto vs at their winning, and would giue vs sixe or seuen pieces of Eight at a time.

There we continued vntill the Gallions were readie to goe for Spaine with the treasure: then hee procured vs passage euery one in a seuerall ship. * And the day before wee embarked which was about the first of August, there came two more of our company from Coro, which were Miles Pet, and Richard Ferne, who were both placed with Philip Glasstocke, in the shippe called Saint Bartholomew, Richard Garret went in the ship called La Madre de Dios, and my selfe in the Santa Cruz. So we were a moneth in sayling to Hauana, where wee stayed another moneth to trimme the ships. The Gouernour there was Don Pedro de Valdes, Prisoner in England 1588. So we liued all on shoare with eighteene pence a day for our diet, and about the end of September departed, leauing that shippe, wherein Philip Glasstocke, Miles Pet, and Richard Ferne were, with another ship called the Saint Vincent for want of prouision of bread.

* The cause why Francisco Lopez did vse vs so kindly was because Sir Fr. Drake when he tooke Cartagena did saue all his fathers goods and his life withall.

We shot the channell of Florida, in eight dayes against the winde, and came along by the Ile of Bermuda, and were nine weekes in sayling betweene Hauana and the Coast of Spaine. The tempests and stormes which we had, were wonderfull great. Insomuch that all the fleete were dispersed, and not aboue two ships did hold company together. Which put them in great feare lest they should haue met with the Hollanders; who might with three good ships haue taken all their treasure with small adoe for euery little Caruell did put them in feare, thinking her to be a man of Warre.

CHAP. XIIII.

The Relation of Master IOHN WILSON of Wansteed in Essex, one of the last ten that returned into England from Wiapoco in Guiana 1606.

They arriue at Wiapoco.

CAptaine Charles Leigh and his Brother Sir Olaue Leigh, did furnish to Sea the good ship called the Phenix with Commodities for the Countrey of Guiana; and necessaries for the Voyage, with fiftie persons to inhabit Wiapoco, of sundry Trades who directing their course towards Wiapoco, on the Coast of Guiana, which the Spaniards call the Riuer of Canoas, arriued on the twentieth of May following, where he found a ship of Amsterdam, trading with the Indians. They perswaded the Indians, that our Nation came to inhabit among them, only to oppresse them as the Spaniards doe in other parts of the Indies, which the Indians themselues confessed vnto Captaine Leigh notwithstanding they offered our Nation no vnkindnesse, but vsed them in all the kind manner they could. For they prouided whatsoeuer our Company wanted which they could get them. Insomuch the Gentleman was like to haue done right wel, if it had not happened that his Company had not mutined, which did partly arise because of the climate, which is much hotter then ours. And for that they were vnprouided of victuals or other necessaries, therefore constrained to liue in such manner as the Indians themselues doe; for that they did see at their landing only Mountaynes and Hils couered with Woods. And for that the most part of them had beene housholders in England, not accustomed vnto such a strange Countrey or Nation, nor such a diet; for which causes they were so much discontented, that they cried to their Captaine, home, home. Thus the Captaine and his whole company was discontented, and also the Master of his ship called Martin Prinx, who shipped himselfe shortly after their arriuall into the Amsterdamer, which they found there, whereupon the Captaine placed his Mate Richard Pots of Weymouth, to bee Master of the Phenix, furnishing him with such victuals as the Countrey affoorded, as Cassaui for their bread, and Potatoe Roots, with fish, water, and such prouision as they had of their owne aboord, appointing Edward Huntly to be their Captaine, to goe for England, who departed from Wiapoco about the first of Iuly 1605. by whom Captaine Leigh aduertized his Brother Sir Olaue Leigh.

Causes of their mutinie.

Second voiage of the Phenix.

After whose arriuall Sir Olaue Leigh, hee with all speed furnished the aforesaid ship, called the Phenix to Sea, with Commodities for the Countrey and other necessaries, with thirtie men of sundry Trades, appointing the aforenamed Richard Pots to be Master, and Edward Huntly to bee Captaine, they departed from Woollage, one the towards Wiapoco, who arriued at their Port one the fifteenth of Ianuary following, who expected with the rest of their company aboord, to haue found the Generall and his company on Land, to haue beene in farre better case then they were, for that they found them for the most part extreame sicke, and some of them dead: and presently after their arriuall three or foure men of them died, and the Generall himselfe was very weake and much changed, which partly proceeded by reason of their great want of victuals, for that the Indians could not at all times prouide them that they wanted. And chiefly for that the company were perswaded that the ship would neuer haue returned vnto them againe, which plainly appeared amongst them, for that at the arriuall of our ship, some of them which had not in three monethes time beene a stones cast from their houses, came aboord of vs, a mile and more from their houses in weake estate, which caused very much discontent amongst our fresh water Souldiers aboord, and they were the more discontented, because they could not aduertize them of any commodities the Country yeelded which would affoord them present benefit, insomuch that they wished themselues in England again. During which parley, our Generall came not aboord of vs, for that he was at his house called Mount Howard, a mile and more vp into the Land, which stood on a hil very pleasantly situated, but according to the Country manner, by reason that their enemies should not wel find their houses nor suddenly assaule them, haue therefore very rough passages vnto them, inuironed all with Mountaines, Woods, and Hils. Wherefore the Generall sent one Sidney Harrington vnto Captaine Huntly, M. Tederington Preacher and to the Master of the ship to land their company in Possession Bay, a place which the Indians gaue vnto our Generall, and therefore by him so named. Possession Bay.

At whose landing according vnto the Generall his Commission, they were all sworne vnto certaine Articles, as that they should acknowledge Captaine Charles Leigh to bee their chiefe Generall of Guiana, vnder King Iames our King of Great Britaine, and that they should not be hurtfull vnto the said Generall his proceedings, but to ayde and assist him to their vttermost powers. Which being effected, our Generall came vnto vs, and after kinde salutations, hauing taken order for our Lodgings, for that time hee departed from vs. The Indians in like manner after their Countrey fashons kindly entertained vs, and after further conference had with our Generall, hee related at large vnto vs what had happened vnto him and his company in their absence; that by reason of his company their discontent and sickneſſe, they had not trauelled vp into the mayne Land; and therfore of his owne knowledge hee could not certifie them of any other commoditie the Countrey did yeeld, then such as hee knew of before their departure, but the Indians had informed them, that there was vp in the Mayne very rich commodities, as also Gold, and siluer, and especially in the Riuer of Caliaue, where the Caribes inhabit, who are enemies vnto our Indians of Wiapoco, and so called by them. Vpon which information our Generall thought it would haue beene best to haue peaceably traded with the Caribes: But our company misliked thereof, insomuch that the Generall altered his determination, and agreed to ioyne with their friend Indians against the Caribes their enemies. Whereof hauing aduertized the chiefest of them, they most kindly embraced their offer presently made eight of their Canoas in a readinesse, furnishing them with Bread and Drinke, and Victuals, which for the most part are Crabbes and Fish, with some hundred of themselues all naked in their Canoas, whome our Generall accompanied with some eight and thirtie of our company, leauing the rest to keepe our Shippe and Houses, shipping the most part of them in a Pinnasse that was built by one named Howard, the Keele whereof hee made of a Canoa, which prooued a very fitting Pinnasse for those parts and Riuers. This Pinnasse after our Generals death the Indians did breake a pieces because they thought wee would haue stolne away from them in her vnto the Spaniards. And the rest of our company were placed in their Canoas, all of vs furnished with our Caleeuers: and so wee departed on our Iourney and Voyage on the sixe and twentieth of February, on which day at night wee came to a place which wee named Mount Huntly, where wee lodged in the Woods that night, our Generall commanding vs to keepe a good watch; which wee need not to haue done, for the Indians themselues were very watchfull, and wonderfull carefull of our Caleeuers, and for to keepe our Powder drie, after we had beene acquainted with them, and very diligent for to please vs.

Mount Huntly.

The next day at night we came to a place called the Con, and there wee lodged, and the next day following we came into the Riuer of Wia; and there we found two or three of the Caribes Canoas, but all their men were runne vp into the Woodes, and from thence our Generall went vp farther into the Riuer, where wee burned certaine of their houses, not finding any people in them. From whence our Generall purposed to haue gone farther into the Riuer of Caliaue. But the Indians did aduertize him, that there was an English ship there, whom the Generall knew to bee one Iohnson of Plimmouth, that had beene some fourteene dayes before at Wiapoco, and came thither in the way of Trade. But our Generall would not suffer him so to doe, for that he would not hinder himselfe and his company, which our Generall at that time called to minde, and therefore thought it not good to proceed in the Riuer, because hee doubted that there would haue risen contention betwixt his company and Iohnsons, and for that hee also misdoubted wee should haue wanted Bread and Drinke if hee should haue proceeded in his iourney, and therefore returned to Wiapoco, where we arriued all, except one Canoa. About the fourteenth day of March.

English ship.

Our Generall sent with foure of our Nation named Blake, Owen Goldwell, William Crandall, and Henry Powell, with commodities vp into the Countrey, some thirtie leagues to a place called Vrake to the Inhabitants there named Arwakes, to trade with them. And after our iourney by reason of such Raine and foule weather as wee had in the same, most of our company fell sicke, and for that they had no comfortable drinkes, nor any comforts that sicke persons doe want, diuers of them died of the Fluxe; which the Indians (as also the Disease called the Calenture) know right well for to cure, yet concealed it from our Generall. But vnto vs after his death they did reueale, which sickneſſe amongst the company caused no small griefe vnto our Generall, and chiefly to see such wants amongst them; wherefore hee resolued with himselfe to goe for England, which hee acquainted the company with, promising them to returne as speedily as hee could with prouision.

Vrake. Arwakes. Mortalitie.

Presently after he had shipped his prouision, and such Commodities as hee had gathered together in the Countrey, and was in a readinesse to depart for England, he sicknes of the Fluxe, and died aboord his ship, and was by Captaine Huntly secretly buried on the Land, the twentieth of March, whose death was so secretly kept by the Captaine, and the Master of the ship, that

About the middle of Iuly, our number of ten were all in good health, ſpending our time in planting of Carow called Flaxe, whereof we planted about twentie Engliſh Acres of Land, and ſome Tabacco, obſeruing the manners and conditions of the people, the nature of the Land and what commodities it yeeldeth, and what commodities of ours are in moſt requeſt with them. About the third of October, the Indians did requeſt vs for to accompany them in their warres againſt the Caribes, whereunto wee willingly did agree. They prouided ſeuen Canoas furniſhing them with men, and bread and drinke, and their victuals (for the moſt part Crabs, and fiſh of diuers ſorts, which they take euery day freſh and freſh as they trauell in the Riuers.) We went into the Riuer of Caliane, which is ſome thirtie leagues from Wiapoco, where wee rowed vp and downe, but we could not find any of the Caribes in the Riuer, we perſwaded them to land which they did, and marched vp ſome two miles vnto the Caribes houſes, as wee marched to their houſes, the Caribes came to the water ſide where our Canoas did lye, but finding my ſelfe there with my Caliuer, they had no great deſire to come very neere vnto vs; and ſo after wee had burned

After our company was aduertised of a Shippes coming vnto vs, we went with the Indians in their Canoas, some into the Riuer of Wiapoco, and some into the Riuer of Aracow, to make away such commodities as we had left which were not many, reseruing some of them to giue to our Indians for our victuals, although their kindenesse towards vs was such, that if we had not had any commodities, they would not haue suffered vs to haue wanted. In which our iourney we noted the Riuer of Aracow to be a very pleasant Riuer, and yeeldeth such commodities as other Riuers doe; also the Riuer of Wiapoco is a very faire Riuer, and nauigable, which entreth the maine more then fortie miles. And at the end thereof there is a very great fall of water which commeth ouer great hils and mountaines; some of out company were on the tops of them, for some moneths in the yeare the Mountaines are drie; and we were informed that on the other side of those great hils, there is a Riuet which is inhabited with many Indians, and hath the like commodities that Wiapoco hath, and that there is Gold in that place, which the Indians calleth Carocoret, but we neuer went to see the same Riuer, by reason we had very small store of commodities.

Fall.

At our returne to Wyapoco we gaue to the Indians for their paines, and prouiding of vs victuals in our iourney an Axe, for which they would haue trauelled with vs two or three moneths time if occasion had required. And for an Axe they found vs victuals two moneths time at our houses, as Bread, and Drinke, and Crabbes, and Fish, and all such kinde of flesh as they killed for themselues, for the same price: but if we desired any Hennes or Cockes of them, then we were to haue giuen them some small trifles, as Beades; so likewise if they brought vs in our trauell to any of their friend Indians houses, we must doe the like as at our departure, to giue them some trifles, as Kniues and Beades. So that we liued very good cheape.

Three Nations.

There are of the Indians three sorts which inhabit at Wyapoco with whom wee were, whose houses be scituated as neere the Riuers mouth as they well may be, they are named the Tayes, the Arwakes, and the Sappayes. The Tayes are a people very proud, and vse much flouting and mocking of others, much giuen vnto dansing, and are full of merriment, very ingenious, and very kinde of nature. The Arwakes are a people of better carriage, and did vse our company with better respect then the Tayes. These two kindes of Indians come out of the West, wherefore they doe know all those Coasts, and they hate the Spaniards as deadly as they doe the Caribes. The Sappayes are a people more craftie in their dealings, for they will not part with any thing, but will haue commodities for commodities. They are not many of them, and wee could not learne from whence they are come. The men and women goe all naked, without any couerture at all; they are very well limmed and proportioned of body. They neuer company together all the day time, but as the women doe bring them their victuals, they doe eate viually euery day; they haue doores at each end of their houses, the men remaine at the one end of the house, & the women at the other. The women are very neate in making of their Bread, which they call Aripo, and their drinke Possho: they make their Bread and Drinke of a roote which they call Cassani, which maketh good Bread, and very strong drink, very pleasant to drinke after one is vsed to it.

Their houses.

Their houses are built after the manner of our barnes in England, but much longer, for we haue measured some of them which were one hundred and fiftie paces long, and some twenty paces broad, one hundred persons keepe together in one of those houses; they are most artificially builded and thetched, so that no raine commeth into them: although in Aprill, May, and Iune, and most of Iuly very extreame raine doth fall there. Also they make Pots of earth, which shew as if they were guilded, and some of them will hold thirtie or fortie gallons of liquor, they are very faire to behold, and very sweete to keepe any thing in. They make Baskets of diuers sorts most artificially, and their beds which they call Hamakes; they are some of them made of Cotten wooll, and some of barkes of trees, they vse to lye in them hanging. They haue a great delight to paint themselues both men and women, and especially when they goe to any Feast.

Painting.

The women against their day of trauell in childe bearth, make for that time a roome apart in the house, whereunto they goe all alone, and are deliuered without any helpe at all; and presently after the childe is borne, she calleth for her husband, and deliuereth him the childe, who presently washeth it in a pot of water, and painteth it with sundry colours, which seemed very strange vnto me, that I did not heare the women, once so much as to groane, or to make any moane at all in all her time of her trauell: if any one of them dieth they doe vse to make great moane for them some ten or twelue daies together after his death or longer, according as the partie was beloued in his life time.

Childebirth.

Funerals.

And touching such kinde of Beasts as are in the woods as well about Wiapoco as in other places of the Countrie. There are great store of Deere, Hares and Conies, Hogges and many Monkies great and small, blacke and greene, which sorts are called Marmosites, and great red ones as bigge as Baboones (those the Indians doe kill and eate) and there are Leopards, and Porcupines, and Lyons; for in one place we did see a Lyon which the Indians had killed; they brought all their boyes they had, and did lay them on the Lyons backe, and with a whip did giue euery of them three lashes, wherefore they did so we could not learne, but imagined it was because they should remember the place where the Lyon was killed: also there are great store of Otters, and a beast which is called an Aligator, he hath a cod that smelleth like the Muske cod.

Fowles. Of Foules, I haue seene Cockes, Hennes, Duckes, and Geese; Partridges, Wood-doues, Hernshaws, Shouellers, and a foule of a crimson colour, called Passeray Flemingo, & great store of white foules, which the Indians call Wakerouses, & great store of Parrats, and Parrakeits, which flye there in sholes like Starlings here in England: also there is a Parrat there as bigge as a great Hen, blew and red, very beautifull to behold, and multitudes of foules of other sorts, and Hawkes of diuers sorts in the woods and Riuers.

Fishes and fishing as before. And of fish there are great abundance of all sorts both of fresh water fish, and Sea fish, and Crabbes great store; and the Indians take their fish with a kinde of wood which they beate against some stone or other tree, vntill one end thereof be all bruised, and putting that into the Riuer, presently the fish become drunke, and run themselues on the shoare, and swim aboue water, as our Haddockes doe in England.

Fruites. There are store of good Rootes and Plants with Fruites, as the Pina and Plantine, Potatoes, Nappoyes, and a fruite called of the Indians Poppoyes, it is bigger then an Apple and very pleasant to eate, and sundry sorts of Plums, and other sorts of fruites whereof they make drinke very pleasant to be drunke.

Dying woods & other commodities of the Countrie. There are these commodities at Wiapocco, and in other places of the Countrie where I haue trauelled, Woods of blacke, red and yellow colours, Tobacco, Guinie pepper, Cotten wooll, Carow (of vs called Flaxe) Anoto, Berries which dye a very faire Stammell colour, Spiguard, whereof a precious Oyle may be made, Gummes of diuers sorts, Bee-waxe, Feathers of the best sorts, such as Ladies doe weare in their hats, and other Feathers abundance. There grow naturally in many places Sugar Canes, and great abundance of Carow of it selfe, called of vs Flaxe, and of the Spaniard Pero. Also they make Oyle which they paint themselues with of a kinde of Nut bigger then a Chestnut, whereof are great abundance growing; and the Maney stone is to be had in the Aracores Countrie, and in no other place of the Indies that I haue heard of. These things I noted, but if so we had expected certainely for to haue had a Ship of our owne Nation to haue come vnto vs, I my selfe, and the rest of vs should haue beene encouraged to haue obserued more then I haue done. Neither had we any store of commodities to trade vp in the Maine, as the two Hollanders hath which are there, and were left there at our comming from thence by Iohn Sims, Master of a Ship called the Hope of Amsterdam, of the burthen of one hundred tuns Fraughted by the Merchants of Amsterdam, and by their Charter partie was bound to lye in the Riuer of Wiapoco, and of Caliane six moneths time, which he did, for he lay with vs at Wyapoco from the twentieth of December vnto the twentieth of May following, trading with the Indians, and sought most after the Manito stone and Carow, which we call Flaxe. They furnished there two Factors very well with Commodities, which they left at Wyapoco. They dealt very kindely with vs, for he shipped all our whole company, which were nine of vs.

Their returne. Taking our leaues of the Indians (who were as vnwilling to part from our companies, as we were willing to goe into our owne Countrie, saying vnto vs, that if any of vs euer came to them againe to trade with them; No other Nation should trade there but we. And after they knew of our departure; whilest we remained amongst them, they brought their children vnto vs for to name after our great mens names of England, which we did. They had often speech of Sir Walter Rawleigh, and one came farre out of the Maine from Orenoque to enquire of vs of him, saying he promised to haue returned to them before that time, After we had prouided our necessaries, and such commodities as we had, and had giuen the Indians great charge of the Hollanders Factors, we shipped our selues and departed from Wiapoco on the last of May 1606. And from thence we went into the Riuer of Caliane, where our Master Iohn Sims traded some thirtie dayes with the Caribes, and other of the Indians. This Sims was Masters mate of the Holland Shippe which Captaine Lee found in the Riuer of Wiapoco at his first arriuall there: also he was Master of the Ship which the Indians aduertised vs was in the Riuer of Amazons, and according to their saying, God be thanked he came to vs to our Comforts.

Sir Walter Rawleigh.

Trinidada. After his departure out of the Riuer of Caliane, he sailed vnto Trinidado, where the Spaniards entertained him and his companie very kindely, for they gaue them Tobacco for all such commodities as they had, and suffered them to lade Pitch which goeth out of the ground there, for that our Master durst not goe to Point de Ree to lade Sault there as he determined, because hee heard that the Spaniard did lye there with their men of warre, and had taken certaine Holland Shippes, and had flung ouer boord all the men that were in them: our Master tooke his course from Trinidado to Amsterdam, where he arriued on the of and were in number of vs eight besides my selfe, named Owen Gouldwell, Robert Gardner, William Crandall, Robert Becke, Richard Pren, William Frier, Gilbert Browne, and Richard Bonecke. Since my being here I vnderſtand that one of our company which we left at Vliſhinge, named William Crandall is gone in a Shippe of Holland for Wyapoco, which voyage they would haue hired my ſelfe and others to haue gone with them, by reaſon we haue the Indians languages: ſuch is the diligence of that Nation, vnto whom I wiſh well for the great kindeneſſe they ſhewed my ſelfe and others of our Nation.

CHAP. XV.

Part of a Treatiſe written by Maſter WILLIAM TVRNER, Sonne to Doctor TVRNER of London a Phiſitian, touching the former Voyage.

THE foureteenth of Auguſt,* about two in the afternoone, we had ſight of the Barbados, which bore of vs South South-weſt. The Land hath two points bearing Eaſt and Weſt one from another; and from the middle of it, it riſeth like Teneriffe, and is tenne leagues broad, and is barbarous without any inhabitants, hauing great ſtore of Hogges, Piggeons, and Parrats. We bore for the Weſtermoſt part of this Iland, and ſo wee ſteered away Weſt North-weſt, and North-weſt and by Weſt amongſt for Saint Lucia.

* The large Iournall of their voiage to this place, is for breuity omitted, as alſo their courſe homewards.

The fifteenth day, being thurſday, we had ſight of Saint Lucia, bearing Weſt North-weſt of vs. This Iland of Saint Lucia is a very fertile Ile, bearing many ſorts of fruites, as Plantons, Potatoes, Pinos, * Guanos, Pompins, Caſſado, and many other fruites. It hath alſo great ſtore of Cotten wooll, and Tobacco, but their Tobacco is not very good. It hath alſo many wilde Beaſts in it, as Tygars, Guanes, Alagartos, and other Beaſts, which time would not permit vs to ſee. It hath alſo great ſtore of Pigeons, Parrats, Pellicans, Cats, and Dogges. The people goe naked, hauing very long haire, and are very honeſt, kinde hearted people. In this Iland wee ſet our paſſengers aſhoare, and furniſhed them with all things neceſſary that our diſtreſſed Shippe could afford them. But they like treacherous idle diſpoſed people, not regarding our kindeneſſe, nor pittying our neceſſitie, betraied our Boate from vs, one morning as wee went aſhoare, my ſelfe and three or foure other Gentlemen being in her; and then they detained three Saylers which were drawing in the Boate keeping them for their owne vſe, and afterward ſent vs aboord in a Canoa, which we were faine to buy of them for Kniues. The Maſter and the Captaine ſeeing this their treacherous dealing, and being out of all hope to get their Boate againe, about thurſday in the euening, being the three and twentieth of Auguſt, gaue them a Peece of Ordnance with intent to beate downe their houſes. We had no ſooner let flye at them, but preſently they ſhot at vs againe, the bullet whereof came betweene our maine Maſt and our Poope, but it hurt no body. So that night we waied, and went to a Baye ſome two leagues to leeward of this roade where we firſt ankored. In this Bay there are halfe a doſen of Indian houſes very pleaſantly ſcituated vpon the top of a hill, with a freſh water Riuer at the foote of the ſame hill; and in this Baye we had very good traffick of linnen cloath, and many pleaſant fruites, for our Hatchets and Kniues. After we had roade here ſome ſixe houres, we might plainly diſcerne our Boate vnder ſaile, whereupon we preſently fitted our ſmall ſhot, hoping that their intent was to come aboord, and betray our Shippe, but they tacked in, and rowed alongſt the ſhoare, till they came to the very Bay where we roade, and there they ſtopped, and we were in good hope to recouer our Boate againe, but they tarried there trading for their commodities in the face of our Ordnance: whereupon we ſeeing their daring boldneſſe to be ſo great that they preſumed to trafficke in our owne Boate before our noſes, and to goe about as it were to ſtop vs from trafficke; we let flye at them ſixe peeces of Ordnance, and a vallie of ſmall ſhot, but what harme we did amongſt them, we know not, for they rowed away, and got out of ſight of vs. We tearmed the Baye where we put theſe men a ſhoare Rogues Baye, & the Cape we called Cape Knaue, and the Riuer, Riuer of Raſcols.

* The vertue of the Guanes a thing worthy the noting, for their nature is, if one eat a ripe one, it ſets one a ſcouring, and eate a greene one, it will ſtay a ſcouring. Probatum.

This very ſame day being the foure and twentieth of Auguſt, we waied anchor, and ſteered away South South-eaſt, and South-eaſt and by South amongſt for Saint Vincents. And vpon Saturday, the fiue and twentieth day, in the afternoone we arriued at the Iland of Saint Vincents, where we came within a Ships length very nigh the ſhoare, which put vs all in great feare, for if God had not ſent vs a gale from the ſhoare, we had runne a ground, and we had had all our throates cut by the Indians of that Iland. So that night we tried it off at Sea with our fore-top-ſaile, and fore-ſaile, intending next day, being Sunday, to ſtand it in againe for the ſhoare (becauſe we had good hope of good trafficke there.) But the current had driuen vs ſo farre off at Sea by the next morning, and the winde blew ſo vehemently from the ſhoare, that we could by no meanes fetch the land; whereupon being foure leaues from the ſhoare of Saint Vincents, we ſteered away South South-weſt, and South-weſt and by South amongſt for the Teſtigoes. And the next morning being monday, we had ſight of the Granades, bearing of vs South-eaſt, but we could not fetch the Testigos. The nine and twentieth being Wednesday morning, we had sight of fiue small Rocks, which bore of vs West and by North some fiue leagues off: wee had also sight of the Iland of Blanco, whereby wee found that the Current had set vs, and doth set to the North-east, and therefore your best course to goe from the Granades to the Testigos, is to steere away South-west.

Current.

Margarita. The first of September being Friday morning wee had sight of Margarita, and at night wee cast anchor at the Westermost Point of this Iland, called Point Macanao. The second day the next morning wee went ashoare with our Canoa, to see if wee could meete with any Spaniards, with whom wee might bargaine for some Beeues. But wee could neither see Spaniards, Beeues, nor fresh-water, onely we found the dung of Beeues. In this Iland of Margarita also there are great store of Pelicans. This morning wee weighed; and as soone as wee had doubled the Point of Macanao, we had sight of the Rangeria, which is as it were a little towne, contayning in it some fortie or fiftie houses. Here wee did not land because wee saw no people, but stood it away South South-east and South and by East amongst for the Burdones. About mid-night wee came close aboard the shoare by an Iland, called Tobacco, and then wee sounded, and had ground at fortie fathome.

The third day being Monday morning, wee were becalmed, some three leagues off from the mayne. About twelue at noone the same day, wee had sight of Point de Ray. The winde and breeses blew so strongly of the shoare, that we could not come to anchor that night to the Burdones. These Burdones are no Towne, nor hath any houses, but belongeth to the Towne of Comana.

The fourth day being Wednesday, at foure in the afternoone, wee came to an anchor at the Burdones; so that wee were three dayes in getting to the shoare, being in sight of it all the while. About twelue at mid-night the same day, wee put out our sayne-Net into the Sea for to Sword-fish. catch some fish. And about foure in the morning wee found a great Sword-fish shut into the Net, which was fourteene foot long, and he had a sword some three foot long. The sword is square, and blunt at the end, hauing great prickles vpon each side, of the bignesse of a wilde Bores tuske. We sent our Canoa ashoare here, to parley with them hauing a flagge of truce. The Gouernour of Comana perceiuing our Canoa comming ashoare, sent a Molato to parley with our men, who saluted them very kindly, inquiring of vs, what newes in England, and whether the Constable of Spaine were gone home into Spaine or no; we told him he was gone into Spaine, before we set out of England: we asked of him what newes in Comana of any English men, and when any had beene here; hee told them about a moneth agoe, and that one of them had like to haue beene taken by a French Pirat, if a Flemming had not tooke his part. This night there came foure Spaniards aboard our ship from a Caruell which was at an anchor halfe a league from vs. These Spaniards burged with vs some Tabacco, and told vs, that Captaine Lee had a Towne built for himselfe, and that the Pinnasse had beene here a moneth agoe.

The seuenth of September in the afternoone, there came the Aide of Master Eldreds to an anchor in the road where we rode, and then we welcommed them with a shot, and they gaue vs three for one: after these our salutations, the Captaine of the Aide, called Squire, came aboard vs, and told vs, that Sir Oliph Lee his Pinnasse was come home, before they set out of England,

Cap. Leighs death. and that Captaine Lee dyed in the Pinnasse comming into England: others of his companie said, that they heard he was betrayed, and killed in his Hamaca in Wapoco. He also told vs, that he had left some thirtie men behind him which were in great miserie and extremitie, both for lacke of health and scarcitie of victuals.

The nineteenth of September, Captaine Squire weighed, and left vs going for Comonagota. The Spaniards dare not trucke with vs for any thing, but when that they steale aboard in the night; for if that they should be espyed they should be hanged: Cloth of Tissue and Gold, cloth of Siluer, Veluet, Sattins, Silkes, fine woollen cloth and linnen, as Cambrick, Lawne, Holland; new Trunkes, Pistols, Fowling peeces, and Muskets, are very good commodities to truck with the Spaniards, and all other places in the Indies. I noted one thing amongst many things, concerning the nature of that climate of Comana. It is monstrous hot all the day long till it be noone, and then there blowes a coole breese: and at noone you shall alwayes haue thundering Comana. and lightning without any raine for the most part. The towne of Comana stands two miles from the Sea-side, and cannot be seene by reason of the trees which couer the sight of it, but you may see the Gouernours house, for it stands vpon the top of a Hill, looking ouer the trees, which couer the towne.

Seuen saile of Hollanders. The eight and twentieth of September being Saturday, wee espyed seuen saile of Flemmings bound for Ponitra. The thirtieth day being Monday, we weighed for Loyntra; and wee steered away North and North and by West for Ponitra from Comana; and about sixe of the clocke in the morning we arriued there safely.

The fourteenth of October, Captaine Catlin and two other Gentlemen, went out of our ship vpon some discontentments, misliking of the Master of our ships vsage towards them, and had their passage in two Hollanders, that were riding at Ponitra. The fiue and twentieth, about eight a clocke at night wee weighed at Ponitra, hauing two Flemmish ships our consorts with vs. On the thirtieth we had sight of the Westermost end of Porto Rico, called Cape Roxo, and of a little Iland some foure leagues off, called Echro. Here we stayed till Friday and Saturday, hoping for to haue gotten the shoare for fresh water, and Oranges; but we had no winde at all to serue our turnes. About Saturday at noone, there came vnto vs a Flemmish boat with a dozen men in it; these men told vs, that vpon Sunday the seuen and twentieth day of this moneth, there came nineteene saile of Spaniards, and that they had taken all the ships which we left behinde vs, in number ten, sauing two ships of Captaine Mogerownes, which scaped by their swift sayling, and that they themselues being ashoare with their Boat made an escape from Penitra, and so came to vs at Porto Rico, which is one hundred and threescore leagues, where wee refreshed our selues with fresh water and Oranges.

The ninth of Nouember being Saturday, wee disembogued from Porto Rico. The two and twentieth of December we saw Flores, one of the Ilands of the Asores.

CHAP. XVI.

A Relation of a voyage to Guiana performed by ROBERT HARCOVRT of Stanton Harcourt in the Countie of Oxford Esquire. To Prince CHARLES.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1608. and the 23. of March, when I had furnished my selfe with one ship of fourscore tunnes, called the Rose; a Pinnasse of sixe and thirtie tunnes, called the Patience; and a Shallop of nine tunnes, called the Lilly, which I built at Dartmouth; and had finished my other businesse there, and prepared all things in readinesse to begin my voyage, the winde reasonably seruing, I then imbarked my compania; as followeth. 23. March, 1608.

In the Rose, I was accompanied with Captaine Edward Fisher, Captaine Edward Harney, Master Edward Gifford, and my Cousin Thomas Harcourt: and besides them, I had of Gentlemen and others one and thirtie Land-men, two Indians, and three and twentie Mariners and Saylers. The Rose.

In the Patience, my brother Captaine Michael Harcourt, had with him of Gentlemen and others twentie Land-men, and eleuen Mariners and Saylers. The Patience.

In the Lilly, Iasper Lilly the Master, had one Land-man, and two Saylers: so that my iust number (too great for so few ships of no greater burden) was in all fourscore and seuenteene, whereof threescore were Land-men. The Lilly. Land-men sixtie.

Being thus imbarked, wee set saile from the Rainge at Dartmouth the said three and twentieth of March; but the winde altering vpon a sudden, put vs backe againe that euening; and about two of the clocke the next morning (it comming better for vs) we weighed anchor, and put to Sea: the euening following we lost sight of the Lizzard, and steered away for the Canaries. They set saile the 23. of March.

The seuenth day of Aprill we fell with Alegranza and Lancerote, two Ilands of the Canaries: we stood in with Alegranza and came to anchor on the South-west side thereof; that euening and the next day I landed my compania to exercise their limmes on shoare: in this Iland wee found no Inhabitants, nor fresh water, neither fruitfull Tree, Plant, Herbe, Grasse, nor any thing growing that was good, onely an abundance of vnwholsome Sea-fowle, which after one meale were vnsauourie and distastefull, and a few wilde Capritos, or wilde Goats, which the craggy Rocks defended from our hands, and hungrie mouthes. They arriue at Alegranza.

The eighth of Aprill we departed from Alegranza, and directed our course for Teneriffe, another of the Ilands. The eleuenth day I sent the Pinnasse, and the Shallop to water at the Calmes, and there to attend my comming; but with my ship I held my course for Orotana, a Towne on the other side of the Iland, in hope to get some wine amongst the Merchants there; but not being able (by reason of a contrarie winde) to double Punta de Nega, wee altered our course from Wine to Water. And the twelfth day wee passed by Santa Cruc, and watered that euening at the Calmes. Teneriffe.

This watering place is very conuenient for all such as passe by those Ilands, and is thus to bee found; there is a woodden Crosse neere vnto it, the high Pike of Teneriffe beareth due North from it. There is also a ledge of Rocks to the Eastward of the landing place, which is a short Sandie Bay. When you are landed, you shall finde the place about fortie or fiftie yards from the Sea side. An excellent watering place.

Then we stood on our course for the Riuer of Wiapoco in Guiana, hauing a prosperous winde, faire weather, and a smooth Sea. The ninth day of May, wee fell into the Current of the great and famous Riuer of Amazones, which putteth out into the Sea such a violent and mightie streame of fresh water, that being thirtie leagues from land, we drunke thereof, and found it as fresh and good as in a Spring or Poole. The Riuer of Amazones. Fresh water in the Sea 30. leagues from land. Ioseph Acosta. Hieron. Giraud Tarraconensis.

This Riuer for the great and wonderfull breadth (contayning at the mouth neere sixtie leagues) is rightly termed by Iosephus Acosta the Empresse and Queene of all Flouds; and by Hieronymus Giraud Tarraconensis: it is said to bee the greatest not onely of all India, but also of the the whole world; and for the greatneſſe, is called of many the Sweet Sea. It riſeth and floweth from the Mountaines of Peru, and draweth out her ſtreames in many windings and turnings vnder the Equinoctiall, for the ſpace of one thouſand and fiue hundred leagues and more: although from her Fountaines and Springs vnto the Sea it is but ſixe hundred. When we entred into the aforeſaid Current, we ſounded, and had fortie foure fathome water, ſandie ſounding. The tenth day the colour of the water changed, and became muddie, whitiſh, and thicke; then we ſounded againe at noone, and had thirtie fathome; and ſeuenteene at foure in the afternoone. The eleuenth day at eight of the clocke in the morning wee made land, the vttermoſt Point thereof bearing Weſt from vs, and came to anchor in fiue fathom water.

The eleuenth of May they made land in Guiana.

At night the Patience putting in to neere the ſhoare, came to anchor in two fathome and a halfe water vpon the floud which fell from her vpon the ebbe, and left her drie vpon the Oaze, and the next floud comming in, did ſo ſhake and beate her againſt the ground, that before ſhee could get off, her rudder was beaten away, and her ribs ſo rent and craſed, that if Almightie God had not preſerued her, ſhee had beene wrackt: but (God be thanked) with much adoe ſhee came off into deeper water, and mended her Rudder, as well as the time and place would afford means. Then we followed on our courſe, coaſting along to the North North-weſt, the Land ſo trending. It is very ſhoale all along this Coaſt, the ground ſoft oaze, but no danger to be feared, keeping our ſhip in fiue fathom water.

The Patience in danger of wrack.

When we came to the latitude of two degrees and a halfe, wee anchored in a goodly Bay, by certaine Ilands, called Carripapoory, I did at that time forbeare to make particular diſcouerie of this Coaſt, intending (if God ſpare me life) to make a perfect diſcouerie of the famous Riuer of Amazones, and of her ſeuerall branches, and Countries bordering vpon it, and of all this tract of land from the Amazones, vnto the Riuer of Wiapoco, which containeth many goodly Prouinces, and Signiories, which are in this diſcourſe, but briefly mentioned: For at this time I purpoſed onely to proſecute my firſt proiect, which haſtened me vnto another place.

Ilands called Carripapoory.

From hence I ſtood along the Coaſt, and the ſeuenteenth of May, I came to anchor in the Bay of Wiapoco: where the Indians came off vnto vs in two or three Canoes, as well to learne of what Nation we were, as alſo to trade with vs; who vnderſtanding that we were Engliſh men boldly came aboard vs, one of them could ſpeake our language well, and was knowne to ſome of my companie to be an Indian, that ſometime had beene in England, and ſerued Sir Iohn Gilbert many yeeres: they brought with them ſuch dainties as their Countrie yeeldeth; as Hens, Fiſh, Pinas, Platanaes, Potatoes, bread of Caſſaui, and ſuch like cates, which were heartily welcome to my hungrie companie: In recompence whereof, I gaue them Kniues, Beades, Iewes trumps, and ſuch toyes, which well contented them. But when I had awhile entertayned them, and made known vnto them the rerurne of the Indian, Martin, their Countriman, whom I brought with mee out of England, they ſeemed exceeding ioyfull, ſuppoſing that he had beene dead, being aboue foure yeeres ſince he departed from them.

The Indian before mentioned to haue ſerued Sir Iohn Gilbert (whoſe name was Iohn) whileſt he liued (for he is now dead, and dyed a Chriſtian) was a great helpe vnto vs, becauſe hee ſpake our language much better then either of thoſe that I brought with mee, and was euer firme and faithfull to vs, vntill his death. By him I vnderſtood that their Towne was ſituate vpon the Eaſt ſide of the Hill in the mouth of Wiapoco, and was called Caripo: that the Indian, Martin, was Lord thereof, and that in his abſence his brother was chiefe. Moreouer, hee certified mee that the principall Indian of that Riuer was called Caraſana (who by good fortune) was then at Caripo, and ſo hauing ſpent ſome time in other conference and friendly entertainment, they tooke their leaue, and departed for that time. I ſent one of my companie with them to giue notice to Caraſana, and the reſt of the Indians of Caripo, that I had brought home their Countryman Martin, whom they all thought to bee dead, and another of their Nation alſo, who had kindred and friends amongſt them: to deſire him to come aboard my ſhip, and to bring with him the principall Indians of Caripo, that I might declare vnto them the cauſe of my comming into their Countrie, and conferre with them of other matters intended for their good. The next day I came into the Riuer of Wiapoco, and anchored ouer againſt the Sandy Bay.

A meſſenger ſent to the Indians.

The day following the Indians came aboard as I had deſired, and brought vs good ſtore of their Countrie prouiſion: Caraſana, and one or two more of them were attyred in old clothes, which they had gotten of certaine Engliſh men, who (by the direction of Sir Walter Raleigh) had traded there the yeere before; the reſt were all naked, both men and women; and this I obſerued amongſt them, that although the better ſort of men (eſpecially the Taios) doe couer their priuities, by wearing ouer them a little peece of cotton cloth, pretily wouen after their manner; yet did I neuer ſee any of their women couered in any part, either aboue or beneath the waſte, albeit they daily conuerſed amongſt vs, but were all (as the plaine prouerb is) euen ſtarke belly naked.

The Indians came aboard.

The chief men of the Nation of the Taios couer their priuities.

The women generally goe all naked.

At their comming aboard my ſhip, firſt Caraſana as the principall amongſt them, and after him the reſt, ſaluted and welcommed vs after their rude manner. I vſed them with all curteſie, and entertayned them as well as the ſtraight roome would giue me leaue, giuing them good ſtore of Aquauita, which they loue exceedingly: I presented to their view their two Countrimen; Martin the Lord of their Towne, and Anthonie Canabre, who was a Christian, and had liued in England fourteene yeers, both which I had brought home vnto them: when they beheld them, and after salutations, and some conference, knew to bee the same persons, whom they supposed had beene long since dead, they expressed much ioy and contentment: and vnderstanding (from their owne mouthes) how well I had vsed them, they seemed to be better pleased with our comming: and when their rude salutations to their new-come Countrimen were ended, I tooke them apart, and thus declared the cause of my comming.

of

Their conference with the Indians.

First, I brought to their remembrance the exploits performed by Sir Walter Raleigh in their Countrie, in the reigne of our late Soueraigne Queene Elizabeth, when (to free them from seruitude) he most worthily vanquished the Spaniards at Trinidado: burned their Towne, tooke their Gouernour Don Anthonio de Berreo prisoner; deliuered fiue of the Indian Kings imprisoned, and bound by the necke with collers of Iron; and with great labour and perill discouered the Riuer of Orenoque, and the Countries adioyning, as farre as the Prouince of Aromaya, the Countrie of Tepiawary, and the Riuer of Caroli beyond it: And that their Countrimen called the Orenoqueponi (who are the borderers of Orenoque) did then most willingly submit and render themselues vnder the subiection of the late Queene; all which they well remembred, and said, that Sir Walter Raleigh promised to haue returned againe vnto them long since.

The Orenoqueponi rendred themselues subiects to Queen Elizabeth.

Then I excused his not returning according to his promise, by reason of other imployments of great importance imposed vpon him by the late Queene: shewing them moreouer, that when he could not (for that cause) returne himselfe, hee sent Captaine Keymis to visit them, and to bring him true intelligence of their estate (supposing that hee had left no Spaniards behinde him at Trinidado of power to molest them) to the end that reliefe and aide might bee prepared for them, according to their necessities, and oppression of their enemies. Then I told them of the death of the late Queene, whereby that businesse of theirs was againe hindered.

Cap. Keymis his voyage to Guiana.

Moreouer, I declared vnto them, that our gracious Soueraigne Lord King Iames, who now reigneth ouer vs (being the onely right and lawfull Heire, and Successor, to the Crowne and Dignitie of the Realme of England, after the death of the late Queene) was throughout the whole Land proclaymed King of England; and so comming to reigne ouer vs, hath beene euer since busied in ordering the State and affaires of the Kingdome, which being (by his great wisedome) setled in tranquillitie and peace, like a good, gracious, and worthy King, doth now permit his Subiects to trauell abroad into forraine Countries, and Nations, to aide and assist all such as are vniustly molested by their enemies. Whereupon, I and the rest of these worthy Gentlemen my associates and friends, hauing intelligence by some that had beene followers of Captaine Charles Lee (who was a man well knowne amongst them, and heretofore had taken possession of their Countrie to his Majesties vse, and was planted diuers yeeres in Wiapoco, where hee lyeth buried) of the great variance and discord depending betweene them the allied Nations, the Taios, Arwacens, Sappios, and Paragotes; and their enemies the Charibes (all inhabiting betweene the Riuers of Amazones, and Dessequebo) haue made a long and dangerous voyage into those parts, to appease their dissentions, and defend them against the Charibes, or other enemies that shall molest or oppresse them: and now being there arriued, doe intend to make search in those Countries for conuenient places, where such of our Nation, as shall hereafter come to defend them, may be fitly seated to dwell amongst them; that if any of those Nations shall attempt at any time to disturbe the quiet liuing of their Neighbours, they may haue store of English friends at hand and amongst them, that will not spare their paines to appease their discords, nor their liues to defend them from harme.

Possession of the Countrie taken at Wiapoco, by Captaine Lee to his Maiesties vse.

When I had thus declared vnto them the cause of my comming, they made this answere; that with our comming they were well pleased; but our number of men they thought too great, that they wanted meanes to prouide vs bread sufficient for them all, hauing but a small Towne, few Gardens, and slender prouision for their owne companies, because since Captaine Lee his death, and his mens departure from them, they neuer made prouision for any strangers.

I replyed, that albeit their Towne was small, and their Gardens few (for the grounds wherein they plant their Cassaui, whereof they make their bread, they call their Gardens) yet their Countrie was full of Inhabitants, and had store of Gardens to supply our wants of bread, and was plentifully stored with other prouisions sufficient for a greater number, which I desired might bee weekely brought vnto vs, as neede required, for that I meant not to take it without recompence, but would giue them for it such commodities as should well please them, which they wanted: as Axes, Hatchets, Kniues, Beades, Looking-glasses, Iewes trumps, and such like things wherein they most delight.

The Indians go to counsell.

Then they desired to consult amongst themselues, which I permitted, and expected their answere aboue two houres, which time they spent in debating the matter after their manner, and drinking Aquauita, and in the end desired my presence, and made me this answere.

Their answer.

That they were contented and well pleased we should liue amongst them; that they would furnish vs with houses to lodge in, and prouide all necessaries for vs in the best manner they could, could. But whereas I ſaid our King would permit his people to liue and abide amongſt them, and defend them againſt their enemies: they anſwered, it was a thing they greatly deſired, and had expected long, and now they made much doubt thereof, and ſaid they were but words, hauing heretofore beene * promiſed the like, but nothing performed. To reſolue that doubt, and make good my ſpeeches, I told them what I had ſpoken ſhould certainely be performed, and to that end I would leaue my brother in their Country, and ſome of my company with him, to dwell amongſt them, vntill a greater ſupply might be ſent from England for their better defence. Then they ſeemed to giue credit to my words: And ſo after much talke, and many complements to pleaſe the naked people, I gaue to Caraſana a Sword, and to the reſt ſome other things, which pleaſed them well: and then after their manner taking their leaue, they departed. The next day the Indian Martyn went aſhoare, and ſeemed ioyfull that he had againe recouered his owne home.

* By Sir Walter Raleigh, and Captaine Lee.

The Indian Martyn goeth aſhoare.

The day following I tooke land, with my companies in armes and colours diſplayed, and went vp vnto the Towne, where I found all the women and children ſtanding at their doores to behold vs. The principall Indians came out vnto me, and inuited me into the Captaines houſe, which vntill the returne of Martyn belonged vnto his brother, as chiefe Lord in his abſence: I went vp with them and was friendly feaſted with many kindes of their Countrie cates: when I had well eaten and refreſhed my ſelfe, Martyn tooke me by the hand and ſaid, that he had not any thing wherewith to requite my kindeneſſe towards him, in ſuch manner as he deſired; neither had he ſuch delicate fare, and good lodging for vs, as in England heretofore we had beene vſed vnto: but humbly intreated me to accept of his houſe in good part for my ſelfe, and the Gentlemen of my company; and the reſt ſhould be lodged in other Indian houſes adioyning: and that ſuch prouiſion as the Country yeeldeth, ſhould be prouided for vs. His ſpeech was approued by the reſt of the Indians preſent, who tooke me by the hand one after another, and after their manner bad me welcome. I gaue them many thankes, and ſome rewards for their kinde entertainment; and then diſpoſed my company in conuenient lodgings: but yet I kept a continuall guard, as in time of warre.

When I had thus ſetled my company at this village, I went out to view the ſcituation of the place, and the aduantages for defence thereof. It is a great rockie Mountaine, not acceſſable by reaſon of faſt woods, and ſteepe rockes, but onely in certaine places, which are narrow foote-paths, very ſteepe and eaſie to be defended: whereby we were lodged as in a Fort, and moſt conueniently in reſpect the harbour was ſo neere, for our Ships did ride at anchor vnderneath vs, ouer againſt the foote of the hill.

The Engliſh ſetled at Caripo in Wiapoco.

The ſtrength of the place.

Being thus arriued vpon the Coaſt, I found the time of the yeare ſo vnſeaſonable for our purpoſe, that (by reaſon of continuall raines) we were conſtrained to lye ſtill and doe nothing for the ſpace of three weekes, or a moneth: in which idle time I conferred with the Indians, ſometime with one, ſometime with another; and by helpe of my Indian Anthony Canabre, and the Indian Iohn aboue mentioned (whom I vſed for my interpreters) I gathered from them as well as I could, the State of their Countrie; the manner of their gouernment and liuing; how they ſtood with their neighbours in tearmes of peace, and warre; and of what power and ſtrength they were. I inquired alſo of the ſeaſons of the yeare in thoſe parts: of their diuiſion, and account of times, and numbers; of the prouiſions of their Countrie for victuals, and other neceſſaries: and made a diligent inquiry of all the commodities their Country yeeldeth, and what things were of moſt eſtimation amongſt them: all which I haue briefely declared vnto your Highneſſe in this following diſcourſe.

THis goodly Countrie, and ſpacious Empire, is on the North part bounded with the Sea, and the great Riuer of Orenoque, wherein Sir Walter Raleigh performed his worthy and memorable diſcouery, on the Eaſt and South parts, with the famous Riuer of Amazones: and on the Weſt part with the Mountaines of Peru.

The bounds and limits of Guiana.

The weſtermoſt branch of the Riuer of Amazones that falleth into the Sea, is called Arrapoco: vpon which Riuer are ſeated many goodly Signiories well deſeruing a particular diſcouery, which ſhall (by Gods permiſſion) be performed hereafter. To the North of Arrapoco is the Riuer of Arraway, which is a goodly Riuer, diſcouering a gallant Countrie. From Arraway vnto the Riuer of Caſſipurogh extendeth the Prouince of Arricay; containing the Signiories of Arraway, Maicary, and Cooſhebery; of which Anakyury is principall, who by Nation is a Yaio, and fled from the borders of Orenoque for feare of the Spaniards, to whom he is a mortall enemy. He hath ſeated himſelfe in the Prouince of Arricay, and now dwelleth at Moroega in the Signiory of Maicari. To the North North-weſt of which, there falleth into the Sea a Riuer called Conawini, whereupon the Signiory of Cooſhebery bordereth; whereof an Indian named Leonard Rapago is Chiefe, vnder the ſubiection of Anaki-v-ry. This Indian is chriſtened, and hath beene heretofore in England with Sir Walter Raleigh, to whom he beareth great affection: he can a little vnderſtand and ſpeake our language, and loueth our Nation with all his heart. During my aboad at Wiapoco, hauing intelligence of him, and of his Country, and that certaine ſtones were found found therein, ſuppoſed to be Diamonds: I ſent my Cozen, Captaine Fiſher to diſcouer the ſame, and fetch ſome of thoſe ſtones, to be reſolued of the truth.

At his comming thither, Leonard entertained him with all kindeneſſe, not after the ordinary rude manner of the Indians, but in more ciuill faſhion, and with much reſpect and loue, he furniſhed him with guides to conduct him through the Country to the place where the Stones were found, being fifty miles Southward vp into the Land: beyond which place there is an high Mountaine appearing in ſight, called Cowob, and on the top thereof (as the Indians report) a great Lake or Poole, full of excellent fiſh of diuers kindes. The Countrey was as pleaſant and delightfull, as euer any man beheld; but the Stones not Diamonds: yet they were Topaſes, which being well cut, and ſet in Gold by a cunning workman, doe make as faire a ſhew, and giue as good a luſtre as any Diamond whatſoeuer: which yeelde good hopes of better to be found hereafter: For where the Topas is found on the Mountaines of Tenaſſeren, in the Eaſt Indies, the greateſt ſtore of Diamonds are alſo found.

When my kinſman returned, Daptaine Leonard came with him to Wiapoco (being aboue an hundred miles from his owne Country) onely to viſite me and my company; for the great loue he did beare to Sir Walter Raloigh, and our Nation. I much maruelled to ſee him, for aſſuredly he is the braueſt Indian of all thoſe parts. After he had beene with me a day or two, he earneſtly requeſted me to ſend ſome of my company into his Countrey, which he greatly commended for the wholeſome ayre, and plenty of victuals, alleading that the place where then wee liued (by his owne experience) was very vnhealthfull, that our men would there be ſubiect to ſickeneſſe and die: and for an inſtance he named Captaine Lee, and his company, who formerly were planted there, and almoſt all dyed by ſickneſſe in the ſame place: But he aſſured me that his own Country Cooſhebery was of a good ayre, pleaſant, and healthfull; that there they might haue roome ſufficient to build Engliſh houſes in (for thoſe were the words hee vſed) that thither they ſhould be welcome and ſhould want nothing. Much he perſwaded to draw me to his deſire, which by his importunity I granted, and accordingly performed it; finding his Country anſwerable to his report; being for the moſt part champian ground, naturally intermixt of plaine fields, fruitefull meadowes, and goodly woods, in ſuch admirable order, as if they had beene planted artificially by handy labour. The fields appearing aboue the meadowes in pleaſant and delightfull manner, preſenting here and there vnto the eye, from ſtately Mounts, moſt beautifull and liuely proſpects: the meadowes bordering on euery ſide betweene the fields and woods, the woods growing in the loweſt valleys betwixt the meadowes, and commonly are watered with ſweete and pleaſant freſh ſtreames running through them: which ſtrange and rare mixture of Mounts, Valleyes, Meadowes, Fields, and Woods, afford as excellent and healthfull habitations as can be wiſhed or deſired, but is not greatly peopled.

From the Riuer of Caſſipuroph N. Weſtward to the Riuer of Arracow, and vp further into the Land towards the Weſt, and South-weſt, as farre as the Riuer of Arwy (which falleth into Wiapoco aboue the ouerfalles) extend the Prouinces of Arracoory, and Morownia, which alſo to the landward (by the relation of my Brother, Captaine Michael Harcourt, and Captaine Harvey, who haue trauelled and diſcouered thoſe parts) are pleaſant and delightfull plaine Countries, like vnto Cooſhebery. The Arracoory Countrie is well peopled, and their chiefe Captaine is called Ipero. Betwixt the Wiapocoories and Arracoories there is no hearty loue and friendſhip, yet in outward ſhew they hold good quarter. In Morrownia, there is alſo ſtore of people, which are friendly Indians. In that Prouince there is a very high Hill called Callipuny, faſhioned like a Sugerloafe, or a Pyramis, which ouerlooketh and diſcouereth all the Territories adioyning aboue an hundred miles.

From the Riuer of Amazones to the Bay of Wiapoco, there fall into the Sea theſe Riuers following: Arrapoco (a branch of Amazones) Arrawary, Micary, Conawini, and Caſſipuroph: In the Bay of Wiapoco to the Eaſt of the ſaid Riuer, there falleth into the Sea the Riuer of Arracow; and into Arracow falleth the Riuer of VVatis. To the North of VViapoco there is a ſmall creeke called Wiawary, which letteth into the Sea a dayes iourney Weſtward vp into the land: ſome take this creeke to be a Riuer, but they doe erre in that opinion, it hauing neither Spring nor Fountaine from whence it falleth. To the North and North-weſt of the ſaid creeke, there is a ridge of high Mountaines running towards the Riuer of Apurwaca, the ſoile whereof is excellent and fertile for Tobacco, and beareth the beſt of all thoſe parts; ſo are the Sugar-canes there growing the beſt and faireſt that are found vpon the Coaſt: and all the tract of Land betwixt the Riuer of VViapoco, and Apurwaca, is accounted the Prouince of VViapocoory, containing the Signiories of VViapoco, and VViawary. Riuers fal ing into the Sea, to the North-west of Wiapoco

To the North-west of the Bay of Wiapoco, there fall into the Sea the Riuer of Apurwaca, Cowo, Wio, and Caiane. Apurwaca is a goodly Riuer, and well inhabited: Cowo is voide of inhabitants: Wio is a faire Riuer and leadeth many dayes iourney into the high land, and discouereth a fertile and hopefull Countrey. At Caiane there is an excellent harbour for shipping of any burden, which heretofore by Captaine Lawrence Keymis was called Port Howard: On the Starbood side, as you enter this harbour, there is an Iland of low land, called Muccumbro, scituate betwixt the Riuer of Caiane and Meccoria, containing in circuit about sixteene leaues. In this Iland there are two hils, the one called Muccumbro, whereof the Iland taketh the name; the other called Cillicedemo: from these hils the greatest part of the Iland may be ouerviewed, which containeth many goodly Pastures and Meadowes intermixt with some Woods, and is full of Deere, both red and fallow.

Mattoory an Iland.

On the Larboord side, as you enter Caiane there is another Iland of high Land, called Mattoory, in quantitie much like vnto the first: this Iland for the commodious scituation, is of great effect for the defence of the harbour, affording naturally two such notable conuenient places for the planting of Ordnance for that purpose, as no industry of art could deuise better, or more auaileable.

Arrawicary chiefe Captaine of the Caiane.

The Inhabitants of this Prouince of Caiane, are Charibes, their principall commander is called Arrawicary, who dwelleth at Cillicedemo before mentioned: we haue found him trusty and faithfull to our Nation but; to our friend Leonard of Coosheberry, he is a mortall enemy. At this mans house I left foure or fiue of my company, thereby to hold amity and friendship with the Charibes, to learne their language, and to keepe peace betweene them and the Taios, Arwaccas, and other Narions their allies. To the South-westward of these Prouinces aboue mentioned towards the high land, there be many others which hereafter shall be more exactly described by a second discouery.

Foure or fiue men placed at Caiane.

The manner of their gouernment.

These Prouinces & Signiories to the landward are not plentifully inhabited, the greatest numbers of people are seated neare vnto the Riuers, & trauell from place to place in Canoes. There is no setled gouernment amongst them, onely they acknowledge a superiority, which they will obay as farre as they please. In euery Prouince or Signiory there is a chiefe Cassique, or Captaine, commanding all: So likewise in euery Towne and Village, they commonly chastise murder and adultery by death, which onely are the offences punished amongst them, and certaine persons are appointed by them to execute those punishments. The Indians take wiues, ouer whom they are extreame iealous, and expect great continencie in them; for if they take them in adultery, they presently cause their braines to be beaten out. The better sort of persons haue euery one of them two or three wiues, or more, the rest but one; accounting him that hath most wiues, the greatest man. Their wiues (especially the elder sort) are as seruants vnto them, for they make their bread and drinke, dresse their meate, serue them at meales, and doe all the other businesse about the house.

Diuers languages in Guiana.

The Charibes most ancient vpon the Sea coast.

These Prouinces are peopled with diuers Nations of seuerall languages, namely, Taios, Arwaccas, Sappaios, Paragotos, and Charibes. The Charibes are the ancient inhabitants, and the other Nations are such as haue beene chased away from Trinidado, and the borders of Orenoque. And forasmuch as they haue vnited themselues in those parts, the Charibes haue held them in continuall warres, but the Taios and the other Nations their Allyes, are growne so strong, that they haue constrained the Charibes of the Sea-coast to contract a peace with them, yet beare no hearty loue the one Nation to the other: but with the Charibes inhabiting the in-land parts vpon the Mountaines, they haue as yet no peace at all; for they doe often times come downe vpon them in great numbers, spoile and burne their houses, kill their men, and carry away their women, which is the greatest cause of warre and hatred amongst them; whereof our men haue seene experience in Coosheberry, where happened an accident worth the obseruing, which I will here declare vnto your Highnesse. The Indian Leonard Ragapo, before mentioned, is a Taio, who finding the Countrey of Coosheberry slenderly inhabited, hath seized vpon it for his owne Signiorie; and at his earnest request, I sent foure Gentlemen of my company to remaine there with him. The naturall inhabitants that dwell vpon the vttermost bounds thereof, towards the South, and West, are Charibes, and enemies to him, and to his Nation: for while our men vnknowne to the Charibes) staied at Coosheberry, they assembled themselues together to the number of two hundred or more, and came downe into his Signiorie, burned and spoiled houses, roasted one woman, tooke many prisoners, and intended to assault him also: which to preuent he armed about fiftie of his Indians, with their vsuall weapons; which are Bowes and Arrowes, long Staues sharpened at the point, and with fire hardened: wodden Swords and Targets very artificially made of wood, and painted with Beasts, and Birds: He requested also our men to aide and assist him with their Muskets, which I commanded them to doe, vpon all such occasions offered: And so being all in readinesse, Leonard (as their captain) led them on to intercept his enemies; and as I haue heard by Master Henry Baldwin (who then was prsent, and (to obserue the manner of their warres, gaue him leaue to command all) he brauely performed that exploit, in good order after their manner, and with great iudgement and reſolution. For in the Front, he firſt placed our foure Engliſhmen, by two in a ranke; next to them, two Indians armed with woodden Swords and Targets; then two Archers; and after them two men with ſharpned ſtaues, inſtead of Pikes: and in like manner ordered, and ranked all his Company. Being thus prepared, hee marched againſt the Charibs, who (neere at hand) were comming in the ſame order towards him; but when they approached, and (vnexpected) perceiued our Engliſh men amongſt the Yaios, they were much amazed, and made a ſudden ſtand: which Leonard perceiuing, gueſſed rightly at the cauſe, and inſtantly did make good vſe of that aduantage. Hee commanded his owne company to keepe their Station, himſelfe with a Sword in his hand (which I had giuen him) and a Target of his owne faſhion, went boldly towards them to parley with their Captaines. And hauing called them out, hee reproued them for comming (as enemies) into his Signiory, for burning and ſpoiling his houſes, and his people: hee demanded ſatisfaction for the hurt done, and reſtitution of the priſoners taken, and warned them forthwith to depart out of his Signiory, and deſiſt from warre: which if they refuſed to fulfill, he was there ready with his friends the Engliſhmen to fight with them, and reuenge his wrongs: and ſaid further, that if in the conflict any of the Engliſh men were ſlaine, or hurt; hee would then fetch all the reſt from Wiapoco, and returne to burne their houſes, and cut them all in peeces. Thus hee boldly ſpake, with ſuch a courage, ſhewing alſo our men vnto them (who had their match in cocke ready to diſcharge) that hee ſtrooke ſuch a feare into them all, by reaſon of our mens preſence, that they preſently agreed to peace, performed what conditions he required, and then departed home with all their company. Here may your Highneſſe note the factions among the Indian Nations: the diſcipline and order they hold in warre: the feare the Charibes conceiued at the ſight of our Engliſh men, and the policy of the Indian Leonard, to take aduantage by their feare, and make our men his Guard, and chiefe protection againſt them. Theſe things in time will much auaile vs, being well obſerued, and rightly applied according to occaſion. But to our former diſcourſe.

The power and ſtrength of theſe Countries (being ſo thinly peopled) is not very great to withſtand the might of forraine enemies. The vſuall weapons of the Indians, are before deſcribed, ſauing that their Arrowes are oft times poiſoned. But ſince our trade and commerce with them, they haue gotten a few good Swords, Muskets, Caliuers, and ſome ſmall quantity of ſhot and powder; and haue learned to handle their Peeces very orderly, and ſome of them are good ſhot.

The ſeaſons of the yeare vpon this coaſt, and in this climate are diuers, for in the Eaſt parts of Guiana towards the Amazones, the dry weather, which we call their Summer beginneth in Auguſt; and the violent raines and tempeſtuous winde, which we count their winter, doe begin in February: But in the Weſterne parts, towards Orenoque, the dry ſeaſon beginneth in October, and the raines and windes in Aprill. There is little difference of heate and cold in this diuerſity of ſeaſons being ſo neere the Equinoctiall, where the day and night are alwayes equall: for in thoſe parts wee finde, that when the Sunne declineth furtheſt from them towards the Tropicke of Capricorne, the ayre is then cleareſt, and the ſeaſon of the yeare moſt dry; as in the Eaſterne parts of Guiana in Auguſt, September, October, Nouember and December: and when the Sunne returneth towards the Tropicke of Cancer, then doe the raines begin, increaſe, and decreaſe, from Frbruary to Iuly: but ſometimes they begin to fall, and the Riuers to riſe, ſwell, and ouerflow ſooner or later by a moneth; and the yeare is ſometimes more or leſſe windie and wet, according to the diſpoſition of the heauens, and of the Planets: and as the Sun approacheth, or declineth little, or much, euen ſo the earth wanteth or aboundeth with water and moiſture.

The winter beginneth in February.

They haue no diuiſion or account of times or numbers; they onely reckon by the Moones, as one, two, three, foure, or fiue Moones: or by dayes in like manner. Their numbers they reckon thus, one, two, three, and ſo to ten: then they ſay ten and one, ten and two, ten and three, &c. And to ſhew their meaning more certainly, they will hold vp one, two, three, or more of their fingers, expreſſing the numbers, ſtill making ſignes as they ſpeake, the better to declare their meaning: when they will reckon twenty, they will hold downe both their hands to their feete, ſhewing all their fingers and toes, and as the number is greater, ſo will they double the ſigne. When they appoint or promiſe any thing to be done by a time limited, they will deliuer a little bundle of ſticks equall to the number of dayes, or Moones, that they appoint, and will themſelues keepe another bundle of the like number: and to obſerue their appointed time, they will euery day, or Moone take away a ſticke, and when they haue taken away all, then they know that the time of their appointment is come, and will accordingly performe their promiſe.

Their accounts of times and numbers.

As touching Religion, they haue none amongſt them, that I could percelue, more then a certaine obſeruance of the Sunne and Moone, ſuppoſing them to be aliue, but vſing no religious worſhip towards them, nor offer ſacrifice to any thing; vnleſſe they vſe a ſuperſtition in their drinking feaſts, by ſacrificing Iarres of drinke: for at the death of any of their Caſſiques, Captaines, Religion. They vſe no ſacrifice, nor religious worſhip to any thing.

The manner of their drinking feast at the death of their Captaines.

Captaines, or great friends whom they esteeme, they will make a solemne feast (their chiefest prouision being of their best and strongest drinke, which they call Parranow) which feast shall continue three or foure dayes, or as long as their liquor lasteth, spending their time in dancing, singing, and drinking excessiuely: in which vice they exceede all other Nations whatsoeuer, accounting him that will be drunke first, the braueſt fellow: during this solemnitie of their drinking, some women being neereſt of their kin vnto the party dead, doth stand by and cry extreamely: thus their manner is vntill their drinke be spent, and then the feast is ended. Whether they vse any superstition in this custome I know not; time will reueale, and also reforme it. It is most certaine that their Peeais (as they call them) Priests, or Southsayers, at some speciall times haue conference with the Diuell (the common deceiuer of mankinde) whom they call Wattipa, and are by him deluded; yet notwithstanding their often conference with him, they feare and hate him much, and say that he is nought: and not without great reason, for hee will oftentimes (to their great terror) beate them blacke and blew. They beleeue that the good Indians when they dye, goe vp, and will point towards the heauens, which they call Caupo; and that the bad Indians goe downe, pointing to the earth, which they call Soy. When any Cassiques, Captaine, or chiefe man dieth amongst them, if he haue a slaue or prisoner taken from their enemies, they will kill him; and if he haue none such, then will they kill one of his other seruants, that he may haue one to attend him in the other world.

Their Peeais or Priests haue conference with the diuel.

Their opinion of the dead.

At the death of a Cassique, they kill an Indian to serue him in the other world.

The qualitie of the Land in those Countries, is of diuers kindes; by the Sea side the Land is low, where the heate would be most vehement, if it were not qualified and tempered by a fresh Easterly winde or Brieze, most forcibly blowing in the heate of the day: in many places this low land is very vnhealthfull, and little inhabited, by reason of the ouer-flowing of the waters: but for the most part it hath goodly nauigable Riuers, a fertile soyle, much people, and is a healthfull habitation. Vpon the Mountaines there is a high land, where the ayre is coldest, in some places it is fruitfull, in others not: but generall is full of Minerals, and mines of mettals, and yeeldeth as many as any part either of the East, or West Indies, both of the best, and of the basest whereof, we shall (by Gods permission) giue good testimony, to the benefit of our Countrey, and honour of our Nation in time conuenient: and in most places vpon the Mountaines there is sound and healthfull dwelling. There is also a middle sort of land, which is of a meane height, and is most temperate, healthfull, fertile, and most inhabited of all other; it aboundeth in Meadowes, Pastures, and pleasant streames of fresh water, in goodly woods, and most delightfull Plaines, for profit, pleasure, sport, and recreation: and also is not void of Minerals.

The quality of the Land.

The prouisions for victuals. The roote of Cassani maketh their bread and drinke.

The prouisions of this Countrey for victuals, are many: First, of the roote of a tree, called Cassani, they make their Bread, in manner following; they grate the roote vpon a stone, and presse out the iuice thereof, which being rawe is poyson, but boiled with Guinea Pepper, whereof they haue abundance, it maketh an excellent and wholesome sawce, then they drie the grated roote, and bake it vpon a stone, as we bake our Oaten cakes in England. This Bread is very excellent, much like, but farre better then our great Oaten cakes, a finger thicke, which are vsed in the Moorelands, and the Peake in Staffordshire and Darbyshire.

Maix, or Guinea wheate.

There is a kinde of great Wheat, called Maix, of some it is called Guinea Wheat, which graine is a singular prouision in those Countries, and yeeldeth admirable increase, euen a thousand or fifteene hundred for one, and many times much more. It maketh excellent meale, or flower for Bread; and very good Malt for Beere or Ale, and serueth well for sundry other necessary vses for the reliefe of man. Of the aforesaid Cassani bread, and this Wheate the Indians make drinke, which they call Passiaw: it will not keepe long, but must be spent within foure or fiue dayes: they make another kinde of drinke of Cassani, called Parranow, very good and strong, much like vnto our best March beere in England, and that kinde of drinke will keepe ten dayes; many sorts they haue which I haue tasted, some strong, some small, some thicke, some thin, but all good, being well made, as commonly they were amongst the Taios, and Arwaccas, which are the cleanliest people of all those Nations.

Their diuers kinds of drinke

An excellent drinke made of Cassani.

Store of hony.

There is great store of hony in the Country, and although it be wilde (being taken out of trees and buries in the earth) yet is it as good as any in the world; of which may be made an excellent drinke much vsed in Wales, called Meath. The hony and the waxe, are also good commodities for merchandise.

The soyle excellent for Vines.

There is no Vines in that Country, but the Soyle being rich and fertile, and the climate hot, if they were planted there, they would prosper exceedingly, and yeelde good Sackes, and Canary wines, which in those parts we finde to be very wholesome.

Sundry kindes of Beasts in Guiana.

Many other necessary prouisions sufficient for the sustenance of man, doe there abound in plenty: Namely, Deere of all sorts, wilde Swine in great numbers, whereof there are two kindes, the one small, by the Indians called Pockiero, which hath the nanile in the backe; the other is called Paingo, and is as faire and large as any we haue in England. There be store of Hares, and Conies, but of a kinde far differing from ours: There be Tigers, Leopards, Ounces, Armadils, Maipuries,

Swine which haue the Nauile in the back which are in taste like Beefe, & wil take salt: Baremoes or Ant-Beares, which taste like Mutton, & other

other small beasts of the same taste, coloured, like a Fawne, Elkes, Monkies, and Marmosites of diuers sorts, both great and small: of these beasts there bee innumerable, and by experience we haue found them all good meate. Many other kindes of beasts there are of sundry and strange shapes, which hereafter shall be figured in their true proportion according to the life with their names annexed.

Great variety of Fowles.

Of Fowles there bee diuers kindes; namely, Wild-ducks, Widgins, Teales, Wild-geese, Herons of diuers colours, Cranes, Storkes, Pheasants, Patridges, Doues, Stock-doues, Black-birds, Curlewes, Godwits, Woodcokes, Snites, Parrots of sundry sorts, many other kindes of great and small Birds of rare colours; besides great rauenous Fowles; and Hawkes of euery kinde.

Diuers kindes of fish.

Of fish the varietie is great, first of Sea fish, there is Sea-breame, Mullet, Soale, Scate, Thorneback, the Sword-fish, Sturgeon, Seale, a fish like vnto a Salmon, but as the Salmon is red, this is yellow; Shrimps, Lobsters, and Oysters, which hang vpon the branches of Trees: There is a rare fish called Cassoerwa, which hath in each eye two sights, and as it swimmeth it beareth the lower sights within the water, and the other aboue: the ribs and back of this fish resemble those parts of a man, hauing the ribs round and the back flat, with a dent therein, as a man hath; it is somewhat bigger then a Smelt, but farre exceeding it for daintie meate; and many other sorts there be most excellent. Of fresh-water fish many kindes vnknowne in these parts, but all exceeding good and daintie: And I dare be bold to say, that this Countrie may compare with any other of the world, for the great varietie of excellent fish both of the Sea, and fresh Waters.

Oysters hang vpon trees.

A fish hauing foure eyes, and the ribs and backe like a man.

There is also a Sea-fish which vsually commeth into the fresh waters, especially in the winter and wet season; it is of great esteeme amongst vs, and we account it halfe flesh, for the bloud of it is warme; it commeth vp into the shallow waters in the drowned lands, and feedeth vpon grasse and weedes: the Indians name it Coinmero, and the Spaniards, Manati, but wee call it the Sea-sow; in taste it is like beefe, will take salt, and serue to victuall ships, as in our knowledge hath beene proued by our Countrimen: Of this fish may bee made an excellent oile for many purposes; the fat of it is good to frie either fish or flesh; the hide (as I haue heard) will make good buffe: and being dried in the Sunne, and kept from wet, will serue for Targets and Armour against the Indian arrowes: In the wet season the store of them are infinite; some of these hides were heretofore brought into England, by Sir Walter Rawleigh.

The Sea cow like beefe.

Sundrie kindes of fruits.

The seuerall kindes of fruits are many, the Pina, Platana, Potato, Medler, Plums of diuers sorts, the Nuts of strange kindes. The excellency of the Pina I cannot expresse, for I dare boldly affirme that the world affoordeth not a more delicate fruit: In taste it is like Straw-berries, Claret-wine and Sugar. The Platana is also a very good fruit, and tasteth like an old Pippin. The Potato is well knowne. The Medler exceedeth in greatnesse. The Plums I cannot commend, for to eate much of them doth cause fluxes, which in those Countries are dangerous. The Nuts are good being moderately eaten.

HAuing thus (most excellent Prince) declared the seuerall sorts of prouisions for victuals and necessarie foodes, it remayneth that I now make mention of the varietie of commodities, found in the Countrie for the trade of merchandise, which in few yeeres, by our paines and industrie, may be brought to perfection, and so setled in those parts, that not onely the vndertakers may receiue reward for their indeuours, but our Countrie also may grow rich, by trading for the fruits of our labours.

The varieties of commodities.

The first and principall commoditie of estimation, are the Sugar-canes, whereof in those parts there is great plentie; the soile is as fertill for them as in any other part of the world: They doe there grow to great bignesse in a short time; by orderly and fit planting of them, and by erecting conuenient workes for the boyling and making of Sugars (which at the first will require some charge and expence) may be yeerly returned great benefit and wealth: the long experience of the Portugals and Spaniards, in Brasil, and the Iland of the Canaries; and of the Moores in Barbarie, may giue vs certaine assurance, and full satisfaction thereof.

Sugar Canes.

Cotton wooll.

The Cotton wooll is a generall commoditie, beneficiall to our Merchants, and profitable to our Countrie, by making of Fustians, and seruing for Bumbaste, and other vses: for making of Hamaccas, which are the Indian beds, most necessarie in those parts; and also of a fine cotton cloth for clothing of the people. There is a naturall Hempe or Flax of great vse, almost as fine as silke as it may be vsed; we haue now found out the best vse of it; and for making of linnen cloth it is most excellent.

Naturall hemp or flaxe.

Diuers commodities for Dyers.

There bee many rare and singular commodities for Dyers, of which sort there is a red berrie, called Anoto, which being rightly prepared by the Indians, dyeth a perfect and sure Orange-tawnie in silke; it hath beene sold in Holland for twelue shillings starling the pound, and is yet of a good price. There is another berrie that dyeth blue. There is also a gumme of a tree, whereof I haue seene experience, that in cloth dyeth a sure and perfect yellow in graine. There bee leaues of certaine Trees, which being rightly prepared, doe die a deepe red. There is also a wood which dyeth a purple, and is of a good price; and another that dyeth yellow. There is yet another wood which dyeth a purple when the liquor is hot, and a crimson when the liquor is cold. Many other notable things there are (no doubt) not yet knowne vnto vs, which by our diligent labour and obseruation in time will be discouered and found.

Sweet gums.

The sweet Gummes of inestimable value and strange operation in physicke and chirurgerie, are innumerable; there is yellow Amber, Gummi Lemnia, Colliman or Carriman, Barratta, and many more which I omit. The Colliman hath beene proued by Master Walter Cary of Witham in Buckinghamshire (a Gentleman of great iudgement and practice in physicke) to be of speciall regard for many purposes: this gumme is black and brittle, much like in shew to common pitch; if you put a little of it vpon burning coales, it filleth all the roome with a most sweet and pleasant sauour. He further reporteth of it, that certainly if you hold your head ouer the fume thereof three or foure times a day, it cureth the giddinesse of the head, and is also a most excellent comfort and remedie for a cold, moist, and rheumatike braine: it is also good against the resolution (or as the common sort call it) the dead palsie, whereof the giddinesse of the head is often a messenger, and the fore-teller of that most pernicious griefe. It is also of great vse for the paine that many women haue in the lower part of their backs: which is very common to such as haue had children: for remedie whereof, it is to be melted in a pewter vessell with a gentle fire, then with a knife it must be spread lightly vpon a piece of leather, and laid warme to the place grieued, vntill it come off of it selfe. This plaister is also very good for aches, and doth greatly comfort and strengthen the sinewes. Thus much hath Master Cary written and reported of it, and hath proued by his owne experience. This gumme is also approued to bee an excellent remedie against the gowt; and of singular vertue in the cure of wounds.

The vertues of Colliman or Carriman.

The Colliman helpeth the gowt.

Barratta a rare Balsamum.

The Barratta is a most soueraigne Balsamum farre excelling all others yet knowne: which by the same Gentlemans experience is of admirable operation in the cure of greene wounds: and being burned vpon coales, is of a sweet and odoriferous sauour.

A persume like sweet Margerum.

There bee many other sweet gummes of great vse for perfumes; whereof one doth make a very rare perfume, much like vnto the sent of sweete Margerum, very pleasant and delectable.

Drugges and simples for physicke.

For physick there be also many excellent Drugs; namely, Spiknard, Cassia Fistula, Senu; and the earth yeeldeth Bole-Armoniack, and Terra-Lemnia, all which are knowne vnto vs. There be other Drugs and Simples also of strange and rare vertue, in these parts vnknowne; of which sort there is a little greene Apple, by the Indians called in their language, The sleeping Apple; which in operation is so violent, that one little bit thereof doth cause a man to sleepe to death: the least drop of the iuyce of it, will purge in vehement and excessiue manner; as dangerously was proued by my cousin Vnton Fisher, who first found it: for biting a little of it for a taste, and finding it to burne his mouth in some extremitie, did sodainly spit it out againe; but some small quantitie of the iuyce (against his will) went downe into his stomack, which for two or three dayes space did prouoke in him an extraordinarie sleepinesse, and purged him with seuen seates. This Apple, for the purging vertue in so small a quantitie, is like to bee of good price, and great estimation in the practice of physick; for the learned Physicians doe well know how to correct the sleeping qualitie thereof wherein the danger resteth. There is a berrie in those parts very excellent against the bloudie-fluxe, by the Indians it is called Kellenio. The iuyce of the leafe called Yppee, cureth the wounds of the poysoned arrowes. The iuyce of the leafe called Yoni, is good against the head-ache. Many other Drugs and Simples are there found of singular propertie both in physick and chirurgerie, which if they should bee seuerally described according to their value and worthinesse, would containe a large Volume.

Moreouer, the Tree wherewith they take their fish, is not a little to be esteemed, but chiefly the great goodnesse of God therein is highly to bee praysed and admired, who amongst so many admirable things by him created, and planted in those parts, hath vouchsafed to bestow vpon those barbarous people so great a benefit, and naturall helpe, for the present getting of their food and sustenance. These trees are commonly growing neere vnto the places of their habitation for their present vse: for when, at any time, they goe to fish, they take three or foure little sticks of this tree, and bruise them vpon a stone, and then go into certain small creeks by the Sea-shoare, which at a high water are vsually full of very good fish of diuers kindes, which come in with the tyde; and there they wade vp and downe the water, and betweene their hands rub those small bruised sticks therein, which are of such vertue, that they will cause the fish to turne vp their bellies, and lye still aboue the water for a certaine time: in which space they presently take as many as they please, and lade them into their Canoes, and so with little labour returne home sufficiently prouided.

A wood that maketh fish drunke.

There is also a red speckled wood in that Countrie, called Piratinimero, which is worth thirtie or fortie pounds a Tun: It is excellent for Ioyners worke; as chaires, stooles, bed-steds, presses, cupboords, and for wainscot. There are diuers kindes of stone of great vse, and good price, as Iasper, Porphyrie, and the Spleene-stone.

There is yet another profitable commoditie to bee reaped in Guiana, and that is by Tabacco, which albeit some dislike, yet the generalitie of men in this Kingdome doth with great affection entertaine it. It is not only in request in this our Country of England, but also in Ireland, the Tobacco.

Nea-

Netherlands, in all the Easterly Countreyes, and Germany; and most of all amongst the Turkes, and in Barbary. The price it holdeth is great, the benefit our Merchants gaine thereby is infinite, and the Kings rent for the custome thereof is not a little. The Tabacco that was brought into this Kingdome in the yeare of our Lord 1610. was at the least worth 60. thousand pounds: And since that time the store that yeerely hath come in, was little lesse. It is planted, gathered, seasoned, and made vp fit for the Merchant in short time, and with easie labour. But when we first arriued in those parts, wee altogether wanted the true skill and knowledge how to order it, which now of late we happily haue learned of the Spaniards themselues, whereby I dare presume to say, and hope to proue, within few moneths, (as others also of sound iudgement, and great experience doe hold opinion) that onely this commoditie Tabacco; (so much sought after, and desired) will bring as great a benefite and profit to the vndertakers, as euer the Spaniards gained by the best and richest Siluer Myne in all their Indies, considering the charge of both.

60000. worth of Tabacco in a yeere.

The things which the Indians desire from vs by way of trade in exchange for the aboue named commodities, (whereby wee hold societie and commerce with them) are Axes, Hatchets, Bill-hookes, Kniues, all kinde of Edge-tooles, Nailes, great Fish-hookes, Harping-irons, Iewes Trumps, Looking-glasses, blue, and white Beads, Christall Beades, Hats, Pinnes, Needles, Saw, Shirts, Bands, linnen and woollen Clothes, Swords, Muskets, Calceuers, Powder, and Shot: but of these last mentioned, we are very sparing, and part not with many, vnlesse vpon great occasion, by way of gift to speciall persons.

The comodities most esteemed by the Indians.

When the raines ceased, which was in July, I beganne to trauell abroad in search of those golden Mountaines, promised vnto vs before the beginning of our Voyage, (by one that vndertooke to guide vs to them) which filled my company so full of vaine expectation, and golden hopes, that their insatiable and couetous mindes (being wholy set thereon) could not bee satisfied with any thing but only Gold. Our guide that vainly made those great promises, beeing come vnto the wished place to make performance, was then possessed with a shamelesse spirit of ignorance, for hee knew little, and could performe nothing. What other intelligences of Mynes alreadie found) I had from other men in England, and from the Master of my ship, who had beene heretofore in those parts, I found them by experience false, and nothing true concerning Mynes, that was in England reported vnto me.

Leaden minds, minde nothing but golden Mynes.

Our greedie desire of Gold being thus made frustrate, diuers vnconstant persons of my vnruly company began to murmure, to bee discontented, to kindle discords and dissentions, and to stir vp mutinie, euen almost to the confusion and ruine of vs all: and were vpon the point to shake off all obedience to their commanders, to abandon patience, peace, and vnitie, and wilfully to breake out into all mischiefe and wretched disorder, onely because they were deceiued of their golden hopes and expectations: but with good words, and comfortable perswasions, I pacified them for the time, and made them acquainted with my better hopes conceiued of the commodities aboue mentioned. I perswaded them in generall from idlenesse, to trauell abroad, to search and seeke out amongst the Indians, what other nouelties they could (though Gold were wanting) whereby we might hereafter benefit our selues; and still I employed them some one way, and some another, to occupie their minds by doing something, the better to preuent disquiet, which commonly is bred of idlenesse, the slouthfull Mother of all filthy vices.

Disorders by mutiny.

Good to bee doing somewhat to preuent the deuil.

As I daily conuersed amongst the Indians, it chanced one day, that one of them presented me with a halfe Moone of Metall, which held somewhat more then a third part Gold, the rest Copper: another also gaue me a little Image of the same Metall; and of another I bought a plate of the same (which he called a spread Eagle) for an Axe. All which things they assured mee were made in the high Countrey of Guiana, which they said did abound with Images of Gold, by them called Carricoory. These things I shewed to my company to settle their troubled minds, which gaue much contentment to the greater part of them, and satisfied vs all that there was Gold in Guiana. Shortly after that my Indian Anthony Canabre, brought me a piece of a Rocke, of white Sparre, whereof the high Countrey is full: And if the white Sparres of this kinde, which are the purest white of all others, (for euery sort of Myne hath a Sparre, and for the most part white) be in a maine Rocke, they are certainly Mynes of Gold, or Siluer, or of both. I made triall of a piece of Sparre, which the same Indian discouered vnto mee, and I found that it held both Gold, and Siluer, which (although it was in small quantitie) gaue me satisfaction that there be richer Mynes in the Countrey to be found: but the best lie deeper in the earth, and wee had not time nor power to make search for them.

The high Countrey of Guiana aboundeth with images of Gold.

The Rocks of the purest white Sparre are Mynes of gold or siluer.

I trauelled vp the Riuer of Wiapoco, to view the ouer-fals, but the waters being high and strong, I could not passe them. In August when they are fallen, with some labour they may bee passed. This Riuer hath very many ouer-falls, lying one a good distance beyond another, euen to the head thereof. Aboue some of the first falls there dwelleth an Indian, called Comarian, who is an old man of a free disposition; by him I learned that a certaine distance aboue the first falls, the Riuer Arwy falleth into Wiapoco; moreouer that certaine dayes iourney beyond him towards the high Land, vpon the borders of Wiapoco, there is a Nation of Charibes hauing great eares of an extraordinarie bignesse, hard to bee beleeued, whom hee called Marsheweccas: amongst these people people (as Comarian reporteth) there is an Idoll of stone, which they worship as their God; they haue placed it in a house made of purpose for the greater honour of it, which they keepe very cleane and handsome. This Idoll is fashioned like a man sitting vpon his heeles, holding open his knees, and resting his elbowes vpon them, holding vp his hands with the palmes forwards, looking vpwards, and gaping with his mouth wide open. The meaning of this proportion hee could dot declare, although he hath beene many times amongst them, and hath often seene it. What other Nations were beyond these he did not know, hauing neuer trauelled so farre, but he saith, they be Charibes, and also enemies vnto them. It seemeth there bee many Nations of those great eared people: for in the Riuer of Marrawini, I heard also the like, who dwell farre vp towards the high Land, as hereafter you shall heare, and I suppose, by the trending of the Riuers of Wiapoco, and Marrawini, are all one people.

People hauing great eares; perhaps these eares are made large by art, as diuers East Indians vse.

The proportion of their Idoll.

Possession taken for the King at Gomeribo.

Vpon the fourteenth day of August I went vnto a Mountaine, called Gomeribo, being the vttermost point of Land to the North-ward in the Bay of Wiapoco; I found the soile of it most excellent for Tabacco, Maix, Cotton-trees, Annoto-trees, Vines, and for any other thing that should bee planted there. When I had taken good view of the place, and found it commodious for many purposes; then in the presence of Captaine Fisher, diuers Gentlemen, and others of my company, and of the Indians also, I tooke possession of the Land, by Turfe and Twigge, in the behalfe of our Souereigne Lord King Iames: I tooke the said possession of a part, in name of the whole Continent of Guiana, lying betwixt the Riuers of Amazones, and Orenoque, not being actually possessed, and inhabited by any other Christian Prince or State; wherewith the Indians seemed to be well content and pleased.

The like possession taken at Arraway.

In like manner my Brother Captaine Michael Harecourt, and Captaine Harney, (whom I left as his associate, and he esteemed as an inward friend) in a notable iourney, which (to their great honour) they performed, to discouer the Riuer of Arraway, and the Countrey bordering vpon it, (neere adioyning to the Riuer of Amazones) did take the like possession of the Land there, to his Maiesties vse.

Point Perilous.

The dangers and great difficulties which they in that attempt incountred, were memorable, and such, as hardly any of our Nation in such small Canoes (being onely some-what longer, but not so broad as our Thames Wherries, and flat-bottomed) euer ouercame the like. First the number of their owne attendants besides themselues, was onely one man, and a Boy: Their troope of Indians sixtie persons. Their iourney by Sea vnto the Riuer of Arraway was neere one hundred leagues: wherein (by the way) they met with many dreadfull plunges, by reason of a high going Sea, which breaketh vpon the flats, and shoalds; especially, at the next great Cape to the North of Arraway, which, in respect of the danger they passed there, they named Point Perilous. Then their Discouery vp the Riuer, was fiftie leagues more: where they found a Nation of Indians, which neuer had seene white men, or Christians before, and could not be drawne to any familiar commerce, or conuersation, no not so much as with our Indians, because they were strangers to them, and of another Nation. The Discouery of this Riuer is of great importance, and speciall note, affoording an entrance more behouefull for the searching and Discouery of the Inland parts of Guiana, then any other Riuer yet knowne vpon the Coast; for trending Westward vp into the Land, it discouereth all the Countreyes and Nations to the Southward of Arricary, Cooshebery, Morrownia, and Norrack, which I haue mentioned before.

A great argument of plentie in the Countrey.

Many weekes they spent in this Aduenture, still taking vp their Lodgings in the Woods at night. Prouision of meate they wanted not, for fish were euer plenty, and at hand: and the Woods yeelded either Deere, Tigres, or Fowle: their greatest want was of bread and drinke, which onely defect did hinder (at that time) the accomplishment of that Discouery. For when the Indians perceiued their bread to be neere spent, and their drinke to be corrupted, they could not be perswaded to proceed, hauing no meanes to supply their wants amongst the Arrawaries, the Indians of that Riuer who would not freely trade with them vpon this first acquaintance, but alwayes stood vpon their guard, on the other side of the Riuer, where they inhabited: yet desiring to obtaine some of our English commodities, and make triall of our Indians friendship, affoorded some small Trade for their present reliefe during their abode in that Riuer: So that of force they were constrained to breake off their Discouerie, and hasten homeward.

A dangerous Boore at Carripapoory.

But here their dangers ended not, for as they returned, arriuing at certaine Ilands called Carripoory, and passing betweene them and the mayne Land, much against the wils of all the Indians, who knowing the danger of the place, and more respecting their safetie, then their owne (being themselues all expert Swimmers) would haue disswaded them from that hazard: but they being ignorant of the perill, would needs passe on, and at the last met with such a Boore (as the Seamen terme it) and violent encounter of two tydes comming in, which like two furious inraged Rammes, or Bulles rushed together, and oft retired backe, to returne againe, with greater violence, vntill the one by force had ouer-borne the other: that if next vnder God) the diligent care and paines of the Indians had not preserued them, they had been there destroyed, and swallowed vp by that mercilesse Boore or breach of waters; which (God be thanked) they escaped, and returned home in safetie.

When

When I had (as before) taken poſſeſſion at Gomeribo, in preſence of the ſaid parties, I deliuered the poſſeſſion of that Mountaine to my Indian Anthony Canabre, To haue, hold, poſſeſſe, and enioy the ſame, to him, and to his Heires for euer, of our Soueraigne Lord King Iames, his Heires and Succeſſors, as his ſubiect; Yeelding and paying yeerely the tenth part of all Tabacco, Cotton-wooll, Annoto, and other commodities whatſoeuer, which ſhould hereafter be either planted or growing within the ſaid Mountaine, if it were demanded. The Indian moſt gladly receiued the poſſeſſion vpon theſe conditions, and for himſelfe, and his poſteritie; did promiſe to bee true Subiects vnto the Kings Maieſtie: his Heires, and Succeſſours: And to pay the duties impoſed vpon them: and ſo that buſineſſe being finiſhed, I returned againe to Wiapoco.

Gomeribo deliuered to an Indian as the Kings tenant.

Now (moſt worthy Prince) there came vnto my knowledge, an inconuenience happened by the careleſſe negligence of the Maſter of my ſhip, who had the charge of prouiding and laying in the prouiſions and victuals for the Voyage; which was the cauſe that I gained no preſent profit by it, but left off all my Diſcoueries in the firſt beginning. I had a purpoſe at that time to performe a buſineſſe, which might haue proued profitable, and honourable vnto vs, if I had beene able to haue ſtayed the time; but it was not my chance to bee ſo fortunate: for the Maſter, his Mates, and the Steward of my Ship, came vnto me, and told mee plainly, that if I made any longer abode in that Countrey, I would neuer in thoſe ſhips returne into England: or if I did aduenture it, my ſelfe, and all my Company would ſtarue at Sea for want of Beere, Syder, and Water, for all my Caske was ſpoyled, becauſe it was not Iron-bound, the woodden hoopes flew off, by reaſon of the heate of the Climate; and our Beere, and Syder, (whereof wee had good ſtore) did leake about the ſhip, that we could hardly ſaue ſufficient to releeue vs, if wee made a longer ſtay vpon the Coaſt; which was the Maſters fault, hauing had a ſpeciall charge to be carefull of that onely point. By this default, I was conſtrained to make a vertue of neceſſitie, and prepare my ſelfe for England, and leaue my former purpoſes to be accompliſhed hereafter, which ſhall be done (God aiding me) in time conuenient.

The only cauſe of loſſe by the voyage.

Then diſpoſing of my company, I appointed my Brother Captaine Michael Harecourt to remayne in the Countrey, as chiefe Commander in my abſence, and to continue the poſſeſſion on the Kings behalfe; I gaue him directions to trauell abroad, as (occaſion ſerued) to diſcouer the Countrey, to ſpend ſometime at Cooſhebery, and ſometime alſo in other places; but to make his chiefeſt reſidence at Wiapoco, (the onely Rendeuouz for ſhippes that trade vpon that Coaſt) and there to plant good ſtore of Maix, for our releife of bread and drinke, which is the chiefeſt thing to be reſpected in thoſe parts; for other victuals wee need not take much care being alwayes eaſily prouided. He performed his charge with great reputation, diſcouered many goodly Prouinces, and ſpacious Countreyes; and worthily continued the poſſeſſion full three yeeres compleate. I left with him for his aſſiſtance, Captaine Harney, who hath nobly vowed his time and fortune to be employed in the proſecution of this honourable action. For his Lieutenant I appointed Maſter Edward Gifford, a valiant and worthy Gentleman; and I left alſo with him of Gentlemen and others, about twentie more, with all ſuch neceſſaries as I could ſpare, and thought conuenient for them: and ſo commending them to God, the eighteenth day of Auguſt I departed from Wiapoco, and the day following arriued at Caiane.

Cap. Michael Harecourt left Commander of the company.

At my comming to Caiane my Pinnaſſe receiued a leake, which would haue proued dangerous, if we had beene farre at Sea; whereby enforced to attend the ſtopping thereof, and new trimming of the Pinnaſſe; and vnwilling to be idle in the meane ſpace doing nothing, I left my ſhips there to repaire their defects, and in my ſhip-boate departed thence, the twentie three of Auguſt: taking with me Captaine Fiſher, who hath euer beene (ſince we firſt crept into the world) my chiefe companion, both in Armes and trauels; I tooke alſo with mee his Brother Vnton Fiſher, Maſter Cradle the Maſters mate of my ſhip, and about ſixe more. I followed the Coaſt to the Weſtward ſteering during Weſt, and paſſing by the Riuer of Meccooria, I lodged that night in the mouth of the Riuer Courwo: which hath a narrow deepe entrance, and within affoordeth a good Harbour, which may in time to come (for ſome ſpeciall purpoſe) be of great vſe.

The Pinnaſſe receiued a leake at Caiane.

The next day, and the night following I proceeded Weſtward with full ſaile, and paſſing the Riuers of Mammamy, Smammara, Ooraſſowini, Coonamonia, Vracco, and Amanna; I arriued the twentie fiue day at the Riuer of Marrawini, which openeth a faire Riuer, but is ſhoale vpon the Barre, which lieth two or three leagues off at Sea, hauing but two fathome water: within the Barre, the Channell is three, foure, fiue, and ſixe fathome deepe. Fiue leagues within the riuer we paſſed by certaine Ilands called Carewapory, not inhabited, for at the riſing of the waters they are alwayes ouer-flowne, of which ſort the Riuer hath very many: we lodged that night a little beyond theſe firſt Ilands at a Village called Moyemon, on the left hand, the Captaine thereof is called Maperitaka, of the Nation of the Paragotos, a man very louing and faithfull to our Nation, whereof we haue had good proofe. The next day wee proceeded vp the Riuer three leagues, and ſtayed at a Towne called Coewynay on the right hand, at the houſe of Minapa, the chiefe Charib of that Signiorie) to pouide two Canoes to proſecute our iourney for the Diſcouerie of this Riuer.

The twentie eight day we went forward paſſing many Villages any Townes, which I forbeare to name, and hauing gone about twentie leagues from the Sea, wee found the Riuer in a manner barred vp with Rockes, ouer which the water falleth with great violence, yet notwithſtanding we aduentured to proceed, and the further wee went, the more dangerous wee found the ouer-fals, and more in number; but when wee had paſſed the firſt Mountaine, towards the high Countrey of Guiana, called Sapparow, and diſcouered farre off before vs other high Mountaines called Matawere Monpanana, and had proceeded ſixe dayes iourney vp the Riuer (which was more then fortie leagues) we met with ſuch ſhoale rockie ſtreame, and great ouer-fals, that there to our griefe our iourney ended.

They went ſixe daies iourney vp the Riuer.

Being thus for that time debarred from our intended Diſcouerie, we prepared our ſelues with patience to returne towards our ſhips, and the third day of September we turned downe the Riuer, ſhooting the ouer-fals with more celeritie then when we came vp, diſpatching three dayes iourney in one, and the fifth day returned ſafe to Moyemon; but before I departed thence, Captaine Fiſher told me of certaine Plants which hee had then found, much like vnto Roſe-trees, growing about halfe a yard in height, whereof (for the ſtrangeneſſe of them) I cannot forbeare to adde a word or two.

Moyemon.

Trees which had the ſenſe of feeling. Theſe grow both in the Eaſt Indies & in Guinne. See Io. Gom. to. 1. l. 9.

Theſe Plants or little trees had aſſuredly the ſence of feeling, as plainly appeared by touching them: for if you did but touch a leafe of the tree with your finger, that leafe would preſently ſhrinke, and cloſe vp it ſelfe, and hang downe as if it were dead; and if you did cut off a leafe with a paire of Cizzers, then all the other leaues growing vpon the ſame tree would inſtantly ſhrinke and cloſe vp themſelues, and hang downe as if they were dead and withered, and within halfe a quarter of an houre, would by degrees open themſelues againe, and flouriſh as before; and as often as you did either touch or cut off any of them, they would doe the like; which did euidently ſhew a reſtriction of the Spirits, inuincibly arguing a Senſe. Howſoeuer this may ſeeme ſtrange and incredible to your Highneſſe, and to them that haue not ſeene it, yet foraſmuch as Scaliger, and Bartas make mention of the like, I dare be bold to affirme it vpon my credit, hauing ſeene and ſhewed it to fortie others: I gathered two of the Plants, and did ſet them in pots in their owne earth, and carried them aboord my ſhip, where I kept them fairely growing almoſt a fortnight, vntill they were deſtroyed by certaine Monkeyes that brake looſe, and pulled them in pieces: which might haue beene preuented, but that I was conſtrained to ſet them in the open aire, the better to preſerue them.

Scaliger Exercit. 181. ſect. 18. Bartas, Eden, 1. day, 2. weeke.

Viawia, a Towne of 20. houſes.

The ſeuenth day, I went to Wiawia, a great Towne of Paragotos, and Yaios, foure leagues to the Weſt of Marrawini, whereof Maperitaka aboue mentioned, and Arapawaka, are chiefe Captaines. At this Towne I left my Couſin Vnton Fiſher, and Humfrey Croxton an Apothecary, to beare him company, and one ſeruant to attend him called Chriſtopher Fiſher, hauing firſt taken order with Maperitaka for their diet, and other neceſſaries both for trauell, and otherwiſe: who euer ſince (according to his promiſe) hath performed the part of an honeſt man, and faithfull friend.

M. Vnton Fiſher and two others left at Wiawia.

I gaue directions to my Couſin Fiſher to proſecute the Diſcouerie of Marrawini, and the inland parts bordering vpon it, when the time of the yeere, and the waters better ſerued; and if it were poſſible to goe vp into the high Countrey of Guiana, and to finde out the Citie of Manoa, mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh in his Diſcouerie. He followed my directions to the vttermoſt of his abilitie, being of a good wit, and very induſtrious, and enabled to vndergoe thoſe imployments, by obtaining the loue, and gaining the Languages of the people, without which helpes, there is little or no good to be done in thoſe parts.

M. Fiſher trauelled eleuen daies iourney vp the Riuer of Morra, viz. 100. leagues.

When the waters of Marrawini were riſen, and the Riuer paſſable, (much differing from the Riuer of Wiapoco, which is not to be trauelled, but in the loweſt waters.) Hee began his iourney for the Diſcouerie thereof, in company of the Apothecarie, his ſeruant Fiſher, the Indian Maperitaka, and eighteene others, and proceeded eleuen dayes iourney vp the Riuer, to a Towne of Charibes, called Tauparamune, diſtant from the Sea aboue an hundred leagues; but was foure dayes iourney ſhort of Moreſhego, which is alſo a Towne of Charibes, ſituate vpon the Riuer ſide in the Prouince of Moreſhegoro: the chiefe Captaine thereof is called Areminta: who is a proud and bold Indian, much feared of all thoſe that dwell within his Territories, hauing a rough skin like vnto Buffe Leather, of which kind there be many in thoſe parts; and I ſuppoſe proceedeth of ſome infirmitie of the bodie.

The Prouince of Moreſhegoro. Indians with rough skinnes like Buffe.

He vnderſtood by relation of the Indians of Tauparamune, and alſo of Areminta, that ſix dayes iourney beyond Moreſhego, there are diuers mightie Nations of Indians, hauing holes through their Eares, Cheekes, Noſtrils, and neather Lips, which were called Crawcanna, Pawmeeanna, Quikeanna, Peewattere, Arameeſo, Acawreanno, Acooreo, Tarespeeanna, Corecorickado, Peeaunca-do, Cocoanno, Itſura, and Waremiſſo: and were of ſtrength and ſtature farre exceeding other Indians, hauing Bowes, and Arrowes foure times as bigge: what the Indians alſo report of the greatneſſe of their eares, I forbeare to mention, vntill by experience wee ſhall diſcouer the truth thereof. Moreouer, hee learned that there fall into Marrawini diuers great Riuers, called Hee paſſed in this iourney aboue eightie ouerfals of water, and many of them very dangerous: of ſome of them I had experience the yeere before. He proceeded no further at that preſent, being vnprouided for ſo long a iourney, ſuppoſing that it had beene neerer (then he found it) to the head of the Riuer by a fortnights trauell: and ſo returned backe in ſixe dayes ſpace, intending better preparation for a ſecond iourney: but his purpoſe was preuented by an vntimely death: for ſhortly after hee was drowned by misfortune; whereby we ſee, that man determineth, but God diſpoſeth.

THe tenth day of September being Sunday, I left the maine of Guiana, and in my ſhip-boat ſtood off into the Sea to ſeeke my ſhips, which were forced to ride foure leagues from ſhore, by reaſon of the ſhoales; but as we paſſed ouer them, we were in danger to bee caſt away by the breach of a Sea, which verily had ſunke our Boat, if with great celeritie wee had not lightned her, by heauing ouer-boord many baskets of bread, of Caſſaui, Maix, Pinas, Platanas, Potatoes, and ſuch like prouiſion, wherewith our Boat was loden; by which means it pleaſed God to deliuer vs from preſent deſtruction, and to bring vs ſafe vnto our ſhips.

They were in danger to bee caſt away.

When I came aboord, we weighed anchor, and ſteered away from the Iland of Trinidado, and vpon the eighteenth day in the morning, we arriued at Punta de Galea, where wee found three Engliſh ſhips at anchor, which was no ſmall comfort vnto vs, conſidering our great defects and wants. One of theſe ſhippes was called the Diana, belonging to Maſter Lal a Dutch Merchant dwelling in London. The other two, the Penelope, and the Indeuour, belonging to Maſter Hall, a Merchant alſo of London. We ſtayed at this place ſixe daies to mend our bad Caske, and to take freſh water: during which time I was kindly intreated, and feaſted by the Merchants, and had ſupply of all ſuch things as I ſtood in neede of; which courteſie I requited in the beſt manner I could for the preſent.

They finde 3. Engliſh ſhips at Punta de Galea.

Vpon Sunday the twentie foure of September we weighed anchor, ſo likewiſe did the Diana (the other two ſhippes beeing gone two or three daies before vs,) but the winde ſhifting to the North-eaſt, inforced vs backe againe almoſt to the ſame place from whence wee departed. The twentie fiue we weighed againe, and plied along the ſhoare towards Cape Brea, about three leagues. This Cape is ſo called of the Pitch which is there gotten in the earth, whereof there is ſuch abundance, that all places on this ſide of the World may bee ſtored therewith. It is a moſt excellent Pitch for trimming of ſhippes that paſſe into theſe Regions and hot Countries, for it melteth not with the Sunne, as other Pitch doth.

Pitch gotten in the earth, which melteth not with the Sunne.

The twentie ſixe day we ſtood along againe, the winde being ſtill contrarie and variable, intermixt with many calmes, and ſo continued vntill the ſecond of October, when we arriued at Port de Hiſpania. Within two daies after our arriuall there, Don Sanches de Mendoſa, the Tenient for that yeere, with certaine other Spaniards came aboord vs: wee gaue them the beſt entertainment that our meanes, the time, and place would affoord, and had much friendly conference together. They told me, that they lately had a conflict with the Charibes, wherein they had loſt ſeuen or eight of their men, and had many others hurt and wounded, whereof ſome came to my Chirurgion to haue their wounds dreſſed during our abode there. And they plainly confeſſed that they are very much moleſted by the Charibes, and knew not how by any meanes to ſuppreſſe them.

They arriue at Port de Hiſpania. Don Sanches de Mendoſa commeth aboord their ſhip.

The Spaniards much moleſted by the Charibes.

We ſtaied at Porte de Hiſpania vntill the ſeuenth day, in hope to get ſome good Tobacco amongſt the Spaniards, who daily fed vs with delaies and faire words, but in truth they had none good at that preſent for vs, which we perceiuing, departed thence vpon the ſeuenth day, about one of the clocke in the morning, leauing the other ſhips to attend their trade, and ſtood away for the paſſages, called Los ſciot boccas de Drago, and diſemboqued about eight of the clocke the ſame morning. Then wee ſteered away for an Iland called Meues, and leauing the Ilands of Granado, Saint Vincent, Guadalupe, and Monſerate, in our ſtarboord ſide, wee arriued there the twelfth day, where we ſtopped to take in ballaſt, and more water; for our ſhips were very light.

They depart from Trinidado

They arriue at Meues.

In this Iland there is an hot Bath, which as well for the reports that I haue heard, as alſo for that I haue ſeene and found by experience, I doe hold for one of the beſt and moſt ſouereigne in the World. I haue heard that diuers of our Nation haue there beene cured of the Leproſie, and that one of the ſame perſons now, or lately dwelt at Woolwich neere the Riuer of Thames, by whom the truth may be knowne, if any man deſire to bee further ſatisfied therein. As for my owne experience, although it was not much, yet the effects that I found it worke both in my ſelfe, and others of my company in two daies ſpace, doe cauſe mee to conceiue the beſt of it. For at my comming thither, I was grieuouſly vexed with an extreame cough, which I much feared would turne me to great harme, but by bathing in the Bath, and drinking of the water, I was ſpeespeedily cured: and euer since that time, I haue found the state of my body (I giue God thankes for it) farre exceeding what it was before, in strength and health. Moreouer, one of my company, named Iohn Huntbatch (seruant to my brother) as he was making a fire, burned his hand with Gunpowder, and was in doubt thereby to loose the vse of one or two of his fingers, which were shrunke vp with the fire, but he went presently to the Bath, and washed and bathed his hand a good space therein, which soopled his fingers in such manner, that with great ease he could stir and stretch them out, and the fire was so washed out of his hand that within the space of twenty foure houres, by twice or thrice washing and bathing it, the soreneſſe thereof was cured, onely the eye-sore for the time remained. Furthermore, two or three other of my company hauing swellings in their legs, were by the Bath cured in a day.

Hence we departed the sixteenth day of October, in the afternoone, and leauing the Ilands of Saint Christopher, Saint Martin, and Anguilla on the Starboord side, we dissembogued through the broken Ilands on the North side of Anguilla vpon S. Lukes day, where I thinke neuer Englishman dissembogued before vs: for we found all our Sea-charts false concerning that place, those broken Ilands being placed therein, to the Southward of Anguilla, betweene it and Saint Martins, and we found them scituate to the Northward thereof.

They fell with Fayal.

On the eleuenth day of Nouember wee had sight of Fayal, one of the Ilands of the Terceras which we left on our starboord side, and fleeted away for England, the winde continuing faire vntill the twenty foure day. But then it changed, first to the East by North, and then to the East South-east, and became so violent and furious, that for three dayes space we were not able to beare our saile, but did driue before the winde at the least three leagues, a watch out of our course; and the first land we made was Cape Cleere, in the South-west part of Ireland, where against our wils we arriued at Crooke Hauen the twenty nine of Nouember.

They are driuen by a storme into Ireland.

During the time of my Voyage, we lost but one Land-man, who died in Guiana; and one Sailer, and an Indian Boy, who died at Sea in our returne: and during the space of these three yeares last past since the voyage, of all the men which I left in the Countrey, being in number about thirty, there died but six, whereof one was drowned, another was an old man of threescore years of age, and another tooke his death by his owne disorder; the rest died of sickneſſe, as pleased God the giuer of life: for such small losse, his holy name be blessed now and euer.

Euery

Euery house hath Cocks, Hennes, and Chickens, as in England: and the variety of fish is wonderfull, without compare; but the chiefest comfort of our Country-men is this, that the Beast called Mapury, and the fish called the Sea-Cow (being seuerally as bigge as a Heifer of two years old, and of which kinde there are very many) are in eating so like vnto our English Beefe, that hardly in taste we can distinguish them, and may as well as Beefe be salted, and kept for our prouision. There is also a Beast in colour like a Fawne, but fuller of white spots, in stature somewhat lesse then a small Sheepe, and in taste like Mutton, but is rather better meate: the Baremo is also of the same taste. I haue the Copie of Master Harcourt his Patent, and he published also certaine Articles for the Aduenturers, &c. which for breuity are omitted.

A beast and a fish like Beefe;

A Relation of the habitations and other Obseruations of the Riuer of Marwin, * and the adioyning Regions.

* I found this fairely written amongst M. Hak. papers, but know not who was the Author.

Townes in the Riuer of Marwin.

IN primis, Marracomwin a little Village so called where the Arwaccas dwell, whose chiefe Captaine is Coretan, and is at the foot of the Riuer of Marwin in a creake on the left hand going vp the Riuer. Secondly, Russia a little Village so called where likewise Arwaccas dwell being likewise at the foote of the Riuer on the right hand going vp the Riuer. Thirdly, Moyyemon, a large Towne where are some twentie houses all builded very lately, inhabited by Parawagotos and Yaios, whose chiefe Captaine is Maperitacca (being the Captaine with whom the Generall left vs, and with whom we continue) being on the left hand of the Riuer. Fourthly, Kiawarie, a Towne inhabited by Careebees, almost right against Moyyemon, whose Chiefetaine is——— Fiftly, Tonorima, a little Village aboue Kiawary inhabited by Careebees, being on the same side of the Riuer, who be gouerned by the Captaine of Quynow. Sixtly, Quynow, a Towne some quarter of a mile distant from Tonorima, inhabited by Careebees, whose Chiefetaine is Vcapea, hauinga lame hand. Seuenthly, Arowatta, a Towne situate on the same side of the Riuer (whose inhabitants be Careebees but a good prettie way beyond, whose Chiefetaine is Seepano. Eightly, Comurraty, a Towne situate beyond Arowatta, on the other side of the Riuer, whose Inhabitants be Careebees, and Chiefetaine is Parapano. Ninthly, Pasim, a Towne situate beyond Comurratie on the same side of the Riuer whose Inhabitants bee Careeb, and Chiefetaine is Tanatweya. Tenthly, Paramaree, a Towne situate beyond Pasim on the other side of the Riuer, inhabited by Careebees, whose Chiefetaine is Iuara. There is beyond Paramaree a lone house, beeing situate some dayes iourney from Paramaree on the same side of the Riuer being inhabited by Careebees. Eleuenthly, about some eleuen daies iourney beyond the lone house there is a towne called Tanparaquanna, whose Inhabitants be Careebees. Twelfthly, a daies iourney from thence is another Towne called Moreesheego, whose Inhabitants be Careebees. About some twentie daies iourney beyond Moreesheego is a Towne called Aretouenne, whose Inhabitants bee Careebees hauing verie long eares hanging to their shoulders, and they are reported to bee a very gentle and louing people. Some twentie daies farther is the head of the Riuer Marwin, where dwell Parawagatos, Arwaccas, and Suppay, and after a daies iourney in the Land, they report the way to be very faire, and Champian ground with long grasse.

Long eares, perhaps made by art, with hanging weights thereon, as is vsed in the East Indies.

Townes from the foot of Marwin on the Northside along the Sea.

FIrst, Equiwibone, a Towne inhabited by Arwaccas and Parawagotos. Secondly, Caycooseecoero, inhabited by Arwaccas, whose Chiefetaine is Woaccomo. Thirdly, Amypea inhabited by Arwaccas. Fourthly, about six mile within Land is Careebee, inhabited by Arwaccas, whose Chiefetaine is Arameé. Fiftly, Wia Wiam, about two miles from the Sea, a Towne inhabited by Yaios, Parawagotos and Arwaccas, whose Chiefetaine is Arapenaca. Sixtly, Soory Soorry, some two mile directly farther toward the Sea side, inhabited by Parawagotos, whose Chiefetaine is Resserrima. Seuenthly, Aniebas, a little distant from Soory Soory, inhabited by Parawagotos. Eightly, Viegnano, some sixe mile beyond Soory Soory, inhabited by Yaos and Parawagotos. Ninthly, Vrarimo adioyning to Viegnano, inhabited by Arwaccas and Parawagotos. Tenthly, Surarer a daies iourney beyond Wia Wiam vp into the Land inhabited by Arwaccas. Eleuenthly, Simarra, some sixe miles distant from Wia Wiam, inhabited by Arwaccas. Twelfthly, Canri, a Towne adioyning to Simarra, inhabited by Arwaccas. Thirteenthly, Conecorro, a Towne adioyning to Canri, inhabited by Parawagotos, and Arwaccas.

Waters ouerflowing.

To most of these places there can be no passage but by Canoas in the Winter being marsh-medowy grounds, ouerflowne with swelling Tides. But in the Summer it is faire, and then they hide their Canoas in the Woods by the Sea-side.

As for the Riuer of Marwin, there are no other Riuers which fall into it: but there be many Ilands, and some very great. The passage to the head thereof from the men with long eares is very dangerous, by reason of the passage through hollow and concaue Rockes, wherein harbour Bat-mise of an vnreasonable bignesse, which with their clawes and wings doe wound the Passengers shrewdly: yea, and oftentimes depriue them of life. During which passage (which is some quarter of a mile, and very darke; for the Rockes are close aboue, and in fashion like an Indian house) they are inforced to make great fires in their Canoas, and put ouer their heads some of their Crab-baskets ro defend them from the force of their clawes and wings, and so they safely passe.

Great Bats. Darke and dangerous passage.

Stones transparant. See A. Kniuet.

There is a Charcebee (with whom I am very well acquainted) whose name is Carowroo) who assured me of certaine transparent stones, both of a greene and red colour, which hee described by a greene eare-ring which I shewed him, affirming they were somewhat bigger, and that they lay in a little gutter at the head of the Riuer, which ran in a Valley betweene two Hills.

I was further informed by a Yaio, an ancient man (who came downe from the head of the Riuer Selinama in a little Canoa, with foure other, and a boy; three of which were Arwaccas, and one Yaio, who was borne in Oreno, and as I iudge, about the age of fourescore yeeres, or little lesse) who reported to mee, that hee was one of them which with Morequito and Putimay, was at the killing of nine Spaniards, and a Spanish Pedar; and how Morequito was put to death, and a greatmany of his Indians hanged: himselfe was taken prisoner, and pinched with Pinsers for his punishment, and his eares nailed to wood, which I coniecture was a Pillourie. Besides, they rubbed his body ouer with salt mixt with Vrine, after they had pinched him, and fetcht bloud, and after tyed him vp in chaines. The reason why they put him not to death, was because hee had beene a great Traueller and knew the Countries well, and so they kept him for a Guide.

Spaniards killed.

It so chanced, that the Spaniards, vpon his informing them of the Cassipagotos Countrie, and how rich they were, and how he would be their guide, went with some companie to conquer it: the Captaine of the Spaniards was called Alexander, as he saith. But the Cassipagotos knowing his crueltie, thought it better to fight it out, then trust to his clemency, and so ouerthrew him and his companie, driuing them to their Canoas, in which fight he escaped: But yet afterward it was his mishap to be againe in the hands of his aduersarie by the meanes of Caripana King of Emeria, and put in chaines, and handled cruelly. His body was besmeared, as he said, with a yellow stone; for so he called it, which I take to be Brimstone, and so set on fire on his body, and after that he was well, and his skinne smooth and faire, they anointed him with honie from top to toe, and so scattered dust vpon him, in which which were millions of Pismires, tying him in chaines to a great tree, where Muskitos flockt about him like moates in the Sunne, and did pitifully sting him, then which death had beene better, as hee said. Within some small space hee with another Yaio, and three Arwaccas were chosen to goe a fishing some two dayes iourney from the Towne. Likewise there went as ouerseers ouer them foure Spaniards, three of which, while they were a fishing, went into the Wood a fowling, and the fourth which was left for the ouerseer by chance fell asleepe, which they espying, agreed to release themselues and to slip from the shoare with their Canoa, and went vp Selinama seuen dayes iourney within land from the head thereof to a Towne of the Arwaccas, called Coeroopon, where he now dwelleth, whose name is Weepackea; and the chiefe Arwacca which came with him is called Edaddeawa, and the Captaine of Coeroopon is called Nausnickebaw. This Yaio told mee of a Mountaine at the head of Dissikeebee which is called Oraddoo, where is a great Rocke of white Spar, which hath streams of Gold in it about the breadth of a Goose-quill; and this he affirmeth very earnestly. Also he speaketh of a Plaine which is some seuen or eight dayes iourney from the Mountaine where is great store of Gold in graines so big as the top of a mans finger, and after the flouds be fallen they finde them, which Plaine is called Manoa.

Spanish deuises of tortures. Sir Fr. Drakes at Guatulco on the South Sea found a Negro in iron chains 20. yards long: fenced to be whipped till al his flesh was raw, and so to be set in the Sunne, to be tormented to death by Muskitos.

Golden hopes. Sir W. Ral.

Further, he spake of a Valley not farre distant from thence, which is called Wancoohanoma, which hath the like: and he said, they gather them the space of two moneths together; which two moneths are presently after the great raines which wash away the sand and grauell from the grasse which groweth in turfets, and then they may perceiue the Gold lie glistering on the ground. And of these they are very charie. And the Captaines and Priests or Peeays doe charge the Indians very strictly, yea with punishment of the whip, that they be secret, and not reueale it to the Spaniard. But it seemeth they are willing the English should haue it, or else hee would neuer haue related so much of the state of his Countrie.

He spake very much of Sir Walter Raleigh: he likewise knew Francis Sparrow, and the boy which Sir Walter left behind him at Topiawary his house. He further said, that Topiawary wondred that he heard not from Sir Walter, according to his promise: and how Topiawary did verily thinke, that the Spaniard had met with him, and so had slaine him. Further, hee saith how Topiawary piawary is dead, and how one Roponegegrippo succeeded in his roome. Likewise he sayth Caripana the King of Emeria, who was very subiect to the Spaniard, and did once betray him to the Spaniard, is now dead: at which he seemed not a little to reioyce; and how one Dothronias is in his place, and is a good King, holding Armes against the Spaniard with the Cassipagotos, and and giuing him many ouerthrowes, so that now hee hath cleare left Dissikeebee and not a Spaniard there. He likewise said, how Topiawary had drawne in the Indians of Wariwackeri, Amaricapana, Aromaya, Wickery, and all the people that belonged to Wanuritone, Captaine of Canuria, and Wacariopea Captaine of Sayma against Sir Walter Raleigh his comming to haue warred against the Teanderpuremei: And as yet Wanuritone and Wacariopea doe expect his comming. He addeth further, how he knew the two Nations of Tiuitiuas, called Tiawana and Warawitty, who are forced in the floods to build their houses on the top of trees. And now he saith the Spaniard hath for the most part destroyed them, keeping diuers of them to make and mend his Canoas. Further hee knew Toparimacca, and sayth hee is yet liuing, and Captaine of Arawaca a Napoy, who likewise doth expect Sir Walter his comming, and had drawne a companie of Indians for the aide and assistance of Sir Walter. Likewise, how Putimay is yet liuing, and how the Spaniards haue layd great waite for him, but could neuer finger him to bee reuenged for his part of killing the nine Spaniards. Further he addeth, how the Spaniards were killed at a Mountaine called Riconori in Putimays Countrie, and how Putimay expected long for Sir Walter Raleigh. Likewise he saith, how the Epeuremei haue now two very faire Townes, one called Aruburguary, and the other Corburrimore: and saith, they are not good people, yet they dare not warre with them. He further affirmeth of the men whose shoulders are higher then their heads, which he called Wywaypanamy, and offereth to goe with me thither if I come vp in their high Countrie. For since the death of Topiawary they are friends, and bend their forces against the Spaniards. He further spake of a white, cleare, high and huge Rocke vnder a Mountaines side, which is called Mattuick, that on a Sun-shine day if a man looked on it, it would dazle his eyes exceedingly. Hee shewed mee before his departure from me, a piece of metall fashioned like an Eagle, and as I gheese, it was about the weight of eight or nine ounces troy weight, it seemed to be Gold or at leastwise two parts Gold and one Copper, I offered him an Axe, which he refused; to which I added foure Knives, but could not get it of him: but I imagine the Dutch at Selinama haue bought it of him, for their only comming was for Axes, as he said, hearing that the Dutch were at Selinama. I demanded where hee had that Eagle, his answere was, hee had it of his Vncle, who dwelt among the Weearaapoyns in the Countrie called Sherumerrimary neere the Cassipagotos Countrie where is great store of these Images. Further he said, that at the head of Selinama and Marwin there were great store of the halfe Moones, which hee called by the name of Vnnaton. He likewise spake of a very faire and large Citie in Guiana, which hee called Monooan, which I take to be that which Sir Walter calleth Manoa, which standeth by a salt Lake which he called Parcoonan Parrocare Monoan, in the Prouince of Aseecona the chiefe Captaine or Acarimanora, as he called him, was called Pepodallapa. He further said, that after that a man is vp at the head of the Riuer and some ten dayes iourney within the Land, euery childe can tell of the riches of Monoam. Further he addeth, how that once in euery third yeere all the Cassiques or Lords and Captaines some seuen dayes iourney from Manoan doe come to a great drinking, which continueth for the space of ten dayes together, in which time they goe sometimes a fishing, fowling, and hunting, their fishing is in the salt Lake, where is abundance of Canoas, and those very great. They haue many fish-pooles of standing water, wherein they haue aboundance of Fish. They haue store of wilde Porkes and Deere, and other beasts, which are very good meate. Their Houses be made with many lofts and partitions in them, but not boorded, but with barres of wood, onely the lower floore on the ground is spread with clay very smooth, and with fires hardned, as they doe their pots, then presently they build their houses, as is before spoken of. Also he affirmeth, that within the Citie at the entring in of their houses they hang Carotoora on the posts which I take to be Images of gold.

CHAP. XVIII.

A Description and Discouery of the Riuer of Amazons, by WILLIAM DAVIES Barber Surgeon of London.

THE Riuer of the Amazons lieth in the highest part of the West Indies, beyond the Equinoctial Line; to fall with this Riuer fortie leagues from Land you shal haue 8. 6. & 7. fathomes water, & you shal see the Sea change to a ruddie colour, the water shall grow fresh, by these signes you may run boldly in your course, and comming neere the Riuers mouth, the depth of your water shal increase, then you shal make Discouerie of the Trees before the Land, by reason the Land is very low, and not higher in one place then another three foote, being at a Spring tide almost all ouer flowne, God knowes how many hundred leagues. It flowes much water there with a verie forcible tide. In this Riuer I continued tenne weekes, seeing the fashion of the people and Countrie there: This Countrie is altogether full of Woods, with all sorts of wilde Beasts: as Lions Beares, Woolues, Leopards, Baboones, strange Boores, Apes, Monkeies, Martins, Sanguines, Marmosets, with diuers other strange beasts: also these Woods are full of Wild-fowle of all sorts, and Parrats more plentifull then Pidgeons in England, and as good meate, for I haue often eaten of them. Also this Countrey is very full of Riuers, hauing a King ouer euerie Riuer. In this place is continuall Tempests, as Lightning, Thunder, and Raine, and so extreame, that it continues most commonly sixteene or eighteene houres in foure and twentie. There are many standing waters in this Countrie, which bee full of Aligators, Guianes, with many other seuerall water Serpents, and great store of fresh fish, of strange fashions. This Countrie is full of Muskitas, which is a small Flie, which much offends a Stranger comming newly into the Countrie. The manner, fashion, and nature of the people is this: They are altogether naked, both men and women, hauing not so much as one threed about them to couer any part of their nakednesse, the man taketh a round Cane as bigge as a pennie Candle, and two inches in length, through the which hee puls the fore-skinne of his yard, tying the skinne with a piece of the rinde of a Tree about the bignesse of a small pack-threed, then making of it fast about his middle, hee continueth thus till hee haue occasion to vse him: In each Eare hee weareth a Reede or Cane, which hee bores through it, about the bignesse of a Swannes Quill, and in length halfe an inch, and the like through the midst of the lower lippe: also at the bridge of the Nose hee hangs in a Reede a small glasse Beade or Button, which hanging directly afore his Mouth, flies too and fro still as hee speakes, wherein hee takes great pride and pleasure. Hee weares his Haire long, being rounded below to the neather part of his Eare, and cut short, or rather as I iudged pluckt bald on the crowne like a Frier. But their women vse no fashion at all to set forth themselues, but starke naked as they were borne, with haire long of their Heads, also their Breasts hang verie low, by reason they are neuer laced or braced vp: they doe vse to anoint their Bodies, both Men and Women, with a kind of redde Earth, because the Muskitas, or Flies shall not offend them.

Distant from England 1600. leagues. This is a part of a Booke set forth by the said Danies of his miserable captiuitie.

These people are verie ingenious, craftie, and treacherous, verie light of foot, and good Bowemen, whose like I haue neuer seene, for they doe ordinarily kill their owne food, as Beasts, Fowle, and Fish, the manner of their Bow and Arrowes is this. The Bow is about two yards in length, the Arrow seuen foote. His Bow is made of Brasill-wood verie curious, his string of the rinde of a Tree, lying close to the Bow, without any bent, his Arrow made of Reede, and the head of it is a fish bone: hee kils a Beast in this manner: standing behinde a Tree, hee takes his marke at the Beast, and wounding him, he followes him like a Bloud-hound till he fall, oftentimes seconding his shoot: then for any Fowle be he neuer so little, he neuer misses him: as for the first, hee walkes by the water side, and when hee hath spied a fish in the water, hee presently strikes him with his Arrow, and suddenly throwing downe his Bow, hee leapes into the water, swimming to his Arrow which hee drawes aland with the fish fastened to it, then hauing each kild his owne food, as well flesh, and fowle, as fish, they meete together, to the number of fiftie or sixtie in a company, then make a fire after this fashion: They take two sticks of Wood, rubbing one hard against another, till such time as they bee fired, then making of a great fire, euery man is his owne Cooke to broile that which he hath gotten, and thus they feed without Bread or Salt, or any kind of drinke but Water and Tobacco, neither doe they know what it meanes: In these Countries we could find neither Gold nor Siluer Oare, but great store of Hennes. For I haue bought a couple for a Iewes Harpe, when they would refuse tenne shillings in money. This Countrie is full of delicious fruite, as Pines, Plantines, Guaues, and Potato Rootes, of which Fruits and Roots I would haue bought a mans burthen for a glasse Button or Bead. The manner of their Lodging is this: they haue a kinde of Net made of the rinde of a Tree which they call Hamac, being three fathome in length, and two in breadth, and gathered at both ends at length, then faſtning either end to a Tree, to the full length about a yard and halfe from the ground, when hee hath deſire to ſleepe, hee creepes vnto it. The King of euerie Riuer is knowne by this manner. He weares vpon his head a Crowne of Parrats feathers, of ſeuerall colours, hauing either about his middle, or about his Necke, a Chaine of Lions teeth or clawes, or of ſome other ſtrange beaſt, hauing a woodden Sword in his hand, and hereby is he knowne to be the King: Oftentimes one King warres againſt another in their Canowes, which are Boats cut out of a whole Tree, ſometimes taking one another, the Conquerours eates the Captiues. By this time ten weekes were ſpent, and being homewards bound, but not the ſame way that we came, for we ſailed vnto the Riuer before the winde, becauſe it blowes there continually one way, which forces all ſhippes that come thither to returne by a contrarie way.

The end of the ſixth Booke.

READER, I here present thee the exactest Treatise of Brasil which I haue seene written by any man, especially in the Historie of the multiplied and diuersified Nations and customes of men; as also in the naturall Historie of Beasts, Serpents, Fowles, Fishes, Trees, Plants, with diuers other remarkeable rarities of those Regions. It was written (it seemeth) by a Portugall Frier (or Iesuite) which had liued thirtie yeares in those parts, from whom (much against his will) the written Booke was taken by one Frances Cooke of Dartmouth in a Voyage outward bound for Brasil, An. 1601. who sold the same to Master Hacket for twenty shillings; by whose procurement it was translated out of Portugall into English: which translation I haue compared with the written Originall, and in many places supplied defects, amended errours, illustrated with notes, and thus finished and furnished to the publike view. Great losse had the Author of his worke, and it not a little of his name, which I should as willingly haue inserted as worthy much honour for his industrie, by which the great and admirable workes of the Creator are made knowne; the visible and various testimonies of his inuisible power, and manifold wisedome.* Sic vos non vobis. In this and other written tractates the Spaniards and the Portugals haue taken paines, and (which was denied to Spaine and Portugall) England is here entred into their labours, and hath reaped an English harueſt of Spanish and Portugall seede. Another Treatise was taken by the said Frances Cooke, written more fairely, but it seemeth with the same hand, part of which I haue added for better knowledge both of the ciuill-uncivill dealings of the Portugals with the Indians; and of the vnchristian christianitie in their owne practise and conuersion of the Indians, and that by Iesuiticall testimonie. I may well adde this Iesuite to the English Voyages, as being an English prize and captiue.

* I finde at the end of the Booke some medicinall receipts, and the name subscribed Ir. Manoel Tristam Enfermeiro do Colegio da Baya: whom I imagine to haue beene Author of this Treatise. Cooke reported that he had it of a Friar: but the name Iesus diuers times on the top of the page, and often mention of the Fathers and societie maketh me thinke him a brother of that order, besides the state-tractate following.

CHAP. I.

A Treatise of Brasil, written by a Portugall which had long liued there.

§. I.

Of the beginning and originall of the Indians of Brasil, and of their Customes, Religions, and Ceremonies.

IT seemeth that this people hath no knowledge of the beginning and creation of the world, but of the deluge it seemeth they haue some notice: but as they haue no writings nor characters such notice is obscure and confused; for they say that the waters drowned all men, and that one onely escaped vpon a Ianipata with a sister of his that was with childe, and that from these two they haue their beginning, and from thence began their multiplying and increase. Their opinion of a flood.

This people hath not any knowledge of their Creator, nor of any thing of heauen, nor if there be any paine nor glory after this life, therefore they haue no oderation nor ceremonies, nor diuine worship, but they know that they haue soules, and that they dye not; and they say that the Of the knowledg that they haue of the Creator, and of the Soule, Paradise, Diuels.

the soules are conuerted into diuels, and that after their death they goe to certaine fields where are many figge trees along by a faire Riuer, and all together doe nothing but daunce. This is the cause why they are greatly afraid of the Diuell, whom they call Curupira, Taguain, Pigtangua, Machchera, Anhanga: and their feare of him is so great, that onely with the imagination of him they dye, as many times already it hath happened: they worship it not, nor any other creature, neither haue they Idols of any sort, onely some old men doe say that in some waies they haue certaine Posts where they offer him some things, for the feare they haue of them, and because they would not die. Sometimes the Diuels appeare vnto them, though very seldome, and among them are few possessed.

They vse some witchcrafts, and there are some Witches, not because they beleeue in them, or doe worship them, but onely they giue themselues to the Cbupar in their sicknesses, seeming to them that they receiued their health, but not because they doe think they haue any diuinity, and they do it rather to receiue health, then for any other respect. There arise sometimes among them some Witches, whom they call Caraiba, and most commonly it is some Indian of a bad life; this doth some witchcrafts and strange things to nature, as to show that he raiseth some to life, that makes himselfe dead, and with these and other like things he carrieth all the Countrie after him, deceiuing and saying to them that they shall not cultiuate, nor plant their Pulse and their prouision, neither digge nor labour, &c. for with his comming the time is come that the Mattockes themselues shall digge of their owne accord, and the Beasts goe to the fields and bring the prouision, and with these falshoods he leades them so deluded and inchanted, that not looking to their liues, and to get their foode, they die for hunger, and these companies are diminished by litand little, till the Caraiba remaineth alone, or is murthered by them.

Caraibas iugling.

They haue no proper name to expresse God, but they say the Tupan is the thunder and lightning, and that this is he that gaue them the Mattocks and the foode, and because they haue no other name more naturall and proper, they call God Tupan.

No proper name of God.

There are mariages among them, but there is a great doubt whether they be true, as well because they haue many wiues, as for the easie forsaking them for whatsoeuer quarrell, anger, or any other disgrace hapning among them; but either true or not, among them they were made in this sort. No yong man did vse to marrie before he had taken an emenie, and he continued a virgin till he tooke and slew him, holding first his feasts for the space of two or three yeares, the woman in like sort did not marrie nor know man, till she had her tearmes, after the which they made her great feasts: at the time of the deliuerie of the woman they made great drinkings. And the feast being ended, the marriage remained perfect giuing a net cleane washt; and after they were laid, the father tooke a wedge of stone and did cut vpon a post or stake, then they say hee did cut the tailes from the grandchildren, and therefore they were borne without them, and after they were married they began to drinke, for vntill then their fathers did not suffer them, teaching them that they should drinke heedefully, and should be considerate and wise in their speaking, that the wine might doe them no hurt, and that they should not speake bad things, and then with a vessell the old ancient men did giue him the first wine, and hold his head with their hands that he might not vomit, for if he doth vomit they hold to themselues that he would not be valiant.

Of the Mariages.

They giue no dowries to their daughters or to the sons, but they serue their mother in law.

Tailes.

Drinkings.

This people eateth at all times by night and by day, and euerie houre and moment, and when they haue any meate they keepe it no long time, for they haue no prouidence for the future, but presently they eate all that they haue, and deuide it among their friends, in sort that of one fish that they haue they diuide it to all, and they hold for a great honour and gallantrie to be liberall, and thereby they get great fame and honour: and they hold for the greatest iniurie that they can doe them, to hold them for niggards, or call them so: and when they haue nothing to eate, they are very patient in hunger and thirst. They haue no flesh or fish daies, they eate all manner of flesh, euen of vncleane creatures, as Snakes, Toades, Rats, and such like wormes; they eate also all manner of Fruites, sauing some that are poisonous. This sustenance is ordinarily of that which the Countrie yeeldeth without husbandrie, as wilde fowle, flesh and fruites, but they haue a certaine kinde of foode of a good substance, and healthfull, and many other pulses, whereof hereafter shall mention be made. Ordinarily they drinke not while they eate, but after meate they drinke water or wine which they make of many kindes of fruites, and rootes, as hereafter shall be said, of the which they drinke without measure or order, euen till they fall downe.

Of the manner they keepe in their eating and drinking.

Liberality, and opinion of niggardise.

Their diet.

Drinking.

They haue some particular daies wherein they make great feasts, and all ends in drinking, and they last two or three daies, in the which they eate not but onely drinke, and there be men that empties a whole great vessell of wine. That these drinkings may be more festiuall, some goe about singing from house to house, calling and inuiting all they finde for to drinke and be merrie. These dancings last with musicke all the time of the drinking, in the which they sleepe not, but passe it all in drinking, and when they are drunke they play many disorders, and they breake one anothers head, and take other mens wiues, &c. They giue no thankes before nor after meate to God, nor wash their hands before meate, and after meate they wipe them at their haire, on their their body, or a poste. They haue no towels nor tables, they eate sitting, or lying in their nets, or cowring on the ground: they eate their meate throwing it with their hand into the mouth; and I omit many other particularities that they haue in their eating and drinking, because these are the principall.

Of the manner that they haue in their sleeping.

All this people haue for their beds certaine nets made of Cotten wooll, and they sleepe in them hanging in the ayre. These they make some wrought, others of sundry colours, and as they remaine in the ayre, and haue no other couering or cloathes alwaies in summer and winter, they haue fire vnder them: they rise not very early, and goe to bed by times, and in the mornings there is one chiefe man in their houses, * that lying in his net doth preach vnto them for the space of an houre, how they are to goe to labour as their forefathers did, and he appointeth them the time, telling them what they are to doe; and after he is vp continueth his preaching, running through the Towne. They tooke this custome from a bird which is like a Hawke, which singeth in the morning, and they call it the King and Lord of the other Birds; and they say that euen as that Bird doth sing in the mornings to be heard of the rest, so the principall should make those preachings and speeches to be heard of theirs.

* One House containeth many Families.

Nakednesse.

All of them goe naked as well men as women, and haue no kinde of apparell, and are nothing ashamed: rather it seemeth that they are in the state of innocencie touching this behalfe by the great honestie and modestie they doe keepe among themselues; and when any man speaketh with a woman, he turneth his backe to her.

Modesty.

But to make themselues gallant they vse diuers inuentions, painting their bodies with the iuice of a certaine fruite wherewith they remaine black, making in their bodies many white strokes, after the fashion of round hose, and other kinde of garments. They enplume themselues also, making Diadems and Bracelets, and other very fine inuentions, they esteeme very much all manner of fine Feathers: they let no haire grow in the parts of their body, but they pull them out, onely the head excepted, which they cut in many fashions, for some weare them long with a halfe Moone shauen before, and they say they tooke this vse from Saint Thomas, and it seemeth that they had some notice of him, though confusedly; others make certaine kinde of crownes and circles that they seeme Friers: the women all doe weare long haire, and ordinarily blacke, and the haire of the one and of the other is smooth: when they are angrie they let their haire grow long: and the women when they mourne, doe cut their haire, and also when their husbands goe a farre iourney, in this they show their loue and loyaltie to them: the vanitie they haue in their poling is so much, that by the head the Nations are knowne.

Painting.

Galantry.

Neatnesse.

Mourning.

Now alreadie some doe weare apparell as well men as women, but they esteeme it so little that they weare it rather for fashion then for honesties sake, and because they are commanded to weare it; as it is well seene by some, that sometimes come abroad with certaine garments no further then the nauell, without any other thing, and others onely with a cap on their heads, and leaue the other garments at home: the women make great accompt of Laces and Combes.

Apparell.

Of their Houses.

These Indians doe vse certaine Cottages, or houses of timber, couered with Palme tree leaues, and are in length some of two hundred and three hundred spans, and they haue two or three doores, verie little and low. They shew their valour in seeking timber, and verie great posts, and of great continuance, and there be houses that haue fiftie, sixtie or seuentie roomes of twentie or fiue and twentie quarters long, and as manie quarters long, and as many in breadth. In this house dwelleth one principall man or more, whom all the rest doe obey, and ordinarily they are kinsmen. In euery roome of these dwelleth a houshold with their children and family without any repartition betweene the one and the other, and to enter in one of these houses is to enter into a laberinth, for euery roome hath his fire, and their nets hanging, and their stuffe, so that comming in, all that they haue is in sight, and some house hath two hundred persons and more.

Childebirth.

The women when they are brought to bed (they are delinered on the ground) doe not take vp the childe, but the Father taketh it vp, or some other person whom they take for their Gossip, and in friendship they are as the Gossips among the Christians. The Father doth cut the Nauell string with his teeth, or with two stones knocking the one with the other, and then they set themselues to fasting vntill the Nauell string falleth off, which is ordinarily to the eighe day, and till it doth fall they leaue not their fasting, when it falleth, if it bee a man childe he maketh it a Bow with Arrowes, and tieth it at the end of the Net, and at the other end manie handfuls of hearbes which are the enemies which his sonne shall kill, and eate. These ceremonies being ended, they make drinkings wherewith they all are merrie. The women when they are deliuered, doe presently goe and wash themselues in the Riuers, and they giue the childe sucke ordinarily a yeere and an halfe, not giuing it any other thing to eate. They loue their children extraordinarily, and beare them in certaine pieces of Nets which they call Tapiyo, and carrie them to their plowings and to all kind of labours on their backes, through cold and heate, and they carrie them like the Gipsies stradling about their hips; they giue them no manner of correction, that their children may not crie. They haue manie Southsayings, for they put Cotton-clothes vpon their head, birds feathers, and stickes: they lay them one the palmes of their hands, hands, and rocke them by them that they may grow. They esteeme more to doe good to their children then to themselues, and now they esteeme and loue the Fathers verie much because they bring them vp, they teach them to reade, write, and cipher, and singing, and to play on an Instrument, a thing which they doe much esteeme.

Of the custom they haue in harboring, or entertayning their guests.

When any guest doth come to the house, the honour and entertainment they make him is to bewaile him; Now the guest being come into the house they set him in the Net, & after he is set without speaking any word to him the wife and the daughters, and the other friends do sit them downe round about him with their haire loose, touching with the hand the partie: they all beginne to weepe with a high voice and great abundance of teares, and there they tell in a versified prose all things that haue happened since they saw one another to that houre, and manie other which they inuent, and the troubles that the guest hath suffered in his journie; and all things else that may prouoke pitie and teares. The guest all this time speaketh not one word, but after they haue bewailed him a good while thy wipe the teares, and remaine so quiet, so modest, so pleasant and merrie that it seemeth they neuer wept, and then they salute one another, and giue their Ereinpe, or welcome, and they bring him meate, &c. And after these Ceremonies ended, the guest telleth wherefore he commeth. The men likewise bewaile one another, but it is in some weightie matters, as deaths, misfortunes in wars, &c. They hold it for a great courtesie to entertaine all men and to giue them all things necessarie for their sustenance, and some gifts, as Bowes, Arrowes, Birds, Feathers, and other things according to their powertie without any kind of reward.

Of the custom they haue of drinking of smoake.

These Gentiles doe accustome to drinke the smoake of Petigma, by another name the holy herbe, this they drie and make of a Palme-tree leafe a Coffin like the ioint of a Cane, and filled with this herbe, they fire it at the small end putting the biggest in their mouth, and so they sucke or drinke that smoake, and they hold it for a great daintie and fauour, and lying in their Nets they spend part of the daies and of the nights: to some it doth much hurt, and maketh them dizzie and drunke, to others it doth much good, and maketh them voide a great deale of flegme at the mouth. The women also doe drinke it, but they are such as are old and sickly, for it is verie medicinable vnto them, especially for the cough, the head-ache, and the Disease of the stomacke, and hence come a great manie of the Portugals to drinke it, and haue taken it for a vice or for idlenesse, imitating the Indians to spend daies and nights about it.

Of the manner of payments and husbandrie.

This Nation hath no monie wherewith to satisfie the seruices that are done to them, but they liue with bartering one thing for another, and principally in change of wine they doe all that they will, and so when they haue any businesse, they make wines, and aduising the Neighbours, and assembling all the Towne, they desire them to helpe them in their Husbandrie, which they doe with a good will; and labouring till tenne of the clocke they returne home againe to drinke their wines; and if that day their tillage be not ended, they make other wines, and so goe another day till ten of the clocke to make an end of their businesse. And in this sort doe the wise White men or Portugals vse, that know the vse and fashions of the Indians, and how much they do for wine; they make wines for them, and call them to their Husbandries, and to their Sugar-canes, and with this they pay them. They vse also ordinarily to change some things for white beades, which are made of Wilkes: and in change of some Nosegaies they giue euen their wiues; and this is the ransome wherewith they vse ordinarily, that is, the White men, for to buy of them the slaues, as well men as women that they haue for to eate.

Of their Iewels and Brooches.

Filthily fine.

These Indians vse ordinarily, chiefly in their Feasts, Collars which they make of Wilkes, Diademes of Feathers, and certaine Brooches, (that is, stones which they put in their lower lip) some greene, white, some blue, and verie fine, and are like Emeralds, or Christall, they are round, and some of them so long that they reach to their breasts, and it is ordinarily among the great and principall men, to haue them of a span, or more in lenght. They vse also white Bracelets of the same Wilkes, and they put in their eares certain white stones of a span long and more; and these and other like are the ornaments wherewith they adorne themselues in their Feasts, whether they be of slaughters of the enemies: or of wines; and these are the Riches that they esteeme aboue all that they possesse.

Of the vsage of their wiues, and how they man them.

These Indians doe vse to intreate their Wiues well, they neuer strike them, neither quarrell with them, except in the time of their drinkings, for then ordinarily they reuenge themselues of them, giuing for an excuse afterward, it was the wine they had drunke, and then they are friends as before, and the hatreds betweene them last not long. They goe alwaies together, and when they goe abroad, the woman commeth behind and the man before, that if any ambush bee laid, the wife may not fall into it, and may haue time to flie while the Husband fighteth with his aduersarie, &c. But at their returning home from their fields, or from any other place the wife commeth before, and the Husband behinde, that if any mischance shall happen, the wife may flie home, and the Husband fight with the enemies, or any other thing. But in a safe Countrie and within the Townes the wife alwaies goeth before, and the Husband behind, for they are verie jealous, and will haue alwaies their wife in sight.

Iealousie.

Of their dances and their songs.

Though they be melancholike they haue their Games, especially the children verie diuers and pleasant, in the which they counterfeit manie kinds of Birds, and with so great feast and order order as may be. And the children are joyfull and giuen to play, and they play with ſuch quietneſſe and friendſhip, that among them is no bad name heard, or any ſcurrilitie, or calling any nickname one to anothers Father or Mother; and ſeldome doe they diſagree when they play, nor diſorder themſelues for any thing, and verie ſeldome doe they ſtrike or fight one with another. The Fathers doe teach them from their cradles to dance and ſing, and their dancings are not ſundrie changes, but a continuall ſtamping with the feet ſtanding ſtill, or going round about, or ſtirring their bodie or their head, and they doe it all by ſuch compaſſe, and pleaſantneſſe as can be deſired, at the ſound of a Timbrell made after the faſhion of thoſe which the children vſe in Spaine with manie ſmal ſtones within or certaine ſeeds whereof they make alſo verie good beads: and ſo they ſing dancing altogether, for they doe not one thing without the other, in ſuch compaſſe and order that ſometime an 100. men dancing and ſinging together in a row one behind the other doe end all at one ſtroke, as if they were altogether in one place. The ſingers aſwell men as women are much eſteemed among them, in ſo much that if they take an enemie a good ſinger, and an Inuenter of Verſes, they therefore ſpare his life, and doe not eate him nor his children. The women doe dance together with the men, and make many gambolls and geſtures with their armes and bodies, eſpecially when they dance alone. They keepe among themſelues differencies of voices in their Conſort: and ordinarily the women doe ſing the Treble, Counter, and Tenours.

Inſtruments.

Womens dances.

They are verie wicked, eſpecially in weeping for the dead, for when any one dieth, the Kindred doe caſt themſelues vpon him in the Net, and ſo ſuddenly that ſometimes they choake him before he dieth, ſeeming to them he is dead. And thoſe that cannot caſt themſelues with the Coarſe in the Net doe caſt themſelues on the ground with ſuch falls and knockes that it ſeemeth a Miracle they doe not end their liues with the dead, and of theſe falls, and mournings they remaine ſo feeble that ſometime they die. When they mourne they ſpeak manie pittiful and dolorous words, & if he die at euening all night long they weep with a high voice, that it is a wonder they are not wearie. For theſe mournings they cal the Neighbours, & kinſmen, and if he be one of the principall, all the Towne doth meete to mourne, and in this they haue alſo their points of honour, and they curſe with plagues thoſe which weepe not, ſaying, that they ſhall not bee mourned for. After he is dead they waſh him and paint him verie brauely, as they paint their enemies: and after this they couer him with Cotton Yarne that nothing is ſeene of him, and put a couering ouer his face, and ſitting they put him in a great tinnage or veſſell that they haue vnder the Earth for that purpoſe, and doe couer it in ſuch manner that no Earth may come to him, and the veſſel they couer with earth, making him a houſe where euerie day they carrie him meat. For they ſay that when he is wearie with dancing he commeth thether to eate, and ſo they goe for a certaine time to bewaile him euerie day all his Kindred, with him they burie all his Iewels or Brooches, that none may ſee them and grieue thereat. But if the dead had any Peece, as a Sword, &c. that had beene giuen him, it returneth to him that gaue it, and hee taketh it againe whereſoeuer he findeth it; therefore they ſay that when one dieth he loſeth all the right of that which was giuen him. After the Coarſe is buried, the Kinſmen are in continuall weeping night and day, the one beginning as the other endeth, they eate not but by night, they hang their Nets neere to the roofes, and the women after twentie daies doe cut their haire, and this lamenting laſteth a whole Moone, the which being ended they make great Wines or Drinkings to put away their mourning. The men doe cut their haire, and the women doe paint themſelues with blacke, and theſe Ceremonies and others being ended, they beginne to communicate the one with the other, aſwell the men as the women. After their companions are dead, ſome neuer doe marrie againe not enter into the Feaſt of Wines, neither paint themſelues with blacke; but is verie ſeldome among them, becauſe they are much giuen to women, and cannot liue without them.

Of their burials.

Lamentations to be lamented.

Before they had any knowledge of the Portugals they vſed tooles and inſtruments of ſtone, bone, wood, Canes, and teeth of Beaſts, &c. and with theſe they hewed downe great Woods, with wedges of ſtones, helping themſelues with fire; and they digged alſo the ground with certaine ſharpe ſtakes, and they made their Brooches, Beades of Wilkes, Bowes, and Arrowes, as well as now hauing Inſtruments of Iron, but they ſpent a long time in making of whatſoeuer thing; wherefore they eſteeme the Iron verie much, for the facilitie or eaſe which they finde in making their things with it. And this is the reaſon wherefore they are glad of Commerce with the Portugals or white men.

Of the Inſtruments they do vſe.

The weapons of this people ordinarily are Bowes and Arrowes, and they boaſt themſelues of them, and they make them of verie good wood, and verie faire interlaid with Palme-tree of ſundrie colours, they die their ſtrings greene, or red, and they make their Arrowes verie faire, ſeeking for them the faireſt feathers they can find. They make theſe Arrowes of ſundrie Canes, and faſten in their points the teeth of beaſts, or certaine verie hard Ruſhes, or ſharpe ſtickes with many ſnagges, and many times they empoiſon them with herbes. Theſe Arrowes to ones ſight ſeeme a thing of mockerie, but are verie cruell Weapons, and pierce quilted breaſt-plates or curates; and ſtiking in a ſticke they cleaue it aſunder, and ſometimes happen to goe through a man and and sticke on the ground. They doe exercise themselues in these Weapons verie young, and are great Archers, and so certaine that no Bird can escape them be it neuer so little, or any vermine of the Woods; and there is no more but if they will shoot an Arrow through the eie of a bird or a man; or hit any other thing be it neuer so small, they doe it with great facilitie and with their owne safetie; and for this they are greatly feared. They are stout also and fierce, and dreadfull to others.

Cunning Archers.

They are as vermine of the Woods, for they goe a hunting into the Countrie naked and barefoot, without any feare. They haue a maruellous sight, for at a league off they see any thing, and in the same manner they heare. They guesse verie right ruling themselues by the Sunne, they go to all parts they list, 200. or 300. leagues through thicke Woods, and misse not one iot; they trauell much, and alwaies runnig a gallop, especially with some charges, no Horse is able to hold out with them. They are great fishers and swimmers, they feare no Sea nor waues, continue a day and a night swimming, and the same they doe rowing, and sometimes without meate. They vse also for Weapons Swords of wood, and interlay the ends of them with Palme-tree of sundrie colours and set Plumes on them of diuers colours, chiefly in their feasts and slaughters. And these Swords are verie cruell, for they make no wound, but bruise and breake a mans head without hauing any remedie of cure.

§. II.

Of their manner of killing and eating of humane flesh: and of their creating Gentlemen.

OF all the honours and pleasures of this life, none is so great for this people as to kill and get a name on the heads of their Aduersaries, neither are there among them any Feasts, comparable to those which they make at the death of those which they kill with great Ceremonies, which they doe in this manner. Those which beeing taken in the Warre are appointed to die, came presently from thence with a token, which is a small coard about his necke; and if hee bee a man that may runnne away, he hath one hand tied to his necke vnder his chinne. And before they come to the Townes that are by the way, they paint their eie-lids, eie-browes, and their beards, polling them after fashion, and enpluming them with Yellow feathers so well placed that yee can see no haire; which makes them so gallant as the Spaniards in their rich Apparell, and so they goe sharing their victorie whereby soeuer they passe. When they come to their owne Countrie, the women came out to receiue them, shewting altogether and striking themselues on the mouth which is a common entertainment among them; without any other vexation, or imprisonment, except that they weare about the necke a round collar like a coard of a good bignesse, as hard as a sticke. In this collar they beginne to weaue a great manie fathomes of small coard as long as a womans haire, fastened aboue with a certaine knot, and loose vnderneath, and so it goeth from eare to eare behind the backe, horrible to looke on. And if it be on the Frontier where hee may runne away, they put him in stead of shackels below the knees a string of threed twisted verie hard, which is too weake for any Knife; but that they haue Keepers that goe not one moment from him, whether he goe about the houses, to the Woods, or by the Fields; for he hath libertie for all this, and commonly the keeper is one that is giuen him for wife, and also for to dresse his meate, with the which if his Masters doe giue him no meate as the custome is, he taketh a Bow and Arrowes and shooteth at the first Henne he seeth, or at a Ducke be it whosesoeuer, and none doth contradict him, and so he waxeth fat, neither breaking therefore his sleepe, his laughter, or his pleasure as the rest, and some are as contented though they are to bee eaten, that in no wise they will consent to be ransomed for to serue; for they say that it is a wretched thing to die, and lie stinking, and eaten with Wormes. These women are commonly faithfull in their charge, for they receiue honour thereby, and therefore manie times they are young, and daughters of the chiefe, especially if their brothers are to be the slaiers. For those which haue not this interest manie times, affect them in such manner, that not onely they giue them leaue to runne away, but they also doe goe with them, neither haue the women any other punishment if they bee taken againe, then a few strokes, and sometimes they are eaten of those same to whom they gaue life.

Gentle cruell keeper.

The time when he shall die being determined, the women beginne to make vessels, that is, Bowles, Traies, and Pots for the Wines, so great that euerie one will hold a pipe. This being readie, as well the principall as the rest doe send their Messengers to inuite others from sundrie places against such a Moone about tenne or twelue leagues compasse or more, for the which none doth excuse himselfe. The guests doe come in Mogotes or troupes with their wiues and children, and all of them doe enter the Towne with Dancers; and all the time the people are a gathering together, there is Wine for the guests, for without it all the other entertainments are nothing worth. The people being assembled, the Feasts beginne some daies before according to the

the number, and certaine ceremonies preceding, and euerie one laſteth a day. Firſt, they haue for this certaine coards of Cotton-wooll of a reaſonable bigneſſe, not twiſted but wouen of a verie faire worke, it is a thing among them of great eſteeme, and none hath them but ſome principall men, and according to their fineneſſe and workmanſhip, and their taking pleaſure, it is to be beleeued that they are not made in a yeere. Theſe are alwaies verie ſafely kept, and are carried to the place with great feaſt & great noiſe in certain traies where a Maſter of theſe things doth tie two knots within from that which one of the points do run in ſuch maner that in the midſt there remaineth a nooſe. Theſe knots are ſo fine that few are found that can make them, for ſome of them haue ten caſts about, fiue croſſing ouer the other fiue, as if one ſhould croſſe the fingers of the right hand ouer the left, & after they die them with the water of a white clay like lime, & let them drie.

On the ſecond day they bring a great number of burdens of wilde Canes or Reeds as long as Lances or more, and at night they ſet them on fire in a round heape, the points vpward leaning one to another, and ſo they make a great and faire high bone-fire, round about the which are men and women dancing with ſheaues of arrowes at their backe, but they goe very ſwiftly; for hee that is to die, which ſeeth them better then hee is ſeene becauſe of the fire, catcheth hold of all that he can, and catcheth them, and they beeing many hee miſſeth few times. At the third day they make a dance of men and women, all of them with pipes of Canes, and all of them at once doe ſtampe on the ground, now with one foot then with the other, all together without miſſing a ſtroke; and obſeruing the ſame meaſure they play on their pipes, and there is no other ſinging nor ſpeaking; they being many and the Canes ſome bigger and ſome ſmaller, beſides the reſounding in the Woods, they make a Hel-ſeeming harmonie, but they abide it as if it were the ſweeteſt Muſicke in the World. And theſe are their feaſts, beſides others which they intermingle with many graces and ſoothſayings. Black Saints.

On the fourth day, they carrie the captiued enemie as ſoone as the day breakes to waſh him at a Riuer, and they while the time that when they doe returne it may be broad day light, comming into the Towne, the Priſoner goeth preſently with a watchfull eye, for hee knoweth not out of what houſe or doore a valiant man is to come out to him, that is to catch hold of him behind. For as all their happineſſe doth conſiſt in dying valiantly, and the ceremonie that followeth, is now the neereſt vnto death, as he which is to lay hold of him, doth ſhew his forces in ouer-comming him himſelfe alone without any other helpe, ſo he will ſhew courage and force in reſiſting him: and ſometimes he doth it in ſuch ſort, that the firſt ſtanding aſide as wearied in wreſtling, another ſucceedeth him which holds himſelfe for a valianter-man, the which ſometimes remaine well beduſted, & more they would remaine if at this time the captiue had not his cord or ſhakels. First encounters.

This wreſtling being ended, he on foot blowing and puffing with rage and wearineſſe, with the other that hold him faſt, there commeth forth a troope of Nymphes which doe bring a great new painted bowle, and in it the cords rolled vp, and very white, and this preſent being ſet at the feet of the captiue, a cunning old woman in theſe matters, and Miſtris of the troope beginneth to tune a Song, whom the other doe helpe, the Dittie is according to the ceremonie. And while they ſing, the men take the cords and the nooze being put about his necke, they giue it another knot neere to the other great ones, that it may not loſe againe; and hauing made of euery end a coyle, they put them on the arme of the woman which alwaies goeth after him with this weight, and if the weight be great becauſe the cords are great and long, they giue her another to carrie one of the coyles, and if he before was terrible with the coller, he is more now with thoſe two knots ſo bigge behind about his necke, and therefore one of the verſes of the Song ſaith, Wee are thoſe that make the necke of the bird to ſtretch, although after other ceremonies, they ſay to him in another foote, If thou hadſt beene a Parrot annoying vs, thou wouldeſt haue fled. The womens parts.

At this time the veſſels of wine are ſet in a rowe, in the middeſt of a great houſe, and the houſe (hauing no partitions though it bee of twentie or thirtie fathome in length) it is full of people; and when they begin to drinke it is a Labyrinth, or a Hell to ſee and heare them. For thoſe which dance and ſing doe continue with great feruentneſſe all the daies and nights that the wines doe laſt. For this being the proper feaſt of the ſlaughters, in the drinking of the wines are many particularities, which laſt long, and they make water at euery ſtop; and ſo they continue day and night; they ſing, dance, drinke, and ſpeake telling in whoopes through all the houſe of warres, and acts that they did; and as euery one will be heard in his Hiſtorie, euery one doth ſpeake ſtriuing to bee lowdeſt, beſide other noiſes, without any intermiſſion, no not a quarter of an houre. Their ſongs, &c.

That morning in which they begin to drinke, they paine the captiue by a particular way that they haue for that deſigne, in this ſort, his face being cleane, and all the feathers he hath brought forth, they anoint him with the Milke of a certaine tree that cleaueth very faſt, and they caſt vpon it the powder of certaine egge-ſhels of a certaine wilde bird, and vpon this they paint him with black very faire pictures, and all his bodie to the ſole of his foote, and ſticke him all with feathers which they haue alreadie cut for that purpoſe and died redde, and that maketh him to ſeeme halfe as bigge againe, and touching his face it maketh it ſeeme as much greater, and the eies ſo much the ſmaller, that he remaineth an horrible viſage. And in the ſame manner that they haue painted his face, they adorn the Sword which is of wood, in manner of a Ferula or Palmer, Adorning of the Captiue.

but that the head is not so round, but almost three square, and the sides doe almost end in an edge, and the shaft of it which may bee of seuen or eight spans is not altogether round. It hath at the head about foure fingers broad, and commeth still narrowing vnto the end where it hath certaine pendants, or little bels of diuers coloured feathers, it is a gallant thing and of great esteeme among them, they call it Iugapenambin, that is, eares of the Sword. The last day of the wines they make in the midst of the place cabins of Palme-boughs, as many as they are that shall die, and in that they lodge, without entring any more, any house, and all the day and the night hee is well serued with feasts more then with meate, for they giue him no other foode but a fruite that hath the sauour of Nuts, that the next day he may not haue much bloud.

The fatall Sword.

Crocodiles teares.

The fifth day in the morning at seuen of the clocke, little more or lesse his woman doth there leaue him, and goeth home very sad, and speaking for her farewell some pittifull wordes at the least fainedly. Then they take away his shackels, and passe the cords from his neck to the waste, and standing at the doore of him that must kill him, the slaughterer commeth forth in a dance, as white as a Doue, painted with white earth, in a garment which they call a cloke of feathers tied about the breast, vpward like the wings of an Angell, so dancing he goeth round about the place, and commeth making very strange countenances with his eies and bodie, and with his hands he counterfeiteth the Kite that desireth flesh, and with this Deuillishnesse hee commeth to the wretch, which stands with the coard stretched, on both sides hauing one that holdeth him: and the poore wretch if he find wherewith to throw at him, hee doth it with a good will, and many times they giue him wherewith, for many valiant men doe come out to him, so nimble in winding their bodie that he cannot hit them. This being ended there commeth an honorable Iudge, or tickler of the new Knight that shall bee, and taking the Sword passeth it many times betweene his legges, putting it now on the one side, now on the other, euen in the same manner that the Pipers dogs doe passe betweene their legges, and after taking it by the midst with both hands he pointeth as with a thrust to the eies of the man which is to die; and this being done he turneth the head of it vpward in the same manner that he is to vse it, and putteth it in the hands of the slaughterer, as apt and fit already with those blessings for to doe his office; they place themselues somewhat to the left side, in such sort that he may hit him with the edge of his Sword in the nape of the necke, for he striketh at another place.

Hallowing the Sword.

And their brutishnesse is so much, that because they feare no other euill but that which is present, they are as resolute as if it were nothing, as well for to speake, as for to try their courage, for after they take their leaue of life, saying, In a good houre, let me die seeing many are dead, and that besides this his brethren and kinsmen remaine here to reuenge them. And with this the one makes him readie to discharge, and the other to auoid his bodie; which is all the honour of his death. And they are so nimble in this that many times it is high daies before they are able to kill them, for when he sees the weapon in the aire, sometimes hee drawes his head aside, sometime hee declines his bodie; and in this they are so doughtie, that if those that hold the points of the coards doe gird him hard (as they doe when the slaughterer is slow or weake) hee puls so hard that hee brings them to him, and makes them to slacken in despight, hauing one eie on them another on the Sword, without any standing still: and as the killer may not deceiue them with an offer, and not strike vnder paine of receiuing a fillip, they doe foresee their stroke in such sort that come it neuer so low in a trise they stoope, and lie so flat that it is a wonder to see; and no lesse is the taking of the Sword, holding the arme in such sort that doing him no hurt, they pul it downe iointly with themselues, and they put it vnder the arme pulling by the killer; wherein if they did not helpe the other would dispatch him; for they haue in this action so many sooth-sayings that for to kill a child of fiue yeere old, they goe so prepared as for to kill some Giant. And with these helpes and incouragements so many times hee striketh till hee hitteth and that is enough, for assoone as he is downe he giueth him so many blowes till he batters his head (though one man was seene that had it so hard that they could neuer breake it, for as they goe bare-head, they haue them so hard that ours in comparison of theirs are like a Pompion, and when they will injustie any White man, they call him soft-head.)

Butchery rites.

Block-head.

If this which they kill falleth on his backe, and not on his belly they hold it for an euill lucke and prognostication that the killer shall die, and although he falleth vpon his belly, they haue many ceremonies, which if they be not kept they hold that the killer cannot liue, and many of them are so painfull that if any one did suffer their troubles for Gods sake, they would bee accounted meritorious, as hereafter shall be said. The poore wretch beeing dead they carrie him to a bone-fire that they haue readie for the same, and bringing the bodie neere the fire, touching him with the hand, flay off a skinne somewhat thicker then the rinde of an Onion, till he remaineth cleaner and whiter then a scalded Pig. Then it is deliuered to the Butcher which maketh a hole beneath the stomacke according to their vse, whereby the children first do put in their hands, and pull by the guts vntill the Butcher cutteth where hee listeth, and that which remaineth in the hand of euerie one is his part, and the rest is diuided among the Commons; except some principal pieces which for great honour are giuen to the guests that are the most principall, which they doe carrie well rosted, so that it may not corrupt, and with them afterward in their countries they make new Feasts and drinkings of wine.

The

The killer hauing ended his office, taking of the cloke of feather, and leauing the Sword hee goeth home, where at the doore the same iudge or stickler that was before with a shooting bow in his hand, that is, one of the points on the lower threshold, the other at the vpper, and pulling by the string as though he would shoote, the killer passeth betweene him so cunningly that hee toucheth in nothing. Assoone as he is passed the other loseth the string making shew that it grieues him to haue missed him whom he shot at, as though this hath vertue to make him swift afterward in the warre, and the enemies to misse him. When he is within he beginnes to runne through all the houses, and the Sisters and Cousins in the same manner before him, saying my Brother is called N. repeating it through all the Townes, and if the Gentleman hath any good thing he that goeth takes it from him till they leaue him nothing. This being ended they cast on the ground certaine legges of a certaine Tree, called Pslan. Vpon the which hee stands all that day with so much silence as if he had some astonishment in him, and carrying to present thither the head of the dead, they pull out one of his eies, and with the strings and sinewes of it they anoint his pulses, and cutting of his mouth whole, they put it on his arme as a Bracelet, and then he layeth him downe in his Net as a sicke man, and certainly hee is sicke for feare, that if he doe not accomplish the Rites perfectly, the soule of the dead will kill him. Ceremonies of making a new Gentleman.

Within a few daies they giue him the habit, not in the breast of the Coat which he hath not, but on his owne skin race him all ouer the bodie with the tooth of a Cutia, that is like a Conies tooth, the which as well for their little skill, as because they haue a hard skinne it seemes, that they teare a piece of Parchment, and if he be valiant, they doe not race him with right strokes but a Crosse in sort that there remaine certaine very fine workes, and some doe cry and groane with the paine. This being ended they haue smal Cole finely grownd, and the iuice of Broamerape wherewith they rub the cuts ouerthwart, that the put him to great paine and swelling, which is yet a greater torment, while his wounds doe close, which continue some daies, he lyeth still in his Net without speaking any word, nor asking any thing, and that he may not break his silence, he hath neere him water, flowre, and a certaine fruit like Almonds which they call Amendoins, for he tasteth neither fish nor flesh those daies. Markes and habit of new Gentrie.

After he is whole, many daies or moneths being passed, they make a great drinking of wines that hee may put off his mourning, and cut his haire which vntill then he did not, then hee anoints himselfe with blacke, and from thence forward hee remaines enabled to kill without any painfull ceremonie being done to him, and he also sheweth himselfe honoured and contented, and with a certaine disdaine, as one that hath honour alreadie, and gets it not a new. And so he doth no more but giue the other a couple of blowes, although the head remaine whole, and he stirring he goeth home, and presently they come and cut off his head. And the Mothers with their children about their necke, come to congratulate him, and hansell him for the warre, staining his armes with that bloud. These bee the exploits, honours and vallour whence this people take their names, whereof they boast very much, and they remaine thence forward Abaetes, Murubixaba, Moçacara, which are the names and titles of Gentlemen. And these are the vnhappie Feasts whereon these wretches doe ground their felicitie and glorie, before they haue any knowledge of their Creator. Titles of Honour.

§. III.

Of the diuersitie of Nations and Languages, and of the Soyle and Climate.

IN all this Prouince are many and sundrie Nations of diuers Languages, but one is the principall which comprehendeth some ten Nations of Indians. These liue on the Sea Coast, and in a great part of the Land, all of one Speech, though they differ in some words. This is that which the Portugals doe vnderstand, it is easie, eloquent, pleasant, and copious; the difficultie of it is in hauing many comparisons, but of the Portugals almost all those that came from the Kingdome; and are seated here, and doe communicate with the Indians do know it in a short time, and the children of the Portugals borne here doe speake it better then the Portugall, as well men as women, chiefly in the Captainship of Saint Vincent, and with these ten Nations of Indians haue the Fathers communication, because they know their Language, and they more tame and well inclined. These were, and are the ancient friends of the Portugals, with whose helpe and armes they conquered this Countrie, fighting against their owne kindred, and diuers other Nations very barbarous, and those of this generation were so many that it seemed an impossible thing to extinguish them, but the Portugals haue made such haste that they are almost dead, and they vse such meanes that they disinhabit the Coast, and flie the Land inward, some three hundred, some foure hundred. See before in M. Knivet. Portugals vse of Sauages.

The first of this Language are called Pitiguaras Lords of Paraiba, thirtie leagues from Pernambuco, and haue the best Brasill woode, and are great friends to the Frenchmen, and did contract with them vntill now, marrying their Daughters with them, but now in the yeere 1584. Paraiba was taken by Iames Flores his Maiesties Generall, driuing out Pitiguaras.

the Frenchmen; and he left a Fortreſſe with 100. Souldiers, beſides the Portugals which alſo haue their Captaine and Gouernour one Fructuoſo Barboſa, that with the principall men of Pernambuco carried an Armie by Land wherewith he ouercame the enemies, for from the Sea thoſe of the Armada fought not.

Viatan a people eaten out by the Portugals.

Neere vnto theſe liued a great multitude of people which they call Viatan, of theſe there are are none alreadie, for they being friends with the Pitaguaras, and Kindred, the Portugals made them enemies among themſelues, giuing them to be eaten, that by this meanes they might warre againſt them and hold them for ſlaues; and finally, hauing a great dearth, the Portugals in ſtead of releeuing them, tooke them Captiues, and did ſend ſhip-loades to bee ſold in other places. There was ioyned with this a Magician Portugall Prieſt, that with his deceits conueighed them all to Pernambuco, and ſo ended this Nation. The Portugals remained without Neighbours to defend them from the Pstiguaras, which vntill now that they were ouercome, perſecuted the Portugals ſetting on a ſudden vpon their Corne, Goods, and Sugar-mils, burning, and killing many of the Portugals, becauſe they are verie warlike, but now by the goodneſſe of God they are freed from this incumbrance.

Tupinabs.

Others there be that they call Tupinaba, theſe inhabit from the Riuer Royall till ye come neere the Illeos, theſe were alſo among themſelues contrarie, thoſe of the Bay with them of Camamu, and Intrare. Along the Riuer of Saint Francis dwelt another Nation called Caaete; and among theſe were alſo contrarieties with them of Pernambuco.

Caaete.

Tupinaquin.

From Illeos, or the Iuſtle Ilands, and Port Seguro, vnto the Holy Ghoſt inhabited another Nation called Tupinaquin; theſe proceeded from thoſe of Pernambuco, and ſcattered themſelues in a Countrie of the Maine, multiplying exceedingly, but now they are but few. Theſe were alwaies great enemies of the things of God, hardened in their errours, verie reuengefull, and would reuenge themſelues as ſoone as they ſee their enemies, and louers of many women: of theſe alreadie are many Chriſtians, and they are firme in the faith.

There is another Nation a kinne to theſe, which runneth off the Maine from Saint Vincent to Pernambuco, called Tupiguae, theſe were without number, they doe diminiſh, for the Portugals doe goe to ſeeke them to ſerue themſelues with them, and thoſe which eſcape doe flee verie farre off that they may not be ſlaues: There is another Nation Neighbour to this called Apigapigtanga, and Muriapigtanga. There is alſo another Nation contrarie to the Tupinaquins which are called Guaracayo, or Itati.

Timimino. Tamuya.

Another Nation dwelleth in the Holy Ghoſt, called Timimino, they were contrarie to the Tupinaquins, but they are now verie few. Another Nation which is called Tamuya inhabitors of the Riuer of Ianuarie, theſe the Portugals deſtroyed when they inhabited the Riuer, and of them there be verie few, and ſome that are in the Maine are called Ararape, another Nation inhabiteth beyond Saint Vincent, about eightie leagues, enemies of the Tupinaquins of Saint Vincent, of theſe there are infinite multitudes, and doe runne along the Sea Coaſt and in the Maine, vnto the Paraguai which the Caſtilians doe inhabite, all theſe Nations aboueſaid, though different, and many of them enemies one to another, they haue the Language, and their conuerſion is in hand, and they haue a great reſpect to the Fathers of the company of Ieſus, and in the Maine they ſigh for them, and call them Abare, and Father, deſiring they would come to their Countries and conuert them; and ſuch is their reputation that ſome Portugals of badde conſciences doe faine themſelues Fathers, apparelling themſelues in Gownes, ſhauing their crownes, and telling them they are Abares, and that they came to ſeeke them for the Churches of the Fathers which are theirs aſwell as ours. Thus they ſeduce them, and aſſoone as they come to the Sea, they diuide them among themſelues, ſell, and marke them, making firſt a great ſlaughter of them in the Countrie, robberies and aſſaults, taking away their Daughters and their Wiues, &c. And if it were not for theſe and other like hinderances, all thoſe of this Language had beene conuerted to our holy Faith.

Ararape.

Vnchriſtian impietie of ſome Portugals

Seuentie ſix Nations of Tapuya.

There be other contrarie Nations enemies to theſe of diuers Languages, which in a generall name are called Tapuya, and they are contrarie alſo among themſelues. In the Maine firſt neighbouring to the Tupinaquins inhabit the Guaimures, and they occupie ſome eightie leagues of Coaſt and toward the Mayne all that they liſt. They are Lords of the wild Woods, very great bodied, and by the continuance and cuſtome of going through the Woods, they haue their skinnes very hard, and for this effect, they beate their children being young, with certaine Thiſtles to accuſtome them to goe in the wilde Woods.

See of theſe Maſter Knuet which liued with them.

* A roote ſo called.

They haue no Husbandrie, they liue by rapine, and by the point of the Arrow; they eate the * Mandioca raw and it doth them no hurt, they runne verie ſwiftly, and to the White men they come not but on a ſudden. They vſe verie great Bowes; they carrie certaine ſtones made a purpoſe verie bigge that whereſoeuer they hit, they may preſently breake the heads in pieces. And when they come to fight, they hide themſelues vnder ſhrubs, and from thence they play their part, & they are greatly feared, & there is no power in the world that is able to ouercome them.

Cowards and cruell.

They are great cowards in the fields and dare not come forth, neither paſſe they any waters, vſe any ſhipping, nor are giuen to fiſhing, all their liuing is from the woods. They are cruel as Lions, when when they take any enemies they cut off his flesh with a Reed whereof they make their Arrowes, and flea them that they leaue them no more but the bones and the guts; if they take any child & are followed, that they may not take it away aliue, they strike off his head against a post. They disbowell the women with child to eate their children roasted. These annoy the Port Secure verie much, the little Ilands, and Camamú, and these Countries goes to decay because of them; their speech cannot be vnderstood.

Besides these towards the Maine and the fields of Caatinga, doe liue many Nations of Tapuyas, which are called Tucanucu, these liue in the Maine of the great Riuer, opposite to Port Secure, they haue another Language. Others doe liue in the Maine before yee come to Aquitigpe, and are calle Nacij. Others which they call Oquigtâiuba, others which are called Pabi; these weare course Cotton-clothes, wouen like a Net, with this they couer themselues as with a sacke, they haue no sleeues, they haue a different speech. In the Ari are others which also liue in the field going toward Aquitigpe. Others which are called Larabio, it is a great people, of a different speech. Others which are called Mandein: also of another speech, others called Macutu, others Napara, these haue husbandrie. Others called Cuxare, these liue in the middest of the field of the Maine, others which liue in the same field, that are called Nubinu, others doe liue toward the Maine of the Bay which is called Guayana, they haue a speech by themselues, other there about called Taicuiu, these dwell in houses, they haue another speech, others in the same Countrie called Carin, of a different tongue. These three Nations, and their Neighbours are friends of the Portugals, others which they call Pigru, they dwell in houses, others which are called Oburuatiara, these liue in Ilands in the Riuer of Saint Francis, they haue Houses like vnto Caues vnder the Earth. These when the enemies come against them flie to the water, and by diuing escape; they continue long vnder water, they haue great Arrowes like halfe Darts, without Bowes, and with them they fight; they are verie valiant, they eate humane flesh, they haue a different tongue.

Tucanucu and other Nations many.

Caue-houses.

Others there are that liue farre within the Maine are called Anbelim, they haue another Language; others that liue in Houses called Aracuaiati, they haue another Speech; others called Caiuari, they liue in Caues. Others called Guaianaguacu, they dwell in Caues and haue another Speech; others farre within the Maine called Camucuiara; these haue paps that reach vnder their waste, and neere to their knees, and when they runne they binde them about their waste; they are neuertheleſſe great Warriours, eate mens flesh, and haue another Speech: Others which they call Iobiara Apuayara, Lords of sharpe Staues, for they fight with tosted staues and sharpe, they are valiant, and eate humane flesh, they haue another Speech. Others called Aunacuig, they dwell in Houses, they haue another Speech, but they vnderstand themselues with these aboue said their Neighbours. Others they call Guaiacatu, and Guaiatuú, these haue another Speech and dwell in Houses. Others called Campebe, these eate no humane flesh, when they kill the enemie, they cut off the head and carrie it for a shew, they haue no Houses, and are like Gipsies. Others called Guayo, dwell in Houses, they fight with venomed Arrowes, they eat humane flesh, they haue another Speech. Others called Cicu, haue the same Speech and customes of them aboue said. Others called Pabain, eate humane flesh, and haue another Speech. Others called Iaicuiu, haue the same Speech that these aboue. Others called Tupijo, dwell in Houses, haue Husbandrie, and another Speech. Others called Maracaguacu, are Neighbours to these aboue, and haue the same Speech. Others called Iacurmin, vse Husbandrie, dwell in Houses, and haue another Speech. Others called Tapecuiu, are Neighbours of these aboue, and haue the same speech. Others called Anacuiu, haue the same Speech and customes that those aboue, and all of them doe fight with venomed Arrowes. Others called Piracuiu, haue the same Speech that those aboue, and venomed Arrowes.

Others called Taraguaig, haue another Speech, they fight with venomed Arrowes. Others called Pabacuiu, can speake the Language of them aboue said. Others called Tipi, are of the field, and fight with venomed Arrowes. Others called Guacaraiara, haue another Speech, and haue Husbandries, and dwell in Houses. Others Neighbours to these aboue called Camaragoa. Others called Curupija, were enemies of the Tupinaquis. Others called Aquirino, haue another Speech. Others called Piraguayg Aquig, liue vnder the Rockes, are enemies to these aboue. Others called Pinacuiu Others called Parapoto, these can speake the Speech of them of the Coast. Others called Caraemba, haue another Speech. Others called Caracuiu, haue another Speech. Others called Maimuna, these joine themselues with the Guaimures enemies to them of the Coast, they vnderstand themselues with the Guaimures, but they haue another Speech. Others called Aturari, enter also in communication with the Guaimures, others called Cuigtaio, doe also communicate and enter with the Guaimures. Others called Cuigpe, these were the Inhabitors of Port Secure. Others called Guigraimbe, are friends with them aboue. Others called Augarari, these dwell not farre from the Sea, betweene Port Secure, and the Holy Ghost. Others called Amixocori, are friends with the former. Others called Caraia, doe liue in the Maine toward Saint Vincent, and went flying from the North thither, they haue another Speech. Others called Apetuna, liue in the Maine toward Aquitipi. Speech. Others called Aquiguira, these doe conuerse with the former. Another Nation liueth in the Maine, enemies to the Muriapigtanga, and of the Tarape, it is a Dwarfish people, low of bodie, but bigge legged and backed, the Portugals call these Pigmes, and the Indians call them Tapigniri, because they are little. Others called Quiricignig, these doe liue in the Maine of the Bay, verie farre. Others called Guirig, these are great Horsemen, and friends of the former. Others called Gnaiera, doe liue in the Maine of Port Secure, verie farre off. Others called Aimaguig, these were Inhabitors of the Countries of the Tupinaquins, and because the Tupinaquins remained Lords of the Mountaines, they are called Tupinaquins.

Gnaitaca. Others called Gnaitaca, doe liue in the Sea Coast betweene the Holy Ghost, and the River of Iannarie, they liue in the fields, and will not liue in the Woods, they goe to earo to their Husbandries, and come to the houses to bed, they haue no other treasures. They liue as the cattell that feedeth in the fields, and come not to the Houses but to sleepe, they are so swift in running that by footmanship they catch the game. Others called Igbigranapan, are enemies to the Tupinaquins, they communicate with the Guaimures, when they fight with their enemies, they make great noises striking with certaine stickes vpon others. Others called Quirigma, these were Lords of the Countries of the Bay, and therefore it is called the Bay Quirimure. The Tupinabas did expell them out of their Countries, and remained Lords of them, and the Tapuyas went toward the South. Others called Maribuco, in habit in the Maine right against the great River. Others called Catagua, doe liue right against Iequeriquare, betweene the Holy Ghost and Port Secure. Others called Tapuxerig, are enemies of the Tapuyas, and eate vp their Cornefields. Others that dwell about the Maine that goeth toward Saint Vincent, are called Amoacaw, and were enemies of the Tupinaquins. Others called Nonoa, haue verie great faces. Others called Apay, dwell neere the field of the Maine, they are great singers, and haue another Speech. Others called Panaguiri, differing from the former. Others also differing called Bigrergja. Others called Piriju, there are a great number of these.

Beast in humane shape.

All these seuentie sixe Nations of Tapuyas, which haue the most of them a sundry Language, are a wilde sauage and vntamed people; they are all for the most part enemies of the people that dwell in the Sea Coast neighbouring to the Portugals: onely a certaine kind of Tapuyas, that liue in the Riuer of Saint Francis, and others that dwell nearer are friends of the Portugals, and entertaine them verie well when they passe through their Countries. Of these many are Christians, that were brought by the Fathers from the Maine, and learning the Speech of them of the Sea Coast which the Fathers can speake, they baptized them, and many of them doe liue in the Townes of the Fathers married, and serue them for Interpreters, for the remedie of so great a number of people as is lost; and onely with these Tapuyas, may some fruit bee gotten, with the rest of the Tapuyas no conuersion can be wrought because of their mutabilitie, and the hauing manie and sundrie very hard Languages. Onely there remaineth one remedie, if the Lord God doe not discouer another, and it is; getting some of their children, and making them to learne the Speech of the rest, and seruing for Interpreters may some fruit be gotten, though with great difficultie, for the Reasons abouesaid, and manie other.

Of the Climate & Countrie of Brasil, & of some notable things found there, as well one the Land as one the Sea.

The Climate of Brasil generally is temperate, of good, delicate, and healthfull aire, where the men liue lon euen to 90. 100. and more yeeres, and the Countrie is full of old men. Generally it is neither cold nor hot, though from the Riuer of Ianuarie, vnto Saint Vincent, there be colds and heates, but not very great. The Heauens are very pure and cleere, especially by night; the Moone is very preiudiciall vnto health, and corrupteth the things very much. The mornings are verie healthfull: it hath verie little twylights, as well in the morning as in the euenings, for as soone as it is day presently the Sun riseth, and as soone as it is set, it is night, Their Winter beginneth in March, and endeth in August, the Summer beginneth in September, and endeth in Februarie, the nights and daies are all the yeere almost equall.

The Countrie is somewhat melancholicke, ouerflowne with many waters, as wel of maine Riuers, as from the Skie; in it is great store of raine chiefly in Winter, it is ful of great Woods that are greene all the yeere. It is a Hilly Countrie, especially toward the Sea Coast, and from Pernambuco vnto the Captaineship of the Holy Ghost, is verie scarce of stone; but from thence to Saint Vincent are verie rough and high Mountaines, of great Quarries of Rockie stone, the food and waters are generally healthfull, light, and of easie digestion. There are few Commodities for apparell, because the Countrie yeeldeth nothing but Cotton-wooll, and of the rest the Countrie is plentifull: especially of Cattell and Sugars.

§. IIII.

Of the Beasts, Land-serpents, Fowles.

THe Deere in the Brasilian tongue is called Guaza: there are some very great, like faire Horses, they are well headed, and some haue ten or twelue snags; these are rare, and they are found in the Riuer of Saint Francis, and in the Captainship of Saint Vincent. These are called, Guazuapara, they are esteemed of the Canibes, who of the shankes and snowes make the points of their Arrowes, and certaine throwing Balls which they vse for to strike downe beasts and men. There bee other smaller, they haue hornes also, but they are onely of one point: besides these there are three or foure kindes, some that feede onely in the Woods, others onely in the plaine fields in heards. They make great account of the skinnes, and of the flesh.

The Tapyrete are the Elkes, of whose skinne the leather Targets are made, they are like Kine, much more like a Mule, the tayle is of a finger length, they haue no hornes, they haue a snout of a quarter long, which he shrinketh vp and putteth forth. They swimme and diue very much, but when they diue they take ground presently vnder water, and going on it they come out in another place, there are great store of them in this Countrie.

There are great store of wilde Boares, and it is the ordinary food of the Indians of this Countrie, they haue the nauell on their backe, and out of it there commeth a sent like the sent of little Foxes, and by that sent the Dogs doe hunt them, and they are easily taken. The wilde Boare, 3. kinds and more.

There are others called Tayassuirica, that is to say, a Boare that snappeth or grindeth his teeth, these are bigger then the common, and more rase, and with their tushes they goare all the beasts they meete.

Others are called Tayacupeba, that is, a Boare that standeth still and teareth; these doe assault the Dogs, and the men: and if they catch them they eate them; they are are so fierce, that men are forced to take the trees to escape them, and some doe stay at the foot of the trees some dayes till the man doe come downe; and because they know this tricke of theirs, they goe presently to the trees with their Bowes and Arrowes, and from thence they kill them. There bee also other kinde of Boares, all good meate.

The Acutis are like the Conies of Spaine, chiefely in their teeth: the colour is dunne, and draweth toward yellow: they are domesticall creatures, so that they goe about the house, and goe out and come in againe to it, they take with their fore-feet all that they eate, and so they carrie it to the mouth, and they eate very fast, and hide that which they leaue against they be an hungred. Of these there are many kindes, and all are eaten. Acutis.

The Pacas are like Pigs, there are great abundance of them; the flesh is pleasant, but it is heauie. They neuer bring forth but one at once. There bee others very white; these bee rare, they are found in the Riuer of Saint Francis. Pacas.

There are many Ounces, some blacke, some grey, some speckled, it a very cruell beast, and fierce, they assault men exceedinly, that euen on the trees they cannot escape them, especially if they be bigge. When they are flesht there is none that dare abide them, especially by night: they kill many beasts at once; they spoile a whole Hen-house, or a heard of Swine, and to open a man, or whatsoeuer beast, it sufficeth to hit him with one of his clawes. But the Indians are so hardie, that some of them dare close with one of them, and holdeth it fast, and kills it in a field, as they doe their enemies, getting a name, and vsing all the ceremonies they doe to their enemies. They vse the heads for Trumpets, and the Portugall women vse the skinnes for Rugs or Couerlets, especially of the painted ones, and in the Captainship of Saint Vincent. Lagoarete. M. Knimet calls them Tigres. Bold vain-glorious Indians.

The Carigue are like the Foxes of Spaine, but they are smaller, as bigge as a Cat, they smell worse then the Foxes of Spaine themselues, and they are grey as they. They haue a bag from the fore to the hinder feet, with sixe or seuen dugs, and there they carrie their young ones hidden till they can get their owne food, and hath ordinarily sixe or seuen in a litter. This vermine destroyeth the Hens, for it goeth not by day but by night, and climes the trees and the houses, and no Bird or Hen can escape them. Carigue.

The Tamandua is of notable admiration, it is of the bignesse of a great Dog, more round then long, and the tayle is twice or thrice as long as the bodie, and so full of haire, that from the heate, raine, cold and winde, hee harboureth himselfe all vnder it, that yee can see nothing of him. The head is small, and hath a thinne snout, no greater mouth then an oyle Cruze, round and not open, the tongue is of three quarters long, and with it he licketh vp the Ants, whereof he onely feeds; hee is diligent in seeking of the Ant-heapes, and with the clawes hee breaketh them, and casting out his tongue the Ants sticke on it, and so he drawes them in, hauing no more mouth then to hold his tongue full of them; it is of a great fiercenesse, and doth assault many people and beasts. The Ounces doe feare them, and the Dogs exceedingly, and whatsoeuer they catch, they teare with their clawes; they are not eaten, neither are they good for Ant Beare, or Tamandua, a strange-shaped beast.

any thing but to destroy the Ant-heapes, and they are so many that they will neuer bee destroyed altogether.

Tatu, or Armadillo. The Badas are the Rhinocerots.

The Tatu is of the bignesse of a Pigge, and of a whitish colour, it hath a very long snout, and the body full of thing like plates, wherewith he remayneth armed, and it hath certaine pieces hanging downe as the Badas haue. These plates are so hard, that no Arrow can pierce them, except it hit him in the flankes: they digge so fast, that it hath chanced seuen and twentie men with Mattockes not to bee able to digge so much as one of these with their snout. But if they cast water in their holes they are presently taken: it is a creature worth the seeing, and they call it an armed Horse, the flesh is like Hennes flesh, or Pigge, very pleasant, of the skinne they make Purses, and they are very faire, and lasting, they are made tame, and are bred in the house. Of these there be many kindes, and there are great abundance of them.

Canduacu, or Porcupine: diuers kinds.

The Canduacu is the Porcupine of Africa, and hath bristles white and blacke, so great, that they are af a spanne and a halfe, and more, and they cast them like as those of Africa. There be other of these, called Canduamiri, because they are smaller; and they haue bristles as the other. There be other smaller, of the bignesse of a Cat, with yellow bristles and blacke at the points. All these bristles haue this qualitie, that entring into the flesh, bee it neuer so little, of it selfe it pierceth through the flesh. And for this cause these bristles doe serue the Indians for an instrument to bore the eares, for putting neuer so little in them in one night it pierceth them through. There be other smaller like Vrchins or Hedge-hogs, they haue also bristles, but they cast them not, all these beasts are of a good flesh and taste.

Hirara or Ciuet Cats.

The Hirara is like the Ciuet Cat, though some say it is not; they are of many colours, viz. grey, blacke, and white, they eate nothing but hunnie, and in this they are so terrible, that bee the hole of the Bee-hiue neuer so little they make it so bigge that they may goe in, and when they finde the Hunnie they neuer eate it, till they haue called the rest of the young ones, and and then the old one going in, he doth nothing but bring out the Hunnie, and giue it to the yong ones, a thing of great admiration, and an example of great charitie for men, and that this is so the men of the Countrie doe affirme.

Aquiqui, Apes or Monkies. Ape-king.

The Aquiqui are very great Apes, as bigge as a good Dog, blacke, and very ougly, as well the male as the female; they haue a great beard onely in the lower chap: of these come sometimes a male one so yellow that it draweth toward red, which they say is their King. This hath a white face, and the beard from eare to eare, as cut with the Scissers, and it hath one thing much to be noted, namely, that he goeth into a tree, and maketh so great a noise that it is heard very farre off, in the which he continueth a great while without ceasing, and for this, this kind hath a particular instrument: and the instrument is a certaine hollow thing, as it were made of Parchment, very strong, and so smooth, that it serueth to burnish withall, as big as a Duckes Egge, and beginneth from the beginning of the gullet, rill very neere the palate of the mouth between both the cheekes, and it is so light that assoone as it is toucht it moueth as the key of a Virginals.

His Page.

And when this Ape is thus crying he fometh much, and one of the little ones that is to remaine in his place doth cleanse many times the fome from his beard.

Many kindes of Monkies.

There are others of many kindes, and in great abundance, they are blacke, grey, and yellow; the Country-men say that some of these, when they shoot at them with an Arrow, catch it in their hand, and turne againe, and throwe it at the man; and when they are hurt they seeke a certaine leafe and chaw it, and thrust it into the wound for to heale them, and because they are alwaies on the trees, and are very swift, when the leape is great, and the little ones cannot passe, one of them lieth acrosse like a bridge, and the rest passe ouer him, the tayle serueth him for a hand; and if any be stricken, with his tayle he holdeth fast the bough whereon he is, and so dieth hanging, and falleth not.

Monkie-tricks.

They haue many other qualities that are seene euery day, as to take a sticke and beate some body that doth them harme; another found a basket of Egges, hung it by the cord about his necke, and going to the top of an house, from thence made many mowes at his master that went to seeke him, and breaking them, did eate them all before him, throwing the shells at his master.

Cuati.

The beast Cuati is grey, and like the Badgers of Portugall, it hath the snout and clawes very long, it climeth the trees like the Monkie: no Snake, on Egge, no Bird doth escape it, nor any thing that it can get. They are made tame in the houses, but no man can abide them, for they deuoure all; they will play with little Cats, and whelpes, they are malicious, pleasant, and are apt for many things.

Other kinds.

There bee other two or three greater kindes, as great Dogges, and haue tushes like the wilde Boares of Portugall; these deuoure beasts and men, and when they finde their prey, they compasse it about, some in one place, some in another, till they deuoure it.

Wilde Cats.

Of wilde Cats are many kindes, some blacke, some white, some of a Safran colour, and are very faire for any furre. These Cats are very terrible, and swift; they liue by prey and by birds, and they assault also the men; some of them are as big as Dogs.

Iagoaracu.

The Iagoaracu are the Dogs of Brasil, they are of a grey colour mingled with white, very swift, swift, and when they yelpe they are like Dogs; they haue the tayle very hairy, feed on fruits, and vpon prey, and bite terribly.

The Tapati are like the Conies of Portugall, and here they doe barke like Dogs, especially by night, and very often; the Indians hold this barking for an euill signe; they breed three or foure at once; they are very rare, for they haue many aduersaries, as birds of rapine, and other beasts that doe eate them. Tapati.

The Iaguacini are big as the Foxes of Portugall, and haue the same colour of a Foxe, they feed onely vpon the Sea-crabs, and among the Sugar-canes, and destroy many of them; they are very sleepie, for they kill them sleeping, they doe no hurt. Iaguacini.

The Biarataca is of the bignesse of a Cat, like a Ferret; it hath a white stroake and a grey along the backe, like a crosse, very well made; it feeds vpon birds and their egges, and vpon other things, especially vpon Ambar, and loueth it so well, that all the night he goeth by the Sea-side to seeke it, and where there is any, hee is the first. It is greatly feared, not because it hath any teeth, or any other defensiue thing, but it hath a certaine ventositie so strong, and so euill of sent, that it doth penetrate the wood, the stones, and all that it encountereth withall, and it is such, that some Indians haue died with the stench. And the Dog that commeth neere it escapeth not: and this smell lasteth fifteene, twentie, or more dayes; and it is such, that if it light neere some Towne, it is presently dis-inhabited. And that they may not bee perceiued, they scrape a hole in the ground, and there within they voide that ventositie, and couer it with earth; and when they are found, that they may not bee taken, their defense is to cast out that stench. Biarataca. Stinking beast.

The Prigwica (which they call) of Brasil, is worth the seeing; it is like a shag-haire Dog, or a Land-spaniell, they are very ougly, and the face is like a womans euill dresst, his fore and hinder feet are long, hee hath great clawes and cruell, they goe with the breast on the earth, and their young fast to their bellie. Though yee strike it neuer so fast, it goeth so leasurely, that it hath need of a long time to get vp into a tree, and so they are easily taken; their food is certaine fig-tree leaues, and therefore they cannot bee brought to Portugall, for as soone as they want them they die presently. Prigwica, or Lazinesse. Simple food.

In these parts are a great multitude of Rats, and of them are some ten or twelue kindes, some blacke, others yellow, others dunne, all are eaten, and are very sauourie, especially some great ones that are like Conies, and sometimes they are so many, that lighting vpon a sowne field, they vtterly destroy it. Twelue kinds of Rats.

Of Land-Snakes and Serpents.

THe Giboya is a Snake of the greatest that are in this Countrie, and there are some found of twentie foot in length, they are very faire, but more wonderfull they are in swallowing a whole Deere; they haue no poison, neither are their teeth great according to the bodie. To take their prey whereon they feed, they vse this sleight. It layeth it selfe along by the high-wayes, and when the prey passeth it leapeth vpon it, and windes it selfe in such order, and crusheth it so, that it breaketh all his bones, and afterward licketh it, and his licking hath such vertue, that it bruiseth or suppleth it all, and then it swallowes it vp whole. Of the Snakes that are on the land, and haue no poison. Giboya.

There are others, called Guirauapiaguara, that is, Eaters of birds Egges, it is very blacke, long, and hath a yellow breast: they goe on the tops of trees as it were swimming in the water, and no man can runne so fast on the ground as they on the trees; these destroy the birds, and their egges also. Egge-eaters.

There are others very bigge and long, called Canindna, they are all greene, and of a notable beautie. These also doe eate egges and buds, and kill little chickens. Canindna.

There is another, called Boytiapua, that is, a Snake that hath a long snout, it is very slender, and long, and feeds onely vpon Frogs. The Indians obserue sooth-saying with this, that when the woman hath no children, they take this Snake and strike her with it on the hips, and say she shall presently haue children. Long-snout.

There is another, called Gaitiopia, they are found only in the Rama, it is of a notable bignesse, he smelleth so much, like a Foxe, whersoeuer he goeth, that there is none can abide it. Gaitiopia.

There is another, called Boyuna, that is, a blacke Snake, it is very long and slender, it smelleth also very much like a Foxe. Boyuna.

There is another, called Boin, because that when it goeth, it crieth boin, boin, it is also very great, and doth no hurt.

There is another, called Boicupecanga, that is, a Snake that hath prickles in his backe, they are very great, and grosse, the prickles are very venomous, and all men doe auoide and keepe themselues from them.

Iararaca is a name that comprehendeth foure kindes of very venomous Snakes. The first is greatest, called Iararacucu, that is, great Iararaca, and they are of ten spannes long, they haue great tushes hidden in the mouth along their gummes, and when they bite they stretch them like Snakes that haue poison. Iararaca.

like a finger of the hand: they haue their poiſon in their gummes, their teeth crooked, and a ſtroake vpon them whereby the poiſon runneth. Others ſay, they haue it within the tooth, which is hollow within, it hath ſo vehement a poiſon, that in foure and twentie houres, and leſſe, it killeth a man: the poiſon is very yellow, like Saffran water, they bring foorth many young ones at once, one hath beene taken with thirteene in her bellie.

There are others, called Iararcoaypitinga, that is, that hath the point of the tayle more white then grey: theſe are as venomous as Vipers of Spaine, and haue the ſame colour and faſhion.

There are others, called Iararaepeba, moſt venomous; it hath a red chaine along the backe, and the breaſts, and the reſt of the bodie is all grey.

There are other ſmaller Iararacas, that the greateſt is about halfe a yard long, they are of an earthie colour, they haue certaine veines in their head like the Vipers, and they make ſuch a noiſe as they doe.

Curucucu. The Curucucu is a Snake very hideous and fearefull, and ſome are of fifteene ſpannes long: when the Indians doe kill them they burie preſently the head, becauſe it hath great ſtore of poiſon: for to catch the prey and the people, it lieth cloſe to a tree, and when it ſeeth the prey, it caſts it ſelfe vpon it, and ſo killeth it.

Boycininga. The Boycininga is a Snake, called of the Bell, it is of a great poiſon, but it maketh ſuch a noiſe with a Bell it hath in his taile, that it catcheth very few; though it be ſo ſwift, that they call it, the flying Snake, his length is twelue or thirteene ſpannes long. There is another, called Bociningpeba: this alſo hath a Bell, but ſmaller, it is blacke, and very venomous.

Ibiracua. The poiſon of the Ibiracua Snake is ſo vehement, that if it biteth any perſon, preſently it makes him to voide bloud through all the paſſages of his bodie, to wit, the eies, noſtrils, mouth, eares, and all open places elſe of his bodie; it runneth a great while, and if he be not holpen, he empties his bloud and dieth.

Ibiboboca. The Snake Ibiboboca is very faire, it hath the head red, white and blacke, and ſo all the bodie is ſpotted of theſe three colours; this is the moſt venomous of all, it goeth ſlowly, and liueth in the crannies of the earth, and by another name it is called, the Snake of the colours.

Store and ſore. The great vehemencie that theſe venomous Snakes aboue ſaid haue, the great paines they cauſe, and the many perſons that euery day doe die of their ſtinging cannot be expreſt: and they are ſo many in number, that not onely the fields and the woods, but euen the houſes are full of them, and they are found in the beds, and within the bootes, when they put them on. The Brethren going to their reſt doe finde them there wound about the benches feet, and if they be not holpen when they ſting, cutting the wound, letting him bloud, drinking Vnicornes horne, or Carima, or the water of the Snakes-wood, or ſome other effectuall remedie, in foure and twentie houres and leſſe he dieth, with great crying and paines, and they are ſo exceſſiue, that when any perſon is bitten preſently he demandeth confeſſion, and maketh account to die, and ſo diſpoſeth of his goods.

Carima, a drug ſo called.

Musk-ſnake. There are other Snakes, chiefely theſe Iararacas, that haue a great ſmell of Muske, and whereſoeuer they bee, they are deſcried by the good and fragrant ſmell they haue.

Scorpions. There are many Scorpions, that euery day are found in their beds, among the bookes, and about the chambers, ordinarily they kill not, bnt in foure and twentie houres they cauſe intolerable paines.

Poiſonous Region. It ſeemeth that this climate doth flowe in poiſon, as well for the many Snakes there are, as for the multitude of Scorpions, Spiders, and other vncleane creatures, and the Lizards are ſo many, that they couer the walls of the houſe, and the holes are full of them.

Of the Fowles that are in the Land, and are thereon ſuſtained.

EVen as this climate doth flowe in poiſon, ſo it ſeemeth to create beautifulneſſe in the birds, and as all the Countrie is full of Groues and Woods, ſo it is full of moſt beautifull birds of all colours.

Parots. The Parots in this Countrie are infinite, more then Dawes, or Starlings, or Thruſhes, or Sparrowes of Spaine, and ſo they make a cackling as the birds aboue-ſaid; they deſtroy them by thouſands, they flie in flockes alwaies, and they are ſo many, that there be Ilands where there is nothing but Parots; they are eaten, and are very good meate; they are ordinarily very faire, and of many and ſundrie colours and kindes, and they almoſt all ſpeake if they be taught.

Varietie of Parots. The Arara. The Arara Parots are thoſe that by another name are called Macaos; it is a great bird, and are very rare, and by the ſea-coaſt they are not found, it is a faire bird in colours; their breaſts are red as ſcarlet; from the middle of the bodie to the taile ſome are yellow, others greene, others blue, and through all the bodie they haue ſcattering, ſome greene, ſome yellow and blue feathers, and ordinarily euery feather hath three or foure colours, and the taile is very long. Theſe lay but two egges, they breed in the trunkes of trees, and in the rockes of ſtone. The Indians eſteeme them very much, and of their feathers they make their fine things, and their hangings for their ſwords, it is a very pleaſant bird, they become very tame, and domeſticall, and ſpeake very well if they be taught.

The Anapuru Parot is most faire; in it all colours are found with great perfection, to wit, red, greene, yellow, blacke, blue, grey, the colour of the Bulfinch, and of all these colours it hath the bodie bespeckled and spotted. These also doe speake, and they haue another aduantage, that is, they breed in the house, and hatch their young ones, wherefore they are of great esteeme. Anapuru.

The Araruna or Machao is very faire, it is all blacke, and this blacke sprinkled with greene, which giueth it a great beautie, and when the Sunne shineth on him he is so shining that it is very pleasant to behold; it hath the feet yellow, and the beake and the eies red; they are of great esteeme for their beautie, for they are very rare, and breed not but very faire within the Land, and of their feathers the Indians make their Diademes and Pictures. Araruna.

The Parots Aiurucuro are most beautifull, they are all greene, they haue a cap and a collar of yellow, very faire, and ouer the beake a few feathers of a very cleare blue, which doe beautifie him very much, it hath pinions of the wings red, and the taile feathers red and yellow, sprinkled with greene. Aiurucuro.

The Tuins are a kinde of Parot very small, of the bignesse of a Sparrow, they are greene, sprinkled with other diuers colours, they are much esteemed, as well for their beautie, as because they prattle much, and well, and are very tame. They are so small, that they skip euery where on a man, on his hands, his breast, his shoulders and his head; and with his bill hee will cleanse ones teeth, and will take the meate out of the mouth of him that brings them vp, and make many gambols; they are alwaies speaking or singing after their owne fashion. Tuin.

The Parots Guiraiuba, or Yellow birds, neither speake nor play, but are sullen and sad; they are much esteemed, because they are brought from two hundred and three hundred leagues, and are not found but in great mens houses, and they hold them in such esteeme, that they giue the ransome and value of two persons for one of them, and they esteeme them as much as the Iapanas doe the Treuets and the Pots, or any other great man esteemeth any thing of great price, as a Faulcon, Gerfaulcon, &c. Guiraiuba.

The Tapu is of the bignesse of a Pie-annet, the bodie of a fine blacke, and the taile of a very fine yellow, it hath three tufts on the head that are like little hornes, when hee raiseth them: the eies are blue, the neb very yellow. It is a very faire bird, and hath a very strong smell when it is angrie. They are very carefull in seeking their food, there escapeth not a Spider, Beetle, or Cricket, &c. they are very cleanly in a house, and goe about like Pie-annets, they leaue nothing vnsought. It is dangerous holding them in the hand, for they runne presently to the eies, and pull them out. Tapu. Dangerous to the eyes.

Of the small birds called Guaimimbiques, there are sundrie kindes, as Guaracig a, that is, Fruit of the Sunne; by another name, Guaracig oba, that is, Couering of the Sunne; or Guaracig aba, that is, The haire of the Sunne; in the Antillas they call it the risen or awaken bird, and they say it sleepeth sixe moneths, and liueth other sixe moneths. It is the finest bird that can bee imagined; it hath a cap on his head, to which no proper colour can be giuen, for on whatsoeuer side yee looke on it, it sheweth red, greene, blacke, and more colours, all very fine, and shining; and the breast is so faire, that on whatsoeuer side yee take it, it sheweth all the colours, especially a yellow more finer then gold. The bodie is grey; it hath a very long bill, and the tongue twice the length of the bill; they are very swift in flight, and in their flight they make a noise like the Bee, and they rather seeme Bees in their swiftnesse then birds, for they alwaies feed flying without sitting on a tree, euen as the Bees doe flie sucking the Hunnie from the flowers. They haue two beginnings of their generation, some are hatched of egges like other birds, others of little bubbles, and it is a thing to bee noted, a little bubble to beginne to conuert it selfe into this little bird, for at one instant it is a bubble and a bird, and so it conuerts it selfe into this most faire bird, a wonderfull thing, and vnknowne to the Philosophers, seeing one liuing creature without corruption is conuerted into another. The Guaimimbiques: others call it the Tominejot. Generation. Note for Philosophers.

The bird Guiraube eng eta is of the bignesse of a Gold-finch; it hath the backe and wings blue, and the breast and bellie of a most fine yellow. It hath a yellow Diademe on his head that beautifies him very much. It is a very excellent bird for the Cage, it speaketh many waies resembling many birds, making many changes, and changing his speech a thousand waies. They continue long in their song, and are of esteeme, and of these for the Cage there bee many, and faire, and of diuers and sundrie colours. Guiraube eng eta.

The Tangara is of the bignesse of a Sparrow, all blacke, the head is of a verie fine Orange-tawnie, it singeth not, but it hath a wonderfull thing, for it hath fits like the Falling sickenesse, and for this cause the Indians doe not eate them, for the auoiding of that disease, they haue a kinde of very pleasant dancing, and it is, that one of them makes himselfe as dead, and the other compasse him about skipping with a song of a strange crying that is heard verie farre, and when they end this feast, crying, and dancing, he that was as dead riseth, and maketh a great noise and crying, and then all goe away, and end their feast. They are so earnest when they doe it, that although they be seene and shot at, they flie not away. Of these there bee many kindes, and all of them haue accidents. Tangara. Dance.

The bird Quereima, is of the most esteemed of the Land, not for the song, but for the beautie of Quereima.

of the feathers; they are a cleare azure in part, and a darke, all the breaſt is moſt fine red, the wings almoſt blacke; they are ſo eſteemed, that the Indians doe flea them, and giue two or three perſons for the skinnes of them, and with the feathers they make their Pictures, Diademes, and other fine things.

Tucana. The Tucana is of the bigneſſe of a Pie, it is all blacke except the breaſt, which is all yellow, with a round red circle; the bill is a large ſpanne long, verie great, yellow, and within is red; ſo ſmooth and ſhining, that it ſeemeth to bee varniſhed; they are made tame, and breede in the houſes, are good to eate, and the feathers are eſteemed becauſe they are faire.

Guirapanga. The Guirapanga is white, and not being very big it crieth ſo loude that it ſounds like a Bell, and it is heard halfe a league, and their ſinging is like the ringing of Bells.

Macucagua. The Macucagua is greater then any Henne of Portugall, it reſembleth the Feaſant, and ſo the Portugals doe call it; it hath theee skinnes one ouer another, and much fleſh, and, and verie ſauorie, they lay twice a yeere, and at euerie time thirteene or fifteene egges, they goe alwaies on the ground, but when they ſee any people they flie to the trees, and at night when they goe to rouſt as Hennes doe. When they ſit on the trees, they put not their feet on the boughs, but the ſhankes of their legs, and moſt on the fore part. There bee many kindes of theſe, and they are eaſily ſhot at.

Among them there is one of the ſmalleſt, that hath many properties; when it ſingeth it foreſheweth raine, it crieth ſo loude, that it is incredible of ſo ſmall a bird, and the reaſon is, becauſe the gullet is verie great. It beginneth at the mouth and commeth out at the breaſt betweene the skinne and the fleſh, and reacheth to the fundament, and returneth againe and entreth into the crop, and then it proceedeth as other birds, and doubleth like a Trumpet with his turnings. They runne after any bodie pecking him and playing like a little whelpe, if they ſet it vpon Hennes egges, it ſitteth ouer them, and bringeth vp the young chickens, and if it ſee a Hen with chickens, it ſo perſecutes her, till it takes them from her and broodes them, and brings them vp.

Mutu. The Hen Mutu is very domeſticall, it hath a combe like the Cockes, ſpotted with white and Vtu. In this Countrie there are many kindes of Partridges, which though they are not like in all things to thoſe of Spaine, yet are they very like in colour, taſte, and in the aboundance.

Turtles innumerable. In this Countrie are many kindes of Turtle-doues, Stares, and Black-birds, and Pigeons of many ſorts, and all theſe birds are like to them of Portugall; and the Pigeons and Turtle-doues are in ſuch abundance, that in certaine fields farre within the Land they are ſo many, that when they riſe they hinder the light of the Sunne, and make a noiſe like a thunder; they lay ſo many egges, and ſo white, that a very farre off yee may ſee the fields white with egges, as if it were ſnowe; and ſeruing the Indians for meate as they doe, they cannot be diminiſhed; rather from thence at certaine times it ſeemeth they runne ouer all the parts of this Prouince.

Oſtriches. In this Countrie are many Oſtriches, called Andugoacu, but they keep only within the Land.

Anima. The Anima is a fowle of rapine, great, and crieth that it is heard halfe a league and more, it
Horne medicinable. is all blacke, hath faire eies, the beake bigger then a Cocks, vpon this beake it hath a little horne of a ſpanne in length, the men of the Countrie ſay that this Horne is very medicinable for thoſe that are taken in their ſpeech, as hath beene proued, hanging it about the necke of a girle that did not ſpeake, which ſpake preſently.

There be many other fowles of rapine, to wit, Eagles, Faulcons, Goſ-hawkes, Merlines, and Tarſels, and many other, but they are all ordinarily ſo wilde, that they will flie at any thing, neither will they come to hand, or ſtoope to lure.

§. V.

Of the Braſilian Trees for fruit, medicine, and other vſes; and their Herbes of rare operations.

Acaiu, a kinde of Cheſnut. THe Trees Acaiu, are very great and faire, they caſt the leafe at their times, and the flower groweth in the ſnags, which makes certaine points like fingers, and in the ſaid points there groweth a red flower of a good ſmell, and after it groweth a Cheſnut, and from the Cheſnut commeth an Apple as big as a great Apple, or a Pippin, it is a very faire fruit, and ſome are yellow, others red, and it is all iuyce. They are good for hot weather, they coole

The Cheſnut is as good or better then thoſe of Portugall, they are eaten roſted, and raw laid in water as blancht Almonds, and of them they make Marchpanes, and ſweet meates as of Almonds. The timber of this tree is little worth, enen for the fire, it yeeldeth of it ſelfe a certain gumme good to paint and write, and there is great ſtore. With the barke they dye their yarne, and the vessels that serues them for Pots. This being stamped and boyled with some Copper, till the third part of the water be consumed, is a soueraigne remedy for old sores, and they heale quickly. There bee so many of these trees as of Chesnuts in Portugall, they growe about these Woods, and they gather many quarters of these Chesnuts, and the fruit in their season satisfie all men. Of these Acaius doe the Indians make Wine.

There is great abundance of the trees Mangaba, especially in the Bay, for in other places they are rare, in making they are like the barke of Anafega, and in the leafe with those of Frexo, they are very pleasant trees, and haue alwaies greene leaues. They yeeld fruit twice a yeere, the first in a knob, for then they doe not flower, but the very knob is the fruit; this season ended, which lasteth two or three moneths, it giueth another bearing, first the flower, which is altogether like the Iesamine, and of as good a smell, but more quicke; the fruit is as big as an Apricock, yellow and spotted with some spots of blacke; within it hath some kernels, but all is eaten, or sucked as the Seruices of Portugall. They are of a very good taste, and healthfull, and so light that eate they neuer so many, it seemes they eate no fruit at all. They ripen not on the tree, but fall to the ground, and from thence they gather them already ripe, or gathering them greene they lay them to ripen. The Indians make Wine of them. The tree and the fruit it selfe being greene, is full of white Milke, and cleaueth to the hands, and is bitter. Mangaba. Or Musk-r...

The fruit Muruciuge groweth on certaine trees, very high and like the wilde Peare-trees of Portugall. It hath a very long stalke, they are gathered greene, and are layd to ripen, and being ripe they are very pleasant and of an easie digestion. When they are to gather them, they cut downe the tree, because they are very high, and if this destruction were not, there would bee more abundance, but therefore they are rare, the trunke hath great abundance of white Milke, and it congealeth, it may serue for Sealing-waxe if they will vse it. Muruciuge. Ill gathering.

Of the Araca trees are great abundance, of many sorts; the fruit is certaine small Peares, yellow, red, or greene; they are pleasant, vnloathsome, toothsome, because they haue little taste of sowre, they yeeld fruit almost all the yeere. Araca.

This Ombu is a great tree not very high, but well spread; the fruit is like white Plums, yellow and round, and therefore the Portugals doe call it a Plum. It causeth the teeth to fall, and the Indians that doe eate it doe lose them. The rootes of this tree are eaten, and are very pleasant, and more toothsome then the Abalancia, for they are sweeter, and the sweetnesse thereof is like Sugar, they are cold and healthfull, and they are giuen to the sicke of a Feauer, and it serueth for water to them that goe inward to the Land, for they haue no other. Ombu. Fruit causing teeth to fall.

The Iacapucaya is of the greatest and fairest of this Countrie; it beareth a fruit like a Pot, as big as a great Bowle, as thicke as two fingers, with a couer vpon it, and within it is full of certaine Chesnuts like vnto the Myrabolanes; and it seemes they are the same of India, when they are already in season, that couer doth open and the fruit falleth. If any doe eate much of it green, he casteth all the haire he hath on his body; rosted it is a good fruit. They vse the huskes for Cups, and they are lasting; the timber of this tree is very hard, it doth not rotte, they esteeme it for the Axel-trees of the Sugar-mills. Iacapucaya. Haire-fal fruit. Grace.

Aratien, is a tree of the bignesse of an Orange tree and greater, the leafe is like a Citron tree or a Lymond tree, it is a faire and pleasant tree, it beareth a fruit as bigge as Pine apples; and they haue a good smell, and a reasonable taste, it is a fruit that loatheth not. Aratien.

Of these Trees are many kindes, and one of them called Aratien panania. If they eate much of the fruit it proueth a cold poison, and doth much hurt. Of the rootes of these trees they make booyes for the Nets, and they are so light as any Corkes.

There be two sorts of Pequea, one of them beares a fruit as big as a good Orange, and so they haue the rinde thicke like an Orange; within this rinde there is nothing but Hunnie so cleare and sweet as any Sugar, in quantitie of an egge, and mingled with it, it hath the pippems or kernels. Pequea.

The other Pequea is timber, of the heauiest of this Countrie, in Portugall it is called Setim, it hath very fine wanes, it lasteth long and doth not rotte.

On the tree Iabaticaba groweth a fruit of the bignesse of a Lymond of Sytill, the rinde and taste is like a sowrish Grape, from the roote of the tree through all the body vnto the vtmost bough or sprig, is a rare fruit, it is onely found within the Land in the Captainship of S. Vincent. The Indians doe make of this fruit a kinde of Wine, and they boyle it like the wine of Grapes. Iabaticaba.

In this Brasill are many Coco-nuts, excellent like those of India; these are ordinarily set, and growe not in the Woods, but in Gardens, and in their Farmes. And there are more then twentie kindes of Palme trees, and almost all doe beare fruit, but not so good as the Cocos: with some of these Palme trees they couer their houses. Cocos. 20. kinds of Palmes.

Besides these Fruit-trees there are many other that yeeld sundry fruits, whereof they make profit, and many Nations of the Indians sustaine themselues, together with the Hunnie, whereof there is great abundance, and with their hunting, for they haue no other sustenance.

In the maine of the Captainship of Saint Vincent vnto Paraguay, are many and great Woods of Pine trees, euen like vnto them of Portugall, which beare Apples and kernels; the Apples are The Pine tree.

not so long but rounder and greater, the kernels are greater and are not so hot, but of a good temperature and wholsome.

Of the Trees that serue for medicines.

Cahueriba. Port Engaddi. A medicine for wounds.

Cahueriba is very great and esteemed for the Balme that it hath; to get this Balme they prick the barke of the tree, and lay a little Cotton woolt to the cuts, and from certaine to certaine dayes they goe to gather the Oyle that it hath distilled. The Portugals call it Balme, because it is very like to the true Balme of the Vineyards of Engedi, it serueth for greene wounds, and taketh away all the scarre: it smelleth very well, and of it, and of the barke of the tree they make Beades, and other smelling things. The Woods where they growe doe smell well, and the beasts doe goe and rubbe on this tree, it seemeth to bee to heale them of some diseases. The Timber is of the best of this Countrie, because it is very strong and heauy, and some are of such bignesse, that of them they make the Beames, Axel-trees, and Skrues or Vices for their Sugar-Mills, these are very rare, and are found chiefly in the Captainship of the Holy Ghost.

Cupayba. For wounds.

Cupayba is a Fig-tree, commonly very high, straite and big, it hath much oile within; for to get it they cut the tree in the middest, where it hath the vent, and there it hath this oile in so great abundance, that some of them doe yeeld a quarterne of oile and more, it is very cleare, of the colour of oile, it is much set by for wounds, and taketh away all the skarre. It serueth also for lights, and burne well, the beasts knowing the vertue thereof doe come and rubbe themselues thereat. There are great store, the wood is good for nothing.

Ambayba. For wounds.

The Ambayba Fig-trees are not very great, and are not found in the true Woods but in Coppices, where some sowing hath beene; the barke of this tree scraping it on the inside, and crushing those scrapings in the wound, laying them on it, and binding it with the barke it selfe, healeth in a short time. There is great abundance of them, and are much esteemed for their great vertue, the leaues are rough, and serue to smooth any wood, the timber serueth for nothing.

Ambaygtinga. For the Collicke.

The Fig-tree which they call of Hell, Ambaigtinga, is found in Taperus: it yeelds a certaine Oyle that serueth for lights, it hath great vertue, as Monardes writeth, and the leaues are much esteemed for them that doe vomit, and cannot retayne that which they eate, anointing the stomacke with the Oyle, it taketh away the Oppilations, and the Collicke. To get this Oyle, they lay it in the Sunne some dayes, and stampe it, and seethe it, and presently that Oyle commeth on the top, which is gathered for the effect aboue-said.

Igbacamuci. For the bloudy Fluxe.

Of the trees Igbacamuci there are many in Saint Vincent: they beare a certaine fruit as good as Quinces, fashioned like a Panne or a Pot, they haue within certaine small seeds, they are the onely remedie for the bloudy Fluxe.

Igcigea. For cold diseases.

The Igcigea yeeldeth the Masticke, smelleth very much for a good while: they notch the tree in some places, and in an instant it stilleth a white liquor that doth congeale; it serueth for Plaisters in cold diseases, and to perfume, it serueth also in stead of incense.

Gumme Anime.

There is another tree of this kinde, called Igtaigcica, that is, Masticke as hard as stone, and so it seemeth rather Gumme-anime then Masticke, and it is so hard and shining that it seemeth Glasse; it serueth to glase the earthen vessell, and for this it is much esteemed among the Indians, and it serueth also for cold diseases.

There is a Riuer betweene Port Secure and the Illes, that commeth from more then three hundred leagues within the Mayne, it bringeth great store of Rozen, which is the Gumme-anime it selfe, which the Indians doe call Igtaigcica, and the Portugals, White incense; it hath the same effects that the Incense.

Curupicaiba. For wounds, and for the Poxe.

Curupicaiba is like to the Peach-trees of Portugall in the leafe: the leaues doe distill a kinde of liquor like the Fig-trees of Spaine, which is the onely remedie for wounds both greene and old, and for the Poxe, and it taketh away all the scarre from the wounds, if they pricke the barke of it, it yeeldeth great store of Bird-lime, wherewith they catch the small birds.

Cauroba. For the Poxe.

There is great abundance of the trees Cauroba, the leaues of these chewed and layd to the Pock-sore dryse and heale it in such manner, that it neuer commeth againe, and it seemeth that the wood hath the same effect that the China wood, and that of the Antilles haue for the same disease. Of the flower they make a Conserue for those that are sicke of the Poxe.

Cauroboacaroandiba. For loosenesse and the Poxe.

The wood Cauroboacaroandiba is like that of China, it is taken in the same manner that the other, and it healeth the loosenesse, the Poxe, and other diseases of cold, it is grey, and hath the pith very hard as the wood of China.

Iaburandiba. For the sicknesse of the Liuer.

It is long since Iaburandiba was found, and it is, as some Indians doe say, called of the Indians Betele. The Riuers and their borders are full of these trees, the leaues are the onely remedie for the sicknesses of the Liuer, and many in this Brasil haue already beene cured of most grieuous diseases of the Liuer, with the eating of them.

For the Tooth ake.

There is another tree called also Betele, it is smaller and of a round leafe, the roots of it are an excellent remedy for the tooth-ake, putting it in the hollow place of them, it biteth like Ginger.

Cassia fistula. Of the Oyles the Indians doe vse to anoint themselues withall.

They say also, that in this Brasil is the tree of the Cassia fistula, it is vnknowne to the Indians, the Spaniards doe vse it, and say it is as good as that of India.

The Anda trees are faire and great, and the wood serueth for all things, of the fruit they make an Oyle, wherewith the Indians doe anoint themselues, and the women their haire; and it serueth ueth also for wounds, and drieth them vp presently, and they make many gallant things about the legs and body, painting themselues with this Oyle.

The Moxerequigba tree is found within the Maine, in the fields, it is small, beareth a fruit as big as an Orange, and within it hath certaine kernels, and of it altogether they make an Oyle to anoint themselues, the barke serueth to kill fish, and euery beast that drinketh the water where it is cast, dieth. Moxerequigba.

The Aimratubira is small, beareth a red fruit, and of it they make a red oile to anoint themselues. Aimratubira.

The Aiabutipita is fiue or sixe spannes in length, the fruit is like Almonds and blacke, and so is the Oyle, which they esteeme very much, and anoint themselues with it in their infirmities. Aiabutipita.

The Iaripaba tree is very faire, of a pleasant greene; euery moneth it changeth the leafe, and is like a Wal-nut leafe, the trees are great, and the timber pleasant to worke; the fruit is like great Oranges, and is like Quinces, or russet Peares; the taste is like Quinces: it is a good medicine for the Laske of all sorts. Of this fruit is made a blacke Inke; when it is made it is white, and anointing themselues therewith it stayneth not presently, but within a few houres the partie remayneth as blacke as any leat. It is much esteemed of the Indians, with this they make on their bodies round Hose and Doublets all cut, and they giue certaine strokes in the face, eares, nose, chinne, armes, legs, and the same doe the women, and they become very gallant. This is their apparell, as well on the weeke as on the Feast day, adding some feathers to it, wherewith thee adorne themselues, and other Iewels made of bone: this colour lasteth on the body nine dayes still blacke, and after remayneth nothing; it maketh the skinne very hard, and to make the painting the fruit is to be gathered greene, for being ripe it will not doe it. Iaripaba. For the Laske.

The tree Iequitimguaçu beareth a fruit like the Spanish Strawberie, and within it hath a beane as hard as a sticke, which is the seed; they are of the best Beades that can be, for they are very equall, and very blacke, and they haue a glosse like Ieat, the huske that couereth these Beades, is more bitter then Aloes, it serueth for Sope, and it washeth better then the best Sope in Portugal. Iequitimguaçu. Beades and Sope.

A certaine tree groweth in the fields and the Mayne of the Bay, in dry places where no water is, very great and broad; it hath certaine holes in the branches, as long as an arme, that are full of water, that in Winter nor Summer neuer runneth ouer, neither is it knowne whence this water commeth, and drinke many or drinke few of it, it is alwaies at the same stay, and so it serueth not onely for a Fountaine, but also for a great maine Riuer: and it happeneth fiue hundred persons to come to the foot of it, and there is harbour for them all, they drinke and wash all that they will, and they neuer want water; it is very sauoury and cleare, and a great remedie for them that trauell into the Mayne, when they can finde no other water. Of the tree that hath water. Note, Compare this with those mentioned by A. Bath in Congo.

In this Countrie of Brasill are Groues, wherein are found trees of great bigneſse and length, whereof they make very great Canoas, of seuen or eight spannes broad in hollowneſse, and of fiftie spannes and more in length, which beare a load like a great Barke, and doe carrie twentie or thirtie Rowers of a side; they make likewise great Beames for the Sugar-mills. There are many sorts of wood incorruptible that putting it in the ground it neuer rotteth, and others set in water are euery day greener and stronger. There is a holy wood of certaine white wanes, whereof are made very faire Bed-steads and rich. The Brasill wood whereof the red Inke is made, and other woods of diuers colours, whereof diuers Inkes of great esteeme are made, and all turned and carued workes. There be smelling woods, as the Iararanda, and other kindes of great price and esteeme, there are found white Sandalos or Dates, in great quantitie. The wood of Aquila, and in great abundance, that ships are made of it. Cedars; wood of Angolin, and the Nutmeg tree, though these woods are not so fine, and of so great smell as those of India, yet they want but a little, and are of great price and esteeme. Of the Trees that serue for timber. Cedars and Nutmegs.

Of the Herbes that yeeld fruit, and are eaten.

THe ordinary food of this Country, that serueth for Bread, is called Mandioca, and they are certaine rootes like Carrots, though they are greater and longer: these shoot out certaine stemmes or branches, and growe to the height of fifteene spannes. These branches are very tender, and haue a white pith within, and at euery spanne it hath certaine ioynts, and of this bigneſse they are broken, and set in the ground as much as is sufficient for to hold them vp, and within sixe or nine moneths haue so big rootes that they serue for food. This Mandioca contayneth many kindes in it selfe, and all are eaten, and they are preserued vnder the earth three, foure, or vnto eight yeeres, and needs no seasoning, for they doe no more but take them out and make fresh meate euery day, and the longer they are vnder the earth the bigger they growe, and yeeld the more. Mandioca.

It hath some things worth the noting, that is, man except, all creatures desire to eate it raw, and it fatteneth them, and nourisheth them exceedingly; but if when it is crushed, they doe drinke that water alone by it selfe, they haue no more life then while it commeth to the stomacke. Of these rootes crushed and grated they make a Meale that is eaten, it is also layd in The iuyce is poison.

ſteepe till it corrupt, and then cleanſed and cruſhed, they make alſo a Flowre, and certaine Cakes like children very white and delicate. This roote after it is ſteeped in water, made in balls with the hands, they ſet it vpon hurdles at the ſmoake, where it drieth in ſuch manner that it is kept without corrupting, as long as they liſt, and after ſcraped and ſtamped in certaine great trayes, and ſifted, there remayneth a Flowre whiter then of Wheate, of the which being mingled in a certaine quantitie with the raw, they make a certaine Biſquet, which they call Of the warre, and it ſerueth the Indians and the Portugals by Sea, and when they goe to warre, as Bisket. Another Bisket bread is made of very water of the greene Mandioca, if they let it congeale, and dry it at the Sunne, or at the fire: this is aboue all moſt white, and ſo pleaſant and delicate, that it is not made for euery one. Of this Mandioca dryed at the ſmoake they make many ſorts of broaths, which they call Mingaos, ſo healthfull and delicate that they giue them to them that are ſicke of a Feauer, in ſtead of Caudles and Reſtoratiues, and of the ſame they make Cakes, Simnels, Frutters, little Pyes, Cheeſ-cakes of Sugar, &c. And mingled with the flowre of Millet, or of Rice, they make leauened bread, that it ſeemeth of Wheat. This ſame Mandioca dryed at the ſmoake, is a great remedie againſt poiſon, chiefely of Snakes.

Other kindes. Of this Mandioca there is one which they call Aypim, which contayneth vnder it ſelfe many kindes. This killeth not raw, and boyled or roſted is of a good taſte, and of it they make Flowre or Cakes, &c. The Indians makes Wines of it, and it is ſo freſh and medicinable for the Liuer, that to it is attributed not to haue among them any diſeaſed of the Liuer. A certaine kinde of Tapuyas doe eate the poiſonous Mandioca raw, and it doth them no hurt, becauſe they are brought vp with it.

Nana. The boughs of this herbe or tree, is the ſeed it ſelfe, for the ſtalkes of it are planted, the leaues in time of need boyled doe ſerue for food.

The herbe Nana is very common, it is like the herbe Aloes, and hath ſuch leaues, but not ſo thicke, and all round about full of very ſharpe prickles; in the middeſt of this herbe groweth a fruit like a Pine-apple, all full of flowers of diuers colours, and very faire, and at the foot grow foure or fiue ſprigs, which are planted; the fruit is very ſmelling, pleaſant and one of the beſt of the world, very full of iuyce, and pleaſant, it hath the taſte of a Mellon, though better and more ſmelling, it is good for them that are troubled with the Stone, and it is very preiudiciall for Feauers. The Indians doe make Wine of this fruit, very ſtrong, and of a good taſte, the huske waſteth much the Iron at the dreſſing of it, and the iuyce taketh away the ſpottes from the clothes. There is ſo great abundance of this fruit, that they fat their Hogs with it, and regard it not for the great abundance, they are alſo kept preſerued, and raw they helpe the Sea-ſicke at Sea, and with Wine in the morning they are medicinable.

Pacoba, Adams Tree. Pacoba is the Fig-tree which they call Adams, it is neither tree nor herbe, for on the one ſide it becommeth very bigge, and groweth to twenty quarters long, the ſtalke is very ſoft and full of pores; the leaues that it hath are moſt faire, and ſome a fathome long and more, all of them raced like the Veluet of Braganca, ſo ſmooth that they write on them, and ſo greene, coole, and freſh, that one ſicke of a Feauer lying downe vpon them, the Feauer is mitigated with their cooleneſſe. They are very freſh for to dreſſe the houſes, and the Churches. This herbe beareth in euery foote many impes, and euery one of them beareth a cluſter of a certaine fruit like Figs, which hath ſometimes about two hundred, and when they are ripe, the foote is cut whereon the cluſter hangeth, and the reſt doe growe, and ſo they goe multiplying ad infinitum, the fruit is laid to ripen, and becommeth very yellow, of a good taſte, and healthfull, eſpecially for the ſicke of a Feauer, and for him that ſpitteth bloud, and roſted they are very pleaſant and healthfull. It is an ordinary fruit whereof the Gardens are full, and there is of them all the yeere.

Mururuia. The herbes Mururuia are very faire, eſpecially in their flowers: they runne vpon a wall, and vp the trees like Iuie, the leaues beaten with a little Verdigreaſe, is an onely remedie for old vlcers and the Poxe, it beareth a round fruit like Oranges, other like Egges, ſome yellow, ſome blacke, and of other diuers colours and kindes. Within they haue a certaine ſubſtance of kernels, and iuyce with a certaine filme that couereth them, and altogether is eaten, it is of a good taſte, and it is ſomewhat tart, and it is a fruit of ſome account.

Many other Braſilian plants. In this Country are many other kindes of fruits, as Deaw-berries, blacke and red, Potatoes, and other rootes which they call Mangara, another called Cara, that is like to Turneps, and the ſtones of the earth. Of the Potatoes they make bread, and diuers ſweet meats, theſe Indians haue many other Pulſes, viz. Beanes, more healthfull and better then thoſe of Portugall, and in great abundance, many kindes of Pumpions, and ſome ſo big, that they vſe them for veſſels to carie water, and they hold two peckes or more, French Beanes of many kindes, they are toothſome, and like to them of Portugall, Millet of many ſorts, and of it they make Bread, Wine, and it is eaten toſted, and with it they fatten their Horſes, Swine and Hennes, and there are certaine Taiaobas, that are like Cabiges, and they cauſe to purge. And an herbe called Iambig, the onely remedie for them that are ſicke of the Liuer, and the Stone. There are alſo many ſorts of Pepper, that giue a good taſte in the eating.

Ietigenen. Ietigenen is the Mechoacan of the Antilles, they are certaine rootes, long like Radice, but of a good a good bigneſſe, they ſerue for a purge, this roote is taken beaten in wine or water for the Ague: it is taken preſerued in Sugar like Marmalate, it is boiled with a Henne, cauſeth great thirſt, but is profitable and of great operation. A purge.

Igpecaya, or Pigaya is profitable for the bloudie Fluxe, the ſtalke is a quarter long, and the roots of another, or more, it hath onely foure or fiue leaues, it ſmelleth much whereſoeuer it is, but the ſmell is ſtrong and terrible, this roote beaten, and put in water all night at the deaw, and in the morning if this water with the ſame roote beaten and ſtrained be drunke, onely the water, it cauſeth preſently to purge in ſuch ſort, that the laske ceaſeth altogether. For the bloudy Fluxe.

It is but a little while ſince the herbe Cayapia was found, it is an only remedie for whatſoeuer poiſon, eſpecially of Snakes, and ſo it is called the Snakes herbe, and it is as good a remedie as the Vnicorne and Bada, Bezar ſtone, or Coco of Maldiua; nothing profiteth but the roote, which is ſlender, and in the middeſt maketh a knot like a button, this beaten, and put in water and drunke, it killeth the poiſon of Snakes; It is alſo a great remedie for the wounds with the Arrowes that are poiſoned, when any is hurt he remaineth feareleſſe and ſecure, drinking the water of this roote, it is alſo a great remedie for the Feauer, continuing it and drinking of it ſome mornings, this herbe ſmelleth like the Fig-tree leaues of Spaine. A remedie for poyſon.

The herbe Tyroqui or Tuxeroqui is a principall remedie for the bloudie Fluxe, the roots are all iagged, the branches very ſlender, the leaues are like Baſill; the flowers are red, and draw ſomewhat to a ruddie colour, and they growe in the very points. Of this there is great abundance, when it is gathered it is yellow, and being dried it turneth white, it is taken in the ſame manner that the former. The Indians perfume themſelues with this herbe when they are ſicke, that they may not die, and for a certaine ſickneſſe that is common in the Countrie, and it is called the ſickneſſe of the worme *, it is a great remedie; it ſerueth to kill the worme in the Oxen and Swine, and for Empoſtumes. This herbe is as withered all night, and as aſleepe, and as ſoone as the Sunne riſeth, it openeth againe, and ſhutteth againe when it is ſet. Tyroqui or Tuxeroqui. For the bloudy Fluxe. * Perhaps the worme in the fundament mentioned by Sir R. Haukins.

The herbe Embeguacu ſerueth much for the Fluxe of bloud, eſpecially in women; the roots are very long, and ſome of thirtie or fortie fathome, it hath a ſtrong barke, whereof very ſtrong Cordes are made, and Cables for ſhips, and they are long laſting, for in the water it waxeth greene. This being taken, to wit, the barke of it, and perfuming the partie in the place of the Fluxe, it ceaſeth preſently. Embeguacu. For the Fluxe of bloud.

Caa obetinga is a ſmall herbe, hath few leaues, which it putteth forth euen from the ground, white vnderneath, and greene aboue, beares a flower as big as a haſell Nut; the roots and the leaues ſtamped are an excellent remedie for whatſoeuer wounds, they vſe the leafe alſo vnſtamped, which being laid to the wound cleaueth faſt, and healeth it. Caa obetinga. For wounds.

Cobaura ſerueth for old ſores that haue already no other remedie, it is laid beaten and burnt in the wound, and eateth preſently all the Canker, and bringeth a new skinne, it is alſo laid to, onely the leafe beaten to skinne the place. Cobaura. For wounds.

The Holy herbe ſerueth for diuers diſeaſes, as wounds, and coughs, the rheume, &c. and principally it ſerueth for the ſicke of the head, the ſtomacke, and for the ſhortneſſe of breath, or the Chine-cough. In this Countrie they make certaine Coffines of Palme-tree leaues, and being full of this herbe dried and ſetting it on fire at the one end, they put the other in the mouth and drinke the ſmoake, it is one of the delicates and dainties of this Countrie; and all the Countrymen, and euen the Portugals are euen loſt for it, and it is their great vice, to bee all day and all night laid in their Nets, to drinke this ſmoake, and are drunke with it as if it were with wine. The Holy herbe, or Tobacco. For ſundry diſeaſes.

Guaraquimiya is the Mirtle tree of Portugall, and beſides other good properties that it hath, like the Broome-rape, the ſeed of it is the onely remedie for the Body-wormes, and ordinarily they that eate it doe voide them preſently. For the worms

Camaracatimbae is like to the Syluas of Portugall, it is boyled in water, and the ſaid water is the onely remedy for ſcabbes, the poxe, and new wounds, and when the wounds are cured with the leaues of the Fig-tree ſpoken of in the title of the Trees, they waſh it with the water of this herbe, whoſe flower is moſt faire, it ſeemeth a yellow and red Jelly-flower, and ſmelleth of Muske, and of theſe they make Pot-bough's and Noſe-gayes for the Altars. Camaracatimbae. For ſcabs, and the Poxe.

Aipo is the very Smaledge of Portugall, and hath the vertues, it is found onely about the Sea-coaſt, eſpecially in the Riuer of Iannarie, and for this cauſe it is ſharper, and not ſo ſweet in the taſte as that of Portugall, it may be becauſe of the Seas. Aipo.

There is great ſtore of Meade-mallow in this Countrie, it hath the ſame effects, it hath certaine flowers as big as a Teſter, of a very faire red, that they ſeeme Roſes of Portugall. Meade-Mallow.

Caraguata is a certaine kinde of thiſtle, they beare a certaine frut of a finger long and yellow, raw they make the lips to bliſter, boiled or roſted they doe no harme, but any woman with child that eateth them doth preſently abort her childe ordinarily. There bee other Caraguatas, that beare certaine leaues like Flags very long, of two or three fathoms, and beare a certaine Hartichocke like the Nana, but they taſte not well; theſe leaues laid in ſteepe doe yeeld a very fine Flaxe, vnto the threed to ſowe withall, and for fiſhing lines. Caraguata. It cauſeth to abort.

Timbo are certaine wonderfull herbes, that growe from the earth like a ſtring vnto the high- Timbo. Baite for fiſhes eſt top of the Mulberie trees, where they are, and ſome growe cloſe to the tree like Iuie: they are very ſtrong, and ſerue for bindings, and ſome are as big as a mans leg, and winde them neuer ſo hard they neuer breake, the barke of theſe is very fine poiſon, and ſerueth for a baite to kill the fiſh, and it is ſo ſtrong, that in the Riuers wherein it is caſt it leaueth not a fiſh aliue as farre as it hath his vertue, and of theſe there be many ſorts, and profitable as well for binders, as for to kill fiſhes.

Other herbes there be alſo that ſerue for medicines, as are Sow-thiſtles, Purcelane, Beets, Endiue, Anenca, Baſill, and of all there is great abundance, though theſe herbes haue not the perfection of thoſe of Spaine; there want no wilde Mulberies white and blacke, like thoſe of Portugall, and great ſtore of good Parſley, about the ſtrands, whereof a good conſerue is made; they want no Pot-flowers.

Of ſmelling herbes in this Countrie there are many, Mintes, or wilde Sage, eſpecially in Piratininga, they ſmell not ſo well as thoſe of Portugall, they haue alſo certaine French Mallowes, with certaine faire and pleaſant flowers which ſerue for Noſegaies. Many Lillies there are, not ſo fine nor ſo red as thoſe of the Kingdome, and ſome white ones are alſo found.

Sleeping herb. An herbe ſo called.

There groweth here in the Spring, an herbe that ſleepeth, and is like the Mayes of Portugall, and as that doth wither and ſleepe after Sun-ſet, and when it riſeth it openeth againe, and ſheweth her beautie; the ſmell is ſomewhat ſtrange. There is alſo another tree that ſleepeth in the ſame manner, and beareth certaine fine flowers, but they haue no great ſmell.

Herua viua: See M. Harcourt his Guiana Relations.

The Quicke herbe is of a good height, and hath boughes, and certaine iagged leaues, of a pleaſant greene, it is called Quicke herbe, becauſe it is ſo quicke and ſenſible, that as ſoone as it is touched with the hand or with any other thing, preſently it hangeth the head, and withereth as if they had done it great iniurie, and within a little while it commeth to his perfection, and as many times it is touched it withereth, and commeth againe to himſelfe as before.

Braſilian herbs ſmell not.

Many other herbes there be like Origanum, and many other ſundrie flowers, but it ſeemeth that this Clymate, either for the many waters, or becauſe of the Sunne, infuſeth no ſmell in the herbes, rather it ſeemes to take it away.

Of the Canes.

In this Countrie are many ſorts of Canes, and Tacuara is as big as a mans thigh; others which haue ioynts a fathome long, others whereof they make their Arrowes, and are eſteemed. Others ſo long that they haue three or foure Lances in length, theſe growe among the Woods, and as there are many, ſo there are many and long beds of Canes of many leagues, and as they growe among the trees, they goe to ſeeke the Sunne, and therefore are ſo long.

§. VI.

Of the Fiſhes that ſwimme in the ſalt water: alſo Shel-fiſhes, Trees and Fowles of the Sea: of Riuers and the Creatures which liue therein; and the Beaſts and Plants brought thither out of Portugall.

Oxe-fiſh, Manati.

THe Oxe-fiſh in theſe parts is a Royall fiſh, eſteemed aboue all other fiſhes, very healthfull in eating, and of a good taſte, either ſalted or freſh: And it rather ſeemeth Beefe then Fiſh, and ſome doubts there were, becauſe it was eaten on fiſh dayes; the fleſh is all grained like Beefe, and ſo it is cut in ſlices, and they dreſſe it at the ſmoake like Bacon, or hanged Beefe. In the taſte, if it be eaten or ſodden with Cabidge, or other herbes, it taſteth like Beefe, and dreſt in ſowce it taſteth like Mutton; and roſted, both in ſmell, taſte, and fatneſſe it is like Porke, and hath fat alſo.

The Fiſh in his making ſeemeth a land creature, and chiefly an Oxe, the head is altogether of an Oxe, with skinne and haire, eares, eyes, cheekes and tongue; the eyes are exceeding ſmall for the bodie it hath, he ſhutteth and openeth them when hee liſteth, which other fiſhes doe not; ouer the vents it hath two skinnes wherewith he cloſeth them, and by them he breatheth, and it cannot bee long vnder water without breathing, it hath no more nor other finnes but the taile: which is all round and cloſe; the bodie is of a great bigneſſe, all full of yellow haires, it hath two armes of a cubite long, with two hands like round peeles, and on them he hath fiue fingers all cloſe one to another, and euery finger hath his nayle like a mans nayle. Vnder theſe armes the female haue two paps, wherewith ſhee bringeth vp her young; ſhe beareth but one at once: the inward part and the inwards of this fiſh are like an Oxes, with liuer, and lights, &c. In the head ouer the eyes neere the braines it hath two ſtones of a good bigneſſe, white and heauie, they are of great eſteeme, and are the onely remedie for the Stone: for beaten to powder and drunke in wine or water it cauſeth to void the ſtone, as it happened that giuing it to a perſon to drinke, leauing other many experiences, within one houre hee voided a ſtone as bigge as an Almond, and remained ſound, being before at the point of death. The bones of this fiſh are all maſlie and white like Iuorie. They make of it great store of * Butter, they take two leaues as from a hogge; and the most of the Butter it hath in the taile, which being of a yard or more in length, it melteth all into Butter, it hath a good taste, and for to dresse or frie fish, and for light. It is verie good also for Medicines, as the Hogges Grease, it is white and smelleth well, it hath no smell of fish. This fish is taken with Harping-Irons; it is found in the salt Riuers, neere the fresh water: it feedeth on an herbe that groweth by the borders, and within the Riuers; and where this herbe groweth, and neere the Springs of fresh water, whereof hee onely drinketh. They are verie great, some weigh tenne, others fifteene hundred, and such a fish hath beene taken, that an hundred men could not get it out of the water, but they broke it vp there where it was killed.

* Or Greace, or Oile: so after. Mantega in the Portugall word.

The fish Beijupira is like the Sturgeon of Portugall, and so it is held and esteemed of heere as a royall fish: it is very healthfull, fat, and of a good taste, they bee infinite, and some of their rowes are a span in compasse about: these fishes are taken in the broad Sea, with a hooke and line, it is six or seuen spannes long; the bodie is round, blacke on the backe and the belly white. Beijupira.

The Oxe-eie is like the Tunnyes of Spaine, as well in bignesse as in making, inward as outward; it is verie fat, it hath sometime betweene leafe and leafe courses of fat as thicke as a Portugall [a] Testor; they are cut in backes and bellies like the Tunnyes, and of them is made great store and verie good [e] Butter, it hath leaues like a Hogge, is a fish esteemed and of a good taste, it deserueth well the name of Oxe fish, as well in his beautie, as his bignesse, the eies are properly like an Oxe, and therefore it hath this name. The Oxe eie.

[a] Or foure shillings a piece.

[e] Or Greace.

The fish Camurupi is also a royall fish, and esteemed in these parts, the graine of it all in flakes, enterlarded with fat and grease, and of a good taste, it hath many bones through all the bodie, and is dangerous in eating. It hath a finne on the backe, which it carries alwaies raised vpwards, it is of two or three quarters long, the fish is long of twelue and thirteene quarters in length, and of a good bignesse, and two men haue much adoe to lift vp one of them, they are taken with Harping Irons, there are many of them, and much [f] Oile is made of them. Camurupi.

[f] Or Butter.

This wilde fish, which the Indians call Piraembu, (that is, a fish that snorteth, the reason is, because whersoeuer it is, is heard by his snorting) is of a good bignesse, about eight or nine spannes, it is of a good taste, and esteemed; it hath in the mouth two stones as broad as a hand, exceeding strange, with them they breake the Wilkes whereof they feed, the Indians esteeme the stones and weare them about their neckes as a Iewell. The wilde fish.

There are many other fishes of sundrie kinds, that are not in Spaine, and commonly of a good taste and healthfull. Of the fishes of Portugall in these parts are also many, to wit, a fish called Tainhas, and a great multitude, and it hath beene tried that the Tainha beeing fresh, and laid to the stinging of a Snake is another Vnicorne. There want no Sea-breames, a fish called Chicharros, it is like a Mackerill, Pargos, or great Sea-breames, Sargos, other Sea-breames, Garazes, Dorados) the Needle-fish, Cod-fishes, but these are rare, Pilchards like them of Spaine, are found at sometimes in the Riuer of Ianuarie, and the most parts of the South, Scates, and Rayes; these Rayes some haue in their mouth two bones, and breake with them the Wilkes.

All these fishes are so healthfull that in these parts they are eaten after Milke, after flesh, and all a whole Lent without Oile or Vineger, and it causeth no scabs nor other diseases as in Europe, but rather it is giuen to the sicke, though they haue a Feuer, or be very weake.

Because this Coast is full of many Bayes, Nookes, and Creekes, there came great store of Whales to these Concaues chiefly from May to September, when they spawne and bring vp their young, and also because they come to the great store of fish that at this time there is in this Creekes. They are sometime so many that ye may see fortie or fiftie together, men doe say that they doe cast the Amber that they find in the Sea, and whereof they also feed, and therefore is some of it found in this Coast; others doe say that the Sea it selfe doth cast it on the shoares with great tempests, and commonly it is found after a great storme, and all the beasts doe eate of this Amber, and great diligence is needfull after the tempests that they may not find it eaten. It is very dangerous to saile in small Barkes along this Coast, for besides other dangers, the Whales ouerwhelme many, if they heare any ringing, they are so scared as Horses when they heare the sound of a Drumme, and are as fierce as Lions, many runne vpon the shoare, and great store of Oile is made of them. They haue the head open, and there they breathe, and cast at once great store of water, and scatter it so in the Aire as if it were a great showre. The Whale. Ambergrise.

There is great store of the Sword-fishes, they are great and fierce, for they haue a snowt like a Sword, all full of teeth round about, verie sharpe, and as bigge as Dogges teeth or bigger; they are a mans hand or more, and the length is according to the greatnesse of the fish. Some of these snowts or Swords are of eight or ten spannes long; with these they make a cruell battell with the Whales, for raising it vpward, and striking so many strokes on her, and so fast that it is a wonderfull thing: the Sharkes resort to the bloud, and sucke it in such sort till she dieth, and so many are found dead and cut in pieces. With this snowt also they catch the fishes whereof they feed. The Indians vse these snowts when they are young for to beate their children, and to feare them when they are disobedient vnto them. The Sword fish. Battle with Whales.

In

A Tortoise. In this Coast are many Tortoises; there are many taken, whereof there are coffers, boxes for the hoasts, cups, &c. These Tortoises doe lay their egges in the sands, and they lay 200. or 300. egges at a time, they are as bigge as Hens egges, verie white and round as balles; they hide these egges in the sand, and when the young are hatcht, presently they goe to the water, where they are nourished, the egges also are eaten. They haue this propertie, that though you boile or roast them the white is euer soft, the inwards are like a Hogges, and they haue vents where through they breathe. They haue another particularitie, that when yee turne them on their belly, they turne presently toward the Sea, neither can they liue otherwise. Some of them are so bigge that of their shels they make whole Targets, and one was taken vpon this Coast so bigge, that twentie men could not lift, nor poise it from the ground.

Tuberones, or Sharkes. Vpon this Coast are many sorts of Sharkes, and in it are found sixe or seuen kinds of them; it is a very fierce and cruell fish, and kils many persons, especially those that swimme. The Riuers are full of them; they are so cruell that it happened one to runne after an Indian that went in a Boate, and put him in such a straight, that the young man leaping ashoare, the Sharke leapt after him thinking to haue caught him, and fell on drie land where they killed him. In the broad Sea where also are many, they kill them with Snares, and Harping Irons, and they are so eager, greedie, and loue flesh, and they are so deuouring, that they find in their bellies, skinnes, pieces of cloth, shirts and breeches that fall from the Sailers, they goe ordinarily accompanied with certaine verie faire fishes of diuers colours called Pelgrimes. They make great store of Oile of them, and the Indians vse the teeth in their Arrowes, because they are verie sharpe, cruell, and venemous, and verie seldome, or with great difficultie are they healed that are hurt with them.

Pelgrimes.

The flying fish. The flying fishes are ordinarily of a spanne long or little more, it hath the eies verie faire, of a certaine verie gallant picture, that beautifies it much, and doe seeme precious stones, the head is also very faire, it hath wings like Reere-mice, but of a siluer hue; they are much persecuted of the other fishes, and for to escape they flie in flockes, like Stares, or Sparrowes, but they flie not verie high, they are also good to eat, and when they flie they glad the Sailers, and many times they fall in the ship, and come in at the Cabbin windowes.

Botos and Toninas, are two kinds of Porpoises. Of these fishes there are great abundance, as in Europe.

Soles and Salmonets. A little red fish very daintie in Spaine. They find also in this Coast Salmonets, but they are rare, and not so esteemed, nor of so good a taste as those of Europe. The Soles of these parts are verie rare, they haue this propertie, that when they are to be boiled or fried they beate them, and the more strokes they giue them, the stiffer they are, and the better to eate, and if they beate them not, they are soft and nothing worth.

Of the venemous fishes. As in this Countrie of Brasil are many Snakes, and venemous Wormes, whereof wee will speake hereafter, there are likewise many fishes verie venemous.

Toad fish deadly. The Toad fish, in their Language, Amayacu, is a small fish, a spanne long, painted, it hath faire eies, taking it out of the water it snorteth verie much, and cutteth the hookes, and out of the water it swelleth much, all the poison lies in the skinne, and flaying they eate it: but eating it with the skinne it killeth. It chanced a young man to eate one with the skinne, who died almost suddenly; the Father said, I will eate the fish that killed my Sonne, and eating of it died also presently, it is a great poison for Rats, for those that eate of it doe die presently.

There is another kind of Toad fish of the same fashion that the other, but it hath many cruell prickles, as a Hedge-hogge; it snorteth, and swelleth out of the water; the skinne also killeth, especially the prickles, because they are verie venemous, fleaing it, it is eaten, and it is good for the bloudie Fluxe. There is another Toad fish, called in their tongue, Itaoca, it is three square, and the bodie such, that all of it is like a Dagger; it is faire, it hath the eies bluish, it is eaten fleade; the poison consisteth in the skinne, liuers, guts, and bones, whatsoeuer creature doth eate it, dieth.

Puraque, or Torpedo. See Iobson. Puraque is like the Scate, it hath such vertue that if any touch it, he remaineth shaking as one that hath the Palsie, and touching it with a sticke, or other thing it benummeth presently him that toucheth it, and while he holdeth the sticke ouer him, the arme that holdeth the sticke is benummed, and asleepe; it is taken with flue-nets, and with casting Nets it maketh all the bodie tremble, and benummes it with the paine, but beeing dead it is eaten, and it hath no poison.

Caramuru. The Caramuru are like the Sea Snakes of Portugall, of ten or fifteene spans long, very fat, and roasted taste like Pigge; these haue strange teeth, and many men are maymed by their bytings, and the hand or foot where they were bitten, doe rot away. It hath ouer all the bodie many prickels. The Countrimen say that they engender with the Snakes; for they finde them many times knit with them, and many in the sands carrying for the Sea Snakes.

Amoreatie. Amoreaty is like the Toad fish, it is full of prickels, and thrusts himselfe vnder the sand along the shoare, and prickes the foot or hand vnderneath that toucheth it, and it hath no other remedie but only by fire.

[k] A fish so called Amaya curub is round and of the bignesse of the [k] Bugallos of Spaine, and are very venemous, it hath the bodie full of Wartes, and therefore it is called Curub, that is to say, a Wart in their Language.

Iere-

Ierepomonga, is a Snake that liueth in the Sea; her manner of liuing is to lie very still, and whatsoeuer liuing thing that toucheth it, remaineth so fast sticking to it that in no wise it can stirre, and so he feedeth and sustaines himselfe. Sometimes it commeth out of the Sea, and becommeth very small, and as soone as it is toucht it sticketh fast; and if they goe with the other hand to lose themselues, they remaine also fast by it, and then it becommeth as bigge as a great Cable, and so carrieth the person to the Sea, and eateth it, and because it cleaueth so fast, it is called Terepomong, that is to say, a thing that cleaueth fast. Ierepomonga. Strange Sea Snake.

Finally, there are many kinds of very venomous fishes in the Sea, that haue so vehement a poison, that ordinarily none escapeth that eateth or toucheth them.

The Mermen, or men of the Sea, are called in their language Tpupiapra, the men of the country are so afraid of them, that many of them die only with the thought of them, & none that seeth them scapeth. Some that died already, being demanded the cause, said, that they had seene this Monster, they properly are like men, of a good stature, but their eies are very hollow. The Female are like women, they haue long haire, and are beautiful; these Monsters are found in the bars of the fresh Riuers in Iagoaripe, seuen or eight leagues from the Bay haue many bin found, & in the yeere 82. an Indian going to fish, was chased by one, and fleeing in a Canoa told it to his Master. The Master for to animate the Indian, would needs go see the Monster, & being careless with one hand out of the Canoa, it catcht hold of him, and carried him away, and hee was neuer seene againe, and in the same yeere died an Indian of Franciscus Lorenço Cueyro. In Port Secure are some seene, which haue killed some Indians alreadie, the manner of their killing is to embrace themselues with the person, so strongly, kissing and grasping it hard to it selfe, that they crush it in pieces remaining whole, and when they perceiue it dead, they giue some sighings in shew of sorrow, and letting them goe they runne away, and if they carrie any they eate onely the eies, the nose, the points of the fingers and toes, and priuie members, and so ordinarily they are found on the sands with these things missing. Mermen, or Monsters of the Sea.

The Seas of these parts are very plentifull of Cuttles, this kind of fish hath a hood alwaies full of very blacke Inke: this is their defence from the greater fishes, for when they come to catch them, they cast that Inke before their eies, and the water becommeth very blacke, and then hee goes his waies. They take them with shooting at them, but they baite them first, they are also taken with lights by night. For to eate them they beate them, and the more, the softer they are, and of better taste. Of the Shel-fishes. Cuttle fishes.

Apula is a shel-fish like the joint of a Cane: it is rare, it is eaten, and drinking it fasting in Powder, a souereigne remedie for the Milt or Spleene. Apula.

In these parts are infinite of the Sea-fomes, and are great, as broad as a hat; they haue many foulds wherewith they catch the fish, and resemble the Barberie Purles, they are not eaten; if they sting any one, they cause great paines, and cause to weepe, and so said an Indian that was stung with one of them, that he had receiued many wounds with Arrowes, but neuer wept till then; they are neuer seene but in neape tides (or slow waters, therefore the Portugals call them Aguas mortas, or Dead waters.) Sea-fomes.

The Vça is a kind of Crab found in the mire, and they are infinite, and the foode of all this Countrie, chiefly for the slaues of Guinea, and the Indians of the Countrie, they haue a good taste, vpon them is good drinking cold water. They haue a particularitie to bee noted, that when they cast their shell they goe into their holes, and there they are two or three moneths, and casting the shell, mouthes and feet, they come so out, and they grow againe as before. Sea Crabs. Vça.

Guainumu is a kind of Crab so great, that a mans legge will goe into their mouth. They are good to eate; when it doth thunder they come out of their holes, and make so great a noise the one with the other, that men haue gone out with their weapons, thinking they had beene enemies; if they doe eate a certaine herbe, whosoeuer eateth them then dieth, these are of the Land, but keepe in holes neere the Sea side. Guainumu.

The Aratu Crabs keepe in the trunkes of the trees, that grow in the Oowes of the Sea, when they find a Cockle that gapeth, they seeke presently some little stone, and very cunningly put it into the Cockle: the Cockle shutteth presently, and not beeing able because of the little stone it hath within, they with their mouthes doe take out the fish and eate it. Aratu.

There are ten or twelue kinds of Crabs in this Countrie, and as I haue said, they are so many in number, and so healthfull, that all are eaten, especially of the Indians, &c. Ten or twelue kinds of crabs.

The Oysters are many, and some are very great, and the meate is as broad as the palme of the hand; in these are some Pearles found very rich, in other smaller are also very fine Pearles found. The Indians in old time came to the Sea for Oysters, and got so many that they made great Hils of the shels, and the fishes they carried away for to eate all the yeere; vpon these Hils by the continuance of time, grew great Groues of Trees, and very thicke and high, and the Portugals discouered some, and euery day goe discouering others anew, and of these shels they make lime, and of one only heape was part of the Colledge of the Bay made, the Palaces of the Gouernour, and many other buildings, and yet it is not ended, the lime is very white, good for to garnish and Oysters. Note for lime.

lime withall; if it bee in the raine it becommeth blacke, and for to keepe water in Cisternes it is not so sure, but for the rest as good as the stone in Spaine.

Muscles. There want no Muscles in this Countrie: they serue the Indians and the Portugals for Spoones and Kniues, they haue a faire siluer colour; in them is found some seed Pearle; there is a small kind of them whereon the Sea-guls doe feed, and because they cannot breake them, they haue such a naturall instinct that taking them vp into the Aire, they let them fall so many times till they breake it, and then they eate them.

Perewinkles. The Perewinkles are very tastefull, and good in this Countrie, and some seed Pearle is found in them, and so of the Perewinkles, and of the Muscles there is great store, of many and sundrie kinds.

Wilkes. The greatest Wilkes which are called Guatapiggoaçu, that is, a great Wilke, are much esteemed of the Indians, for of them they make their Trumpets, Furnitures, Beades, Brooches, Eare-rings, and Gloues for the children, and they are of such esteeme among them, that for one they will giue any one person that they haue captiue: and the Portugals gaue in olde time a Crowne for one: they are as white as Iuorie, and many of them are of two quarters broad, and one in length.

Piraguaig. The Piraguaig are also eaten, and of the shelles they make their Beades: and for so many fathome they giue a person. Of these the Sea casteth vp sometimes great heapes, a wonderfull thing. Of Wilkes and Skallops there is great quantitie in this Countrie, very faire, and to bee esteemed, of sundrie kinds.

White Corrall. They find great store of white stone Corrall vnder water, it groweth like small Trees all in leaues, and Canes as the red Corrall of India; and if this also were so, there would be great riches in this Countrie, for the great abundance there is of it, it is very white, it is gotten with difficultie, they make lime of it also.

Prawnes. There are great multitudes of Prawnes, because this Coast is almost all enuironed with shelues, and Rockes; there are also many Sea-ruffes, and other Monsters found in the Concauities of the Rockes, great Crauesses or Crabbes like those of Europe, it seemes there bee none in these parts.

Of the Trees that grow in salt-water. Mangues. The Mangue Trees are like the Swallowes, or Willowes of Europe, there is so great quantitie of them in the armes or creeks that the Sea maketh within the Land, that many leagues of the Land is of these Trees, that are watered with the tides. We trauelled I say leagues, and whole daies in the Riuers where these Trees are, and they are alwaies greene, faire and pleasant, and of many kinds. The wood is good to burne, and for to build houses, it is very heauie and hard as Iron; of the barke they make Inke, and it serueth to tanne Leather, and they are of many kindes. A certaine kind of them doe cast certaine twigs from the top of their length some times as long as a Launce, till they come to the water, and then they cast many branches and rootes, and these branches remaine fast in the earth, and while they are greene these twigs are tender, and because they are hollow within, they make good Flutes of them. In these Creekes are a certaine kinde

Gnats. of Gnats called Maregnis, as small as Hennes Lice, they bite in such sort, that they leaue such a Wheale, smart and itching that a man cannot helpe himselfe, for euen through the clothes they pricke, and it is a good penance, and mortification to suffer them on a Morning, or an Euening; there is no other remedie to defend themselues from them, but to anoint themselues with dirt, or to make a great fire and smoke.

In these Creekes are many Crabs, Oysters, and Water Rats, and there is one kind of these Rats, a monstrous thing, for all the day they sleepe, and wake all night.

In these Creekes the Parrets breeds, which are so many in number, and make such a noise, that it seemeth the noise of Sparrowes, or Dawes.

On the Sands they finde great store of Parsley, as good and better, then that of Portugall whereof also they make Conserues.

Birds that doe feed, and are found in the salt water.

Guiratinga. THe Bird Guiratinga is white, of the bigneſſe of the Cranes of Portugall; they are extreame white, and haue verie long feete, the bill verie cruell and sharpe, and verie faire, of a verie fine yellow, the legges are also verie long, betweene Red and Yellow. On the necke it hath the finest Plume Feathers that can bee found, and they are like the Estridges Feathers of Africa.

Caripira. Caripira by another name Forked-tayles, are many; they are called Forked-tayles, because their taile is diuided in the middle; the Indians make great account of the Feathers for the feathering of their Arrowes, and say that they last long, at sometimes they are verie fat, the fat is good for the loosenesse. These Birds doe vse to bring newes a land of the ships, and they are so certaine

Note. in this that very seldome they faile, for when they are seene, ordinarily within twentie or thirtie daies the ships doe come.

Gauca

Guaca is properly the Sea-mew of Portugall, their ordinarie food are Cockles, and because they are hard, and they cannot breake them, they take them in their bill, and letting them fall many times they breake them and eate them; of these Sea-meawes there are an infinite number of kinds, that the Trees and the strands are full of them. Guaca.

Guiratecontecon is called in Portugall Scald-pate, it is called Guiratecontecon, that is, a Bird that hath deadly accidents, and that dieth and liueth againe, as though it had the Falling sickneſſe, and these fits are so great that many times the Indians doe find them along the strands, and take them in their hands, and thinking they are dead doe sling them away, and they assoone as they fall doe rise and flie away, they are white and faire, and there are other kinds of these that haue the same accidents. Guiratecontecon.

The Calamar are as bigge as Turtle-doues, or Pigeons; the men of the Countrie say, that they lay their Egges in the Sea, and there they hatch, and breed their young; they flie not, but with their wings and feet they swimme very swiftly, they foreshew great calmes and showres, and in calme weather they are so many along the shippes that the Mariners cannot tell what to doe; they are euen the very spite it selfe, and melancholy. Calamar, of Sea-stampers.

The Ayaya are as bigge as a Pye-annet, more white then red, they haue a faire colour of white bespotted with red, the bill is long and like a Spoone. For to catch the fish, it hath this slight; it striketh with the foot in the water, and stretching out his neck, tarrieth for the fish and catcheth it, and therefore the Indians say it hath humane knowledge. Ayaya.

The Caracara is small and gray, it hath faire eies with a verie faire red circle, it hath a strange note, for he that heareth it thinketh it is of a verie great bird, it beeing verie small; for it singeth with the mouth, and iointly behind it maketh a noise so sounding, loud and strong, though not smelling verie well, that it is a wonder, it maketh this sweet Musicke two houres before day, and at Euening till the Euening twilighe be done, and ordinarily when it singeth, foreshoweth faire weather. Caracara.

The Guara is as bigge as a Pye-annet, it hath a long bill with a crooked point, and his feet of a quarter or span long, when it is hatched, it is blacke, and after becommeth gray, when it alreadie doth flie, it becommeth whiter then any Doue, afterward it turneth to a bright red, yet at length it becommeth redder then Scarlet it selfe, in this colour he continueth till his death, they are many in quantitie, but they haue no other kind. They breed well in Houses, their food is fish, flesh, and other things; their food must be alwaies in water, the Indians esteeme greatly the Feathers of these, and of them they make their Diademes, Fringes wherewith they couer the Swords they kill withall, and they make Bracelets to weare on their armes, and fasten them to their haire like Rose buds, and these are their Iewels, and Chaines of Gold wherewith they adorne themselues in their Feasts, and they so much esteeme, yea, they beeing so much giuen to eat humane flesh, they giue many times the enemies they haue for to eat in change for these Feathers. These birds goe in flights, and if the Sunne doth shine on them vpon the Sands, or in the Aire, it is a faire thing to behold. Many other birds there are that do feed on the Sea, as Heauenshewes, Cormorones, and a certaine kinde of Eagles (which are our Asprenalles) which would bee tedious to recite. Guara.

The maine Riuers wherewith this Prouince is watered are innumerable, and some verie great, and haue verie faire barres, not wanting in the Riuers, Brookes and Fountaines, whereof the Countrie is verie plentifull, and the waters ordinarily are verie faire, cleere and healthfull, and plentifull of infinite fishes of sundrie kinds, of the which some are of an exceeding greatnesse, and of great value, and verie healthfull, and are giuen vnto the sicke for Medicines. These fishes doe the Indians catch with Nets, but ordinarily with Hooke and Line. Among these there is a royall fish of a good taste and sauour, that is verie like the Sturgeon of Spaine, this is called Iau, they are of fourteene and fifteene quarters long, and sometimes bigger, and verie fat, and they make Butter (or Grease) of them. And at sometimes the fish is so much, they fat their Hogges with it. In the small Creekes are manie Shrimpes, and some of a quarter and more in length, and of a verie good taste and sauour. Of the fresh Riuers, and the things that in them are.

Fresh water Snakes (and Creatures of the water.)

THe Snake Cucurijuba is the greatest, or of the greatest that are in Brasill, notable as well for greatnesse as beautie, some are taken of fiue and twentie or thirtie foote long, and a yard in compasse. It hath a Chaine along the backe, of notable Pictures and verie faire, that beginneth at the head and endeth in the Taile; it hath Teeth like a Dogge, and laying hold on a man, Cow, Stagge, or Hogge, winding it with certaine turnes of her Taile, it swalloweth the said thing whole. And after she hath it so in her belly, she lets her selfe rot, and the Rauens and Crowes do eate her all, so that there remaineth nothing but the bones, and afterward it breedeth new flesh againe, and renewes as before it was. The reason whereof is (say the men of the Countrie) because while it putrifieth it hath the head in the mire, and hauing life in the noddle they liue againe; and because this is knowne alreadie, when they finde them putrified, they seeke out the head Cucurijuba a great Snake many wayes wonderfull.

head and kill it. The manner of their feeding is to waite for their prey, either beaſts or people laide along by the waies, and when it paſſeth, it winds it ſelfe about it, and killeth and eateth it. After they are full they ſleepe in ſuch ſort, that ſometimes they cut two or three pieces of their Taile, they not waking, as hath happened that after they had cut two pieces of the Taile of one of theſe, the next day they found her dead with two wild Bores in her belly; and it was about twelue yards and an halfe long.

Manima. The Snake Manima keepeth alwaies in the water, it is yet greater then the other abouesaid; it is much painted: and from his Pictures did the Gentiles of Braſill take the painting of themſelues. That Indian holds himſelfe for bleſſed, that it doth ſhew it ſelfe vnto, ſaying, they ſhall liue long, ſeeing the Manima did ſhew it ſelfe vnto him.

Many other kinds of Snakes there be in the Riuers of freſh water, which I leaue for breuitie ſake, and becauſe there is nothing in particular that can be ſaid of them.

Water Lizards. Iacare (or Crocodile.) The Iacare Lizards are of a notable greatneſſe, and ſome are as bigge as Dogges, their ſnowt is like a Dogge, and ſo haue they their Teeth verie long, they haue ouer all the bodie certaine plates like an armed Horſe, and when they arme themſelues, there is no Arrow can pierce them, they are painted of diuers colours, they doe no hurt to the people, but rather they take them eaſily with Snares, ſome haue beene taken of fifteene quarters (or ſpans) long, and the Indians eſteeme them much, and hold them for eſtate as the Rimbabas, that is, Dogges, or any other thing of eſtate. They keepe in the water, and on the land, they lay Egges as bigge as Geeſe, and ſo hard that ſtriking one againſt another, they tingle like Iron. Where theſe doe haunt they are preſently perceiued, by the great cries they giue; the fleſh of theſe ſmelleth very much, eſpecially his Cods of Muske, and they are of eſteeme, their dung hath ſome vertue, eſpecially it is good for the Lelidas.

Hard Egges.

Iaguarucu. A great Dogge. This ſeemeth ſome kind of the Hippopetamas. The Iaguarucu is a beaſt greater then any Oxe, it hath Teeth of a great quarter long, they keepe in and out of the water, and doe kill men; they are rare; ſome of them are found in the Riuer of Saint Francis, and in Paraguacu.

Atacape. The Atacape are Woolues ſmaller, but much more hurtfull, for they come out of the water to watch for men, and being verie ſwift they kill ſome perſons and eate them.

Iaguapopeba. The Iaguapopeba are the true Otters of Portugall. There is another ſmall beaſt of the bigneſſe of it is called Zariguenein, theſe haue rich Skinnes for Furres; and of theſe water beaſts, there are many other kinds; ſome doe no hurt, others are verie fierce.

Baepipa. The Baepipa are a certaine kind of Mermen as bigge as children, for they differ nothing from them, of theſe there are many and doe no harme.

Water-hogge. There be many of the water Hogges Capigoara, and are of the bigneſſe of land-hogges, but they differ in faſhions; in the roofe of the mouth it hath a very great ſtone that doth ſerue him for great Teeth. This the Indians hold for a Iewell for their children, ſonnes and daughters. It hath no taile, they continue long vnder water, but they lodge on the Land, and in it they bring vp their young; their foode is graſſe, and fruites that they find along the Riuers.

In the freſh Riuers of waters are many kinde of Igta Scallops, great and ſmall. Some are ſo bigge as good Siues, and ſerue to ſift their meale with them; other are ſmaller, and ſerue for Spoones, all of them are long, and of a ſiluer colour, in them are ſome Pearles.

In the Riuers are found many of the Cagados, (a Sea bird ſo called) and they are ſo many in number, that the Tapuyas doe feed fat in a certaine time of the yeere with the Egges, and doe ſeeke for them as for ſome other daintie food.

Guararick. Men dye with hearing it. There want no Frogges in the Riuers, Fountaines, Puddles, and Lakes, and they are of many kinds eſpecially theſe Guararici. The feare that the Indians haue thereof is a wonderfull thing, that of the onely hearing it they die, and tell them neuer ſo much they haue no other remedie, but let themſelues die, ſo great is the imagination and apprehenſion that they take of the hearing it ſing, and whatſoeuer Indian that heareth it dieth, for they ſay it doth caſt from it ſelfe a brightneſſe like a lightning.

All theſe maine Riuers haue ſo great and ſo thicke Woods on the one ſide and the other, that they ſaile many leagues by them and ſee no ground, on either ſide, in them are many things to be told, which I omit for breuities ſake,

Of the Beaſts, Trees and Herbes, that came from Portugall, and doe grow and breed in Braſill.

THis Braſill is alreadie another Portugall, and not ſpeaking of China, which is much more temperate and healthfull, without great heates or colds, where the men doe liue long, with few ſickneſſes, as the Collicke, of the Liuer, the Head, the Breaſt, Scabs, nor any other Diſeaſes of Portugall. Neither ſpeaking of the Sea, which hath great ſtore of fiſh, and wholſome, nor of the things of the Land, which God hath giuen to this Nation, nor of many other commodities which the men haue to paſſe their liues withall; though the commoditie of houſes is not great, for the most of them are of mud walls, and thatched, though now they beginne to make buildings of lime and stone, and tile, neither are the commodities for apparell many, because the Countrie yeeldeth no other cloth but Cotton-wooll. In this place the people are in great need, especially from the Riuer of Ianuarie, vnto Saint Vincent, for want of ships to bring Merchandize and Clothes, but in the most Captaineships they are prouided of all kinde of clothings and Silkes, and the men goe well apparelled, and weare many Silkes and Veluets. But it is alreadie Portugall as I said for the many Commodities that from thence doe come vnto it.

for

Horses. In this Prouince is a good breed of the Horses, and there be alreadie great abundance of them and very good Iennets of a great price, that are worth 200. and 300. Duckets and more, and there is alreadie running at the Geese, at the Ring, at Canes, and other Sports and Skirmishes, and from hence they beginne to prouide Angola of Horses whereof they stand in great want.

Kine. Though this Countrie hath weake pastures, and in Port Seeure is an Herbe that killeth the beasts if they doe eate it, notwithstanding there is a great number of them alreadie, and all Brasill is full of great Heards, and some haue 500. some a 1000. heads, especially in the fields of Piratininga, because it hath good pastures, and are like to them of Portugall, and it is a pleasant thing to see the young breed that is there.

Swine. The Swine doe like very well heere, and they beginne to haue great multitudes, and heere it is the best flesh of all, yea, better then Hennes flesh, and it is giuen to the sicke, and hath a very good relliſh and taste.

Sheepe. Vnto the Riuer of Ianuarie are many sheepe found alreadie, and Weathers, and they fatten so much that they burst with fatnesse: it is not here so good flesh as in Portugall.

Goates. The Goates are yet but few, but yet they like well in this Countrie, and doe multiply verie much, and in a short time there will be a great multitude.

Hennes. The Hennes are infinite, and greater then in the Realme of Portugall, and because the Countrie is temperate they breed well, and the Indians doe esteeme them, and breed them within the Maine, three hundred and foure hundred leagues, the flesh here is not so good as in the Realme.

Turkies. The Hennes of Peru, like well in this Countrie, and there is great abundance of them, and there is no Banquet where they are not a dish.

Geese and Duckes. The Geese doe like well in this Countrie, and are in great abundance, there is also here another kind of the Countrie it selfe, and are farre greater and fairer.

Dogges. The Dogges haue multiplied much in this Countrie, and are of many kindes; they are esteemed heere as well of the Portugals which brought them, as of the Indians that esteeme them aboue all the things they haue: because they helpe them in their hunting, and are domesticall creatures, and so the women doe carrie them on their backe from one place to another, and nourish them as Children, and giue them sucke at the breast.

Trees. Trees with prickles, as Orenges, Pomecitrons, Limons * of both kinds, of sundrie sorts do grow well in this Countrie, which almost all the yeere haue fruit, and there are so great Orenges and Pomecitron Groues, that euen among the Woods they grow, and the abundance is so great of those things that they are not set by. They haue a great enemie, the Ants, notwithstanding there is great abundance, without euer being watered, and as there wanteth no Sugar, they make infinite Conserues, to wit, of Citrons, Limons, the flowres, &c.

* For one kind are called Limas, as it were the Female.

Fig-trees. The Fig-trees grow verie well heere, and there bee many kindes, as long Figges, blacke Figges, Figge-Dates, and many other kinds, to the Riuer of Ianuarie, that are hotter ground, they yeeld two crops in the yeere.

Quinces. In the Riuer of Ianuarie and Saint Vincent, in the fields of Piratininga, doe grow many Quinces, and yeeld foure crops a yeere, one after another, and there are men that with verie few Quince Trees doe gather, ten, and twelue thousand Quinces, and here they make great store of Marmelets and verie shortly will those of the Iland of Madera be spared.

Vines. There are many sorts of Grapes, as Feriads, Boaes, Bastard, Greene, and Gallizian Grapes, and many other. To the Riuer of Ianuarie they haue all the yeere Grapes, if they will haue them, for if they cut them euerie moneth, they beare euerie moneth Grapes successiuely. In the Riuer of Ianuarie especially in Piratininga, are Vineyards, and are so loaden that they bow to the ground, they yeeld but one crop. They beginne alreadie to make Wine, though with trouble to preserue it, for in wood the Worme doth presently eate thorow, and earthen vessels they haue none, but seeke remedies of their owne, and doe continue it, and in a short space they will haue many Wines.

Roses. In the Riuer of Ianuarie and Piratininga, are many Roses; one, Damaske Roses, whereof they distill great store of Rose-water, and Conserue of Roses for to purge, and not to purge, for of the other they haue not, they seethe the Damaske Roses in water, and straining them they make Conserue of Roses very good wherewith they doe not purge.

Plants and Herbes. Muske Melons want not in many Captaine ships, and are good and fine, many Gourds whereof they make Conserues, many Beets whereof they make it also, Cabbages, Cowcumbers, Raddishes, Turnops, Mustard, Mintes, Coriander, Dill, Fennell, Pease, Leekes, Onions, Garlicke, Borrage, and other Pulses which were brought from Portugall, and grow well in this Countrie.

Wheate.

In the Riuer of Ianuarie, and fields of Piratininga, groweth Wheate, they vse it not because they haue no Horse-mils, nor Water-mils, and they haue also great trouble in the gathering of it, for because of the many waters, and rankenesse of the ground it commeth altogether, and it multiplieth so much, that one Corne beareth sixtie and eightie Eares, and some beeing ripe, others grow anew, and it multiplieth almost in infinitum. Of lesse then a [i] quarter of Barley that a man sowed, in the field of Piratininga, hee gathered sixtie and odde [k] Alqueires, and if men would giue themselues to this commoditie, the Countrey would be verie rich and plentifull.

[i] That is foure bushels and an halfe.

[k] Note that the Alquerque containeth 18. bushels.

There are many sorts of Basill, and Gilliflowres Yellow, and Red, and doe grow well in Piratininga, and other smelling herbes, as the [l] Onion sese, &c.

Smelling herbes.

[l] An herbe so called.

Aboue all this, Brasil hath one commoditie for men to liue, that in it doe liue disorderly, that there are but few Lice or Fleas, but among the Indians, and Guinne Moores there are some Lice; but there want no Hornets, Dorres, Waspes, Flies, and Gnats of so many kinds, and so cruell and venemous, that stinging any person, the place swelleth for three or foure dayes, especially in the fresh men, which haue their bloud fresh and tender, with the good Bread, Wine and delicate fare of Portugall.

CHAP. II.

Articles touching the dutie of the Kings Maiestie our Lord, and to the common good of all the estate of Brasill. Written (as is thought) by the Authour of the former Treatise.

The first Article.

IT greatly behoooueth for the vniuersall good, and preseruation of the estate of Brasill, that the King our Lord doe take all the Captainesships for his, satisfying the Lordships. For as the Tenths are all his Maiesties, and the Lordships haue no more then the tenth, which is verie little, at the least in the Captainesships of the Holy Ghost, Saint Vincent, Port Secure, and the Ilets, the said Captainesships are neuer prouided, neither haue Powder, Bullet, or Caleeuer, &c. for to defend themselues from the enemies, and whatsoeuer French or English shippe that goeth thither, doth put them in such danger, that either they must giue them entrance, and traffick with them, or leaue them the Towne and goe to the Woods, as now it was seene in the Captainesships of the Holy Ghost, and Saint Vincent, and being the Kings they be otherwise prouided, making Fortresses in the barres for their defence, at the least in those of the Holy Ghost, and the Riuer of Ianuarie, as it was done in that of Saint Vincent, in the which ships may come in at any houre, and in this manner will haue a delight to dwell, and labour in them the which now doe liue in trouble and complaints, seeing themselues so disfauoured, and in any danger of warre they rather thinke how to flee away, and escape with their Wiues and Children, then how to defend the Countrey, whose safetie, preseruation, and augmenting importeth so much, as is notorious to the good of all Peru.

Weakenesse of the Portugals in Brasill, how much and whence.

The second Article.

It seemeth necessarie that in Brasill there be a Court Royall, where many causes may be determined, as there is in Peru, New Spaine, and in all his Maiesties Prouinces.

The first reason that for this is offered, is, that the people whereof at the first this Countrey was inhabited, commonly were banished for facts committed in Portugall. And as at the beginning there was no Iustice Royall in it, at the least in the Captainesships, and Lands of the Lords, as all of them were, but onely Captaines and Iudges, placed by the Lords of them, there was little regard of Iustice, as well in them which ruled, the which had authoritie for to kill, hang, &c. and as they had no Science, nor peraduenture Conscience, ruled rather by humane respects, friendships, hatreds, and proper gaines, then by direct reason, as in the subiects, the which as there was no Iustice but of Gossips, (as the speech is) did liue at large as they listed, hauing no bodie to contradict them, and though the Kings afterward did take & reserue the Iustice to themselues sending Gouernours, and generall Iudges, and though there come many men of more qualitie to continue the inhabiting of the Countrey, notwithstanding a great part of that first libertie and licence remained still, with the which many euils were, and are committed without punishment. For many of them haue alreadie so much power with their riches (gained God knoweth how) that I know not whether those that now doe rule dare meddle with them, bee it that they feare their power and might, or because fere omnes diligunt munera: and the Iustices that went, and will not be interessed but beare the Rod vpright, let them prepare themselues to suffer troubles in this Countrey.

Brasill peopled with exiles.

The second reason is, that many Sutes may here be determined definitiuely, in the which are delayings of many yeeres, without any obtayning of Iustice by Appeales and Grieuances to Portugall. Now if the Gouernour (as many times it hapneth) will put himselfe in the office of the the generall Iudge, and with his power binds his hands, all goes topsieturuie, without any ciuill peace in the Countrey, but rather a continuall confusion, and perturbation, and the matter commeth to this point, that the Gouernour apprehendeth the Iudge himselfe (as alreadie it hath hapned) and sendeth him to Portugall, and in the meane while the Iustice of the Countrey remayneth in the hands of him that cannot administer it, and in stead of reason entreth affection, or passion, and then nothing is done but what the Gouernor listeth. The same behoueth, and peraduenture more, to that which appertaineth to his Majesties goods, wherein are difficult matters, and haue need of a man of knowledge and conscience, for to decide them.

The third reason is, that there may learned men of conscience bee there for to determine the Iustice of warre, for want of that haue many been made in Brasil, against all Iustice, which was a great cause of the destruction of the men of the Countrie, and so all the Coast is almost vnhabited, And although the Kings past commended this greatly, and commanded that no warre should be held lawfull, but that which should be made by order of the Gouernour generall, hee taking first counsell with the Bishop, and Fathers of the company, and experienced persons of the Countrey, and of good consciences, and the Iustice of the warre being determined by them, notwithstanding many times it is not done with such examination as the cause requireth: and so either the Fathers of the company are not called thereunto, or if they be called, it is for a complement of Iustice; and they haue more regard to the hope of the profit that is offered them, of getting of slaues in the said warre, then vnto the Iustice of it, and to the common good, and danger they put themselues in, for sometimes they fare euill in the broyle, with the death of many Christians, both Portugals and Indians. With these warres especially all the Coast of Pernambuco, which beginneth from the River of Saint Francis thitherward, which are fiftie leagues, and the greatest part of the Maine is disinhabited, hauing before a most copious number of Indians: and so now that Captaineship wanteth Indian friends, to helpe them to defend, and it is, euery day wasted, slaine, and eaten of the Indians Pitiguares of Paraiba, which before were their friends, whom they did also great injustice to.

Iesuites complaint for not being called to counsels of warre.

Depopulations.

The third Article is about the Kings Customers Accounts, &c.

His Majestie hath a great obligation to the Indians of Brasil, to aide them with all corporall and spirituall remedie. For almost all those of this Coast are almost consumed with sicknesses, warres and tyrannies of the Portugals, and those which escaped, went into the Maine to their kindred, and neither haue these their liues there. For when the ransomes of slaues did end, which were held for lawfull, they inuented Armies forced goe to the Maine to bring them to the Sea for to serue themselues of them perpetually.

The fourth Article. Wast of the Indians by Portugals.

These companies are made in this manner, three or foure or more persons doe joyne, and euerie one of them doe put in so much stocke, and aske licence of the Gouernour to goe into the Maine to bring free Indians, the Gouernour grants it, with his order, to wit, that they bring them without any force or deceit, but with their owne good will, declaring to them, that they come to serue the Portugals, and to helpe them in their labours, Sugar-mills and other workes. Hauing this Licence, the Venturers doe ioyne people to send into the Maine, to wit, Interpreters, and other persons, that sometime came to fiftie or sixtie with their pieces and other weapons, and with many Indian Archers both free and bond, that doth carrie their burdens of the ransome and the victuals, and with helpe if by deceit they cannot bring the people they goe to seeke, they may bring it by force.

Portugals wily manner of wronging the Natiues.

With this Licence in this manner they depart, and neuer keepe the order set downe, as it is manifest and all doe openly confesse without contradiction, for presently when they are departed they say, that if that should be declared vnto them there, that certaine it is, that no Indian will come, and therefore they must vse deceits and force, for they haue no other meanes to moue them from their Countries, and with this purpose they goe, without any regard of the order, neither of them that goe to the Maine, nor of the Iustices when they come from thence, and so they vse these Licences, without any examining of them. Now when they come to the Townes of the Indians, that are within the Maine, 100. and 200. leagues, they beginne presently their deceits, saying that they come for them by commandement of the Gouernour, that they may come to enioy the good things of the Sea, and that they shall bee together in their Villages by themselues, and at their will (without making any manner of repartition) and that from thence they shall helpe the Portugals in their warres, and other things. Other whiles they tell them that the Gouernour, and the Fathers of the company doe send for them for to bee in the Churches of their kinsmen, which doe learne the things of God, naming some ancient principall Indians, whom they much esteeme, and hold as Fathers, and that they wil be with them, and for this there hath beene some of these Interpreters, that ordained among themselues one, whom they fained to be a Father of the company, with a shauen crowne, and a long habit to deceiue them more easily.

When these deceits, & other such do not preuaile, they vse violence, labouring to kil some, that doe hinder this comming, for the which it hath hapned to put poison in the vessels of their wine, with many other inuentions, wherewith they feare them. At once, that comming alreadie by the way, because one of the principall Indians did shew to come with an euill will, and did impute it with the reſt, it is ſaid that they tooke for a remedie two or three to remaine behind with him alone, and being aſleepe they choaked him with a Towell, and gaue out, that hee died ſuddenly, becauſe he would not come. Other whiles they kill ſome of other Nations, that are by the way, all to the end, that thoſe which they bring doe not goe backe, and in this manner they bring ſuch a number of them, without prouiſion of neceſſarie food, that by the way with hunger and euill vſage, a great part of them doe die, and thoſe that doe come are in ſuch a caſe, and ſo weake, that it is needfull before they come into the houſes, the Fathers of the company to goe about the Woodes chriſtening the children at their Mothers breaſts that they may not die vnbaptized, and others they find halfe dead, and full of flies, that the Mothers haue left, as not able to bring them.

Who now are the Canibals?

Vnchriſtian Antichriſtian wickednesse.

Being come to the Sea thoſe that ſcape aliue, hauing promiſed them that they will put them in Townes, at their owne will, preſently the venturers doe diuide them among themſelues, and many times they ſeparate fathers from children, wiues from husbands, brethren from brethren, &c. and euery one carrieth his part to their places, ſome one hundred, another two hundred, another thirtie, &c. euery one according to the ſtocke he putteth in. Beſides this, they giue their ſhare to the men that went to bring them (for this is the money they pay them withall) to one foure, to another ten &c. and as many of theſe haue no lands for to maintaine them, they ſell them preſently to others, and ſo they haue marked and ſold a great number to theſe and other Captaineſhips, and as the poore men doe ſee themſelues deceiued, and toiled with ouer-much labour, with pure griefe they die, and ſome runne away and goe euen to their enemies, willing rather to be eaten of them, then to abide ſuch vſage among the Portugals, and in this ſort of 30. or 40000. ſoules, that haue beene brought, I know not whether 9000. bee aliue, and with this a great part of the Maine is deſtroyed. For the ſame licences doe the Captaines giue in their Captaineſhips, and the ſame is vſed.

Effects of tyrannie.

Theſe vexations and tyrannies, are the cauſe that the Indians loſe the patience, which alwaies they haue had exceeding, and doe kill ſome Portugals. Now in the Maine of the Bay the Tapuyas a people which alwayes had great friendſhip with the Portugals, and gaue them paſſage through their Countries, and aide to bring the Indians aboueſaid, did riſe with the deceits and lies of certaine Portugals, that went thither with title of bringing Salpeeter, and killed ſome eighteene or twentie of them. Some of the Maine of the Captaineſhip of the Holy Ghoſt, did kill certaine Indians that certaine Meſtizos did carrie with them, going thither to play their accuſtomed prankes, for within their owne houſes they would haue killed them, and the Mungrels eſcaped by flight, and with this that people is already an enemie of the Portugals. The Maine of the Riuer of Ianuarie with ſuch other lyes did reuolt, being before our great friends, and killed ſome Portugals, hauing a little before a Father of the company gone thither at the requeſt of the Inhabitors of the Citie, and had beene ſixe moneths with them, confirming them in the friendſhip of the Portugals, and preaching the faith vnto them and brought from diuers and remote places ſome 600. ſoules which now are Chriſtians baptized almoſt all in their Towne with a Church made within the Riuer of Iannarie, which are great helpe for the defence of that Citie, and they helpe euery one to doe their worke: and many other remayning moued for to follow their Kinſmen, with this reuolting all ceaſſed, and ſo there as alſo in other places, the gates vnto Conuerſion are altogether ſhut vp.

Conuerſing.

Reuerſing.

To the Maine of the Bay, twice the Fathers of the company haue gone at their owne coſt, (with helpe of the Indians chriſtened, which doe teach,) to bring ſome people for to furniſh the Churches, which beginnes to diminiſh, and to preach the Law of God vnto them. And there they found of this Soule-leſſe people, that were in the Townes of the Indians, as in their owne houſes, and the Fathers bringing ſome number of Indians, which came from verie farre to become Chriſtians. Theſe Portugals laboured by all meanes poſſible to diſſwade them. Sometimes preaching to the Indians, that the Fathers brought them deceiued, and that heere they would take away their Cuſtomes, as the drinking of their Wines, their many Wines, and whip their children, &c. the which is an vſe and cuſtome among theſe prattlers for to diſcredit the Fathers. Not being able to preuaile by this meanes, they tooke another way and did contract with ſome other Indians, of the principalleſt of thoſe that remained there, that they ſhould ſell them thoſe which the Fathers carried, giuing them great ranſomes for them, and with this they pretended to take them away perforce, before their eies, ſo that it was needfull the Fathers to bid the Indians to defend themſelues, and with this remedie they left them. Others came to the high waies and did ſteale them that the Fathers brought, as one Adeſtido which tooke ſome twentie and odde, and tranſported them by another way, taking wife and children, brethren, and all the Family from a principall Indian, and left him alone becauſe he was ſore hurt in one foot, and was not able to goe.

Aduerſing.

Auerſing.

With theſe iarrings of theſe men of this trade, the Indians know not whom to truſt, nor whom to beleeue, and by the fame that they heare already of the vſage that is done here to theirs, that come to the Sea. For this cauſe a great principall Indian of the Mountaine of Rari, that is from hence about two hundred leagues, where now is the greateſt force of people, that eſcaped from from the tyrannies, sent hither a Sonne of his to see how it went, and being true that which the Fathers had said, that he should make heere some prouision for food sowing some grounds, and to returne thither with some Father for him and for all his Family; for to come and receiue the law of God. The Sonne came, and finding the truth, and seeing the vsage that is done to theirs in the Sugar-workes, and other labours of the Portugals, he presently husbanded some grounds in one of the Townes of the Christians, that are in protection, and doctrine of the Fathers, with a determination to goe and bring his Father as he commanded him. Many other of this Port did leaue their Fathers, being mooued in that Mountaine, but with feare of these assaults aboue said they dare not come. Likewise they haue here no grounds fitting for their maintenance, for it is all occupied by the Portugals. Besides this the Nation of the Tapuyas, which haue diuers Languages, doe not agree well in the Sea Coast, for ordinarily they liue here of the Mountaine, and in their owne Countrey they might haue the Euangelicall Law preached vnto them. Peruerting.

All the aboue said well considered, it seemed necessary that his Maiestie should forbid these aduenturings, sending a commandement, that none might goe thither without expresse warrant of his Maiestie, vnder great penalties, the which with effect might be executed, and that neither the Gouernours might giue any licence for them, seeing how they which carrie the said Licenses neuer kept, nor will keep the order giuen them, as aforesaid. For all men know and say, that if it be kept, neuer will any Indian come from the Maine, as vntill now none came but deceiued, and this bring so publicke, and daily, and not the fault of one or two particular men, but a common vse of all the Countrey, that it passeth before the eies of the Iustices, neuer vntill this houre did the Gouernours forbid them, rather past by it not punishing any of them that so brought them, nor redressing the poore Indians. These aduenturings taken away, the Fathers would aduenture themselues to goe among them, to preach the faith of Iesus Christ, and make a Christianitie, and in time, Portugals or Spaniards, might goe thither, but such as were men of a good conscience with order from his Majestie, that might inhabit, and helpe in the conuersion, and in this manner, by the grace of God all that people would bee subject to the yoke of the faith, and obedience of the King our Lord. An admonishing.

The Indians that are brought from the Maine, and are in the power of the Portugals, and all that are by the Coast of Brasill, as wel free as slaues, haue no kind of doctrine by obligation, that is imposed vpon them; for neither Bishops, nor Curates haue any care of it, bearing themselues vpon the Fathers of the company, and in thirty foure yeeres since that the company was sent to these parts by the King Don Iohn the third, no Curate in all Brasill did euer say Masse in respect of the Indians, or slaues borne in the Countrey; only they baptize the children with their offerings, and those that are already growne they need no more preparation, then to bring them to be baptized, without giuing them any other knowledge of the faith, & so it hapneth by their ignorance, that not only they receiue not the grace of Baptisme, but also sometimes not the character. It is pittie to see the little regard that is had in this, being the principall dutie of the King our Lord. The fift Article. Note. Subuerting.

The Fathers of the company since they entred in to Brasill, tooke this matter effectually, and in all places where they haue houses, there is alwaies a particular Masse said for the slaues all Sundayes and Feast dayes, catechising them euery day, and sometime Morning and Euening: They labour to learne the Countrey Language, and instruct them in the matters of faith, and law of God, they baptize, marrie, and doe shriue, and administer other Sacraments vnweariedly. But because they cannot accomplish all, and many doe perish in want for the Curates take no care of them as if they were not their sheepe) it is necessary that his Majestie doe prouide in this some more effectuall remedies.

The first remedie offered was, that his Majestie should command to make a Catechisme in that Brasilian Language, which is vniuersall from the Riuer Maranyon, vnto the Riuer of Plate, and should be imprinted at his Majesties cost, and to enjoyne euery Curate to haue it, and to teach by it. For though the most of them haue not the language, they may notwithstanding learne to read it very well, and to teach by the Booke, as at the beginning, and euen now some Fathers of the company doe, that the Indians hearing him reade will vnderstand, &c. Catechisme in the Brasilian Tongue.

It is very necessary that his Majestie doe command to examine the Iustice that these Portugals haue to serue themselues of these free Indians they bring from the Maine in the manner aboue said, for although they hold them with a title of free, they haue no libertie but in name, for in truth they are more then Captiues, according to the vsage they haue. For first, as touching the soules, they care not for their doctrine, nor that they bee baptized, married; or liue, like Christians, they haue no other respect but of their seruice, as of any other brute beast, and so let them liue in adulterie, without hearing Masse, or shrieuing, and many die without Baptisme. As touching their bodies, their labours are immoderate and perpetuall by night and by day, contrarie to the nature of the Indians, which are sustained with very little labour in their Countries. If they fall sicke they haue then lesse care of them then of their slaues, for of these because they cost them their money, they haue more regard, as the Masters themselues doe confesse. The fixt Article. Slauerie of the Indians.

Those that haue them in their power, are serued of them, as of slaues, all their liues, not letting them goe to another Master or place, though it be to the Churches of their kinsmen, that are Christians, where they may be better instructed in matters of the faith, and of their saluation; and if they doe goe to any place, though it be to the said Churches, they labour by themselues, and by the Iustices, to bring them againe, as indeede they doe bring, and put them in Irons, as though they were slaues. Whence ariseth a great scandall to the Indians Christian, their kinsmen, some of the which, as yet are tender Plants in the faith, forsake the Churches and flee with their familie about the woods, grieued with the iniuries that are done to theirs, especially in matter of libertie, which they so much esteeme, and for feare they will doe the like with them, and so wandering are lost and neuer seene againe; and truth it is, that if it were not for the continuall care and vigilancie that the Fathers of the companie haue ouer them, and the loue the Indians doe beare them, because they are their masters; and seeing that for their defence they are hated of the Portugals, and murmured at, they had not continued, no not these three small townes of Christians of the Baye, wherein may be about 2500. soules, which onely escaped of eleuen Churches, that there were, wherein were gathered more then 40000. not other Townes likewise of Christians, that are about the Captaine shippes. Neither had Gouernors nor Captaines sufficed for to haue sustained them (as the experience hath showen) for they would not haue suffered such vexation, though they had died for it, as others did already at the beginning, running away and dying, wherewith the coast was disinhabited.

Wicked manstealing.

Not onely doe the Portugals serue themselues of the free Indians aboue said, which they bring from the maine; but they sell them also to others, and they say with title of free, but the price is such, that a lawfull slaue is sold no deerer, and so the goods, that without them was worth. I put the case 2000. Duckets, with them they giue it for 4000. and these that doe buy it, doe take already mastership of them, as of slaues, that cost them their money, and so from hand to hand their captiuitie increaseth, and though they say that they are serued of them, as of hired men, the pay for their seruice is nothing; for if they giue a cotten garment to one or two of the principallest of them, which they weare in their seruice, they doe not neither is it possible to giue it to 100. or 200. that they keepe, as they themselues confesse; with the like vsages many of the said Indians either eate earth till they kill themselues, or let themselues dye verie easily with meere griefe, and sadnesse. And because iointly with this the punishments they giue them are like the slaues, and these buyings and sellings are not vsed particularly betweene one or two persons secretly, but it is an vse and custome in all the Countrie, without any iustice looking into it. Finally, they are not onely serued of them all their life, but they giue them also in mariages to Sonnes and Daughters as a dowrie; and at their deaths they remaine in their wils with the name of free, but bound to serue their children perpetually, whom they leaue them vnto as hereditario iure, and to the heires goe to law about them, and haue iudgements, as if they were lawfull slaues.

Through you is my name blasphemed amongst the Gentiles.

The seuenth Article.

As touching the iustice that is vsed with the Indians, the King our Lord is to vnderstand, that although his Maiestie as all the Kings his predecessors doe recommend alwaies this matter of the Indians to the Gouernours aboue all as their principall duetie, with very effectuall words, notwithstanding the iustice that vntill now hath beene in Brasil toward them was none or verie little, as it is plainely seene by the assaults, robberies, captiuities, and other vexations that alwaies were done to them, and euen now are done. Against the Indians was alwaies a rigorous iustice, they haue already beene hanged, hewen in peeces, quartered, their hands cut, nipped with hot pincers, and set in the mouth of peeces, and shot away the Indians for killing or helping to kill some Portugall (which peraduenture had well deserued it at their hands) but hauing persons, not a few in Brasil, as alwaies there were, and yet there are, notoriously infamous for robbing, stealing, branding, selling, and killing many Indians, neuer vntill this time was there any show of punishment, and it is to be feared, seeing it wanteth on earth, that it will come from heauen on all the inhabitants of Brasil.

The mercies of the vngodly are cruell.

The eight Article is touching the Indians exceeding seruices without reward.

The ninth Article is to preuent their totall destruction, which cannot but follow the practise of Portugals in making slaues of them by sowing quarrels, and interessing themselues on one side, by burning, &c.

The tenth Article.

All the coast of Brasil doth want and is destitute of Priests that may be Curates for the soules, for in the Bay, except three or foure that doe serue in the high Church, and one that serueth for Curate in one Parish, that did learne in the colledge of the Companie: there are no Priests that know how to doe their office, and their customes and liues are much blemished, for many of them came suspended from Portugall for grieuous crimes, and also for incorrigible; and here as they want Priests they are presently enabled and made cures of soules, and although in the three Colledges of the companie that are in this Countrie, S^t. in the Bay, Pernambuco, and the Riuer of Ianuario, are ordinarie lectures of matters of conscience, there is no Priest that will heare it, and as they are most ignorant, they doubt nothing, and so they absolue and dispence more then Popes with great losse of the soules; and such there was, that dispensed with a parishioner of his to communicate after he had drunk, whereby may be coniectured what the rest will doe. And with this they doe other follies, and misbehauiors in the celebrating of the masse before the people, that they they ſeeme altogether fooles. And their life is pittifull, for finally their care is to fill themſelues with money, meate, and drinke, and to follow the luſts of the fleſh, with a great ſcandall of the ſecular.

Thoſe are very rare, and may bee told with the finger through all the coaſt, which doe liue a life worthie the Prieſtly function, and thoſe which the Biſhop baniſh from hence for their faults or ſuſpenſions to the Riuer of Ianuarie, preſently they are there receiued by the Ruler, as now he did particularly to one that being a Friar come from Portugall expelled from the Order for incorrigible, and afterward hee was enabled here by the Biſhop, hee was put in the viſitation, becauſe he was not ſhriuen in three yeeres, celebrating almoſt euery day, and this being another time condemned by the Biſhop in his Court, and brought to the eſtate that he came in from Portugall, expelled his Order, and baniſhed from his Biſhopricke, and his life infamous and ſcandalous to all the Secular, the Ruler enabled him preſently in the Riuer of Ianuarie, (not without great ſcandall of the good) not onely for fellow-helper of the Curate of that Citie, but alſo for a Preacher. And the Prelates ſay they doe all this becauſe they haue no other, whom to giue the Pariſhes vnto, which are many.

CHAP. III.

Extracts out of the Hiſtorie of IOHN LERIVS * a Frenchman, who liued in Braſill with Monſ. VILLAGAGNON, Ann. 1557. and 58.

* Lerius with other Proteſtants went at Vil. his requeſt to M. Calum, to Braſill, he there fortifying and pretending Euangelicall reformation, from which he after apoſtatiſed. The Story is long, which I had by mee wholly tranſlated; but ſtore hath bred a ſore; and the moſt of it I haue omitted; as alſo all Thevets Voyage thither, and that of Stadius in thoſe parts, though al Engliſhed, and ready die for the Preſſe.

Q. I.

Of the Beaſts, and other liuing creatures, and Plants, of Braſill.

BEfore I proceed any further, preſently in the beginning of this Chapter, I thought good briefly to admoniſh the Reader, that no liuing creatures of the kinde of foure-footed beaſts are found in all the Braſilian world, altogether like vnto ours in ſhape: and that the Toüoupinambaults vſe not, but very ſeldome, to bring them vp tame at home. But, that I may generally deſcribe the wilde beaſts, which the Barbarians call Soo, I determined to beginne with them which are applyed to the vſe of man. It ſeemeth, that that is to bee ſet in the firſt place, which alſo is moſt common: they call Tapirouſſou, of a reddiſh, and long-ſhaggie haire, greatly reſembling a Kow in bigneſſe and ſhape: yet, ſeeing it wanteth hornes, and hath a ſhorter necke, with longer and hanging eares, and more withered and ſlender legs, with an whole hoofe, very like vnto the hoofe of an Aſſe, a man may rightly ſay, it participateth the nature of the Kow, and Aſſe. Notwithſtanding it differeth very much from either, both becauſe it hath a very ſhort taile (here the Reader is by the way to be admoniſhed, that very many beaſts are bred in America, which haue no taile at all) and hath much ſharper teeth: nor may any danger bee therefore procured vnto men by this beaſt, ſeeing it vſeth to repoſe ſafety rather in flight, then in ſtrength. The Barbarians kill them, as alſo many others, ſhooting them through with Arrowes, or vſe to catch them in an hollow trench, or with other manner of Traps and Gins ingeniouſly and cunningly made.

But that wilde beaſt is greatly eſteemed by the Barbarians, by reaſon of the skinne, which as ſoone as they haue taken away, cutting the backe of the hide in a round circle, they drie it in the Sunne, and faſhion it like vnto a Target of the bigneſſe of the bottome of an indifferent veſſell, wherewith they repell the Arrowes, of the enemies, receiued in the warres. And the skinne dried in the Sunne becommeth ſo hard, that I eaſily beleeue that it cannot bee pierced through with the ſtroke of any weapon, although it bee caſt with great violence. I carefully deſired to bring two ſuch Targets into France, but the famine ſo oppreſſed vs returning, that all the prouiſion of victuall being ſpent, not excepting Monkeyes and Parots, and other liuing creatures of the ſame kinde, which we brought with vs out of that Countrie, thoſe two Targets, being laid vpon the coales, were alſo eaten to expell hunger; vnto the which the reſt of the skinnes that were in the ſhip (as I ſhall declare in their proper place) were added.

Moreouer, the fleſh of the Tapirouſſou, commeth almoſt neere vnto the taſte of Beefe: this the Barbarians broyle after their manner, and in their Country language call it, Boucanare. But becauſe I haue now vſed that word, and that hereafter it ſhall bee often repeated, leſt the Reader ſhould any longer remaine doubtfull, occaſion being offered, I will declare what this thing is.

Chap. 10. Beaſts are bred in America altogether vnlike vnto ours. The wild beaſt Tapirouſſou, which reſembleth a Kow, and an Aſſe. Moſt Americans beaſts without tailes. Targets of the hide of the wilde beaſt Tapirouſſou. Grieuous famine. The taſte of the fleſh of the Tapirouſſou.

Boucan, and the Barbarians Kitchin.

The Americans fastning foure woodden forks in the ground, of the thicknesse of an arme, three foote asunder, in the figure of a square, and almost of the equall height of three feet, lay stickes acrosse ouer them two fingers distant each from other, and so make a woodden Grate: this, in their language they name Boucan. They haue many such Grates in their houses, whereon they lay flesh cut into gobbets or pieces, and making a soft fire of dry wood, that there may bee no smoake almost at all, they suffer them to bee broyled as long as they please, after this manner, hauing twice turned them in the space of an houre. And because they doe not powder meates with salt, as the manner is here, they vse the onely remedie of broyling, for the preseruing of them. Therefore, although they had taken thirty wilde beasts in one day, (such as we will describe in this Chapter, they would lay them all cut in pieces, vpon those Grates, as soone as it might be done, lest they should be tainted and corrupted) and there, being often turned, they are sometimes broyled and scorched aboue foure and twenty houres together, vntill the inside of the flesh be as well rosted as the outside, and by this meanes they are all preserued from corruption. Nor is there any other manner of dressing or preseruing fish, which when they haue gotten, they dry them in great plenty, to make Meale, especially those which in their Country language they call Praparati, which are the very true and naturall Mullets, of the which I shall hereafter speake in another place. And these Grates among the Barbarians are rightly to bee accounted the Shambles, and Store-house: and therefore you shall scarce come to their Villages, but you may see them laden with the flesh of wilde beasts, and fishes: and it vsually happeneth also very often, as wee shall hereafter speake, if you come vnto the Barbarians, that you shall behold these Grates filled with mans flesh, which, I thinke, they bring as spoyles taken from the conquered enemies, to be slaine, and eaten.

The manner of preseruing meats among the Americans.

Meale of fishes

Mans flesh laid vpon Boucan.

Seouassou a kind of Deere.

Taiassou a Bore.

But, that I may prosecute the intended description of wilde beasts, the second degree of bignesse seemeth to be giuen vnto a certaine kinde of Deere, which they name Seouassou, but herein they differ from ours, both that they are much lower, and haue lesser hornes, and also in this, that they haue as long shagged haire, as our Country Goates. But the American Boare, which they call Taiassou, is very like in shape vnto those which are bred with vs, in bulke of body, eares, head, and feet, very hurtfull also, through his long and sharpe teeth: yet seeing hee is more leane and slender, and terribly gnasheth and grindeth his teeth together, hee is notorious also through that deformitie. He hath an hole in the backe, by nature, as the Sea-swine haue in the head, whereby he draweth in breath, and letteth it out. These three are their greatest beasts.

Swine, with an hole in their backe.

Agouti.

There is also among the Americans, a certaine red wilde beast, which they name Agouti, of the height of a weaned Pig of thirty dayes old, with a clouen foot, a very short tayle, and with the nose and eares almost of an Hare, most delightfull to the taste. There are also others of two or three kindes, which they call Tapitù, not much vnlike our Hares, but somewhat of a reddish haire.

Tapitù, a kinde of Hare.

Reddish Mise.

They catch great Rats also in the Woods, of the bignesse and haire of Squirrels, which come neere vnto the delicate taste of Conies.

Pag, a beast marked with spots.

Pag, or Pague, (for after what manner they pronounce it, you can scarce, or not at all vnderstand) is a wilde beast of the indifferent height of an Hound, with a deformed head, the flesh comming neere vnto the taste of Veale, with a very faire skinne, distinguished with white, russet, and blacke spots, so that it would be of great price with vs, if they were to be gotten.

Sarigoy, a stinking beast.

There is another also found, which they call Sarigoy, which the Barbarians eate not, by reason of the noysome stinke thereof: but flaying some of them, and taking away the fat of the kidneyes, whence that stinke proceeded, wee eate them without loathing: for, they are both tender, and also excellent flesh.

Tatou, armed with scales. The Armadillo.

There is also that which they call Tatou: this is not very well able to runne, yet (as Hedgehogs with vs) creeping through the bryars and bushes, shee is armed with very hard scales, so that shee cannot be pierced with a sword, if also you wrap the skinne together being taken off, (wherewith the Barbarians make very many Chists, which they call Carameuos) you would say they were warlike Gauntlets. It is of a white flesh, and of an excellent taste.

Iacare, or Crocodiles, kept tame.

Moreouer, vnto these beasts, which are most common with the Americans, Crocodiles, called Iacare, are added, of the bignesse of a mans thigh, and proportionable length: but they are so farre from doing any hurt, that the Barbarians houses are full of these Iacare, and the little children play with them without any danger. Those Crocodiles which I happened to see, had a very wide mouth, long legs, with a tayle neither round nor sharpe, but very small at the end: and whether, as some haue written, they moue the vpper chap, I freely confesse, that I haue not obserued. Moreouer, the Americans take Lizards, they call them Tonous, not greene, but russet, and of a spotted skinne, like our Countrie small Lizards. And although they bee foure or fiue foote long, and proportionable in bignesse, and therefore of a terrible forme, yet notwithstanding like Frogs, they abide in the Riuers, and Marishes, hurtfull vnto none. Furthermore, the skinne being plucked off, if they be bowelled, and sodden, they are very delicate meate, so that I haue not tasted any thing more sweet in America. For, they are of as white a flesh as Capons are with vs, delicate, tender and sweet, that nothing excelleth them: yet in the beginning I abhorred

Tonous, Lizards

horred the taste thereof, but afterward when I had tasted them better, as touching meates, the Lizards were chiefly commended of mee.

The Tououpinambaultij haue also very great Toads, which they eate being rosted, without bowelling. But seeing both Physicians teach, and it is also commonly knowne, and apparent, that the flesh, and corrupt bloud, and whatsoeuer else belongeth to the Toade, is deadly, any one, although I hold my peace, may easily coniecture, that by reason of the temperatenesse of that Countrie, or some other cause, whereof I am ignorant, it happeneth, that Toades, there, are not venomous, and dangerous at all, as they are with vs. Toades eaten in America.

They eate Serpents also, of the bignesse of a mans arme, fiue foote long almost. Moreouer, I haue obserued, that the Barbarians (as I mentioned concerning Crocodiles) brought home a certaine kinde of them, party-coloured, with blacke and red, and cast them downe among their wiues and children, so secure, that they handled them with their hands. These monstrous Land-Eeles, they cut into pieces, and dresse: but they are vnsauoury, and of very little taste. The Americans vse to eate very great Serpents.

Diuers kindes of Serpents also are bred with them, and specially in the Riuers, where they appeare greene like pot-herbes, long and slender, whose stinging is very hurtfull. There are also Lizards in the Woods (besides those which we mentioned before) very dangerous, as it shall manifestly appeare by the discourse which I will here set downe. When therefore I sometimes trauelled to see the Countrie, with two Frenchmen in my companie, and that, as the manner was, wee had not the Barbarians to guide vs in the way, and therefore wandred in the Woods, and passed through a deepe Valley, hearing the noise of a certaine beast comming towards vs, supposing it to bee some timerous and harmeleſſe wilde beast, notwithstanding, proceeding on our intended Iourney, wee were secure and quiet in minde: but presently, thirtie paces distant almost from vs, on the right hand, wee saw a Lizard on an hill, bigger then the body of a man, and fiue or sixe foot long. Hee, being spread all ouer with white and rough scales like Oyster-shells, holding vp one of his fore-feet, with his head aloft, and shining eyes, began to behold vs. Wherefore being astonished (for none of vs, as it then fell out, carried a Hand-gunne, but had onely our Swords at our sides, and Bowes and Arrowes, which weapons could not greatly hurt that Monster armed with such hard scales: Neuertheleſſe, fearing leſt if wee shifted for our selues by flight, being swifter then wee, he would dispatch vs altogether) when the one fearefully beheld the other, we stood still in the same place. But after that prodigious and fearefull Lizard had beheld vs a quarter of an houre, with an open mouth, and because it was exceeding hot weather (for it was a cleere day, almost at noone) fetching a deepe groane, that wee might easily heare it, vpon a sodaine, he went vnto the top of a Mountaine, with so great noise of the crashing and breaking of twigs and boughs, as a Deere running through a Wood, would scarce haue made. Wee therefore, who then were much affrighted, not being very carefull to pursue him, gaue thankes vnto God who had deliuered vs, and proceeded againe on our intended Iourney. And embracing their opinion who affirme, that the Lizard is delighted with the sight of a man, it seemed to me, that the beholding of vs pleased that Monster as much as we were tormented through his presence. There is also a wilde beast bred with them, that liueth vpon the prey, which they call Iau-ouare. This beast hath legs almost as long as an running Dog, and matcheth him almost in swiftnesse; but about the chinne hath long shagged haire, with a spotted skinne, and faire, like vnto a Lynx, and also very like in the rest. The Barbarians not without iust cause, greatly feare that wilde beast. For seeing shee is accustomed to the prey, as also, the Lion, if shee catch any of them, she teareth him in pieces, and deuoureth him. But as they are desirous of reuenge, and suffer not any of those things vnreuenged which are troublesome vnto them: if they take any, in hollow trenches which they make for that cause, or with any other kinde of Traps or Gins, they put her to a lingring death, shooting her through with many Arrowes, that shee might the longer languish: and that it may the better appeare, how cruelly that wilde beast dealeth with the Barbarians, when sometimes fiue or sixe Frenchmen of the companie passed by this way, the Americans aduised vs, to beware of the Iau-ouare, because that very selfe-same weeke, shee had cruelly deuoured three men in a certaine Village of theirs. Iau-ouare, a wilde beast, dangerous to men.

I thought good to adde to this Edition, that the Americans, before the Voyage of Villagagnon had neuer seene Dogs: and therefore, when they beheld a Dog of the kinde of Hounds, which with certaine whelpes we brought thither, and that he faulted on vs, they were astonished, and fled away from him, because (as I mentioned before) hee came neere vnto the shape of the Iau-ouare. For that cause also, Gomara in his Generall Indian Historie, testifieth, that in the yeere 1509. when Christopherus Columbus first arriued at the Iland Beringua, called also by the name of Saint Iohn, the Indians of this Countrie, who made warre with the Spaniards, greatly feared a red Dog, and that he stood them in as good stead almost as two Harquebuſſers: because he did not onely fiercely assaile the Barbarians, but also discerning his companions from the Enemies, although being prouoked, he was not offensiue vnto them, but also taking notice of the Caribes (the worst, and most detestable nation of all those Countries) pursued them, fleeing into the middest of the Armie of the Enemies, and being so much prouoked, tooke no rest, vntill he Dogs, strict seen by the Americans.

The Authors report of a prodigious Lizard.

he had torne the Enemie in pieces on whom he seized: fighting so fortunately for the Spaniards, that being accompanied with him, they fought so cheerfully against the Indians, as if they had had three horsemen in their companie. Yet this Dog, while hee swam after I know not what Cariba, being shot with a poisoned Arrow died, and made his Master very sorrowfull, and the Indians ioyfull and glad. So, Vallouas also, the most valiant Captaine of the Spaniards, when he first discouered the South Sea, letting slip the Dogs which hee had, against the Indians, who withstood him, from entring on the Land, the Barbarians were stricken with so great a feare, that they were compelled to prouide for themselues by flight: and the Dogs of Vallouas, preuailed as much as the best Souldiers of them all. Moreouer, many Monkeyes are found on the Brasilian coast, little and blacke, which they call Coy, which I cease to describe, because they are very well knowne vnto vs. I will onely declare this one thing, that seeing they continually liue in the tops of trees, bearing fruits in cods like vnto our Beanes, wherewith they are nourished, and meete together there in companies, especially when the smoaking showres fall, it is a pleasant thing to heare them crying, and making a noise. But seeing at one birth they onely bring forth one young one, the Monkey, as soone as he commeth into the world is indued with that naturall industrie, that he firmely hangeth about the necke of the Syre, or the Damme: therefore if Hunters come suddenly vpon them, the Syre or Dammes leaping through the boughs, he also taketh his flight together with them. For which cause, the Barbarians cannot easily catch Monkeyes of any age whatsoeuer: yet they cast them downe from trees wounded with Arrowes, and afterward hauing healed them, and made them tame a little while at home, they exchange and barter them for Merchandises. But at the first, they are so fierce, that they wound the fingers of them that handle them, with their teeth, so that being bitten, they are very often compelled through paine, to kill them with strokes.

Cap. 62.

Of Monkeyes.

The industrie of the Monkeyes in deliuering their young from danger.

The manner of taking Monkeyes.

Sagouin a beautifull little beast.

There is also another kinde of Monkey among the Americans, which they call Sagouin, of the bignesse of a Squirrell, and of a red haire: but as touching the shape, in the snout, breast, necke, and almost all the other parts, being very like vnto a Lion, and also hardie, it giueth place in beautie to none of the little beasts, which surely I saw there. And if it were as easily brought ouer the Sea as the rest, it would be of farre greater price and estimation. But seeing it is of so weake a little bodie, that it cannot indure the working of the ship; for it is of that haughtinesse of spirit, that if it be offended neuer so little, it would die through discontentment: yet some are here to be found. But, that I may freely confesse the matter as it is, although I haue beene curious, I was not so diligent in obseruing all the liuing creatures of America, as I desired, neuertheless, that I may once make an end, I will yet describe two kindes, which are monstrous in shape, as those that art most.

Hay, a deformed beast.

The one which the Barbarians call Hay, is of the bignesse of a Dog, with an hanging bellie, like a farrowing Sow with pigge, of an ash-colour haire very much washed, with a very long tayle, hairy feet after the manner of a Beare, and long clawes: but as, while it liueth in the Woods, it is very fierce; yet being taken, it is very easily tamed. But the naked Tououpinambaultis doe not willingly play with him, because he hath both long, and also sharpe clawes. They say, it liueth onely on aire.

Coaty, with a monstrous great snout.

The other, whereof I am also to speake, called by the Barbarians, Coaty, is of the height of an Hare, with short and spotted haire, little and sharpe eares, both of a little head, and also with an eminent snout from the eyes, more then a foote long, round like a walking-staffe, suddenly decreasing at the end, so that it is altogether of an equall thickneſse, with so narrow a mouth, that is can scarce receiue the little finger. None may be found more monstrous: afterward, when this wilde beast is taken, gathering her foure feet together, shee bendeth her selfe to the one side or the other, or falleth flat downe: nor can shee euer bee raised, nor compelled to eate, vnlesse Ants be giuen her, on which shee also feedeth in the Woods.

Oura, birds.

This Chapter also, wherein I will intreate of Birds, I thought good to beginne with those which are fit for the maintenance of mans life, and by a generall name, are called Oura, by the Tououpinambaultis: they haue great plentie of those Hennes, vnto the which wee gaue the name from India, and they call them Arginau-oussou: from that time also since the Portugals liued among the Barbarians, our Countrymen vsed to nourish Hennes, called by them, Arginau-miri. And although (as I haue else-where mentioned) they esteeme the white ones very much, that plucking off the feathers, and dying them red, they might clothe and decke themselues; yet for the most part they abstain from both kinds, as touching the eating of them. Moreouer, seeing they perswade themselues, that the Egs, which they call Arginau-ropia, are, as it were, poison, they were not only astonished, if we supped Egs before them, but also reprouing vs, added moreouer, that it was not to be suffered; for, while we preuented the hatching of chickens, we eate an Henne in an egge. Therefore, they are almost as carefull of their Hennes, as of the Birds, which liue in the Woods. they suffer them to lay whereſoeuer they are disposed. But the Hens in like manner, bring home their chickens out of the briars and bushes, so that the Americane women may be without trouble.

Arginau-oussou, Indian Hennes.

Arginau-miri, our Countrie Hennes.

Arginau-ropia, an egge.

Together with the Hennes, the Barbarians also nourish Indian Duckes at home, they call them them Upec. But because the Tououpinambaultij are so superstitious, that they thinke, if they should eate so slow a creature, they should get the same slowneſſe, so that if the Enemies should assaile them, they could not seeke their safetie by flight: no man may easily perswade them to taste the least morsell of them, and for that cause they abstaine from all those creatures which goe slowly, and also from fishes, as Raies or Thornebacke, and others which cannot swimme swiftly. As touching these Birds which liue in the woods, they take them as great as Capons, and those of three sorts, which the Barbarians call Iacoutin, Iacupen, and Iacou-ouassou. They haue all blacke and ash-colour Feathers, and come neere vnto the Pheasants in taste, and I may truely affirme, that no sweeter or more delicate meate can euer be eaten, then those Iacoas are.

Upec, Indian Ducke.

Iacou, a kinde of Pheasant.

Besides, there are two kindes of most exquisite and choice Birds, which are named Mouton, of the bigneſſe of Peacocks, with the same Feathers which the former had, and they are very seldome found.

Mouton, a rare Bird.

Macacoua, and Inambou-ouassou, are two kindes of Partridges, of the bigneſſe of our Country Geese, not much vnlike the taste of Mutton. These three following haue one and the same taste almost, Inambour-miri of the height of Partridges: Pegassou Stockedoues, and Paicacu the Turtle Doue.

A kinde of great Partridges.

But that I may briefly finish the discourse of Birds, which are found in great plentie, both in the Woods, Riuers, and also in the shoares, I will come vnto those which are not so fit for foode. Among the rest, there are two kindes of the same bigneſſe, which come neere to the greatneſſe of a Rauen or Crow: which as the rest of the American Birds, haue crooked bils and talons, as also Parrats, in which number they might be reckoned. As touching the Feathers, as it is easily iudged, I scarce thought that Birds of such excellent beautie were to be found in the whole world, in the beholding whereof, abundant matter offereth it selfe, not as prophane men, to commend nature, but the creator: and that it may manifestly appeare, the first which the Barbarians call Arat, hath the feathers in the traine and wings, of a foote and a halfe long, partly purple like vnto red, and partly of a blew colour, greatly shining; to the which also, the other parts of the body are correspondent. When this Bird moueth in the Sunne, where she very much abideth, no man can euer be satisfied with her sight.

Arat, a Bird with excellent Feathers.

The other called Canide, with the inferiour Feathers, and those that are round about the necke shining of the colour of gold, and those that couer the backe, wings, and traine of an excellent blew colour, seeing they seeme to be vnder-laid with embrodered gold, and ouer-laid with a Veluet Mantle, aboue it causeth great admiration to the beholders.

Canide, a Bird with blew feathers.

But although these Birds be not domesticall, yet they oftner build their nests in the tops of the trees which are in the middle of the Villages, then in the woods, whereby it commeth to passe, that the Barbarians plucke their Feathers three or foure times in the yeare, of the which Feathers they make Cappes, Garments, and Bracelets, decke the handles of their clubbes, and adorne their bodies. I brought many such Feathers with me into France.

Feathers, of the which, caps, garments &c. are made.

Three or foure sorts of Parrats are taken there: the greatest and fairest whereof the Barbarians call Aiourous. These haue the head intermingled with red, yellow, and violet colours, the ends of the wings scarlet or crimson, the taile, which is very long, yellow, and the rest of the body greene; very few such are brought vnto vs.

Aiourous, great and very faire Parrats.

A Woman in a certaine Village, some foure miles distant from our Iland, had brought vp one of this kinde, which as if she had beene indued with reason, conceiued those things which she was commanded. As often as we went that way, we presently heard the Mistresse of that Bird say, will you giue me a Combe, or a Looking-glasse, and I will presently command my Parrat to sing and daunce before you? If happily we granted her request, the Parrat presently hearing certaine words of her Mistresse, did not onely dance on the pearch where she sat, but also prattled, and whistled; and lastly, she wonderfully counterfeited the Barbarians going to the wars. To be short, if her Mistresse thought good to bid her sing, she sung, if to daunce, she danced: contrarily, if not rewarding her, with a little sharper speech she had commanded her their Auge, that is, be still, then she presently held her peace, nor could we make her with any words to mone either her tongue, or feete neuer so little: wherefore I leaue it to the Readers to be considered whether if the Romans had had such a Parrat they would not highly haue esteemed her, who, as Pliny recordeth, sometimes solemnized the death of a Crow with innumerable rites of funeral, by which, at the place of Common Pleas, they were euery morning by name saluted, and punished him with death, who killed the same. The Barbarian woman called this Parrat Cherimbaué, that is to say, her best beloued. And surely she was so deere vnto her, that demanding at what price we might buy her, she answered in scoffing manner Mocaouassou, that is to say, a great brasse piece, and therefore we could not wrest her from her at any price. I found that they made their Nests in the holes of hollow Trees.

A wonderfull storie of a Parrat.

Lib. 10. cap. 63.

Among the rest of the American Birds, the first place shall be giuen to a certaine Bird named Toucan, whereof we made mention of before. It is of the bigneſſe of a Pigeon, of a blacke colour like a Crow, except the breſt, which is of a yellow colour, compassed from the lower part with a ring a ring of red feathers, which being taken away, the Barbarians vse it for ornament of the cheeks and other parts of the body. And it is highly esteemed with them, because they vse it when they intend to daunce. From thence it hath taken the name Toucan-tabourace, that is, a Feather to daunce with. Yet notwithstanding, they haue such store of them, that they refuse not to change them for our Merchandizes. The bill of this Bird exceedeth the rest of the body in length, wherewith a Cranes beake is not to be compared, and therefore it is to be accompted the most monstrous bill of the whole world.

The monstrous bill of a Bird.

There is another of the bignesse and colour of a Black-bird, except the brest, which is as red as Oxe bloud; this, the Barbarians take away after the same manner that they did the former, and call the Bird Panou.

Panu a Bird with a red breast.

There is also another of the bignesse of an Owzell, with all the Feathers of a scarlet colour, this they call Quampian.

Quampian, a Bird of a scarlet colour.

But one very little Bird is not to be omitted, of no lesse admiration then smalnesse, which the Barbarians call Gonambuch, with white and shining Feathers: it exceedeth not a drone Bee, or Beetle in bignesse, yet maketh wonderfull melodie in singing. Sitting vpon that great Milium which the Barbarians call Anati, or other high plants, she singeth so loud, that vnlesse she be seene you would scarse beleeue that so loud, and sweete melodie could proceede from that small body. She is not inferior to our Nightingale.

Gonambuch, a very little bird.

But because I cannot particularly describe all the American Birds, which differ not a little from ours, not onely in kinde, but also in variety of colour, as rose colour, red, violet, white, ash-colour, purple, &c. I will at length describe one, which the Barbarians so obserue and esteeme, that they will not onely not hurt her, but suffer them not to escape vnreuenged who doe her any wrong. She is of the bignesse of a Pigeon, and ashcolour, the Tonoupinambaultij heare her more often in the night then in the day, with a mournefull voyce, and beleeue that she is sent from their friends and kindred, vnto them, and also declareth good lucke, and especially, that she incourageth and admonisheth them to behaue themselues valiantly in the warres against their enemies. Besides, they verily thinke that if they rightly obserue these diuinations, it shall come to passe, that they should vanquish their Enemies, euen in this life, and after death, their soules should flye beyond the Mountaines, to their ancestors, perpetually to daunce there.

The variety of the American Birds.

I chanced once to lodge in a Village, named Vpec by the French men, there, in the night I heard those Birds, not singing, but making a lamentable noise. I saw the Barbarians most attentiue, and being ignorant of the whole matter, reproued their folly. But, when I smiled a little vpon a French man standing by me, a certaine old man seuerely enough restrained me with these words: hold your peace, least you hinder vs, who attentiuely harken to the happy tidings of our aunce-stours. For, as often as wee heare these Birds, so often also are we cheered, and our strength receiueth increase.

The dotage of the Barbarians who obserue the singing of a Bird.

The Americane Bees differing from ours, are like vnto the lesser blacke flyes wherewith we are troubled in the time of Summer, and make their hony combes in the hole of a rotten tree. The Barbarians are skilfull to gather hony and waxe. Being gathered, intermingled, they call it Yra-yetic, for Yra signifieth hony, and Yetic waxe. The hony being seuered, they eate it after our manner, but keepe the waxe which resembleth the blackenesse of Pitch made into lumps of the bignesse of a mans arme. Yet, not that they make Torches or Candles therewith, for, there is no other vse of a Candle with them, then of a certaine wood which sendeth forth a most cleere and bright flame. But they chiefly vse that Wax to stop those huge canes, wherein they put their Feathers, least they should be eaten, and gnawed with the Butter-flyes, which also we will describe in this place.

Yra, Hony.

Yetic, blacke Waxe.

They are called Arauers by the Barbarians, of the bignesse of Grashoppers, they also come in great multitudes to the fire as Creekets doe, and if they finde anie thing they eate it, but especiallie they so gnaw leather doublets and shooes, that they whollie consume the superficies and vpper graine thereof. But, if we negligently set vp Hennes, or other meates of that kinde, in the morning the bare bones were found without flesh.

Arauers, Butter-flies.

The Barbarians being stung with Scorpions applie bruised Scorpions to the wound, if they can get them. Moreouer, as we haue elsewhere said, that they are most desirous of reuenge, nay, I might almost say, that they are made against all hurtfull things, so that if vnawares they stumble at a stone, they bite them after the manner of mad Dogges, and diligently seeke out all liuing creatures hurtfull vnto them, and vtterly roote them out as much as they can.

The Barbarians most desirous of reuenge.

The Countrie of America hath also land Crabbes, the Tonoupinambaultij call them Onssa; they goe in multitudes like Locusts, vnto the Sea shoare, and fennie places, and if any one goe thither he may see them flying hither and thither: they conuey themselues into the bodies and rootes of trees, out of the which they cannot safely be drawne, for they pinch the fingers and hands of such as take them, with their clawes. They are farre leaner then the Sea Crabs, but because they smell of the Iuniper rootes, they are nothing pleasing to the taste.

Land Crabs.

His discourse of America fishes I haue omitted, except this which you shall now heare. I will not omit a storie which I heard reported by a Barbarian. When, saith he, on a certaine day, I was carried carried in a Boate with certaine others, in a verie calme Sea, a certaine huge fish tooke hold with the hand on the brim of the Boate, and in my iudgement, it would either haue ouer turned it, or gotten vp into it. I seeing that, cut off the hand with a sickle which I had in a readinesse, so that it fell into the Boate, and it had fine fingers verie like vnto ours: besides, for paine which that fish felt, putting the head aboue water, which was like vnto the head of a man, it squeaked a little, and made a certaine noise.

The report of a Barbarian, concerning a fish with hands and countenance, resembling the shape of a man.

First, because the Brasil tree is the most famous of all that soile (from whence also that Countrie hath taken the name) especially for the colour which our Dyers make therewith, I will describe it in this place. This Tree therefore is called by the Barbarians, Araboutan, and equalleth our Oake in height and plentie of Boughes. Some of these are found, the thicknesse whereof containeth full as much as three men can fathome.

Chap. 13. Of the trees, hearbs, roots, and most exquisite fruits which grow in the American soyle.

After what manner that Timber vseth to be brought into the Shippes, I thought good in this place to describe. But first you are to vnderstand, that except the Merchants were holpen by the Inhabitants, they could scarce lade a Ship with that Timber within a yeare, both for the hardnesse, and therefore the difficultie in cutting, and also chiefely, because that Countrie wanteth all labouring Beasts, and therefore it is to be carried vpon the shoulders of men. The Barbarians being hired for Garments, Shirts, Cappes, Knives, and other Merchandizes, doe not onely cut, cleaue, and make round that Timber, but also laying it vpon their bare shoulders, carrie it into the Shippes, and sometime in most cumbersome places, lying three or foure miles distant from the wood to the shoare. But I expressely say, that the Barbarians, since the French men and Portugals came vnto them, cut their Brasil trees, for before that time (as farre as I vnderstood from the elder sort) they had no other way of felling them, saue that they ouerthrew them by putting fire vnto them. Moreouer, because I know some thinke that the timber which is brought vnto vs, hath the thicknesse of the trees, I purposely added, that the Barbarians made it round, that they might the more easily carrie the same.

Araboutan, the Brasil tree, and the forme thereof.

The Country of America wanteth all beasts of burden.

The Barbarians cut the timber and carry it into the Ships.

The ancient manner of felling trees, among the Barbarians.

Furthermore, it hath bin obserued by me, for so long time as I liued in America, and vsed a cleare fire through the benefit of this wood, that this kinde of wood was nothing moist, which vsually happeneth to most of the other kindes of wood: nay, that it was dry as it were by nature, and beeing kindled, yeeldeth very little smoake. One of our men desired to wash our shirts, and vnawares, put the ashes of the Brasil wood into the lye, whereby they were so surely died with a red colour, that although they were washed, they neuer changed the same, and being so died with that colour, we were to put them on.

The Brasil wood, almost without smoak.

The ashes of the Brasil wood dye shirts of a red colour.

Because our Tououpinambaultis doe not meanely wonder, when they see French men, and other strangers comming farre off from remote Countries, take so much paines to carrie backe their Shippes laden with their Araboutan, that is to say, the Brasil or red wood: Therefore a certaine elderly man of the Barbarians, sometimes questioned me in this manner, concerning that matter: What meaneth it, that you Mair and Peros (that is French men and Portugals*) come so farre to fetch Wood? doth your Countrie yeelde you no wood for the fire?* Then said I, it yeeldeth full surely, and that in great plentie, but not of that kinde of trees, such as yours are; especially Brasil, which our men carrie from hence, not to burne, as you suppose, but for to dye. Here he presently excepting; But haue you, said he, neede of so great plentie of that wood? Yea surely, said I, for seeing euen one Merchant with vs possesseth more Scarlet Cloathes, more Knives and Sissers, and more Looking-glasses (alledging knowne and familiar examples vnto him) then all those which were euer brought hither vnto you: he onely will buy all the Brasil, to the end that many Shippes might returne laden from hence. Ah (saith the Barbarian) you tell me strange and wonderfull things. Then presently remembring what he had heard, he proceeded to demand further questions of me. But, saith he, that great rich man, of whom you make report, doth he not die? He dieth, said I, as also other men doe. There, then (as these Barbarians loue to comment, and doe not absurdly finish their intended speech without interruption euen vnto the end) he began to demand of me: Who therefore, saith he, is heire of those goods which this man leaueth when he dieth? His children, said I, if he haue any: if he haue none, his brethren, sisters, or his next kindred.

The difference of a certaine Barbarian with the Author.

When I had said this, surely (saith that my discreete old fellow) hereby I easily perceiue, that you Mair (that is French men) are notable fooles. For, what needs you so greatly to tire and turmoile your selues in sailing ouer the Sea, in passing whereof (as being here arriued you report to vs) you sustaine so many miseries? Is it, forsooth, that you might get riches for your children, or louing kinsfolke? Is not the Earth, which hath nourished vs, sufficient also to maintaine them? we surely haue both children, and also kinsfolke, and them, as you see, we loue dearely; but seeing we confidently hope, that it shall come to passe, that after our death, the same Earth which nourished vs, shall also relieue and cherish them, therein we repose our selues and rest content.

An excellent sentence deliuered by a Barbarian.

But that I may present the description of the American Trees, foure or fiue kindes of Palme trees are found there: among which, that is accounted most common, which they call Geran, and another also named Yri: notwithstanding, as I saw none of their fruites, so, as I thinke, I eate none. Yri bringeth forth a round fruite like Damsens in the shape of a large cluster of so great weight, that it may hardly be lifted vp with one hand, but the kernell onely is of the bigneſſe of a Cherrie, and may be eaten. Beſides, in the top of theſe Palmes, there is a certaine white yong tendrell or branch, which we cut off, to eate the ſame: Philippus who was troubled with the hæmroides, affirmed, that it was a remedy for that diſeaſe, the warrantable truth whereof I leaue to the Phiſitians.

A tendrell or yong branch in the top of the Palmes to be eaten.

There is alſo another tree, called by the Barbarians Aiyri, which although it be very like the Palme in leaues, with the ſtocke armed on euery ſide with thornes and pricks, reſembling the points of needles. The Fruite is of an indifferent bigneſſe, in the middeſt whereof there is a kernell of the whiteneſſe of Snow, which yet is not to be eaten; and this I ſuppoſe to be a kinde of Ebeny: for beſides that it is of a blacke colour, and of ſuch hardneſſe, that the Barbarians partly vſe it for the making of their clubs and arrowes (which I will more at large deſcribe when I ſhall treate of their wars) it is alſo ſmoothed, and made very bright, and laſtly, is ſo heauie, that being caſt into the water, it preſently ſinketh to the bottome.

Aiyri, a thorny kinde of Ebeny

They haue diuers coloured woods, and diuers of differing ſcent: one ſmelling like a roſe; another called Aou-ai, of the moſt ſtinking ſmell of Garlicke, which no man is able to indure, while it is hewed or burnt: it hath leaues not much vnlike the leaues of our Apple trees: but the fruite thereof (which commeth neere in ſhape to the rough ſhell of a Cheſnut) and eſpecially the kernell, is ſo venemous, that to him that eateth it, it reſembleth the effect of the moſt ſtrong and deadle poiſon. Notwithſtanding our Barbarians highly eſteeme that fruite, becauſe they make their Rattles of it. Here alſo it is to be conſidered, that Braſilia (as we ſhall hereafter ſpeake) bearing excellent apples of very many kindes, aboundeth alſo with trees, which ſurely yeelde very goodly fruites, yet vnprofitable to bee eaten. Eſpecially on the ſhoare there are many ſmall ſhrubbes, the apples whereof being very like vnto our Country Medlers, are dangerouſly eaten. Therefore, when the Barbarians ſee the French men, and other ſtrangers comming to gather thoſe apples, often vſing the word Ypochi, in their Country language, they admoniſh them to abſtaine from them.

Aou-ai, a kinde of wood of a moſt ſtinking ſmell.

Very many American trees beare poiſonous fruits.

The tree called by the Barbarians Choyne, is of an indifferent height, with leaues of the ſhape and greeneneſſe of a Bay leafe, with Apples of the bigneſſe of a childes head, comming neere vnto the ſhape of the Eſtridges egges, which ſurely are no meate. Of theſe the Tououpinambaultij, by reaſon of the hardneſſe of the ſhell, pierſing ſome of them through whole, in length and breadth wherewith they make their Maraca or Rattles: they alſo hollow and diuide them into halues, for cups and other ſmall veſſels.

The tree Choyne, of whoſe fruite the Barbarians make their Maraca.

Sabaucaie is alſo numbred among the Braſilian trees, hauing an apple bigger then both a mans fiſts, and imitating the forme of a cup: in the bottome whereof certaine ſmall kernels are found, like vnto Almonds, and almoſt they reſemble the very taſte of Almonds.

Sabaucaie whoſe fruite is properly vſed for the making of veſſels.

Moreouer, there is a tree in thoſe Countries, of the height of our Seruice tree, whoſe apple the Barbarians name Acaiou, of the bigneſſe and ſhape of an Hens egge, which when it is ripe, inclining to the colour of Gold, like vnto a Quince, is not onely profitably eaten, but alſo yeeldeth ſomewhat a tart iuice, not vnpleaſing to the taſte, which moſt comfortably cooleth thoſe that are inflamed with heate.

This is a kinde of Coco.

Acaiou, a fruite to be eaten.

Paco-aire, is a ſhrub, of ten or twelue foote high, with a ſtocke, ſometimes of the thickneſſe of a mans thigh, which notwithſtanding is ſo tender, that it may be cut downe at one ſtroake with a Sword: the Barbarians call the apple Paco, of the length of a mans hand, not vnlike a Cucumber in ſhape, and of the ſame colour alſo, when it commeth to ripeneſſe. But theſe apples grow, for the moſt part, twentie or fiue and twenty thicke together, on euery bough, which the Americans gathering, carry them into their cottages, of ſo great a waight as they are able to beare with one hand. And as touching the goodneſſe of this apple, when it is ripe, the knop being plucked of after the manner of a freſh gathered Figge, it ſeemeth clottie and full of cluſters: whereby it commeth to paſſe, that to them that eate it, it reſembleth the Figge, whereupon, we called it a Figge: but in taſte it excelleth the moſt delicate Maſſilienſian Figges; and therefore not vnworthily it may be reckoned among the beſt fruites of all that coaſt. The forme of the leaues of Paco-aire, is not vnlike the leaues of water-Sorrell, but they are of ſo great a bigneſſe, that commonly the length is extended to ſix feete, and the breadth aboue two: whereby it commeth to paſſe, that I cannot be perſwaded by any meanes to beleeue that in Europe, Aſia, and Africa, there are leaues of ſo great length and breadth. For, although I heard a certaine Apothecary affirming, that he had ſeene a leafe of Petaſitis of the breadth of an Elle and a quarter, that is (for this Plant is round) whoſe circumference contained in compaſſe three Elles and three quarters: yet this largeneſſe came nothing neere to the greatneſſe of our Paco-aire. It is true ſurely that the thickneſſe of thoſe leaues anſwere not the length, nay, they are very ſlender, yet daily lifted vp, ſo that the middle ribbe onely beareth the violence of the moſt vehement winde, wherewith that Country is very often troubled; but the reſt is ſo iagged and cut a ſunder, that to him that beholdeth them a farre off, theſe ſhrubs are ſuppoſed to be decked with Eſtridges feathers.

As touching the Bombasin Cotton-shrubs, which grow vp to an indifferent heigth, they are found in great number, in Brasill: they yeeld flowres, like the little yellow bels of buddes of Cucumbers: but when the Apple is formed, it commeth not only verie neer vnto the Mast of Beech, but also being ripe, diuideth it selfe into foure parts, which yeeld Bombasin Cotton in flockes of the bignesse of a ball, which the Barbarians call Ameni-ibil. In the midst of those flockes certaine blacke graines are found, close ioined and verie much prest together, after the forme of a mans Kidnie, the greatnesse of which compacture exceedeth not a Beane. Moreouer, the Barbarian women are not vnskilfull in gathering and spinning that Bombasin Cotton, for of it they make their beds.

Ameni-ibil, Bombasin Cotton.

Reeds often grow in the Woods, of the bignesse of a mans legge: but as I said before of Paccuire, they are so tender, that while they are yet standing, any one of them may bee cut downe with one stroake of a Sword, yet being drie, they are of such hardnesse that when they are cleft, and fashioned after the manner of the Surgeons Lancets, the Barbarians do head their Arrowes therewith, that they ouerthrow wilde beasts flat to the ground at one shoot.

Reeds, wherewith the Barbarians head their Arrowes.

Matiebe also groweth in this our America among the briers and bushes, which together, almost, with infinite other odoriferous herbes and flowres, perfumeth the earth with a most sweet and pleasant scent. The Trees are neuer spoiled of their leaues, being not troubled at all with the cold, they flourish all the whole Yeere, as the Woods vse to doe with vs in the moneth of May.

Matiebe.

Trees continually flourishing in America.

The plant which bringeth forth the fruit Ananas, is like in forme vnto the Flowre-deluce, with crooked bending leaues, diuided round about, comming neere vnto Aloe, of the same forme with the greater Thistle, but the Apple which is of the bignesse of an indifferent Melon, and of the shape of a Pine Apple, bending to no part, groweth after the manner of our Artichoke.

The Plant Ananas, and the leaues thereof.

Those Ananas when they are come to full ripenesse, are of a golden colour imitating blue, and yeeldeth the smell of the fruit of the Idean Bramble, so that by the smell they were easily found of vs, wandring in the Woods and other places where they grow: they are of so sweet and pleasant a taste, that none of our preserued fruits excell them. Therefore I thinke it to bee the best fruit of all America. I sometimes wrung one of them, out of the which I drew a Cruze of iuice, which vnto me, seemed nothing inferiour vnto the Wine which they call Malmesey.

Ananas the most excellent fruit of all America.

Lastly, as I haue said, that among the Americans, no foure-footed beasts, birds, fishes, nor any liuing creatures, in all things resemble ours of Europe: so I now affirme, as much as I could finde by experience wandring through the Woods and Fields, that there are no Trees, or Herbes, and lastly no fruits, which are not vnlike to ours, except these three Plants, Purslane, Basill Royall, and Fearne, which grow in certaine places.

All the trees, herbs, & fruits of America (except three) differ from ours.

§. II.

Of the Warre, Battailes, Fortitude, and Weapons of the Barbarians: and of their Religion.

ALthough our Tououpinambaults, Topinenquin make immortall warre against diuers bordering Nations, after the manner of all the rest of the Barbarians. Notwithstanding, they contend not by warre to inlarge their bounds (for they possesse more Lands then they need) or thinke of the getting of Riches, by the spoiles, ransomes, and armes of the conquered. For as they all confesse, they are prouoked through no other affection then that they might most reuerely reuenge the death of their Parents and Friends long since taken, and deuoured by the enemie. Moreouer, when warre is first proclaimed betweene certaine of these people, all of them agreeing in this, that the enemie vnto whom injurie is done, will perpetually thinke on the reuenging of the same, and therefore that it is to be attributed to cowardize, if being brought into their power, they suffer him to escape vnpunished: their enmities are so inueterate, and of such continuance, that they can neuer be reconciled each to other.

chap. 14. For what cause the Americans make warre.

The Barbarians cannot be reconciled to their enemies.

But the manner whereby our Tououpinambaults assemble, being readie to goe to the warres, is this, as much as I could obserue. Although they haue no Kings or Princes among them, but are almost equall in dignitie, yet this is giuen them by nature (which also was most exactly in former times obserued by the Lacedemonians) that they admire and reuerence the elder sort whom they call Peeroru Pichoh, for their experience of things: therefore in euerie Village no contemptible seruice and obedience is performed vnto them. These occasions being offered, either walking or sitting in their Cotton hanging beds, exhort the rest with these, or the like words.

Senatus. The Americans yeeld obedience to the elder sort.

Whas (say they speaking by turne, without interruption of speech) were our Ancestors who not only fought against so many enemies, but also vanquished, slue and deuoured them, an Example vnto vs, that wee should perpetually lye lurking heere at home? Shall wee suffer our Nation, which in former times was so great a terrour to all the rest, that they could not in any sort vnder-their sight, to be so much reproached to our great disgrace, that our enemies should assaile vs by Warre euen in our owne houses? Shall we through our cowardize cause, that the Margaites and Peros-ergaipe (that is, those wicked Nations) assault vs first? Then that Orator clapping his shoulders and buttocks with his hands, addeth these words with exclamation: Erima, Erima, Tonoupinambaults, Conomonassen Tan, Tan, &c. that is to say, My Countrimen, and most valiant young men, wee are not so to doe; but rather let vs prepare vs for the fight, and bequeathe our selues to death and slaughter, or auenge our people.

The Oration of the elder Americans.

With these Orations therefore of the elders, which sometimes are prolonged for six houres, the hearers who most attentiuely hearken, so that they forget not so much as one syllable, being increased both in strength and courage, speaking each to other in euerie Village, assemble as speedily as they may, at the prefixed place in great multitudes. But before wee bring our Tonoupinambaults to the Battaile, wee are to declare with what Weapons they are furnished.

Tacape, a kinde of wooden Club.

And first surely, they haue Tacapes, that is, Clubs, or Swords made some of redde, and some of blacke wood: they are commonly of the length of fiue or sixe feete, round at the ends, or of an ouall shape, of the breadth of a foote, and of the thickneſse of a Thumbe in the middest, but the edges are verie finely sharpened, for they are made of verie heauie wood, such as Boxe is, and are little inferiour to the edge of a verie sharpe Axe: so that I easily beleeue, that one Tonoupinambaultian armed with such a Clubbe, and inraged with furie, would bee able to put two of our Countrie Fencers to much trouble, and driue them to their shifts.

Orapats, a Bow.

Moreouer, they haue Bowes, which they call Orapats, made of the same kinde of wood, to wit, redde and blacke: and they exceed ours so much in length and thicknesse, that none of our men is able either to bend or vnbend them: insomuch as they are of necessitie to vse all their strength for the bending of the Bowes of Children of tenne yeeres old. They vse the herbe called Tocon, for strings, which although it bee verie slender, yet is it of so great a strength, that it may indure the force of an Horse. Their Arrowes are of the length of an Ell, made with three ioynts: the middle part consisting of a Cane or Reede, and the other two of blacke wood: and those pieces are so aptly bound together with certaine barks of Trees, that they could not bee more firmely glued. They apply two little feathers vnto them, of the length of a foote, which they binde together with a Cotton Thread, because Glue is not in vse with them: they aptly ioyne very sharpe bones to the ends, sometimes a piece of a drie Reed, of the length of a mans hand, cut smooth after the manner of a Surgeons Launce: and somtimes the verie end of the taile of the fish Raye, which as I haue elsewhere said, is verie venemous. But, since the Frenchmen and the Portugals came into those Countreyes, the Barbarians, after their manner haue accustomed to strengthen their Arrowes with Iron heads, or at the least, with verie sharpe Nailes.

The herbe Tocon, seruing in steed of Bow strings.

The length of their Arrowes.

We haue alreadie spoken what their dexteritie is, in handling their Clubs: but as touching the Bowes, I hope that all they who haue seene the Barbarians, will confirme that with their naked armes, they shoot so speedily, and so certainly, that (bee it spoken by the Englishmens leaue, who are yet accounted the most skilfull Archers) putting their Arrowes in the hand wherewith they hold their Bow, twelue may sooner bee shot by them, then sixe by the Englishmen.

The Americans most skilfull Archers.

Targets, of Leather.

Lastly, they haue Targets of the Hide of Tapirussu, which I mentioned before, broad, plaine, and round, like to the bottome of a Germane Drumme, with these they couer not themselues in fight, after the manner that our Souldiers vse, but fighting, receiue the Arrowes of the Enemies with them. So these are all the Weapons of the Americans: for they couer not their bodies with other Armour: but contrarily (excepting their Gaps of Feathers, Bracelets, and other short attire, wherewith as aforesaid, they decke their bodie, if they wore but a shirt, being about to goe vnto the battaile, they would presently put it off, fearing least they might be intangled and incumbred therewith.

The Barbarians little esteeme Iron Swords.

If they receiued Iron Swordes from vs, as I gaue one to a certaine Mousacat of mine, they presently cast away the sheathes: they did the like also receiuing Kniues, delighting in the brightnesse of them, and thought them more seruiceable for the cutting of the boughes of Trees, then for fight.

Eight or tenne thousand people being gathered together after the manner which hath beene spoken, with no small number of women, not to fight, but to carrie their bagge and baggage, and prouision of victuall, assembling vnto the Campe, they of the elder sort, who haue slaine and deuoured the greatest number of enemiess, haue the chiefe command and conducting of the forces: who being their Leaders, they prepare themselues for the iournie. And although they goe without order, yet when they march trooping, the most valiant men keeping the Front of the Armie, it is a wonder how well all that whole multitude conuey themselues selues without Tribunes, and Quarter-masters, so that at the sound of the Trumpet they verie speedily assemble in battell array.

The Barbarians keeping no order, yet march without confusion.

But there are some, who with hornes, which they call Inubia, of the length of an elle and an halfe, and of the thicknesse of our Country Speare, of the breadth of an hand at the lower end like a Trumpet, raise the Souldiers, both going out of their Countrie, and when the Campe remoueth. Some also carrie Whistles made of the bones of their enemies, slaine and deuoured in former time, wherewith they continually pipe by the way, that they might stirre vp the mindes of their companions, and increase their desire to kill the enemies in like manner. But if, which often happeneth, they please to vndertake a Voyage, against the Enemie, by Boat, they passe along the shoares, and commit not themselues vnto the maine Sea. They order themselues in their Boats, which they call Ygat, euery one whereof consisteth of the barke of one tree, taken off, and appointed to this vse; yet are they of such largenesse, that euery one of them may receiue fiftie men. Standing therefore after their manner, they driue the Boat forward with an Oare, plaine on both sides, which they hold in the middle. Moreouer, these Boats seing they are plaine, are rowed with very little trouble: yet is there no vse of them in the maine Sea, or if a tempest arise. But, our Barbarians going a warfare, in a great calme, you may see a Fleet consisting of sixtie such Boats. And these passe the Seas with so swift a motion, that they are presently gone out of sight. So, these are the Armies of the Toupinanquin, both by Sea, and Land.

Inubia, huge hornes. Whistles, of mens bones.

Ygat, a Boat of the barke of a tree.

Being furnished after this manner, they sometimes goe fiftie miles into the Enemies borders. And first they vse this stratagem. All the most valiant, leaue the rest with the women and carriages, one or two dayes iourney behind them: they approach with great silence; and possesse the Woods, lying in waite to entrappe the Enemie, for whom they so diligently watch, that oftentimes they lie hid there, for foure and twentie houres. And if they set vpon the Enemie vnawares, as many men, women and children as they meete with, are not onely brought away, but also slaine by the Enemies returning into their Countrey, and put vpon Boucan in pieces, and at length deuoured. And they surprize them so much the more easily, because the Villages (for they haue no Cities) are not compassed with walls, and the Cottages (which yet are foure-score or an hundred paces long) haue no Doores, but in their stead, they set the boughs of Palmes, or the stalke of the herbe Pinde at their Gates. Yet they haue now learned to fortifie and intrench certaine Villages round about, which border vpon the Enemies, with postes of Palmes, of sixe foot long, besides they strengthen the entrances with woodden stakes sharpe at the end: if therefore the Enemies will assaile those Villages by night, which is common with them, then, the Inhabitants of the Village issue safely forth vpon them, whereby it commeth to passe, that whether they fight, or flee, they neuer escape, but some are ouerthrowne through the paine of their wounded feete, who are presently rosted and eaten by the Inhabitants.

The first stratagem of the Barbarians.

But, if they desire to fight in open warre, bringing forth their forces on both sides, it is scarce credible, how cruell and horrible the battell is: whereof my selfe was a beholder, and therefore can iustly make report thereof. I, with another Frenchman, somewhat more curiously, to our great danger, determined to accompanie our Barbarians going to the warres: for if we had beene taken, or hurt by the Margaiates, wee had certainely beene deuoured. These being foure thousand men in number, fought with the Enemie neere vnto the shoare, with such fiercenesse, that they would haue ouercome euen the most furious and outragious.

The Tououpinambaults, as soone as they saw the Enemie, brake out into so great and loude howling and exclamation, as they who here hunt Wolues, make no out-cries comparable with those: for the clamour so pierced the aire, that thunder then could scarse haue beene heard. But, comming neerer, they doubled their cries, and blew their Hornes, and lastly, whistled with their Pipes, the one threatned the other, and in a brauery shewed the bones of their dead Enemies: and also the teeth, whereof some wore them hanging about their neckes, strung vpon a threed aboue two elles long: and lastly, they terrified the beholders with their gesture. But, when they came to ioyne battell, matters fell out farre worse: for, a multitude of Arrowes was shot on both sides, like swarming Flyes in number. Such as were wounded, who were not few, stoutly plucked the Arrowes out of their bodies, which they bit like madde Dogs, and yet abstayned not therefore from the battell. For this Nation is so fierce and cruell, that so long as they haue any little strength, they fight continually, and neuer betake themselues to flight: we withdrawing our selues a little from the conflict, were contented with that spectacle. In the meane space, I protest, who haue diuers times here seene mightie Armies both of horse and foot ordered in battell array, that I was neuer so much delighted in seeing the Legions of footmen in their glittering Armour, as in beholding these Tououpinambaults, while they were fighting. For besides that they were pleasantly seene whistling, leaping, and very speedily and niembly gathering themselues round in a ring: a very thicke cloude of Arrowes was moreouer added; the feathers whereof being rose-colour, blue, red, greene, and of other such like colours, gaue a radiant lustre in the Sunne; their garments also, Caps, Bracelets; and other ornaments of feathers, which made a wonderfull glittering showe in the eyes of the beholders.

The howling and exclamation of the Barbarians comming to the battell.

The shewing of the bones of the slaine.

The Barbarians are exceeding fierce.

The bodies & weapons of the Barbarians decked with feathers.

This battell being ended in the ſpace of three houres, and many ſlaine and wounded on both ſides, our Tououpinambaultij carried away the victorie, and brought about thirtie captiues more or leſſe, both men and women, to their people. And wee, who performed no other ſeruice, but encouraged the Barbarians with our drawne ſwords, and ſmall ſhot, ſometimes diſcharging them, as we beheld them fighting (in that it was moſt acceptable vnto them if ſtrangers went with them to the warres) procured ſo great an opinion of vs, that from that time the elder ſort embraced vs with a ſpeciall good-will and loue.

The captiues are bound.

The Captiues therefore being placed in the middeſt of the Armie, and ſome of the ſtronger bound with ropes, we went vnto the Bay of Ganabara, from which we were diſtant about foure and twenty miles. A few dayes after, certaine Barbarians, who had captiues with them, came vnto our Caſtle, whom by Interpreters, we intreated that they would ſell certaine ſlaues to Villegagnon. So, a great part of the captiues was deliuered from the iawes of the Barbarians: yet hardly, and againſt the will of the Barbarians; which not long after was plainly declared vnto mee. I bought a certaine woman with her little childe ſcarce two yeeres old, the price was certaine merchandiſe, the value whereof amounted to three French pounds. But hee that ſold them, complained thus vnto mee: What will be hereafter I know not, but ſince Paycolas (for ſo they named Villegagnon) arriued here, wee haue ſcarce eaten the halfe part of our captiues. I greatly deſired to keepe that little childe vnto my ſelfe, but Villegagnon, reſtoring my merchandiſes, challenged both the mother and the ſonne. I ſometimes ſaid, vnto the mother, that when I paſſed ouer Sea, I would tranſport the little childe hither. But ſhee (the deſire of taking reuenge is ſo inherent in the mindes of that Nation) anſwered that ſhee had rather that he ſhould be deuoured by the Tououpinambaultij, then to be carried into ſo remote Countries: for ſhee hoped, that growing older, he might by ſome meanes eſcape, and conuey himſelfe vnto his Countrymen, and reuenge the death of his kindred.

Captiues bought by the Frenchmen.

Their feaſting with mans fleſh, &c. is here omitted, though fully handled by the Author: becauſe we haue glutted you already, &c.

Chap. 16.

Of their Religion.

Cicero 1. de Legibus.

ALthough that ſaying of Cicero, be held for a moſt certaine Axiome by the common account of all men, that there is no Nation ſo ſauage, nor ſo fierce, that doth not know that they are to haue a God, although they be ignorant what manner of God they ought to haue: yet, how this may appeare to be true in our Tououpinambaultij, I doe not ſufficiently knowe. For, they are ignorant of the true God, and neither acknowledge nor worſhip any falſe Gods, either celeſtiall or terreſtriall: and therefore haue no publike place where they may aſſemble for the cauſe of Religion. They are ignorant alſo of the creation of the World, diſtinguiſh not dayes by names, nor preferre one before another: they obſerue not weekes, moneths and yeeres, but meaſure times by the Moones. They are not onely altogether ignorant of Scripture, whether it be ſacred or profane, but alſo vtterly without Characters, wherewith they might bee able to write the meaning of the minde. When I firſt came into thoſe Countries, I writ certaine words and ſentences, to acquaint my ſelfe with their Speech, and read them preſently before them. They thinking it to be a iuggling tricke, ſpake one to another in theſe words: Is it not a wonder, that this man, who yeſterday, knew not ſo much as one word of our Language, (by the meanes and helpe of this Paper which teacheth him to ſpeake our words) ſhould now ſo skilfully pronounce them, that they may be vnderſtood of vs?

The Tououpinambaultij are ignorant of the true God, and acknowledge no falſe gods, nor the creation of the world.

Computation of times.

What the Barbarians thinke of the Scripture.

As often as we talked with them, and happened to make mention of God, we ſaid, that we beleeued in one God, Creator of Heauen and Earth, who as he hath made the World, and whatſoeuer things are therein, ſo he gouerneth all things at his pleaſure. When they heard this, looking one vpon another, and breaking out into this word Toh, which is a familiar token of admiration with them, they ſtood ſtill, fixed, and aſtoniſhed: Moreouer, becauſe, as wee ſhall ſpeake in his proper place, they are vehemently terrified with the noiſe of Thunder (which they call Toupan) if bearing with their rudeneſſe, wee tooke occaſion thereby to inſtruct them, and ſaid, that that was the God whereof we ſpake vnto them, who that he might declare his power, ſhooke Heauen and Earth after that manner: they anſwered, that that God by whom they were ſo terrified, was a naughty one: I doe not beleeue that there is any Nation in the whole World, which may be more eſtranged from all Religion. Yet, that I may alſo declare how little apparance of light I perceiued, among thoſe thicke myſts of darkneſſe wherewith they are blinded: I affirme, that they doe not onely beleeue the immortalitie of the ſoules: but are alſo certainly perſwaded, that after death their ſoules who haue embraced vertue (but they define vertue after their manner, to wit, to auenge them of their Enemies, and to eate very many) flying beyond the higheſt Mountaines, are gathered to the ſoules of their Fathers and Grand-fathers, and there, in moſt pleaſant Gardens, leade a ioyfull life in perpetuall delights, and danſing: (this is that long peregrination of Socrates, and the Poets Elyſian fields) but contrarily the ſoules of the fearefull cowards, who liued ingloriouſly, without any care of defending their Countrie, are violently carried away by Aygnan (for ſo they call the Deuill) and liue in perpetuall torment with him.

Toupan, Thunder.

Pſal. 29.

The Americans beleeue the immortalitie of the ſoule.

Theſe moſt miſerable Barbarians are wofully euen in this life tormented by the Deuill (whom by another name they call Kaegerre): For, I haue ſometimes ſeene them, euen while they were talking talking with vs, immediatly crying out like frantike men, Hei, hei, helpe vs, for Aygnan beateth vs. Nay, they affirmed, that the wicked spirit was seene of them sometimes in the shape of a cruell Beast, sometimes of a Bird, and sometimes also in some monstrous forme. And because they greatly wondred that wee were not vexed by the Deuill: therefore, wee telling them that we were deliuered from those torments by that God, whereof wee often spake vnto them, who was farre aboue Aygnan, and hindered him from procuring vs any trouble. It somtimes happened that danger enforcing them, they promised to beleeue in God, but being deliuered, they were vnmindfull of the promise. But, that it may euidently appeare, that the torments wherwith they are vexed, are no pastimes, I my selfe haue somtimes seen them so stricken with a shiuering and quaking feare, remembring that miserie, that sweating through anguish, and clapping their thighes with their hands, they complained vnto vs with these words. Mar Atouraſſap, Acequeiey Aignan Atoupané: that is, My foole, my companion, I feare the Deuill aboue all other euils. But contrariwise, if any of vs spake vnto him in these words, Nacequeiey Aygnan, I feare not the Deuill: then, bewailing their condition, they said; Ah, how happie were we, if thereby we might be secured from him: whereupon we answered, that therefore they were to beleeue in him who is mightier then Aygnan. But although, as hath beene said, in the present danger they promised that they would doe it, yet they presently returned to their owne disposition of nature.

Aygnan an euill Spirit vexeth the Sauages.

Therefore, although our Americans confesse not God with the mouth, seeing among themselues they are conuinced that there is some diuine power; therby I gather, that they shal neither be excusable, nor iustly take occasion to pretend Ignorance. But besides those things which haue beene spoken by mee, concerning the immortalitie of the Soule, which they beleeue; of the Thunder, whereof they are horribly affraid; and Deuils, by whom they are tormented: (which three things are first of all to be noted) I will moreouer adde a fourth principall matter. That they haue Prophets or certaine Priests among them, which they call Caraibes, who going from Village to Village, perswade those miserable men, that they (because they haue familiaritie with Spirits) giue not onely fortitude and courage to whomsoeuer they please, whereby they might ouercome their enemies in warre, but also that through their helpe, all fruits, and those great Roots growe, which we haue said that the American soile produceth. Moreouer, (as farre as I vnderstood by the Neustrian Interpreters, who had liued many yeeres in those Countries) the Tououpinambaultians haue this custome, that euery third, or fourth yeere they assemble together. At which assemblie, as shall immediatly be declared, I was present vnawares: concerning which I am to report that which followeth. I, with a certaine Frenchman named Iacobus Ruffus, and also a certaine Neustrian Interpreter, trauelling farre from home, turned in to a certaine Village to lodge; the next day after, wee prepared our selues early in the morning for our Iourney, at which time we saw the Borderers come flocking thither from all places. So, the Inhabitants of that Village ioyned themselues with them that came, and presently wee saw sixe hundred gathered together in a certaine voide plat of ground. We demand the cause of that meeting, and saw that multitude diuided into three parts. All the men went into a certaine Cottage, the women into another, and the children also went into the third. I, who had seene certaine Caraibes intermingled with the men, suspecting that some vnaccustomed and strange thing should be done by them, earnestly entreated my companions, that they would stand still there with me to obserue the whole matter: which I obtayned of them. The Caraibes, before they departed from the women and children, with great care forbid the women to goe out of their Cottages, but diligently to attend to the singing, and also charged vs to keepe our selues close in that Cottage where the women were: Being earnestly busied about our break-fast, and ignorant of those things which they purposed to doe, we heard a certaine lowe and soft muttering noise breaking out of the house into the which the men had seuered themselues (for that Cottage was almost thirtie paces distant from ours) the women which were about two hundred in number, standing, and giuing eare, gather themselues as it were on an heape. But the men lifting vp their voices by little and little, so that their distinct words were heard of vs exhorting, and likewise repeating this Interiection,

Master Knivet, which liued long with the Sauages hath told me, that he knew one of their Caraibes or Diuiners conferre with this Spirit in tormenting one of his fellowes; and threatning if he so dealt with them, that they would all goe to the white men, &c. whereupon the man recouered, whereas many other had died. And this shewes that which Tully saith of the vniuersalitie of religion, howsoeuer these want solemne formes of it. Deos ficit timor. They which will not Deum vereri tanquam parentem, timebunt vt hostem, & oderunt. They are so much liker the Deuill, which worships not God, yet beleeueth and trembleth. Iam. 2. Caraibes false Prophets. A relation of a great solemnitie of the Barbarians.

we heard the women presently, with a trembling voice singing the same Interiection againe, he, he, he, &c. And they lifted vp their voices with so great vehemency of minde, and that for the space of one whole quarter of an houre, that they drew vs who were the beholders into admiration. And surely, they did not onely horribly howle, but also leaped forth with great violence, and shaked their paps, and fomed at the mouth, nay some of them (not vnlike vnto those that are troubled with the Falling-sickneſſe) fell downe dead. So that I thinke, that the Deuill entred into their bodies, and they suddenly became possessed with the Deuill. Moreouer, hauing plainly plainly perceiued thoſe things which Bodinus writeth, in the Booke which he called Demonomania, concerning the extaſie of Witches, which hee affirmeth to bee common to all Witches, who haue made an expreſſe couenant with the Deuill, and who are often violently carried away in ſpirit, the bodie remayning voide of all ſenſe, although alſo they are ſometimes carried away both in bodie and minde. Adde (ſaith he) that they neuer meete together in any place, but they danſe, among which, as farre as he could gather by the confeſſion of certaine Witches, they all crie out together, Her, her, (which very well agreeth with He, he, of our Americans) the Deuill crieth, Danſe hither, danſe hither: and others anſwere, Sabbath, Sabbath, that is, A feſtiuall day, or day of reſt; lifting vp their hands, and the crops of herbes or trees which they haue in their hands, that they may ſhew a moſt aſſured token of ioy, and ſignifie that they ſerue the Deuill with all their heart: and ſo, that they imitate the adoration due vnto God. For, in the Law of God, it was preſcribed to the Iſraelites, that they ſhould lift vp their hands vnto the Lord, and ſhew themſelues cheerefull before him. Theſe things, I ſay, being certainly knowne, I gather, that Satan is Lord of them both: and that they are led by the ſame ſpirit, ſo that the diſtance of places hindereth not, but that the Father of lyes may worke here and there vpon them who through the iuſt iudgement of God are deliuered vnto him. Likewiſe, when I heard the children crying altogether (although I had now liued halfe a yeere with the Barbarians, and was almoſt acquainted with their manners) yet, not to diſſemble, I was then ſomewhat afraid, eſpecially, ſeeing I knew not what ſhould be the end of that matter. At length thoſe cries were ended, the men being ſomewhat ſilent, the children and women alſo altogether holding their peace, preſently the men began to ſing ſo ſweetly, and with ſo great harmonie, that I was wonderfully deſirous to ſee them. But when I would haue gone out of the Cottage, I was both kept backe by the women, and alſo admoniſhed by the Interpreter, that he (who had already liued ſeuen yeeres among the Barbarians) durſt neuer come to thoſe ſolemne meetings; and laſtly, that if I went vnto them I ſhould not doe wiſely. Whereby he cauſed me to ſtay a while, for feare of danger; yet, becauſe hee alledged no probable reaſon thereof, the women and Interpreter ſomewhat reſiſting, I went forth: relying vpon the friendſhip of certaine ancient men, Inhabitants of that Village. Going therefore vnto the place where I heard that Muſicall harmonie, I made an hole through the roofe of the Cottage, that I might the better perceiue what was done within. For, they are ſomewhat long, and round, after the manner of our Countrie gardens Arbours, and couered with graſſe from the top to the bottome. Then, making a ſigne with my finger, I called my companions, and at length wee entred into that Cottage. As ſoone as wee ſaw that the Barbarians were not moued through our preſence (which thing the Interpreter ſuſpected, would haue been done) and that they kept their order very well, and proceeded with their Verſes: we went apart into a certaine corner, and beheld them without feare. Theſe are their geſtures in danſing. They were ordered in a round circle, ſtanding cloſe each to other; yet ſo, they tooke not one another by the hand ſtooping, with their bodie ſomwhat bending downward, ſhaking onely one of their legs, to wit, the right, with their right hand laid vpon their buttockes, and the left hanging downe, and after this faſhion they both danſed and ſung. All that whole multitude made three ſuch round Circles, in the middle whereof were three or foure Caraibes, attired with Caps, Garments, and Bracelets of feathers. Each of them in either hand carried Maraca, that is, that rattle of a fruit exceeding the bigneſſe of an Eſtridges egge, whereof we haue made mention before, for that vſe, as they ſaid, that the Spirit might ſpeake out of them: and that they might rightly conſecrate them, they continually ſhooke them.

Moreouer, thoſe Caraibes danſing, ſometimes, went forward, and ſometimes backward, and did not continually ſtand ſtill in the ſame place, as the reſt. Further, I obſerued that with a very long Cane, wherein they put the herbe Petum * ſet on fire, they often turned themſelues hither and thither, and blew out the fume of that herbe vpon them that ſtood round about them, with theſe words: Receiue the ſpirit of fortitude, whereby you may all ouercome your enemies. And this was often done by theſe Caraibes. The celebrating of theſe Rites and Ceremonies was prolonged for the ſpace of two houres: thoſe men continually danſing and ſinging. And their tunable ſinging was ſo ſweet, that to the vnskilfull it is ſcarce credible, how excellently well that harmonie agreed, eſpecially, ſeeing the Barbarians are vtterly ignorant of the Art of Muſike. And ſurely, although in the beginning I was ſtricken with a certain feare, as I lately mentioned, yet contrarily I was then ſo much ouer-ioyed, that I was not only rauiſhed out of my ſelfe, but alſo now, as often as I remember the tunable agreement of many voices, both my minde reioyceth, alſo mine eares ſeeme continually to ring therewith: but eſpecially the burden of the ſong yeelded a pleaſing ſound vnto the eares, which at the end of euery Verſe, they ſung after this manner.

Petum by the Authour is thought to differ from Tabacco, becauſe it hath a pleaſing ſent, &c. I thinke it the ſame.

Being about to make an end of that tunable singing, shaking the ground with the right foote more vehemently then before, they all spit also, and all with one voice, and that hoarse, sing this Song often repeated.

He he hua he hua hua hua.

Then because I did not yet plainly vnderstand their Language, and conceiued not many things which had beene spoken by them, I intreated the Interpreter that hee would declare them vnto me. He signifieth, that these men, first lamented their dead Ancestors, who were most valiant, but in the end were hereby comforted, in that they hoped that after death they should at length go vnto them beyond the Mountaines, and dance with them, and celebrate merrie meetings: and that afterward they most grieuously threatned the Ouetacaes, (which are a people not farre remooued from them, with whom they haue perpetuall enmitie, whom also they could neuer ouercome) and foretold, that it should shortly come to passe, that they should be taken and deuoured, as the Caraibes luckily ghessed. Moreouer, I know not what they intermingled with their Songs concerning a flood, that the waters in times past so ouerflowed, that they couered the whole earth: and that through that inundation all men perished except only their Ancestors, who climbed vp into exceeding high Trees. Which last thing commeth very neere vnto the sacred Historie, and I neuer once heard it from them before. The confused opinion of the Barbarians concerning the flood.

The same day they were sumptuously receiued by the Barbarians, for they liberally entertained both with most exquisite meates, and plentifull drinke. Caouin. I also with my companions, who were present at those Feasts of Bacchus vnexpected, were most honourably entertained by our Mouſſacat, that is the Maſters of the house, who giue food to their guests. But beside those things which haue bin spoken by me, those daies being past (wherein their solemne meetings are celebrated euery third or fourth yeere among the Tououpinambaults) sometimes also before they came thither, those Caraibes goe about from Village to Village, and command three or foure of those Rattles which they call Maraca, to bee decked with the best feathers in euery Family: which being so decked, they sticke the longer part of the staffe, wherewith they are thrust through in the ground, and then command meate and drinke to be set before them. Whereby it commeth to passe, that those miserable people, through the perswasion of those Impostors, beleeue that those hollow fruits decked after that manner deuoure the meats. Wherefore euery Mouſſacat carefully setteth before them, not only meate with flesh and fish: but also Caouin. Moreouer, they serue those Maracas being so stucke in the ground, for fifteene whole daies together with very great diligence. Lastly, those miserable people after that so great bewitching of those Maraca, (which they continually carrie in their hands) conceiue an opinion, attributing holinesse vnto them, that while they are shaken by them, a certaine Spirit speaketh with them from the middest thereof. And they were so bewitched with those deluſions, that if we trauelling that way, seeing some more delicate meates, which they had set before their Maraca, tooke them to eate (which we oftentimes did) the Barbarians supposing that some great misfortune would thereby happen vnto vs, were offended. Moreouer, if taking occasion thereby to discouer their errours, we signified that they were deceiued by the Caraibes, not only because they taught them that Maraca did eate and drinke, but especially in this, that they most falsly vaunted that through their meanes, the fruits, and great Roots which they eate, increased and grew: which only was to be attributed vnto God, from whom wee were to beleeue that wee had receiued the same: these things, I say, were of so great moment with them, as if any here should speake against the Pope, or at Paris, denie that the Image of Gennef would procure raine. For which cause those Impostors the Caraibes did no lesse hate vs, then sometimes the false Prophets of Baal did Elias detecting their deluſions. And therefore they shunned our sight. Feast following. The decking of Maraca. A grosse Superstition. A most grosse Errour. 1 Reg. 18. 19.

But although our Tououpinambaults, as hath beene declared by mee in the beginning of this Chapter, neither honour their Caraibes, nor Maraca, with any externall rite, no not with kneeling vnto them, nor worship any thing created, much lesse adore it, or call vpon it for helpe. I will adde an example of those Relikes of Religion which I obserued among them. When by chance I was sometimes with other Frenchmen in a certaine Towne (which they call Ocarentim) and that we supped abroad in the open Aire, the Barbarians Inhabitants of that Village flocking together to see vs, not to feast with vs (for this is their vsuall custome, that they neuer sit together at meate, with those whom they reuerence most) the elder men especially with many tokens of friendship stood round about vs as our guard or attendants: and holding in their hands the bone of the beake of a certaine fish, of three or foure foot long, in the forme of a Sawe, they droue away the children from vs, with these words: Get you hence Knaues: for you are vnworthy to come vnto these men. So they beheld vs attentiuely, and holding their peace, not speaking the least word the meane while: vntill the Banket being ended, a certaine elderly man obseruing vs to beginne meate with Prayers, and also to end Supper with Prayer, comming vnto Truth purchased falshood to flight. How the ancient Barbarians entertaine the Frenchmen.

to vs, spoke thus. What meaneth this custom, which you now vsed, when talking of your gaps, you all kept silence, saue one, that spoke to whom appertained that speech which he made? to any of you that are present, or to some that are absent? There fitly taking that occasion offered, that I might speake vnto them concerning the true worship of God, seeing besides the largeneſſe of that village, & the great resort of people (I also perceiued the Barbaries more attentiue then they were wont) I intreated our Interpreter that he would declare my speech vnto them in their language, that they might conceiue the same. Then beginning with the question of the old man, I answered that our Prayers were directed vnto God: and that although he could not see him, he had not only plainly heard vs, but also did apparantly know whatsoeuer we had hid in our hearts. From thence comming to the Creation of the World, I first of all laboured to teach them, that among the creatures God made man the most noble and excellent, that he should so much the more endeuour to extoll the glorie of his Creator. And that we surely in that we worshipped him, were deliuered by his hand from infinite dangers of a very long Nauigation, in so vast a Sea, and depending vpon his helpe, were freed from all feare of Aignes, both in this life and in the life to come. Wherefore, if they would reiect the delusions of their Curaibes, and their barbarous custome of deuouring mans flesh, they should vndoubtedly obtaine the same gifts of God, which they saw we had. Moreouer, we added many things concerning the corruption and fall of Mankind, that we might prepare their mindes vnto Christ, applying Reasons and Examples to their capacitie, as much as might be. Now when they had harkened vnto vs aboue the space of two houres with great attention and admiration: one of them reuerent for his authoritie and yeeres, discoursed after this manner: Surely, you haue here told vs wonderfull and excellent things; and such as we haue neuer heard before, and certainly your speech hath brought into my memorie, what wee haue often heard our Grandfathers report: To wit, that euen from ancient time, and so many Moones since, as we cannot now remember, a certaine Mair (that is a Frenchman, or stranger of any other Nation) came into these Countries, attired after your manner, and hauing a beard. And that hee, to the end he might draw them to the obedience of your God, made such a speech vnto them, as you deliuered vnto vs this day. But, as it was reported vnto vs by tradition from our Fathers, they will not giue credit to his words. Therefore, presently another succeeded, who gaue them a Sword, in token of a curse. Hereupon followed warre amongst vs, and from that time, we haue not ceassed to exercise cruelties one towards another, through mutuall slaughters. But now, after we haue accustomed our selues to these outrages by continuall vse, if we should now suddenly learne our ancient customs, we should become a laughing stocke, and deriſion, to the neighbouring Nations.

The occasion of declaring the true God vnto the Barbarians.

The Barbarians hearing speech of the true God, were astonished.

A relation of a Barbarian most worthy to bee noted.

Heere wee testified with great vehemencie and earnest speech, that it was so farre off, that they ought to be mooued with the scoffes of the bonzeres, that contrarily, if they seriously worshipped that Creator both of Heauen and Earth, they should carrie away the victorie from all those, who for that cause, should willingly be troublesome vnto them. Lastly, the Lord gaue that efficacie to our words, that not only many Barbarians afterwards promised to frame their liues according to that Law which they had learned of vs, and that they would neuer eate the flesh of their slaine enemies any more: but also according to this conference, kneeling on the ground, gaue thankes with vs, vnto God. That Prayer which was made vnto God, by one of our men, with a loude voice, in the middest of their assembly, was presently expounded vnto them by our Interpreter: and so they brought vs to sleepe in those hanging beds of Bombasin Cotton. But sleepe had not yet taken vs, when, behold, wee heare these Barbarians singing and crying out together, that they were to take vengeance on their Enemies, and that more should be eaten then before. Behold the inconstancie of this miserable people, and the lamentable example of humane nature. Yea surely, I perswade my selfe, if Villagagno had neuer reuolted from the true Religion, and that wee had stayed longer in those Countries, it would haue happened, that at length, some should haue beene wonne vnto Christ.

The Barbarians promise to embrace the worship of God, & are present at Prayers.

Another time I being with three Sauages, and singing the 104. Psalme, at the request of one of them I declared the sense and antiquitie thereof, so many thousand Moones. Whereat he cried Teh, how happie are you Mair, who know so many secrets, which are hid from vs poore miserable men. Afterward, one of them to gratifie mee, presented mee with a certaine little beast, which he carried, called Agouti, speaking vnto mee in these words. Heere, take you this, because you haue sung sweetly. I haue willingly added this digression, to the intent I might declare that the Barbarous Americans, although outragious against their enemies, are not yet so rude that they cannot discerne those things which they heare, with iudgement. Nay I dare affirme, that they are more apt in framing speeches, then our Countrie Peasants are, and very many of them also, who esteeme highly of themselues.

The Barbarians acknowledge their owne ignorance and blindnesse.

§. III.

Of their Marriages, Education of Children, Politie, Hoſpitalitie, Diſeaſes, Phyſicians, Funerals and Lamentations.

IN Marriages, theſe degrees of Conſanguinitie only, are obſerued: none of them taketh his Mother, Siſter, or Daughter to wife: no regard is had of the reſt: the Vncle marrieth the Neece, and ſo conſequently. Neuertheleſſe, as ſhall bee hereafter ſpoken in the American Dialogue, no man may marrie the Daughter or Siſter of his Atouraſſap. And he is called Atouraſſap, whoſe familiaritie with any one is ſo great, that both their goods are common. There is no place for Rites or Ceremonies. Hee who deſireth a Widdow, or Virgin, being certainly perſwaded of the good will of her whom hee loueth, goeth to her Parents, or if ſhe haue none, to her next Kindred, and asketh them whether they will marrie their Daughter vnto him? If they conſent, he preſently bringeth her home, without giuing her any aſſurance of Dowrie and ſo keepeth her for his lawfull Wife. And if he ſuffer the repulſe, he giueth ouer his Sute without any perturbation of mind. But it is to bee noted, that Polygamy is vſuall with them, and therefore it is lawfull for a man to marrie as many Wiues, as he ſhall think good. Nay, the more Wiues that any one hath the more valiant and generous hee is eſteemed. Among the reſt I ſaw one, who had eight at home, and hee often ſpoke very much of them in commendation of himſelfe. But this is chiefly to be wondred at, that in ſo great a multitude of Wiues although one be beloued of the Husband aboue the reſt, the other meaner take it grieuouſly, or become jealous, or openly murmur. Therefore they liue moſt quietly and with great agreement, weauing their Cotton beds, looking to the affaires of the houſe, making Gardens and planting Roots.

Polygamie.

The wonderfull agreement betweene the American women.

They ſo hate adulterous women, that it lyeth in the Husbands power either to kill the adultreſſe, or at the leaſt, to put her away with great ignominie and reproach. This ſurely is true, that they are not very carefull of preſeruing the chaſtitie of vnmarried women: nay, they eaſily proſtitute them to any man. So that (as I haue alreadie ſaid) I haue ſeene very many in diuers Villages deflowred by the Neuſtrian Interpreters, who yet were not reprochfully diſgraced for the ſame.

The Sauages abhorre adulterie.

Single women looſe.

I haue obſerued that the younger ſort both men and women are not very much giuen to luſt: and I would our Countrey people could moderate themſelues aſwell in this behalfe. But that I may attribute no more vnto them then is meete, I remember, that often in their brawling they vſed to object this reproach Tyiure, that is, Buggerers, one vnto another, whereby we may conjecture, that that hainous and abhominable wickedneſſe raigneth among them. The women great with childe, abſtaine only from the greater burthens, and performe the other accuſtomed duties. And ſurely the women much exceed the men in labour, for the men (ſaue that ſometimes in the Morning, neuer at noone, they place certaine Trees to make Gardens) ſpend the time in warfare, hunting, fiſhing, making of woodden Clubs, Bowes, Arrowes, and other things of that kinde. As touching the trauell of women; I and another Frenchman lodging in a certaine Village, about midnight heard a great out-cry of a woman, and ſuppoſing ſhe had beene ſurprized by the cruell beaſt Ian-ouare, we aroſe, and ran vnto her, and found the woman in trauell, to whom the Husband performed the office of a Midwife: he receiuing the Infant in his armes, cut the nauell ſtring aſunder with his teeth, but preſſed downe the Noſe (for they eſteeme the beautie of children to conſiſt in the flatneſſe of the Noſe) the new borne Infant is preſently waſhed, and painted by the Father with colours blacke and red: then, not being wrapped in ſwadling-clouts at all, it is put into a Cotton hanging bedde. But if it bee a Male childe, the Father will giue him a little woodden Sword, a ſmall Bow and little Arrowes, preſently after his birth, and lay them in the bedde with the childe, and kiſſing the little Babe will ſpeake vnto him in theſe words. My Sonne, when thou art come to mans eſtate, be valiant, to take reuenge of thine enemies. As touching the giuing of names, I remember that hee of whom I now ſpoke, was named by the Father Orapaceu, which word ſignifieth a Bow and Bow-ſtrings: for the word is compounded of Orapat, which is a Bow, and Ceu which ſignifieth a ſtringe. The ſame manner alſo is obſerued in others.

Afterward putting the little childe in a Cotton Scarffe, ſhee either goeth to the Garden, or to diſpatch her other buſineſſe.

The food of Infants.

This opinion hath preuailed with vs, that little children would haue crooked legges, vnleſſe they were carefully wrapped and bound in ſwadling clouts: But, I affirme, that the Barbarians nothing regard theſe things (who put the new borne Infants naked, and vnſwadled in their Cotton beds) whoſe children notwithſtanding, goe moſt ſtraight and vpright of all the men in the World.

The Americans Infants are very clean without the vſe of linnen clothes

World. The Mothers who both want linnen, and alſo vſe not the helpe of leaues for theſe ſeruices (whereof notwithſtanding they haue great plentie) ſo diligently wipe the hinder parts of the Infants with ſmall chips of wood, that they are continually free from all filth. The elder ſort alſo obſerue the ſame manner, whom alſo (digreſſing a litle into this filthy matter) I thought good to mention, that they vſe to make water in their houſes, and yet no euill nor ſtinking ſauour ariſeth from thence: although they ſhine bright almoſt continually with often fires, and are ſtrewed with ſand: but as often as they doe their eaſement, they vſe to goe apart farre from the Houſes.

In what things the Barbarians buſie themſelues. Naturall ſhamefaſtneſſe is obſerued in the American Marriages.

Moreouer, proceeding to ſpeake of the Marriage of the Tewoupinambaultians, as far as ſhame and modeſtie will permit, I affirme (contrarie to that which ſome haue forged) that the men obſeruing naturall ſhamefaſtneſſe, doe no where openly company with their Wiues.

The purgation of the American women.

This is eſpecially worth the noting, that for the ſpace of an whole yeere, while we liued in thoſe Countries, we neuer ſaw any woman hauing the flowres. I thinke that they diuert that Fluxe by ſome meanes vnknowne to vs. For I ſaw Maidens of twelue yeeres olde, whoſe ſides were cut by their Mothers, from the arme-hole downe to the knee, with a very ſharpe tuske of a certaine beaſt. And the young Girles gnaſhing with their Teeth through extremitie of paine, bleed very much: I conjecture that they preuented their monthly Fluxe by this remedie.

The Barbarians liue peaceably together.

As touching the Policie of the Barbarians, it is ſcarce credible how well they agree among themſelues, being guided only by the light of Nature. Nor may this be ſpoken, but to their great ſhame who are inſtructed in diuine and humane Lawes, which yet is to bee vnderſtood of them who are of the ſame kindred, or of the Confederates: for how they behaue themſelues towards their enemies, it hath beene alreadie by vs declared. Yet if any contention ariſe betweene certaine perſons among them (which very ſeldome happeneth, for in the whole ſpace of a yeere, while I liued among them, it was my chance twice only to ſee them brawling) the beholders care not to pacifie the ſtrife: but ſuffer them to doe their pleaſure, although they bee readie to put out one anothers eies. But if the one wound the other, and that hee can bee taken, hee is wounded in the ſame part of the bodie by the Kinſmen of him that is wounded. Nay, if peraduenture death follow the wound, the Murtherer is ſlaine by the Kinſmen of the dead. Laſtly, they recompence eie for eie, tooth for tooth, and life for life. But theſe things as I ſaid, very ſeldome happen among them.

The things of the ground, with them are Cottages, and fields farre larger then might be required for maintenance of the Inhabitants. As touching the Cottages, you are firſt to vnderſtand, that euery Village containeth ſixe hundred men: wherefore very many are of neceſſitie to dwell in one and the ſame Cottage. Notwithſtanding euerie Family poſſeſſing their place without any diſtance betweene (for there is nothing that may hinder, but that from one end vnto the other thoſe houſes lie open, which for the moſt part are extended ſixtie paces in length) euerie Maſter of a Family hath his wife and children placed apart. Moreouer, you are to obſerue (which ſurely is to be wondred at) that the Americans inhabit not one place aboue fiue or ſixe moneths. But carrying away the matter and herbe Pinda, whereof their houſes conſiſt, they often tranſport their Villages, which yet alwaies reteine the ſame names. Wee our ſelues ſaw ſome Villages remooued a mile from the accuſtomed place. No man buildeth a Cottage, which he is not compelled to finiſh, nay, to build and plucke downe, aboue twentie times before his death, if hee haue attained to the full age of a man. Now if it be demanded of them, why they change their habitation ſo often? The anſwere is eaſily made. That the changing of the Aire is verie profitable for the health: beſides, that if they ſhould alter the cuſtome of their anceſtors, they ſhould preſently periſh. As touching the fields, euerie Monſſacas hath certaine particular plats of ground, which he chooſeth at his pleaſure whereſoeuer he thinketh good for the making of Gardens. But that exceſſiue care of diuiding the grounds, ſetting limits, and bounding the fields, they leaue to our Countrie couetous perſons, and to the Lawyers.

The tranſporting of the American Villages.

What grounds the Americans peculiarly poſſeſſe.

Concerning their houſhold ſtuffe, I haue often ſpoken in the former Chapters. Yet that wee may not omit any of thoſe things which appertaine to the houſhold gouernment of the Barbarians, I will heere recite the cunning of the American women in ſpinning of Cotton, whereof there is manifold vſe, as well for Ropes, as for the weauing of their hanging beds.

How the American women ſpin the cotten

Being drawne out of the ſtockes, in ſtead of all picking and carding, they plucke it out ſomewhat in length with the fingers, and then lay it vpon the ground in a heape (for they know not how to vſe Diſtaffes) in ſtead of a Spindle they take a little wand of the thickneſſe of a finger, and a foot in length, which they thruſt through a little wooden round ball, and faſten the Bombaſin Cotton to the top of the ſmall wand, then turning that Inſtrument about vpon their thigh (as our Countriewomen doe their Spindles) they let it ſlip out of their hands. That little round ball is turned about, through the houſes and ſtreets, like a Wherue. And after that manner they ſpinne Threed, not only courſe and great for the weauing of their Cotton Beds, but alſo that which is moſt fine. Of this ſort I brought ſome into France, wherewith I cauſed a faire ſtomacher to be made of the white Web, which was of ſo fine and ſmall a Threed, that ſome tooke it for the beſt and choiceſt Silke.

They

They call their Cotton beds Inis. The women, to whom this workmanſhip appertaineth, haue their work-houſes for their Loomes ſomewhat vnlike to thoſe of our Countrie: for they are neither made flat and plaine, nor conſiſt of ſo many ſubtile inuentions, but being framed to the height of their ſtature, they worke after their manner, and alſo beginne their weauing from the bottome. They make certaine of thoſe beds in the forme of Nets, and others thicker, like the fineſt Cloth. They are fiue or ſixe foot long, and an ellebroad: vnto either end Cotton loopes are added, vnto the which they faſten cords: and hang them vp in their houſes vpon beames, made fit for this vſe. But, liuing in the Campe, or in the woods for hunting, or on the ſhoares for fiſhing, they hang them vpon trees. Theſe beds (that wee omit nothing) when they haue gathered filth either through humane ſweat, or by the ſmoake, by reaſon of the continuall fire, are waſhed cleane after this manner. The women gather a certaine fruit in the woods, not much vnlike in ſhape vnto a plaine Gourd, but farre larger, ſo that euery Apple may ſcarce bee borne with one hand: theſe fruits they cut into ſmall pieces, and hauing caſt them into ſome very great earthen veſſell, they moiſten them with water. Then, they vehemently ſtirre them about with a ſticke, and cauſe a ſome to ariſe from them, through the helpe whereof (in ſtead of Sope) they make their Beds ſo cleane, that in whiteneſſe they may be comparable with the Snowe, or Fullers Clothes. The vſe of ſuch Beds is farre more commodious in watches, then that the Souldiers, after the accuſtomed manner, ſhould tumble in Beds of graſſe: for they both foule their garments, and get Lice, and that which is more, if they be to ariſe vnto the fight, the bodie is bruiſed in ſome ſort with the Armes, which Souldiers continually weare: which in the ſiege of the Citie Sancerra, we proued in good earneſt: For the Enemie lay a whole yeere at our Ports.

Fome, which among the Americans ſupplieth the vſe of Sope.

That we may gather the reſt of the Americane houſhold-ſtuffe into a ſhort ſumme, the women (who haue the charge of domeſticall matters) prepare huge Cannes, and make very great Earthen veſſels, wherein to put their Cao-uin. They alſo make Pots of diuers faſhions, little and indifferent Baſons, Platters, and other things of that ſort, veſſels which on the outſide ſurely, are nothing ſmooth, but are ſo poliſhed within, and beautified with I know not what kinde of tincture, which preſently waxeth hard, ſo that thoſe women may eaſily match the induſtrie of all our Countrie people. Beſides, I know not what kinde of aſh-colour painting they ſteepe in water, and afterwards make diuers formes of things in their veſſels, within, and ſpecially in thoſe wherein they lay vp their Meale, and other kindes of meates, to bee preſerued. The vſe therefore of them is moſt acceptable, nay thoſe veſſels farre excell them of wood, which very many vſe here with vs. Yet theſe Women-painters haue this fault, that when they haue pourtrayed with the Pencill whatſoeuer they pleaſe, if they be intreated to paint the ſame againe, they are not poſſibly able to doe it: becauſe they haue no example propoſed, beſide the induſtrie of their owne fantaſie. Hence it commeth to paſſe, that two of theſe kinde of pictures may ſcarce be found alike.

The American women make huge, meane, and little earthen veſſels.

Moreouer, (as I haue elſewhere ſaid) the Barbarians haue Gourds, and other kindes of fruits, which they diuide, and make hollow, and they vſe them in ſtead of Cups, (which they call Caui) and other veſſels of diuers vſes. They haue alſo Panniers, large and meane, and likewiſe Baskets, very finely made of bul-ruſhes, or yellowiſh graſſe, not much differing from Wheaten ſtraw. Theſe they call Panacon, and in them they put Meale and other things which they thinke good.

Pots and other veſſels, of fruits, paniers and baskets.

Although the Tououpinambaultians receiue ſtrangers very curteouſly, yet the Frenchmen, and other Strangers, who are ignorant of their Language, were not a little aſtoniſhed in the beginning, by reaſon of their vnaccuſtomed behauiour. When I firſt conuerſed among them (which happened about twenty dayes after our arriuall at the Caſtle of Colligne) a certaine Interpreter brought me to certaine Villages, in the Continent: that which I firſt ſaw, in their native Language is called Ybouraci, but in French, Pepin, by the name of a certaine Pilot, who ſometime laded a ſhip at that place; foure miles only diſtant from our Caſtle. In the very entrance the Barbarians came thicke about me, and ſpake vnto me in theſe words, Marapé derere, Marapé derere? that is, By what name are you called? which words, ſurely, to mee were very barbarous, but one of them taking off my Hat, put it vpon his head; another girdeth my Girdle and Sword vnto his naked ſide: another putteth on my Coat: and they dull me with their cries, and being clothed with my ſpoiles, runne hither and thither. I then thought that I had loſt all, and did not well knowe how ſafe I might be among them. But, as I found by experience, that feare aroſe from my ignorance of their cuſtomes, for they vſe to doe the like to all ſtrangers, eſpecially vnto them whom they neuer ſaw before. Now, when for their recreation, they had walked about a little while in that habite, they preciſely reſtore euery thing againe. Then I was aduertiſed by the Interpreter, that they greatly deſired to vnderſtand my name: but in declaring that, I was to forbeare vſuall names with vs, which the Barbarians could neither pronounce (for in ſtead of Iohn, they ſaid Nian) nor yet well remember: but was to propound ſomewhat which might be knowne vnto them. The matter ſucceeded ſo happily, that, as the Interpeter ſignified vnto mee, who was very skilfull in the Braſilian Language, my name Lerius ſignified an Oyſter; I therefore anſwered, that I was called Leriy-ouſſou. They liked it very well, and often ten vſing Teh, their Interiection of admiration, they ſpake thus vnto me. An excellent name ſurely, nor haue we euer found any Mair, who had ſuch a name. They haue ſo good and ſure a memorie, that if they haue once heard any mans name, they neuer forget it.

Their memorie.

The ſame day, accompanied with the Interpreter, I went further, and turned into the Village Euramiri, ſo called in their natiue Language, but in French, Goſet, after the name of a certaine Interpreter, who dwelt there ſome little while: wee came thither about Sunne ſet, and found them danſing, and drinking their Cao-uin, by reaſon of a Captiue, whom they had ſlaine that day. I perceiued the pieces of his fleſh laid vpon Boucan. I thinke, you need not enquire with how great and horrible feare I was then ſtricken: yet that was but a ſmall matter, if it be compared with the feare wherewith I was afterward aſtoniſhed. Wee entred into a Cottage, and ſate vpon the hanging beds, after the accuſtomed faſhion: the women lament after that manner which we will declare, and the Maſter of the Familie entertaineth vs with friendly words. The Interpreter who was acquainted with theſe matters, and who was very much delighted with their drinkings, leaueth me vnſaluted, and ignorant of all things, and went away to them that were danſing, and drinking. But being wearie, after I had refreſhed my ſelfe with Meale, and certaine other meates that were ſet before vs, I lay downe in the bed. Notwithſtanding, through the noiſe of their danſing, drinking, and deuouring of the Captiue, I was preſently awaked, and (which was the chiefeſt matter) by one comming vnto mee, who carried the roſted foot of the Captiue in his hand, and demanding of mee, as I afterwards vnderſtood, for then, I conceiued not his words) whether I would eate thereof; I was ſo aſtoniſhed through feare, that I was altogether freed from drowſineſſe and ſleepe. And I verily beleeued, by that geſture, which I tooke in the worſt part, that the Barbarian had ſhewed me, that my fleſh ſhould ſhortly after be deuoured after the ſame manner. Moreouer, as feare begetteth ſuſpicion, it came preſently into my minde, that the Interpreter had betrayed, and deliuered mee into the Barbarians hands. Wherefore, if I had had any way open to flee, I had quickly taken my flight. But they ſtood round about mee, whoſe minde I did not ſufficiently knowe, for they attempted no euill againſt mee. Now being confirmed in feare, I vnluckily gheſſed, that I ſhould preſently haue beene ſlaine, wherefore I paſſed the whole night in powring forth prayers vnto God. At the firſt dawning of the day, the Interpreter (who had paſſed all the night in pleaſure with the Barbarians) returned vnto mee, and ſaw mee pale, and taken with a Feuer, whereupon he demanded whether I were ill at eaſe, & whether I had not quietly reſted? Then I began ſharply to reproue him, who had left me alone among thoſe Barbarians, whoſe ſpeach I vnderſtood not at all. Hee openeth the whole matter to them who ſtood by me all the night, to congratulate my comming: they ſignifie, that they perceiued the matter in ſome ſort, and yet were ſorrie, that I had paſſed that night in ſo great feare of them. And at length they breake out into diſſolute laughter, which was the ſolace and comfort of that my feare. From thence I and that Interpreter, went vnto certaine other Villages.

These are the Rites which the Barbarians obſerue in entertayning Gueſts. Firſt of all, as ſoone as the Gueſt entreth into the houſe of that Mouſſacat, which hee hath choſen to bee his Hoſt, (which is to be done in euery Village, nor are you to turne into another, vnleſſe you will incurre his diſpleaſure) he muſt preſently ſit downe vpon a Cotton hanging Bed, and remaine quietly there a while without ſpeaking any word. By and by, the women come vnto him, compaſſe the Bed about, and ſitting on the ground, put their hands on their eyes, and bewayling the happie comming of the Gueſt after this manner, they rehearſe innumerable things in his commendation. As for example: Haue you taken ſo much paines to come vnto vs: you are good, you are valiant. But if the Gueſt be a Frenchman, they adde, you haue brought very many excellent marchandiſes vnto vs, which we want here. To conclude, thoſe women, as hath beene ſaid, entertaine Gueſts weeping, with ſuch like flattering ſpeeches. But the Gueſt who ſitteth on a Cotton bed, if he deſire to procure fauour with his Hoſt, ſettling his countenance, vnleſſe hee meane to weepe in good earneſt (as I ſaw ſome of our men of ſo weake a courage, that teares were forced from them, through the howling lamentation of theſe women) he muſt of neceſſitie counterfeit weeping, anſwering ſomewhat at the leaſt, and fetching deepe ſighes. This moſt pleaſant ſalutation being ended by the women, Mouſſacat, that is, the Maſter of the Familie, being buſily employed in making of an Arrow, caſts not ſo much as his eyes for a certaine time vpon the Gueſt, as if he marked nothing. At length comming vnto the Gueſt, hee ſpeaketh vnto him in theſe words: Ere Ioube? that is, Are you come? then, how doe you? what ſeeke you? &c. After, hee demandeth, whether you be hungrie? if you grant that you are, preſently he commandeth meates of diuers kindes to be ſet before you in earthen veſſels, to wit, Meale, which with them ſupplieth the place of bread, Veniſon, Fowle, Fiſh, and other things of that kinde: but becauſe there is no vſe with them, for Tables, and Benches, all thoſe things are ſet on the ground. As touching Drink, if you deſire Cao-uin, & that it be in the houſe, it ſhall preſently be giuen you. Laſtly, after the women haue ſtoutly ſolemnized the comming of the Gueſts with weeping, they come vnto them bringing Fruits, and other trifling Preſents, and ſo, ſecretly, demand Combes, Looking-glaſſes, and little Beades of glaſſe, which they winde about their armes.

Moreouer, if you will lodge all night in that Village, the Mouſſacat commandeth a very neat and cleane bed to be hanged vp for you, round about which he will cauſe ſmal fires to be kindled, and often quickned in the night with Bellows, which they call Tatapecoua, not much vnlike the little round Fannes, wherewith the nicer and more delicate ſort of women with vs, defend the ſcorching of fire from their faces. Not becauſe that Countrie is ſubiect vnto cold, but by reaſon of the moiſture of the night, and eſpecially, becauſe it is their vſuall manner. Now ſeeing we haue chanced to mention Fire, which they call Tata, and Smoake Tatatin, I thinke it needfull that I declare the excellent manner of kindling the ſame. They haue two kindes of wood, whereof the one is very ſoft, but the other very hard, which they vſe after this manner, to kindle fire. They ſharpen a twig of a foot long of that hard wood at the one end like a Spindle, and ſticke the point thereof in any piece of that ſoft wood, then laying it on the ground, or vpon a ſtocke, they turne that twig ſwiftly about with the palmes of their hands, as if they would pierce an hole through the piece of wood which lieth vnder. Through that ſo ſwift and violent motion, ſmoake is not onely railed, but alſo fire; putting Cotton vnto it, or certaine drie leaues (in ſtead of our Countrie tinder) fire is very aptly ingendred: whereof I my ſelfe haue made triall.

How ſtrangers requite their Hoſt.

After that the Gueſts haue refreſhed themſelues with meate, and lodged after the manner which we haue declared, if they be liberall, they vſe to giue vnto the men Kniues, Scizzers, and Pinſers fit for the plucking out of the haires of their beards: to the women, Combes, and Looking-glaſſes: and to the children, Fiſh-hookes. But, if the Gueſt want victuals, when he hath agreed of the price, he may carrie them away. Moreouer, becauſe they want all kinde of beaſts of burden, they are all of neceſſitie to trauell on foot. If Strangers bee wearie, and giue a Knife to any of the Barbarians, he preſently offereth his helpe to carrie him that is wearie. I my ſelfe when I liued in thoſe Countries, was diuers times carried by thoſe Porters, and that ſurely two miles iourney together. And if wee admoniſhed them to reſt a little, they laughed at vs with theſe words; What? Thinke you that wee are ſo effeminate, or of ſo weake a courage, that wee ſhould faint, and lie downe vnder our burden? I would rather carrie you all the day without any intermiſſion. But we breaking out into laughter, wondered at thoſe two legged Hackneyes, and encouraging them, ſaid: let vs therefore proceed on the way.

The Barbarians carrie Strangers vpon their ſhoulders.

Two legged amblers.

They exerciſe naturall charitie abundantly among themſelues, for they daily giue one vnto another, both Fiſh, Meale, and Fruits, and alſo other things: nay, they would be very ſorrie, if they ſaw their neighbours want thoſe things which they haue. They alſo vſe the like liberalitie towards Strangers: whereof, it ſhall be ſufficient, to bring one example. In the tenth Chapter of this Booke, I made mention of a certaine danger, which my ſelfe, and two other Frenchmen eſcaped, to wit, that we were in great perill of death, by reaſon of an huge Lizard which met vs in the way: at that time, wee wandred two dayes through the middle of the Woods out of the way, and indured no meane hunger, and at length came vnto a certaine Village called Pano, where wee had lodged before. There wee were moſt liberally entertained by the Barbarians. For, hauing heard the troubles which wee had ſuffered, and ſpecially the great danger wherein we were, that we were likely to haue beene deuoured by wilde beaſts, but chiefly, that wee were in danger to bee ſlaine by the Margaiates, our common enemies, neere vnto whoſe borders wee approached vnawares: and, ſeeing alſo the hurts and ſcratches of thornes, wherewith our skin was miſerably rent, they tooke our harmes ſo grieuouſly, that I may here truly affirme, that the feigned flatteries wherewith our Countrie people vſe to comfort the diſtreſſed, are farre from the ſincere humanitie of that Nation, which we call Barbarous. For, they waſhed our feet with cleare water (which put me in minde of the ancient cuſtome) euery one of vs ſitting apart vpon an hanging Bed. Then the Maſters of the Families, who had alreadie prouided meates to be prepared for vs, and cauſed new Meale to be ground, which (as I elſewhere ſaid) is nothing inferiour vnto the crumme of white bread, in goodneſſe, preſently, after wee had beene a little refreſhed, commanded all the beſt meates, to wit, Veniſon, Fowle, Fiſh, and the moſt exquiſite and choiceſt Fruits, wherewith they continually abound, to bee ſet before vs. Moreouer, the night approching, the Mouſſacat our Hoſt, remoueth all the children from vs, that wee might the more quietly reſt. The next day after, early in the morning, he commeth vnto vs, and demandeth, goe to Atouraſſip, (that is, dearly beloued Confederates) haue you quietly reſted this night? wee anſwered, very quietly. Then ſaith he, my ſonnes, reſt your ſelues yet a while, for, yeſterday, I perceiued that you were very wearie. To be briefe, I am not able to expreſſe with words, how friendly, and curteouſly wee were entertained. But wee neuer trauelled farre from home without a Sachell full of Merchandiſes, which might ſerue vs in ſtead of money among thoſe Barbarians. Departing therefore thence, we gaue our Hoſts, what wee thought good: to wit, Kniues Sizzers, Pinſers, to the men: Combes, Looking-glaſſes, Bracelets, and glaſſen Beades, to the women: and Fiſh-hookes to the children.

The Barbarians practiſe charitie euen by the direction of nature.

A notable example of the curteſie of the Barbarians.

How much the Barbarians eſteeme kniues, and other merchandiſes.

I one day turned out of the way to lodge in a certaine Village, and was requeſted by my Mouſſacat, to ſhew him what I had in my Sachell, who commanded a great earthen veſſell to bee brought, wherein to put my merchandiſes: I tooke them all out, and ſet them in order:

whereat he greatly wondring, calleth the reſt of the Barbarians vnto him, and ſaith. See I pray you, my good friends, what manner of man I haue entertained with me: doth it not manifeſtly appeare that he is very rich, ſeeing he carrieth ſo great wealth about him? yet thoſe would ſcarce haue beene ſold at Paris, for two ſiluer Cardices. Then, becauſe (as we haue ſaid) they loue liberall men, that I might procure authoritie and fauour among them, I gaue my Monſſacus the beſt of my Kniues before them all, which he eſteemed no leſſe, then any one with vs would regard a golden chaine, of very great price, beſtowed vpon him.

If peraduenture it happen, that any of them fall ſicke, when the inward and familiar friend of the ſicke perſon hath declared the grieued part, one ſucketh it with his mouth, ſometimes alſo that ſeruice is performed by certaine impoſtors, which they call Pages, that is, Phyſicians, or Surgeans. (But they are a kinde of People differing from the Caraibes, whereof I haue ſpoken before.) And they alſo ſay, that they draw out the paine, and prolong the life. They are ſometimes ſicke of Feuers, and other common diſeaſes: but, not ſo often, as wee vſe to bee. Moreouer, they are troubled with a certaine incurable diſeaſe, which they call Pians. This, for the moſt part proceedeth of luſt: yet, I haue ſeene the little children infected therewith, not vnlike the manner of our Countrie Meaſels. This contagion breaketh out into puſtles, broader then a thumbe, which ouerſpread the whole bodie, and alſo the face it ſelfe. They neuer giue meate to the ſicke, vnleſſe he deſire it, although he be readie to periſh through hunger. Moreouer, although it be the moſt grieuous diſeaſe, they that are healthie, neuer ceaſe danſing, ſinging, and drinking after the accuſtomed manner, to dull and wearie the miſerable ſicke perſon with the noiſe: nor doth he complaine, becauſe he knoweth, that he ſhall not preuaile at all. But, if hee die, that ſinging (eſpecially if he be a Maſter of any familie) is ſuddenly turned into teares, and ſo great lamentation is made, that if by chance we turned into a certaine Village, at the time of that mourning, we were of neceſſitie to goe to ſome other place, or paſſe the night without ſleepe. Firſt of all, not without admiration, the women are heard, which ſo crie out and exclaime, that you would ſay they were the howling of Wolues or Dogs, and no humane voices. But they powre forth theſe complaints with a trembling voice. That moſt valiant man is dead, who ſometimes gaue vs ſo many Captiues to be deuoured. Then the reſt ſay, O notable Hunter, O moſt excellent Fiſher, O valiant Killer of the Portugals, and Margaiates. To be briefe, thoſe women prouoking one another to mourning, and embracing armes together, deſiſt not from theſe lamentations, and praiſes, before the dead bodie be brought forth.

Pages, the Barbarians Phyſicians.

How the Barbarians handle the ſicke.

Laſtly, theſe Barbarian women imitate the Bearneanſian cuſtome in bewayling their dead men, whom, as I haue heard, they follow with theſe complaints. La mi amou, la mi amou, eara rident, ail deſplendou, camalouge, bet danſadou: La me balen, lo m'eſbarbat: mati depes: fort tard congat. that is, My friend, my friend, with a merrie countenance, ſhining eyes, ſwift legs, notable danſer, ſtrong and valiant, thou diddeſt ariſe early, and goe late to bed. The Vaſcons women alſo, who adde theſe things to the former, Yere, yere, o le bet renegadou, o le bet iougadou qu'bere: that is, Alas, alas, how ſtout and deepe a Swearer was hee, how notable a Gameſter? Moreouer, to thoſe complaints whereof we ſpoke, the Barbarian women often adde this burden of the Song, He is dead, he is dead, whom we now lament. Then the men anſwere: Alas, he is dead, and wee ſhall ſee him no more, vntill wee danſe with him behind the Mountaines, as our Caraibes teach. Thoſe howling lamentations are prolonged for ſixe houres; for, they vſe not to keepe their Dead any longer vnburied. Then digging a Trench, not long as we vſe, but circular, like a great Drie-fat, they burie the dead bodie bolt vpright. The dead Maſters of Families, they burie in the middeſt of their houſes, wrapped in their Cotton bed, with feathers, and other things, wherein they delighted in their life time, laide in the Graue. Since their commerce with the French they haue forborne to put precious things in the Graues: but they retained a ſtrange and very deuilliſh Superſtition. The firſt night after the Funerall, the Barbarians, who are thus perſwaded, that Aygnan, vnleſſe he found other meates prepared, would digge vp the dead bodie, and deuoure it, ſet no ſmall ſtore of veſſels, with Meale, Fiſh, Fleſh, and other meats carefully prepared, and alſo great pots full of their drinke Cao-uin, about the Graue. Which Sacrifice they performe ſo long, vntill they thinke that the dead bodie bee wholly conſumed. From the which errour they were the more hardly remoued, becauſe certaine Neuſtrian Interpreters, by example of the Sacrifices of Bell, diuers times before our comming, priuily ſtole away thoſe meates. Through which fact they ſo confirmed the Barbarians in errour, that although we ſhewed them, that thoſe meates ſet downe in the euening, remained in the morning, yet with great labour and difficultie we diſſwaded very few from that errour.

The Graues, and rites of buriall of the Americans.

A very deuilliſh errour.

Dan. 14.

As often as the Barbarians tranſport their Villages vnto another place, after the manner which wee haue declared, they put certaine couerings of the herbe Pindo vpon the Graues of the Dead. Whereby it commeth to paſſe, that Trauellers may take notice of a certaine forme of a place of buriall. At which places, if at any time wandring in the Woods, they remember the dead men, they make ſo great lamentation, that they may be heard farre off.

§. I.

His Voyage vp the Riuer of Plate, foundation of Townes, their expedition vp the Riuer of Parana and Parabol; the people of these parts.

ANno 1534. I went from Antwerpe to Cadiz, and there found fourteene ships furnished for the Riuer of Plate. There were 2500. Spaniards, 150. high and low Dutch, vnto which I ioyned my selfe. They set forth in September the same yeere, and (hauing had some trouble at Palma, one of the Canaries, about stealing of a Citizens Daughter by George Mendoza, a Kinsman of the Commander Don Pedro de Mendoza) arriued at the riuer Ianero. They call these Indians, Toupin. Here we abode Toupins. fourteene daies, and Petro Mendoza our Generall then gaue commandement to Iohn Osorius his sworne Brother, to take charge of vs in his steed, because hee being weake, and consumed in his members, was much troubled almost with continuall sickneſſe and diseases. But when a little after the gouernment receiued, Iohn Osorius had beene falsly accused, and by forgetie, to Mendoza his sworne brother, as though he had gone about seditiously to stirre the company against him, the said Mendoza commanded other foure Captaines (to wit) Iohn Eyollas, Iohn Saleiſen, George Luxhsam, and Lazarus Salnaſsho, that hauing stabbed him with a Dagger, they should expose him as a Traitor in the middle of the Plaine, to the view of all beholders. And straightly com- Mendoza his cruelty. manded it publikely to be giuen in charge, that no man vpon paine of death disquiet or trouble himselfe in the behalfe of Osorius, for if he did, he should be no more respected, whosoeuer, or of what condition soeuer he were. But hee was altogether iniuried. For hee was an honest man, and a stout and couragious Warriour, and courteous, liberall, and verie beneficiall to his fellow Souldiers.

6. Departing hence with our ships and going to the Riuer of Plate, we came into a pleasant Riuer, which they call Parana Trassa. It is farre from the mouth of the Riuer where the Sea leaues it, and is fortie two leagues broad. And from the Riuer Ianero to this Riuer are two hundred and fifteene leagues. Heere wee came to a Hauen called Saint Gabriel, and all our fourteene ships anchored in the Riuer Parana. But because we were to abide in the greater shippes on the water, a Musket shot from the Land, our Generall Petro Mendoza gaue commandement to set the people and Souldiers aland in the lesser Skiffes or Boats, which they call Potten, then prepared for that purpose. So by the grace and blessing of God, in the yeere of Christ 1535. wee happily arriued at the Riuer of Plate, and there we found a row of houses, or an Indian Village, wherein there were about 2000. men, whom they call Zechurnus, who eate no other thing, saue fish and flesh. And goe all naked, but that the women couer their secrets, with a thinne piece of Cotton-cloth, which reacheth from the Nauell to the knees. They therefore at our comming, leauing the Towne, fled away with their wiues and children. Then our Generall Mendoza commanded the people to be shipped againe, and conueied ouer to the other side of the Riuer Parana, where the bredth of the Riuer extendeth it selfe no more then eight leagues.

R. of Plate, Zechurnus.

7. In this place wee built a Citie, which for the wholsomenesse of the Aire wee called Bonos Aires. We brought with vs also out of Spaine seuentie two Horses and Mares, in our fourteene ships. We found also another Village in this Countrie, which the Indians inhabit, whom they call Carendies, of whom there were about 3000. men, together with their wiues and children. These also as the Zechurnus are couered from the Nauell only vnto the knees, who brought vs fish and flesh to eate. These Carendies haue no Proper and setled dwellings, but wander in the Countrie hither and thither, almost as our Cingari, * and Zigeuneri. When they take their iourney in the Summer, they oftentimes trauell thirtie leagues and more by Land, and finde not a drop of water to drinke. If they light vpon a Stagge or other wilde beast, when they haue killed it, they drinke the bloud thereof: sometimes they find a Roote, which they call Cardes, and chewing that, they quench thirst. But that they drinke bloud, this only is the cause, for that they want other drinke, and peraduenture without this, they should die for thirst. These Carendies for fourteene daies imparted liberally of their pouertie, and daily brought fish and flesh vnto our Campe, one day only excepted, wherein they came not to vs at all. Therefore our Generall Don Petro Mendoza sent our Corrigidor Ian. Baban and two Souldiers vnto them (for these Carendies abode foure leagues distant from our Campe) but they so intreated them when they came vnto them, that they sent them home all three soundly cut and mangled with stripes. But when our Generall Petro Mendoza vnderstood these things by report of the Iudge: who for this cause raised a tumult in our Campe, he sent his owne naturall Brother Don Diego Mendoza against them with three hundred Souldiers, and thirtie readie light Horsemen, among the which I also was one, straightly charging him to kill, and take all the said Indian Carendies, and possesse their Towne. But when we came vnto them, there were now some 4000. men gathered together; for they had sent for all their familiars, and friends to helpe them.

The fight or skirmish with the Indian Carendies.

8. When we set vpon them, they so resisted vs, that they put vs to trouble enough that day: for they slue our Captaine Don Diego Mendoza, and sixe Gentlemen with him, and of the horse and foote about some twentie. But on their part there fell about 1000. men. Therefore they fought couragiously and stoutly against vs, which wee felt by experience. The weapons of these Carendies are Bowes, and a kinde of Dart like the staffe of a Speare of a middle length, whose point they arme with a flint called a Marcbasate, with an edge in forme of the three edged Thunderbolt. They haue also bowles of stone hanging at a long coard, somewhat like our plummets of Lead. These bowles they so cast about the feet of Horses, or Stagges, that they are constrained to fall. After this manner they slue our Captaine, and the Gentlemen with these bowles, which I my selfe beheld, but they slue the Footmen with their Darts: yet by the grace of God (to whom be praise) we ouercame them in battaile, and possessed their Towne. But we could take none of these Indians, their wiues and children also, before we assailed them by warre had fled into another Village. We found nothing in this Towne of theirs, but Otter skins, plentie of flesh and flowre, and the trane of fish. Abiding therefore three daies we remained in that place, and after returned to our Campe, leauing 100. men there, who in the meane time should fish with the Indians Nets, to maintaine our Souldiers more plentifully: for the waters there are maruellous full of fish: for three ounces only of flowre made of fine Wheate were distributed to euerie one for one daies victuall, and euerie three daies one fish. This fishing lasted two moneths, and if any would eate fish otherwise, he must seeke them on foot foure leagues off.

Of the buildings of the Citie of Bonos Aires, and of the famine which they indured there.

9. When we returned to our Campe, they that were fit for labour among the people, were separated from them that were fit for warre, that euery one might be put to seruice agreeable vnto him. The Citie therefore began to be built there, and a wall of earth to be raised about it, to the heigth of a Speare or Iauelin, and in the Citie a firme and strong house for our Generall. The wall of the Citie was three foot broad. But that which was built to day, the next day fell downe againe. For the people wanting food, liued in great scarcitie, so that many died of famine, nor could the Horses satisfie them. There was not plentie enough of Dormice, or other Mice, or Serpents, or other wild beasts, to asswage this lamentable famine and vnspeakable pouertie. Not so much as shooes and other Leather could auoid this rage of deuouring. It fell out also at that time, that three Spaniards hauing stolne a Horse, did priuily eate him. Which as soone as it was discouered, they were grieuously tormented, and questioned touching the fact, and when they confessed it, they were condemned to the Gallowes. When they were hanged, three other Spaniards consorted themselues together, who the same night going to the Gallowes, cut off the legges of them that were hanged, and cut out pieces of flesh from their bodies, that in their Cottages they might asswage vntollerable hunger by eating thereof. A certaine Spaniard (through exceeding hunger) eate his owne brother, who died in the Citie of Buenas Aires.

Miserable famine.

How some sailed vp the Riuer of Parana, or the Riuer of Plate.

10. When therefore our Generall Don Petro Mendoza saw, that the people could no longer be sustained and preserued in this place, he presently commandeth foure small Barkes which they call Brigantines, or small men of warre, and are carried with Oares to bee made readie, whereof euerie one will hold fortie men: there were also three other lesse called Potten. These seuen little Vessels therefore being made readie and dispatched, our Generall commanded the company to be mustered, and George Luchsam with 350. readie and able men, to saile vp the Riuer, and seek out the Indians, that we might get prouision of victuals and food. But the Indians vnderstanding before of our presence, burnt their prouision of victuall, and whatsoeuer was good to eat, together with their Villages, and runne away. But wee in the meane season got no food, and for euerie daies allowance vnto euerie man, one ounce and an halfe of bread was distributed, whereby it came to passe, that in this journie the halfe part of our Souldiers perished through famine. Wee therefore of necessitie returned to the said Towne where our Generall was, who greatly wondred dred, that so small a number of people should returne, seeing we were no more then fiue moneths absent, and he demanded of our Captaine George Luchsam to declare vnto him what hee had done in this journie, who signified, that they who were wanting, died of famine, because the Indians had consumed all the food with fire, and after run away themselues.

11. All these things falling out thus as I haue said, yet we continued together in the Towne of Buenas Aeres, a whole moneth in great want, expecting while the furniture of our shippes should be finished. In the meane while, in the yeere 1535. the Indians inuade vs and our Citie of Buenas Aeres, with the strength of twentie three thousand men, and in their Armie there were foure distinct Nations (to wit) Cariendes, Bartennis, Lechurnas, and Tiembus. The purpose and principall intension of all these was, to kill vs all. But praise and glorie bee to God, who saued the greatest part of vs safe from destruction. For together with the Captaines, and Ancients, and other Souldiers, there were not aboue thirtie men of ours slaine. How the towne of Buenas Aeres was besieged, assaulted, and burnt. Foure Nations of Indians.

When therefore they first came to our Citie of Buenas Aeres, some of them ranne furiously to assault it, others cast fierie Darts vpon our houses, all which (except our Generals house which only was couered with Tile) were only thatched: and by that meanes all our Citie, together with all the houses was consumed with the flames, euen from the foundation. The Weapons or Darts of these Indians are made of Reed, which when they are cast or shot out, take fire in the point. They haue a kind of wood also whereof they make their Darts, which if they bee fired before they be cast, are not quenched, but set houses (couered with Thatch) on fire, and so those that touch or joyne together burne together. Their fights & weapons.

In this fight these Indians burnt vs also foure great shippes, which were halfe a league distant from vs on the water. But the Souldiers who were in these ships, when they saw that mightie tumult of the Indians, betooke themselues to flight from these foure shippes, into three others, which rode not farre from these, and were furnished with Ordnance. They therefore when they saw the foure ships burne, began to defend themselues, and eagerly to assault the Indians, and let flee the bullets which caused them to leaue the assault and depart, giuing rest vnto the Christians. All this was done on the Feast of Saint Iohn the Euangelist. In the yeere 1535. Foure ships burned.

12. All these things being past and done, all the people went into the ships, and our Generall Don Petro Mendoza made Iohn Eyollus his Deputie, creating him Lieutenant Generall, deliuering ouer vnto him the whole gouernment of all, as also of the people. He taking a view of the company, of two thousand fiue hundred men, which came from Spaine together in ships, hee found only fiue hundred and sixtie aliue: all the rest were dead, whom for the most part the intollerable famine had consumed. They muster their Souldiers, and build ships to goe further. The most of 2000. died of famine.

After this, our Lieutenant Iohn Eyollus, commandeth eight little Barkes, which they call Brigantines and Potts, speedily to be built. And of fiue hundred and sixtie which remained aliue, hee tooke vnto him foure hundred men: leauing the other one hundred and sixtie to take charge of the foure great ships: ouer whom hee set Iohn Romero the chiefe commander, leauing prouision for a whole yeere, so that foure ounces of bread were distributed to euery man for his daily allowance.

13. After this our Lieutenant Iohn Eyollus with his foure hundred Souldiers, which hee had with him, among whom also Petro Mendoza our Generall was, saileth vp the Riuer of Parana, in the Brigantines and Potts, furnished for this purpose, vntill wee came vnto the Indians, which was performed in the space of two moneths, from our comming forth of the Citie of Buenas Aeres, so that wee were now eightie foure leagues distant from our said burnt Citie. When therefore we were not aboue foure leagues from these people (which they call Tiembus, but wee called them Bona sperança) and they vnderstood of our comming before, about foure hundred men of them came peaceably vnto vs in their Boats, which they call Canoas, in euery one of the which Canoas sixteene person sate. When therefore we met together in the Riuer, our Generall gaue the Captaine of these Indians of Tiembus, (whom they call Zchara Wassu) a shirt, a red Cap, a Hatchet, and certaine other things. Which presents beeing receiued, the said Zchara Wassu brought vs into their Towne, setting before vs fish and flesh plentifully, and sufficient food, so that we were exceeding well contented. For if this Voyage of ours had continued yet but ten daies longer, we should all haue died with famine, as euen now in this Voyage of foure hundred men, who came together in the ships, fiftie were dead. They goe vp the Riuer. Tiembus.

These people of Tiembus, weare on either nostrill a blue starre artificially made of a white and blue stone; they are large men, and of a tall stature, but the women as well young as old, are very deformed with torne faces, and alwaies bloudie: from the Nauell to the knees they are couered with Cotton-cloth, the rest is naked. This people hath no other meate saue fish and flesh, nor euer liued with any other thing. The strength of this Nation is thought to be fifteene thousand men or more. The Skiffes or Boates which they vse are made of a Tree eightie foote long, and three broad, which (as the Fishermens Boats of Germanie) are rowed with Oares, saue that their Oares are not bound with Iron.

14. We abode foure whole yeeres in the foresaid Village or Towne, but our Generall or Admirall Petro Mendoza, by reason of his extreame and continuall sickenesse, in that hee was able nei- Don Petro Mendoza being about to return into Spaine dieth in the way.

neither to ſtirre hand nor foote, and had ſpent in this iourney of his owne about fortie thouſand Ducates of ready money, would no longer ſtay with vs in this Towne, but returneth in two Brigantines to Buenos Aeres, to the foure greater Shippes, and there taking two of them, and fiftie Souldiers, he intended to returne into Spaine, but ſcarce halfe the iourney performed, the hand of almightie God ſo ſmote him, that he miſerably died. But before his departure he certainly promiſed vs, that he would doe his beſt, as ſoone as he, or the Ships returned into Spaine, that two other Shippes ſhould be ſent backe to the Riuer of Plate (which by his will he had ſo ordained, and was faithfully alſo performed) furniſhed with Souldiers, prouiſion of victuals, Merchandiſe, and other things neceſſary for ſuch a voyage.

Alfonſo Gabrero is ſent away from Spaine towards the riuer of Plate.

15. The name of the Commander of theſe two Shippes was Alfonſo Gabrero, who alſo brought with him two hundred Spaniards, and prouiſion for two yeares. He arriued at the Towne of Buenas Aeres, in the yeare 1539. where we left the other two Shippes (when wee departed) together with one hundred and ſixtie men. They preſently ſent away a Shippe into Spaine, prouided for this purpoſe (for ſo the Counſell of the Emperours Maieſtie commanded) and deliuered orderly and at large to the ſaid Counſell the ſtate and condition of theſe Countries, and people, and other circumſtances. After this, our Generall Iohn Eyollas conſulting with Alfonſo Gabrero, Martino Don Eyollas, and the reſt of the Captaines, iudgeth it to be moſt conuenient to muſter the Souldiers; which being done, together with ours, and thoſe who came firſt from Spaine, fiue hundred and fiftie men were found of theſe; they chooſe vnto them foure hundred men, leauing one hundred and fiftie in Tiembus.

They ſaile further vp the Riuer of Parana towrd Curenda R. Paraboi. Caries. Sheep of Peru. Curenda.

16. By this order of the Captains, we ſaile vp the riuer Parana, with theſe foure hundred men, ſhipped in eight Brigantines, ſeeking another Riuer, whereof we were told, called Parabol, at the which the Caries dwell, for theſe were reported to abound with Turkiſh graine, and roots, of the which they make wine, and alſo fiſh, and fleſh, and Sheepe as bigge as Mules, and Harts, Hogges, Eſtridges, Hennes, and Geeſe. Departing therefore from the Hauen of Bona Speranza, with our eight Brigantines, ſailing foure leagues the firſt day, we came to a Nation called Curenda, which liue with fleſh and fiſh. This Iland is 12000. ſtrong of men fit for warre, and hath great ſtore of Canoes. This Nation is like the former Tiembus, with little ſtones hanging dangling in their noſes. The men alſo are of a tall ſtature, but the women, as well yong as old, deformed, with rugged and bloudy faces: And are no otherwiſe apparelled then they of Tiembus, to wit, couered with a Cotten cloath from the nauell to the knees, as is before ſaid. Theſe Indians haue great plenty of other skinnes. Theſe men did liberally communicate vnto vs of their pouerty, or of that little they had, Fiſh, Fleſh, Skinnes, to whom contrariwiſe wee gaue Glaſſes, Beades, Looking-glaſſes, Combes, Kniues, and Fiſh-hookes, and abode with them two dayes. They gaue vs alſo two men of Caries, who were their captiues, to be our Guides and Interpreters.

Deſcription of theſe Sauages.

We came to Gulgaiſi & Macuerendas. Gulgaiſi.

17. Sailing further hence, we came to another Nation called Gulgaiſi, which is able to bring 40000. men for warre, into the field. This Nation alſo hath two ſtones at their noſe; it was thirty leagues diſtant from the Iſland Curenda, and they and the inhabitants of Tiembus haue the ſame language. They dwell vpon a Lake ſixe leagues long, and foure broad, ſituate on the left ſide of the Riuer Parana. We ſtaied here foure daies, and theſe men imparted to vs of their pouertie, and we did the like to them: proceeding further thence, for the whole ſpace of eighteene daies we light on no men, but afterward we came to a Riuer, flowing into the Countrie it ſelfe.

Macuerendas.

In that Country we found a great number of men come together, which they call Macuerendas. Theſe haue nothing to eate, ſaue fiſh, and a little fleſh, and are 18000. ſtrong of warlike men, and haue a great number of Boates. Theſe men after their manner intertained vs courteouſly enough: they dwell on the other ſide of the Riuer Parana, towards the right hand, haue a differing tongue from the former, and are tall men, and of a good proportion, but their women alſo are very deformed. They are diſtant from thoſe whom they call Gulgaiſi ſixtie foure leagues. While we remained idell among theſe people foure daies, we found an huge monſtrous Serpent fiue and twenty foote long, lying on the land not farre from the ſhoare, which was as bigge as a man, of a blacke colour, ſpotted with a deepe yellow. This Serpent we killed with a Gunne, which when the Indians ſaw, they wondered thereat with great aſtoniſhment, for they themſelues had neuer ſeene any ſo great before.

Huge Serpent.

This Serpent, as the Indians themſelues ſaid, had done much hurt vnto them; for when they waſhed themſelues in the water, the Serpents finding men there, wound their tailes about them, and hauing drawne them vnder water, deuoured them, ſo that the Indians knew not oftentimes what became of many of them. I diligently meaſured the length and thickneſſe of this Serpent, which the Indians cutting in peeces, euery one carried part home vnto their houſes, and being ſod and roaſted did after eate thereof.

We came to Zemais Saluaiſco, and Nepenes. Zemias Saluaiſco.

18. From hence ſailing further vp the Riuer of Parana, in foure daies iourney we came to a Nation, called Zemais Saluaiſco. The men of this Countrie are of a ſhort ſtature, and of a groſſe body. They liue with nothing elſe ſaue fiſh, fleſh, and hony. Both men and women goe naked, as they came into the world when they were firſt borne, ſo that they couer not their body ſo much as with a thred, no not their priuie parts. They make warre with the Macuerendas; the flesh they eate is the flesh of Stagges, Boares, Estridges, Conies, which excepting the taile, are not much vnlike a Dor-mouse or Rere-mouse. They are sixteene leagues distant from the Macuerendas, which distance we sailed in foure daies, and abode one onely day with them.

Mepenes.

Departing hence, we came vnto another Nation called Mepenes, who are 10000. strong. These people dwell scattered here and there, euery where in that Countrie, extending it selfe fortie leagues in length and breadth, yet within two daies both by water and land they may all come together. The multitude of the Boates they haue, exceedeth the number of themselues, as we saw when we were with them: and in such a Boate or Canoa about twentie persons are carried. This people receiued vs in hostile and warlike manner with fiue hundred Canoas vpon the Riuer, but with little profit for themselues, for we slew many of them with our shot, for they had neuer before seene either Gunnes or Christians. But comming to their houses, wee could preuaile nothing against them, seeing they were a whole league distant from the Riuer of Parana, where our Ships lay. The waters also about their Towne were very deepe, which ran out of a Lake, so that we could performe nothing against them, that was of any worth, saue that we burned and destroyed two hundred and fiftie Canoas which we had taken. Neither did we thinke it good also for vs, to depart so farre from our Shippes, seeing it was to be feared least they would assaile vs from the other side: We returned therefore to our Shippes. This people of Mepenes fight onely vpon the water, and is distant from the former Countrie of Zemais Saluaisco, from whence we departed ninetie fiue leagues.

Of the Riuer Parabol, and the people Cueremagbas, and Aygais.

Cueremagbas.

Men of tall stature.

Their gallantry

19. Sailing vp higher from thence, and in eight daies space arriuing at a certaine Riuer, we light on a Nation that was very populous, called Cueremagbas, which also liueth onely with fish and flesh. They haue Cherrie trees, of the which they make wine. This people bestowed their best affections vpon vs, and curteously imparted those things vnto vs whereof we stood in neede. The people are of a huge and tall stature, both men and women. The men haue a little hole in their nose, into the which, for ornament, they put a Parrats feather. The women paint their faces with long blew streakes, which all the time of their life are neuer put out. They couer their priuities with Cotten cloath, from the nauell to the knees: from the foresaid people of Mepenes, to these Cueremagbas are fortie leagues: so we staied in this place three daies.

Aygais.

Departing thence, we came to another Nation, called Aygais, which also liueth with fish and flesh. The men and women are of a tall stature: the women like the former paint their faces, and couer their priuities after the same manner. When therefore we arriued on their coast, taking armes, in hostile manner they resisted vs, and would haue stopped our passage. We ordered our battaile both by land and water, and fighting with them slew many of them, fifteene also of our men were slaine. These Aygais are stout warriers on the water, but not so by land. Being ready to fight against vs, they had conueighed away their wiues and children to another place before, and had hidden, whatsoeuer prouision of meate or other like things they had, so that we could get nothing from them. Their Village is scituate neere the Riuer called Iepidus, hauing the Riuer called Parabol on the other side, descending from the Mountainous Countries of Peru, neere the Citie Fuech Kamin. These Aygais are distant from the foresaid Cueremagbas thirtie fiue leagues.

Of the people Carios.

20. Departing from these people, we came to a Nation called Carios, fiftie leagues distant from the Aygais, with whom (by Gods grace) we found (as was told vs) plentie of Mais, Potatoes and Mandiochpobier, hauing the taste of a Chestnut, of which they make wine. They haue also fish, flesh, wilde Bore, Estridges, Indian Sheepe, as big as our Mules, also Conies, Hens, Goates, and such like: sufficient plenty of Honie, whereof, by boiling it, they make a kinde of Coine. This Country also aboundeth with Cotten.

Carios customes.

These people of Carios inhabit a large Countrie, extending it selfe three hundred leagues in length, and breadth: they are men of a short stature, and thicke, and more able to indure worke and labour then the rest. The men haue a little hole in their lippes, and yellow Christall therein (which in their language they call Parabol) of two spannes long, and of the thicknesse of a quill or reede. The men and women both in this Countrie, goe all naked, as they were created of God. Amongst these Indians the Father sels the Daughter, the Husband the wife. Sometimes also the Brother doth either sell or change the Sister. They value a Woman at a Shirt, a Knife, a Hatchet, or some other thing of this kinde. These Carios also eate mans flesh, if they can get it. For when they take any in the warres, whether they be men or women, yong or old, they fatten them, no otherwise then wee doe Hogges. But they keepe a woman some yeeres, if she be yong, and of a commendable beautie, but if in the meane time, she apply not her selfe to all their desires, they kill, and eate her, making a solemne banquet, as marriages are wont to be celebrated with vs. But they keepe an old woman, till she dye of her owne accord. These Carios vndertake longer iournies then any of these Nations vpon the Riuer of Plate. They are couragious and fierce in battaile, and their Villages and Townes are situate vpon the Riuer Paraua, on an high and mounting land.

21. The Citie of these people (which the Inhabitants call Lampere) was compassed with a double double bulwarke cunningly made of timber, as with a hedge or incloſure, euery trench being of the bredth and thickneſſe of a man, and one bulwarke or trench was twelue paces diſtant from the other. The trenches being digged a fathome deepe into the earth, were ſo high aboue the ground, as a man might reach with the length of a Sword. They had alſo Pits and Caues fifteene paces diſtant from the walls caſt vp the height of three men, in the middeſt whereof pikes were ſtucke, yet not appearing aboue ground, as ſharpe pointed as a Pinne. They made theſe Pits ſo couered with ſtraw, putting twigs and branches therein, with a little earth ſtrowed betweene, that we Chriſtians purſuing them, or being readie to aſſault their Towne, might fall into them. But they caſt theſe pits for themſelues, and at length they fell into them: for when our Generall Iohn Eyollas, gathering all his Souldiers together, who were not aboue three hundred (for they left ſixtie to guard the Brigantines) ordering and ranging the companies, went againſt their Citie Lampere, they vnderſtanding before of our comming, making a ſtand a Muſket ſhot of with their armie of foure thouſand men, furniſhed with Bowe and Arrowes after their manner, commanded that we ſhould be told, that they would prouide vs victuall, and other neceſſaries, deſiring vs to goe backe and returne vnto our Ships, that ſo departing as ſoone as we could, we might peaceably returne to our companions. But it was neither good for our Generall, nor our ſelues, that we ſhould conſent to their requeſt: for this Nation and Countrie, by reaſon of the plenty of victuall, was alſo moſt fit, and commodious for vs, eſpecially when in foure whole yeares paſt, we had not ſeene a morſell of bread, liuing onely with fiſh and fleſh, and oftentimes alſo in great penurie.

The Spaniards in foure yeeres had not ſeene a morſell of bread.

These Carios therefore taking their Bowe and Arrowes, entertained and ſaluted vs therewith. But as yet, wee had no minde to hurt them, but commanded to ſignifie vnto them, that they ſhould be quiet, and we would become their friends. But they would not be ſo contented, for they had not yet tried our Gunnes and Swords. When therefore we came ſomewhat neerer vnto them, wee diſcharged our braſſe Peeces againſt them. Which when they heard, and ſaw that ſo many men fell downe dead, and when neither Bullets, nor Arrowes appeared, but holes onely were ſeene in their bodies, they wondred with aſtoniſhment, and horribly terrified, tooke their flight in troopes, ouerthrowing one another like Dogs: and while with great celeritie they haſten to ſhelter themſelues in their Towne, more then three hundred men, in that amaſed feare, fell into the foreſaid pits, which themſelues had digged.

Afterward comming to their Citie, we aſſaulted it, they couragiouſly defending themſelues, till the third day. But when they could defend themſelues no longer, and were much afraid of their wiues and children, which they had with them in the Towne, they earneſtly entreated our fauour and mercie, promiſing, that they would doe any thing for vs, and for our ſakes, at our pleaſure, ſo that wee would ſpare their liues. In this ſtirre ſixteene of our men were ſlaine. They brought alſo to our Generall Eyolas, ſixe women, among which the eldeſt was but eighteene yeeres old, they preſented alſo ſixe Stags, and another wilde beaſt, entreating vs to ſtay with them. They gaue two women to the Souldiers, to ſerue them for Laundreſſes and other ſeruices. They alſo prouided vs victuals, and other neceſſaries for foode. And ſo peace was concluded betweene them and vs.

A Caſtle is built in Lampere, and is called the Aſſumption.

22. These things being ſo done, the Carios were compelled to build vs a great Houſe, of ſtone, timber, and earth, that the Chriſtians might haue a place of refuge, if hereafter they moued any ſedition againſt them wherein they might be ſafe, and might defend themſelues againſt iniurie. Wee tooke this Village or Citie of theirs by aſſault the yeere of Chriſt 1539. in the feaſt of the Aſſumption and gaue it that name. And here wee abode two moneths. These Carios are fiftie leagues diſtant from the Aygais, and from the Iland of Bonaſperanza, which the Tiembus inhabite about three hundred thirtie and foure leagues.

Making therefore a league with theſe Carios, they promiſed, that they would aide vs, when we went to the warres, and if we were to vndertake any ſeruice againſt the Aygais, they would ſend eighteene thouſand men with vs. When our Generall had thus determined, taking three hundred Spaniards, with theſe Carios, going downe the Riuer of Parabol, with the ſtreame, wee marched thirtie leagues by land, till we came to the place, where the ſaid Aygais dwelt: we ſlue them both old and young, in the old place where wee left them, vnawares in their houſes, while they yet ſlept, early in the morning betweene three and foure of the clocke (for the Carios had diligently ſearched out all) oppreſſing them euen to the death; for the Carios haue this cuſtome that being conquerers in warre, they kill all without any commiſeration or pitie.

Aygais deſtroyed.

After this, taking away fiue hundred Canoas or Boats, we burnt all the Villages to the which we came, doing much hurt beſides. After one moneth paſt, ſome of the people of Aygais came vnto vs, who being abſent farre from home, were not preſent at this fight, and craning pardon, yeelded themſelues into our hands.

23. Continuing therefore in this Citie of the Aſſumption of Marie ſixe moneths, we quietly refreſhed our ſelues. In the meane ſpace our Generall Don Eyollas enquired among't theſe Carios, of the Nation called Piembos, from whom hee receiued anſwere, that it was almoſt an hundred leagues diſtant from the Citie of Aſſumption, and that they dwelt vp the Riuer Parabol. Being further demanded, whether they had plentie of food, and how and with what they liued, what their behauiour and conditions were? They answere againe, that these Paiembos haue no other meate and prouision, but Flesh, and Fish, and also Ceratia, which they call Algorobo, whereof they make Meale, which they eate with their Fish. Moreouer also they make Wine thereof, which may be compared to our sweet Wine, for the pleasantnesse thereof.

The Generall musters the Souldiers, and out of foure hundred men, chooseth three hundred, whom he saw better furnished with Armes and other things then the rest, leauing the other hundred with the said Curios, in the Citie of Assumption. Wee therefore sayle vp the Riuer, and alwaies in fiue leagues distance we arriued at some Village situate vpon the Riuer of Parabol, whose Inhabitants came to meete vs withall necessarie prouision. Parabol well peopled.

24 Departing thence wee came to a Mountaine called Fernando, like vnto that which they call Bogenberg. There we light on the said Paiembos, twelue leagues distant from Weibingo. These people entertained vs friendly and peaceable, but with a treacherous and deceitfull minde, as you shall vnderstand hereafter. They therefore brought vs into their houses, and gaue vs Fish, Flesh, and Ceratia, or bread to eate, and so we abode nine whole daies with them. In the meane time our Generall commanded to enquire of them, whether the Nation called Caracariso were known vnto them? They answered him, that concerning them, they knew nothing, but what they had heard by report, to wit, that they dwelt farre hence, in a Countrie abounding with Gold and Siluer, but that they had neuer seene any of them. They added also moreouer, that these Caracarisos were wise men as we Christians are, and that they abound with Victuals, to wit, Maiz, Mandeoch, Manduis, Potades, Mandeoch Nachke ku, Mandeoch Putpy, Mandeoch Ade, Mandeparea, and other rootes; and with flesh also of Indian Sheepe, called Amte, which are a kinde of beast like Asses, hauing feete like Kine, of a thicke and grosse skinne; and that they had plentie also of Conies, Harts, Geese, and Hens: but that none of the Paiembos had euer seene them, as they remember, but that they had it onely by report of others: but we found afterwards assuredly how all things went. Mount Fernando. Weibingo. Paiembos treachery. Caracariso. Amte, beasts called Sheepe of Peru; and it seemeth bigger and stronger in these parts then there: For the Author rode on one, which in Peru beareth a small burthen.

Hauing learned this, our Generall required to haue some of the Payembos to goe with vs into that Countrie, whereupon they readily offered themselues, and their chiefe Commander presently appointed three hundred Paiembos to goe with vs, to carry out victuals, and other necessaries for vs. The Generall commanded to prepare, and of fiue Shippes he caused three to be destroyed. To the other two he appointed fiftie men of vs Christians, whom he commanded that in his absence they should stay there foure moneths, expecting his returne, and that if within the time appointed he returned not vnto vs, they should goe backe with these two Boates to the Citie of the Assumption. But it so fell out, that we staied whole sixe moneths with these Paiembos, and neuer heard any thing in the meane while of our Generall Iohn Eyollas; and prouision of victuall failed vs, and therefore of necessitie, with Dominicke Eyollas, who in the meane time was left to command vs, we were to returne with our Shippes to the foresaid Citie of the Assumption.

25. The Generall departing from the said Paiembos, he came to a Nation called Naperus, ioyned in league and friendship with the Paiembos, who had nothing but flesh and fish. And it is a populous Nation of these Naperus; our Generall tooke certaine vnto him, to shew him the way, for they were to goe through diuers Countries with great labour and in great penurie of all things; for they had tried the violence of many who resisted them in hostile manner, the halfe part of the Christians almost being dead; being brought therefore to a certaine Nation called Peisennos; he could goe no further, but was compelled to goe backe againe with all his people, except three Spaniards, which by reason of their weake estate of body, he left with the Peisennos. Naperus. Peisennos.

Our Generall therefore Iohn Eyollas being in reasonable good health himselfe, went backe againe with all his people and Souldiers, and quietly refreshed himselfe with all his fellowes for three daies with these Naperus, for the people were faint, being ouer tired with the iourney; and munition and weapons failed vs, which the Naperus and Paiembos vnderstanding, conspire among themselues, to kill the Generall Iohn Eyollas, with all his followers, which also they performed: for when our Generall marched with his Christians from Naperus, toward the Paiembos, and had almost now gone halfe the way, these two said Nations, set vpon them vnawares in a thicket or Forrest (which they chose for their ambush) through which the Christians were to goe. There the Generall, together with his sicke and faint Souldiers, was slaughtered by them, as of so many mad Dogges, so that not one escaped.

§. II.

MARTIN EYOLLAS made Generall. GABRERROS comming: SCHERVES Voyage. NVNNER his insolence. Diuers people and accidents described.

IN the meane space, while wee fiftie men returning to the Assumption, expect our Generall, we vnderstand what happened, by report of a certaine Indian slaue of Iohn Eyollas who was now dead, giuen him of the Peisennos, who being skilfull in the Language escaped the hands of the enemies, he declared all the whole matter. This was further confirmed by two of the Paiembos taken Prisoner, and it seemed good to vs Christians, that we should create Martine Eyollas often named to vs, our chiefe Commander and Generall, vntill we receiued other commandement from the Emperours Maiestie.

Our Generall therefore gaue commandement, that foure Brigantines should be prepared, and taking 150. men of the company, leauing the rest in the City of the Assumption of Mary, hee made shew that he would gather together the 150. men left with the Tiembus, (as wee said before) and also these 160. Spaniards who abode with the ships in the Citie of Buenas Aeres, into the said City of the Assumption. With these foure Brigantines therefore hee went downe the Riuers of Paroboll, and Parana with the streame, and came to Tiembus (which first place we called Bona sperança, but the Castle wherein our Garrison Souldiers were, wee named Corpus Christi.

But before we came from the Assumption to Tiembus, a certaine man of the Christians, to wit, Captaine Franco Ruis, a Priest called Iohn Baban, and a certaine Secretarie Iohn Ernandus, as it were subordinate Gouernours of the Christians, tooke treacherous and wicked counsell together, to kill the Captaine of the Indians of Tiembus, and certaine other Indians with him: which wicked attempt they performed also in deed, so that, not without great impietie before our Generall Martin Don Eyollas his comming, and ours, they had slaine those Indians, from whom a long time they had receiued no small benefits. Our Generall therefore commanded Anthonio Mendoza (whom he left as Commander in the Castle of Corpus Christi, with a Garrison of 120. of our men, giuing him also prouision of victuall) if his life and safetie were deere vnto him, that in any case he should beware of the Indians, and should diligently keep watch and ward, by day and night. And if the Indians making shew of friendship should come vnto them, that they should deale courteously with them, performing all friendly offices vnto them, yet in the meane time they should carefully look vnto themselues, & be very warie in all things, lest any damage should be done to themselues, or other Christians. These things being thus ordered and disposed, hee prepareth himselfe to continue his intended journey, taking with him those three persons, who were Authors of the murder. When they were now about to take their journey, one of the Nobles of Tiembus Zuche Lyemi by name, although he were a great friend of the Christians, yet by reason of his wife and children, and other Kinsmen of his, and familiars, compelled to consent to their counsels and practises: he admonished our General Eyollas, to cause all the Christians to be conueyed downe the Riuer with him, for now all the Countrey had made readie all their forces, that either they might wholly cut them all off, or driue them all out of the Countrey. To whom our Generall Martin Don Eyollas answered, that hee would shortly returne: and that his people had strength enough to sustaine the assault or force of the Indians, and added moreouer, that hee desired, that Zuche Lyemi with his Wife and children, and all his familiar friends, and all his people would come ouer to the Christians, and ioyne himselfe with them, which also he promised. After this, our Generall is carried downe the Riuer, and leaueth vs at Corpus Christi.

Wickednesse of some Spaniards.

28. Eight daies after or thereabouts, the aforesaid Indian Zuche Lyemi, sendeth one of his brethren Suelupa by name, but deceitfully and treacherously, and requested our Captaine Mendoza to grant him sixe Christians furnished with shot and other weapons, for he would bring ouer all his substance, with his whole Family vnto vs, and from henceforth dwell amongst vs. Our Captaine being perswaded by these promises, giues him not sixe but fiftie Spaniards, exceeding well prouided and furnished with armour and shot, the Tiembus came vnto them, and intertained them with Indas kisse, bringing flesh and fish, that they might eate: now when the Christians began to fall to their meate, their friends and consorts, and other Tiembus gathered together amongst them, with those also who hide themselues, in the field and houses, fall vpon these fiftie men, and so consecate the Banquet with them, that no man escaped aliue, except one Boy only called Caldero, who got out of their hands. Afterwards they set vpon vs with 10000. strong and besieged the Village (which we held) continually for fourteene daies, intending wholly this that being brought vnder, they might vtterly destroy vs: but God in mercie defeated their purposes, and ouerthrew their enterprizes.

Fiftie Spaniards slaine by Tiembus treacherie.

Spaniards besieged.

They had made themselues long Speares or Iauelings, of the Swords which they had gotten from the slaine Christians, wherewith they fought against vs both with the edge and point, assaulting ting our Village day and night. Our Captaine Anthony Mendoza armed with a two hand Sword, went out of the Port, neere which some Indians lay in ambush, so that they could not bee seene. Being gone therefore out of the Port, the Indians thrust him through with their lauelings, so that hee presently fell downe dead vpon the ground. But because the Indians wanted victuals, they could sustaine themselues no longer heere, but were compelled to leaue the siege and bee gone. Captain Mendoza slaine.

After this two Brigantines laden with prouision of victuall and other necessaries arriued at our Port, which our Generall sent vnto vs from the Towne of Buenas Aeres, to maintaine our selues therewith till his comming. As therefore wee were cheered at the comming of them, so they who arriued with the Brigantines, incredibly sorrowed and lamented for the slaughter of the Christians. Wee therefore determined by a common Councell (which thing also seemed to bee best for vs) to stay no longer in this Village of Corpus Christi, abiding with these Tiembus, but that being carried downe the Riuer, gathering all our forces together, we returne to Buenas Aeres, to our Generall Martin Dominicke Eyollas. Who beeing frighted at our comming, was vehemently grieued (for the slaughter of the people, doubtfull how to consult what he should first doe, seeing also victuall and other necessarie things failed vs.

29. While therefore we continued fiue dayes at Buenas Aeres, a Carauell came to vs out of Spaine, and brought vs newes, that a ship was arriued at Saint Katharine, whose Captaine Allunzo Gabrero, brought with him 200. Souldiers out of Spaine, which when our Captaine certainly knew, he commanded one of the lesser ships, which they call a Galley, to bee made readie, that he might send her as soone as possibly he could to Saint Katharines into Brasil, which was 300. leagues distant from Buenas Aeres: making Gonzallo Mendoza Captaine thereof to gouerne the ship: giuing him charge also, that if arriuing at Saint Katharines, he found the ship there, they should lade one of the ships with Rice, Mandeoch, and other victuals, as seemed good vnto him. Gonzallus Mendoza therefore receiuing this commandement, requested the Generall Martin D. Eyollas to giue him seuen of the Souldiers whom hee might trust, for this Voyage which hee promised. Hee therefore chose mee, and sixe Spaniards to himselfe, with twentie other Souldiers. Gabreros coming out of Spaine with 200. Souldiers thither.

Setting saile from Buenas Aeres, in the space of a moneth we arriued at Saint Katharines, and finding the ship there; which came out of Spaine, together with Captaine Allunzo Gabrero, and all the Souldiers, wee greatly reioyced. Abiding with them two moneths, wee laded our ship with Rice, Mandeoch, and Turkish Corne, as full as it could hold, so that no more could bee put in both the ships to carrie with vs. And the day before All Saints, wee arriued at the Riuer Parana, twentie leagues yet distant from Buenas Aeres. Both the ships met together that night, whose Pilots asked one another, whether wee were now in the Riuer of Parana: when our Pilot affirmed we were, the other said the contrarie, that we were yet almost twentie leagues of. For when twentie or more ships saile together, in the Euening at the going downe of the Sunne they meete together, and one of the Masters asketh the other, what way he had made that day, and with what wind hee would saile by night, lest they should bee diuided one from the other. S. Katharines. Custome of Mariners.

The Riuer of Parana Vnassu, at the Bay or mouth thereof is thirtie leagues broad, which breadth continueth for fiftie whole leagues together, vnto the Port of Saint Gabriell, where the Riuer Parana is eighteene leagues broad. After this our Pilot asketh the Master of the other ship, whether hee would saile after, to him the other made answere, that night was now at hand, and therefore he would continue still at Sea, till the rising of the Sunne, and that he would not make to the Land in the vnseasonable night. And this Pilot in guiding his ship was more circumspect then ours was, as the euent afterward declared. Therefore our Master held on his intended course, leauing the other. Greatnesse of Parana.

30. Sayling by night, a mighty storme troubled the Sea, so that about twelue or one of the clocke before Sunne rising, before we had cast our Anchors in the Sea, we descried Land, and our ship was much bruised when wee were yet a league or more from the Land. Wee could finde no other remedie for this mischiefe, then making our Prayers vnto God, to intreate him to be mercifull vnto vs. The same houre our ship being split was broken in more then a thousand pieces, and fifteene of our men, and sixe of the Indians perished being drowned in the waters. Some taking hold of great pieces of Timber swamme out. I with fiue of my companions escaped by the helpe of a Mast. But of fifteene persons, we found not so much as one carkasse. Afterward we were to trauell fiftie leagues on foot, when we had lost all our clothes, with all the victuals in the ship, so that we were constrained to sustaine our selues, only with Rootes and other Fruites, which we could find heere and there in the fields, while wee came to the Port of Saint Gabriell, where we found the foresaid ship with her Captaine, who arriued there thirtie dayes before vs.

But our Generall Martin D. Eyollas had heard before by intelligence, of this our mishap, and thinking that we were all dead, commanded some Masses to be read for our soules health. When we were brought to Buenas Aeres, our Generall commandeth the Captaine of our ship, and the Master thereof to be cited, and stand to their triall, who without doubt had hanged the Pilot, if so great and earnest intreaties had not beene vsed, yet hee was condemned for foure yeeres to the Gally. They are wracked. Iustice on the negligent Pilot.

Gathering together all our companies to Buenas Aeres, our Generall commandeth the Brigantines to be made ready, and all the Souldiers to bee shipped therein, and commandeth the rest of the shippes to be burned, yet preseruing the Iron Vessels and Instruments. Wee therefore once more saile vp the Riuer of Parana againe, and arriuing at our foresaid Citie of the Assumption of Marie, staying there two yeeres, we expected further commandement from the Emperours Majesty.

Aluarez Nunnez.

31. In the meane time while these things are thus done, a certaine Captaine Aluarez Nunnez Cabeça de Vacha commeth out of Spaine, whom Cæsars Majestie had created Generall, and with foure hundred men, and thirtie Horses diuided into foure ships, of the which two were greater, and the other two Carauels.

Note. Franciscus Lopez chap. 89. writeth of this Aluarez Nunnez that in the yeere 1541. he was sent from Cæsars Maiestie, with 400. men, and 46. horses to the Riuer of Plate. And he was 8. whole moneths in this Voyage. And therefore first in the yeere 1542. hee arriued at the Assumption.

The foure ships arriued in Brasil at the Hauen of Wiesaij, or Saint Katharine, to seeke prouision of victuall. And when the Captaine had sent the two Carauels eight leagues from the Hauen to seeke victuals, so great a storme tooke them, that they perished, being broken all to pieces in the Sea, the men notwithstanding which were in them being saued. When Aluarez the chiefe Commander knew this for a certainty, hee durst not put to Sea any more in the greater greater ships; he therefore commanded vtterly to destroy them, and trauelling by land towards the Riuer of Plate, at length came vnto vs, to the Assumption of foure hundred men bringing three hundred with him, the rest dying either of famine, or of cruell diseases.

From hence the Captaine was eight whole moneths in his journey, and from the Citie of the Assumption, to S. Katherines are reckoned three hundred leagues. This is to be vnderstood of the next and most direct way, for from the Assumption, downe the Riuer to the Sea, there are three hundred thirtie foure leagues, and to Saint Katharine three hundred. Aluarez Nunnez also brought the title of his gouernment out of Spaine, granted vnto him from Cæsars Majestie, and therefore required, that our Generall Martin Don Eyollas, should yeeld vp the whole gouernment vnto him, which thing also Don Eyollas, and all the company with all their heart were readie to performe, yet vpon this condition, that hee should make good proofe also, that this power and authoritie was granted vnto him from the Emperours Maiestie. But the whole assembly could not wrest this from him, only the Priests, & one or two of the Captains affirmed it.

Shipwracke & trauel by land. 100. men lost.

32. The said Aluarez Nunnez therefore taking a view of the Souldiers, found the number of the whole Army to be eight thousand men. Making friendship also with Martin Don Eyollas, each sware to other brotherly fidelity and friendship, so that Eyollas should haue no lesse power to command the people, then he had before. The Gouernour commandeth nine Brigantines to be made ready, that he might saile vp the Riuer as farre as it was possible. But before the ships were made readie, he sendeth three Brigantines with one hundred and fifteene Souldiers before commanding, that they should go as far as they could, and seeke out the Indians that had Maiz.

Sauage nation of Surucusis.

Hee ioyned also two Captaines vnto them, Antonio Gaberro, and Diego Tabellanus. These therefore in the beginning come to a Nation, called Surucusis, hauing Maiz, Mandeoch, and other Roots of that kind, and Mandues also (which are like our Filbirds) and fish and flesh. The men carrie in their lips a blue stone like the bone of a Die.

With this Nation we left our ships, and with them certaine of our companions, to whom we committed the custodie thereof: but hauing gone foure dayes iourney into the Countrey, wee came to a Village pertayning to the Carios, being three hundred strong, inquiring therefore diligently there, of the state of that Countrey, wee receiued honest and peaceable answeres from them. Returning thence vnto our ships, and going downe the Riuer of Parabol, we came to the Nation Achkeres. There we found Letters sent from Aluaro the Gouernour, whereby hee commanded to hang vp the chiefe Captaine of these Indians, Achkeres by name. Which commandement our Captaine obeyed without delay, and we returned home.

Village of Carios.

Achkeres hanged.

33. The whole Countrey of Dabero and Carios, were vp in Armes, ioyning their forces together to inuade the Christians. For the King of Dabero was the brother of that Achkeres, whom the Christians hanged, whose death hee would most seuerely auenge vpon the Christians. Our Gouernour armeth himselfe in the meane time against his Enemies, to vndertake some seruice against them. He therefore determined with the consent of his sworne brother Martin Don Eyollas, that this Eyollas should goe against the said Dabero, and Carios with foure hundred Christians and two thousand Indians, and either driue them out of the whole Countrey, or vtterly roote them out. The said Eyollas faithfully executing this commandement, leadeth his Armie out of the City of the Assumption, and meeting with the enemy, by the commandement of Cæsars Maiestie first perswadeth Dabero to peace and quietnesse, but he little regarding this, would admit no treatie of peace, for he had gathered a mightie Army, fenced his Villages with Bulwarks or Rampires of wood fastened in the ground, and had compassed them about with a triple fence of stakes or piles, hauing also cast vp deepe and mightie pits, whereof we spoke before in the 21. Chapter, all which wee found out before by diligent search. Wee stood still quietly with our Armie till the fourth day, before wee proclaimed war against them, but the fourth day in the morning, three hou es before the rising of the Sunne, making an assault, wee violently rushed into the City, and whomsoeuer we found there, we slue, yet taking many women, and preseruing them them from slaughter, which afterward turned to our great benefit. In this assault twenty sixe of the Christians were slaine, many of the people being wounded and hurt. And many also of the Indians on our part perished: but of the Canibalis 3000. slaine. Not long after Dabero, came vnto vs with his people, and craued fauour and pardon. In the next Expedition Dabero sent to Nunnez 2000. Indians to aide vs. From the Carios also he commandeth nine Brigantines to bee furnished, all which being done, 800. Christians he taketh 500. leauing 300. at the Assumption, ouer whom he made Iohn Satensser Captaine. With this Army of 500. Christians, and 2000. Indians, we saile vp the Riuer of Parabol: and the Carios had with them 83. boats, wee Christians had nine Brigantines, in euery one of the which there were two horses. But the horses were conueyed ouer Land 100. leagues, and we were carried vpon the Riuer vnto the Mountaine of Saint Ferdinand. At that place taking our horses againe into the ships, from thence afterward we were carried forward, vntill we came to our Enemies the Paiembos, but they not looking for our comming, conueyed away themselues by flight with their wiues and children, hauing first set their houses on fire. After this we trauelled 100. leagues together, and light not on any people, at length wee came to a Nation, whose people are called Baschurepos, who liue by fish and flesh. It is a populous Nation, and they inhabit a large Countrey of 100. leagues broad. They haue so great a number of boats, that it is incredible to be written. Their women couer their Secrets. These people refusing to talke with vs, fled from vs. Departing from them, wee came to another Nation called Surucusis, 90. leagues distant from the Baschurepos, the people out of this Countrey louingly and friendly entertained vs. Euery Housholder of these Surucusis dwelleth in a peculiar and proper house of his owne with his wife and children. The men haue a round piece of wood hanging at their eares like a Calecut Die. The women haue Christall of a Skie colour, of a finger thicke hanging at their lips, they are wel-fauoured to behold, and goe altogether naked. These people abound with Turkish Corne, Mandeoch, Manduis, Padades, fish and flesh. And it is a very populous Countrey.

Our Captaine commanded to inquire of them concerning a Nation called Carchacaris, and also of the Carios. They could tell vs nothing of the Carchacaris; but concerning the Carios they said, that they were with them at their houses. But it was not true, hauing learned this, our Generall commanded to prepare our selues for the journey, for hee determined to goe further into the Countrey. He appointed an hundred and fiftie Souldiers to stay with the ships, to whom he gaue prouision of victuall for two yeeres. Taking the other three hundred and fiftie together with the eighteene horses, and twenty thousand Indians or Carios, who came from the Assumption with vs, he went further into the Countrey, but with little benefit to vs. For our Generall was not a man fit for so great an attempt; besides all the Captaines and Souldiers hated him, for his peruerse and rigorous carriage towards the Souldiers. Hauing trauelled therefore eighteene dayes journey they neuer set eye neither vpon the Carios, nor any other people, and food also failed them, so that our Generall was of necessitie to returne againe vnto the shippes. But yet our Generall chargeth a certaine Spaniard Franciscus Rieffere, with tenne other Spaniards to goe forward, commanding them that if after ten dayes iourney they found no people, they should returne vnto the ships, where they would stay for them. It happened therefore that they light vpon a populous Nation, which had plentie of Turkish Corne, Mandeoch, and other Roots. But the Spaniards durst not come in their sight, and returning to vs, signified this vnto our Generall, who was very desirous to haue gone into this Countrey againe, but he was hindered by the waters, that he could not proceed.

Hee returneth.

He therefore commandeth a ship to be furnished againe, wherein he put eighty Souldiers, and making Ernandus Rieffiere, Captaine inioyneth him to goe vp the Riuer of Parabol, to discouer the Nation called Scherues, and therein two dayes iourney, and no more to enter into the heart of the Countrey, and after that to make report vnto him of the Countrey, and the Inhabitants thereof. Departing by ship from our Generall, the first day we came to a certaine Nation called Guebuecusis, on the other side of the Countrey, whose people inhabit a certaine Iland, containing thirty leagues in length, which the Riuer Parabol compasseth. They feed vpon Mandeoch, Maiz, Mandwis, Padades, Mandepore, Porpe Bachkeku, and other Roots, and also vpon flesh and fish. The men and women are like the former Surucusis in Phisnomy and fauour. Wee staied this day with them, When we were to depart the next day, they accompanied vs with ten Canoas or Boats: twice in the day time they fished, and caught Venison, which they gaue vs.

Ernandus Rieffiere sayleth vp the Riuer to the Guebuecusis, and Achkeres.

Guebuecusis. Iland in the Riuer.

Spending nine dayes in this iourney wee arriued after at the Nation called Achkeres, where a great multitude of people were gathered together. The men and women, are of a great and tall stature, the like whereof I saw not in all the Countrey of the Riuer of Plate, and these Achkeres are thirty leagues distant from the foresaid Surucusis; they liue by no other thing saue fish and flesh: the women couer their secrets. We staied one day with these Achkeres, and from hence the said Surucusis returned with their ten Boats or Canoas to their Village. Afterward our Captaine Ernandus Rieffere, requested the Achkeres, to shew him what way they might goe to the Scherues, whereto they were very readie, and sent eight Canoas or Boats from their Village with vs, and twice euery day they caught fish and flesh, that so we might haue sufficient plenty of food.

Scherues.

36. The ninth day after our departure from them, we came to the Scherues, vnto whom from the said Achkeres, are thirtie sixe leagues. This Nation is very populous, yet they are not true and naturall, among whom the King himselfe hath an house. But these Scherues maintaine a Priest expert in the Mysteries of Religion, and haue a ring of wood hanging at their eares. These men also weare a blue Christall in their lips, of the shape and bignesse of Dice, they are painted with a blue colour from the paps to the priuities, with that excellency that I thinke a Painter is not to be found in all Germany, which could performe the like so finely and artificially. They goe naked, and are beautifull after their manner.

Cunning painters.

We stayed therefore one day with these Scherues, and after going fourteene leagues forward in three dayes journey, at length wee came to the place where their King dwelleth, from the which the Inhabitants are called Scherues. His Country containeth only foure leagues in length. Yet hath he a Village situate vpon the Riuer of Parabol. Therefore leauing our ships heere, we committed the custodie thereof to twelue Spaniards, that returning wee might vse them for our defence. Wee also intreated the Scherues dwelling there, that in the meane space they would friendly conuerse with the Christians, and intreate them courteously, which also they did. with necessaries for our journey, passing ouer the Riuer Parabol, wee arriued at that place, where the seate and house of the King was. Who, when we were almost yet a league from him, commeth forth to meete vs guarded with more then 12000. men in a Champion plaine, yet friendly and peaceably. The path wherein they marched, was eight paces broad, strewed with flowres and grasse on euery side, and made so cleane, that not so much as any little stone, stick, or straw appeared. The King had also with him his Musicians, whose Instruments were like our crooked Trumpets, which wee call Schalmes. Hee gaue commandement also, that they should hunt Stags and other wilde beasts on both sides of the way which hee went, so that they tooke about thirtie Stags and twentie Estridges or Iaudu, which spectacle was very pleasant to behold. When we were entred into the Village, he alwaies appointed one lodging for two Christians. But our Captaine together with his Seruants or followers was brought into the Kings Palace.

Musicke.

He is wont to haue Musicke at the Table, and at his meate, whensoeuer he pleaseth. For then they play vpon the Flutes or Pipes, men leading the dances and skipping with most beautifull women, which dances and skippings seemed so strange vnto vs, that looking vpon them, wee had almost forgot our selues. In the rest the Scherues are like those people of whom wee spoke before. The women make them gownes or vpper garments of thinne Cotton, almost like our clothes which are some part silke, which we call Arras or Burschet. They weaue in these diuers shapes of Stags, Estridges and Indian sheepe, according as euery of them is more skilfull in the art of weauing.

Weauers.

In these garments they sleepe, if the Aire happen to be somewhat cold, or putting them vnder them they sit vpon them, or vse them at their pleasure for other seruices. These women are very faire and venerous.

When we had stayed there foure dayes, this pettie King demanded of our Captaine what our purpose was, and whether we would goe? to whom he made this answere, that he sought Gold and Siluer. Therefore he gaue him a Crowne of Siluer weighing a pound and an halfe. He gaue him also a plate of Gold of a spanne and an halfe long, and halfe a span broad, and certaine other things made cunningly wrought of Siluer, and told our Captaine that he had no more Siluer nor Gold: And that these things wherewith he presented him, were the spoiles which in time past he had gotten in war against the Amazones.

Gold and Siluer.

That he made mention of the Amazones and of their riches, was very pleasing to vs to heare. Our Captaine therefore presently demandeth of the King, whether we might come to them by Sea, or by the Riuer, and how much further we had to goe, when wee were to take our journey towards them; whereunto he answered, that we could not goe to them by water but by land, and that in two whole moneths journey.

The Amazones described.

37. These women the Amazones, haue only one of their pappes, their Husbands come vnto them three or foure times in the yeere. And if the woman beeing with child by her Husband, bring forth a Male child, she sendeth him home again to his Father, but if it be a Female, she keepeth it with her: and seareth the right pap of it, that it may grow no more, which she doth for this purpose, that they may be more fit to handle their Weapons and Bowes. For they are warlike women, making continuall war with their Enemies. These women inhabit an Iland that is very large, on euery side compassed with water, to whom there is no accesse but by Canoas or Boats. The Amazones haue neither Gold not Siluer in this Iland, but they are reported to haue great Treasures in the firme land, which the men inhabit. It is a very populous Nation, and is said to haue a King called Iegues, and the King of Scherues told vs the name of the place. Therefore the Captaine Ernandus Rieffiere desired the King of Scherues, to ioyne certaine of his men with vs, to carry our bagge and baggage for vs, and then we would enter the heart of the Country to seeke those Amazones. He willingly assenteth thereunto, yet in the meane time admonishing vs, that the whole Countrie was now ouerflowed with waters, and therefore we should haue a very difficult and vneasie Iourney vnto them, and that wee could not easily at this time come vnto them. But we would not giue credite to his words, but were instant to haue the Indians ioyned with vs. He therefore gaue twentie men to our Captaine, for his owne person, to carrie his prouision and necessaries: and to euery one of vs, he gaue fiue Indians to serue vs, and carrie that little which we had. For wee were to goe eight dayes Iourney, wherein wee should not see any Indian.

But afterward we came to a certaine Nation called Siberis, who in their language and other things were like the Scbernes. Wee were to goe for these eight whole dayes, day and night in the water vp to the knees, and sometimes reaching as high as the waste: nor could we by any meanes get out of them. And if we would make fire, we were of necessitie to put it vpon a pile or stacke made of great blockes or pieces of wood: and it fell out often, that when wee were about to boile our meate, both the pot and the fire fell into the water, so that after that, wee were faine to be without our meate. And Gnats also troubled and vexed vs day and night, so that we could not doe our necessarie worke or businesse.

Wee therefore demanded of those Siberis, whether wee should yet haue any more waters? who answered, that wee were yet foure dayes to walke in the waters, and afterward were to trauell fiue dayes by Land, and at length wee should come to a Nation called Orethuisen. They signified also vnto vs, that wee were too few in number, and therefore that wee should returne. But the Scbernes would not doe this: for wee thought rather to send them backe vnto their Towne, who had hitherto accompanied vs, but they refused to doe it, saying, they were enioyned by their King not to leaue vs, but should continue with vs, vntill wee came out of the Countrie againe. These Siberis ioyned ten men with vs, who together with the Scbernes should shew vs the way to the fore-said Orethuisen. Wee were yet seuen dayes more to trauell in the waters which were so hot, as if they had beene heat vpon the fire, which water also, hauing no other, wee were compelled to drinke. But some might peraduenture thinke, that it was Riuer water, but at that time, showres of raine were so common and vsuall, that they filled the whole Countrie with water, which is altogether very plaine and euen.

Trauels in hot waters.

The ninth day we came vnto a certaine Village of the Nation Orethuisen, betweene ten and eleuen of the clocke. And at twelue of the clocke, being come into the middest of the Towne, we came vnto the Princes house. At that time a cruell and mightie Plague was very hot, whereof Famine was the cause: for, two yeeres together, the Graf-hoppers had so eaten and corrupted all manner of Corne, and the fruits of trees, that almost nothing was left them, which they might eate.

Orethuisen.

Locusts.

But our Captaine asked the Petie-King of this Nation, how many dayes Iourney we yet had to the Amazones? from whence he receiueth answere; That wee must yet trauell one whole moneth, besides that all the Countrie was full of water.

The Amazons are stil'd so there off: I doubt beyond the region of Truth; if the title be properly meant of such as are here described. For warlike wiues liuing in societie with men, are many.

The King of these Orethuisen, gaue our Captaine foure Plates of gold, and foure siluer Rings, which they put about their armes: but the Indians weare the Plates of gold on their foreheads for ornament, as our Nobles doe their Chaines, or Collars of Esses hanged about their neckes. For these things our Captaine gaue the King of the Indians an Hatchet, Kniues, and Beades, or Pater-nosters, Barbers Scizzars, and such like. Wee would willingly haue craued more of them, but wee durst not attempt it, because wee were but few in number, so that wee were forced to stand in feare of them. For the multitude of these Indians was very great, and the Towne huge, in so much as I haue not seene any greater or more populous throughout all India. For the Towne was very long, and broad.

Gold and siluer,

38 Going backe therefore, we returned to the foresaid Siberis, and we Christians were ill furnished with prouision of victuall, and other things, nor had we any meate, but the fruits of trees, which they call Patmides, and Cardes, and other wilde roots growing vnder ground. And when we should returne vnto the Scbernes, the halfe part of our people was deadly sicke, and that by reason of the water, through which wee were to wade for thirtie dayes together, so that wee could neuer turne aside, or get out of the same; and also by reason of the great scarsitie and famine, which we must indure in this Iourney: which calamitie was not a little encreased, in that we were compelled to drinke that filthie and impure water. Abiding therefore foure dayes with these Scbernes, with whom the King himselfe dwelleth, we were very louingly and bountifully entertained, and prouided for. For the King gaue commandement to his Subiects, to giue vs all things necessarie: Euery man also had gotten for himselfe almost two hundred Ducats onely by Cotton Gowns, and Siluer, which we had gotten of them by secret exchange of Kniues, Beades, Scizzers, and Glasses.

Thirtie dayes wading.

Profitable tricke.

After all this, being carried downe the Riuer, wee returned to our Generall. But when wee came to the ships, the Generall commanded vpon paine of death, that no man should goe out of the ship, and he also in proper person comming to our Captaine, laying hold of him, commanded him to be cast in Prison, and by violence tooke away from vs Souldiers, whatsoeuer we had gathered in this Iourney. And not contented with this, would haue hanged our Captaine vpon a tree. When we abiding yet in the Brigandines vnderstood this, taking counsell with certaine of our friends, which were ashoare, we raised a tumult and a sedition against our said Generall, and in his presence face to face we said vnto him, that forthwith he should set Captaine Ernando Rieffere free before vs, and restore all vnto vs, which he had violently taken from vs, otherwise we would prouide according to the state and the time.

When Aluarus saw this our tumult and indignation, with a willing minde, he presently freed the Captaine from captiuitie, and restored also vnto vs whatsoeuer he had taken from vs, endeauouring with faire speaches, that we might be pacified.

Vnhealthfull Countrie.

39. In this Countrie Surucusis I found no Indian, who had attained to fortie or fiftie yeeres, and in all the time of my life I neuer found a Countrie lesse healthfull. It is situate vnder the Tropike of Capricorne.

Wicked precept.

Our Generall falling sicke, in this his sickneſse commanded an hundred and fiftie Christians to arme themselues, and taking two thousand Carios with them, to make foure Brigandines also readie. These he enioyned, to goe about some foure leagues to the Iland of Surucusis by ship, and after kill and take all this people, and should principally destroy those persons, who were fortie or fiftie yeeres old. But how the said Surucusis entertained vs before, is alreadie declared. But what reward we gaue them againe, and how welcome we were vnto them, you shall shortly vnderstand. And God knoweth we did them great iniurie. When therefore wee arriued at their Towne vnawares, they came out of their houses with their Armes, Bowes and Arrowes, yet peaceably to meet vs, but forthwith a tumult arising betweene the Carios and the Surucusis, we Christians discharged our brasse Peeces against them, killing very many: and hauing taken also two thousand of their men, women, boyes and girles, wee tooke away all their houshold-stuffe, and whatsoeuer might bee taken from them, as in such violent assaults is vsually done. Then we returned to our Generall, who was well pleased with that we had done. But because our Souldiers were for the most part feeble and sicke, and most of them also were ill affected to our Generall, and hated him, we could doe no more with them, but being altogether conueyed downe the Riuer Parabol, we returned to our Citie the Assumption; where wee left the rest of the Christians. There our Generall fell sicke againe of a Feauer, and kept within doores fourteene whole dayes together, more of wicked dissimulation and pride, then hindered by reason of sickneſse.

40. All the companie hereupon, as well Noble as Ignoble, determined and decreed with one consent and purpose, that they would send this their Commander prisoner vnto Cæsars Maiestie, the Treasurer or Iudge, the Clarke, or Master of the Toll or Custome, and the Secretarie, ordained by Cæsars Maiestie (whose names were Almunzus Gabrerus, Francus Mendoza, and Gratus Hamiegus) taking to them two hundred Souldiers, tooke our Generall, who feared nothing lesse then this, and this was done vpon Saint Markes Day, in the moneth of April. And they kept him prisoner an whole yeere, till they might send him with two other Officers into Spaine in a Carauell, Martin Don Eyollas was chosen Generall, who also gouerned this Countrie before, especially seeing the Souldiers also loued him: which election the better part allowed. At this time, I lay grieuously sicke of the Dropsie, which disease I had gotten in our Iourney to the Orethuisen, when we waded so long in the waters, and besides suffered want, and almost intolerable hunger: By occasion of that Iourney, eightie of our men beganne to bee sicke, whereof onely thirtie recouered health.

41. Aluarus Nunnez therefore being sent away into Spaine, the Christians began to disagree among themselues in hostile manner. These fightings and contentions continued with vs a whole yeere almost, the sending away of Aluarus giuing occasion to this mischiefe. When the Carios and Aygais, (who hitherto were our friends) perceiued this, to wit, that we Christians, bare such treacherous hearts one to another, and vsed and exercised such fighting and skirmishing amongst our selues, it fell out very acceptably to them all, and by taking Armes against vs, forced vs to peace amongst our selues.

42. Departing from the Assumption, together with our Generall, and three hundred and fiftie Christians, to whom one thousand Indians ioyned themselues, which our Generall so diuided, that three Indians alwaies should serue vnder one Christian; we went so farre forward, that we were onely three leagues distant from that place where our Enemies the Carios encamped, who being fifteene thousand men strong, had now ranged their battell. But although we were now but halfe a league from them, yet we would not set vpon them that day, because we were wearie by reason of the Iourney, and many and great showres of raine troubled vs: therefore wee hid our selues in a Wood, where we lay close the night before.

Fight with the Carios.

Going forth the next morning at sixe of the clocke, and comming into their sight about seuen, we ioyned battell, prolonging the fight till ten of the clocke. But at length they being put to flight, made haste to a certaine Towne called Framidiere, foure leagues distant, which they had fortified with strong Bulwarkes. The Chiefe Commander of the Carios was called Machkarias, and in this conflict, there fell two thousand men of the Enemies, whose heads the Iepens tooke with them. Of ours, besides those that were wounded and hurt, whom we sent backe to the Assumption, ten Christians were slaine. But wee pursued the Enemie with all our Armie, euen to their Towne Fræmidiere, whether the Commander of the Carios conueyed himselfe by flight. They haue compassed this Towne with a triple rowe of Trenches, as with a wall. The Trenches were as thicke as a man in the middle, which being digged a mans depth into the ground, rose three fathom high aboue ground. They had also cast vp pits, or deepe holes, whereof also we haue spoken before, in euery one whereof they had pitched fiue or sixe stakes, sharpe pointed like Pinnes or Needles. This Towne therefore by fortification, and Garrisons of valiant and couragious men, was exceedingly well fenced, so that three dayes we besieged them in vain, yet at length, by Gods helpe, we conquered it. Wee made also great and round Targets of Indian Sheepes skinnes, which they call Amaten, or Amidas. This beast is of a reasonable bignesse, like an ordinarie Mule, of a grey colour, with clouen feete like a Kow, in the rest like an Asse, yeelding pleasant meate. There is great store of these beasts in this Countrie, they haue a skin halfe a finger thicke. Wee therefore gaue these round Targets to the Indians Ieperus, giuing some of them also an Hatchet: and betweene two Indians we placed an Harquebusse shot. Destroying their triple inclosure, we entred the Towne of Fræmidiere; we neither spared men nor women, boyes nor girles. But the greatest part of them hauing escaped by flight, betooke themselues to a certaine other Towne of theirs called Carieba, twentie leagues distant from Fræmidiere, which Towne also they fortified as strongly as they could. The Carios also in great numbers came together againe, incamping themselues neere an huge Wood, that if peraduenture this Towne also should be wonne by the Christians, they might vse the helpe of the Wood for their defense.

Fræmidiere.

Siege and conquest.

Carieba.

Wee came to the said Towne, and pitching our Tents, besieged it round in three places. We had also hid some of our men in a Wood, to keepe diligent watch there. Supplies also of two hundred Christians, and fiue hundred of the Ieperus, and the Barbici came to aide vs, from the City of Assumption. For many of our men, both Christians, and Indians, were much wounded. So that we were of necessitie compelled to send for a fresh supplie of Souldiers for our aide. Now therefore all our forces were foure hundred and fiftie Christians, and the Ieperus and the Barbacis were thirteene hundred in number.

But our Enemies the Carieba, had much more strongly fortified this Towne with Trenches, and Motes, then euer they had done any before. They had also made and framed certaine Engines, and instruments like Traps, wherewith Mise are taken, which if according to their purpose and meaning, they had fallen, euery one of them at one fall had slaine twentie or thirtie men. They had disposed many of these Engines hereand there about this Towne.

Fortifications and Engines.

Wee abode therefore neere this Towne foure whole dayes, and could effect nothing of any worth, vntill Treason (which geeteth the masterie euery where throughout the world) came betweene them and home. For a certaine Indian of the Carios our Enemies, who was their Captaine, to whom this towne properly belonged, came by night vnto our Generall, earnestly intreating, that we would not waste and destroy this his Towne by fire, which if wee would promise him, he would ioyne men with vs; and would shew vs the way and meanes how to take it. Which when our Generall had promised, adding also this caution, that he should receiue no hurt nor damage, he shewed vs in the Wood two wayes to come to the Towne, and said, that he would raise a flaming fire therein, during which we should violently breake into it.

When these things proceeded iust according to the purpose and agreement made betweene vs, by this meanes entring we got the Towne, and great slaughter of the people was made by vs Christians: And they that thought they had escaped by fleeing, fell into the hands of the Ieperus, by whom the greatest part of them were slaine. But they had not their wiues, and children then with them, but had hid them in a great Wood foure leagues distant from thence. The people which escaped out of this conflict, fled to a certaine other Petie-King of the Indians, called Dabero: and the Village which entertained them, was called Iuberic Sabaie, and was fortie leagues distant from Carieba. But wee could not pursue them thither, for this reason, because what way soeuer they passed, they had wasted all farre and neere, with fire, and spoyling, and had taken away all the store of prouision and victuall. Abiding foure dayes in the Towne Carieba, we cured the wounded, and also refreshed our selues.

43. After this we returne to our Citie, the Assumption, that after we might sayle vp the Riuer, and seeke out the Towne of Iuberic Sabaie, where the King Dabero had an house, with nine Brigandines, and two hundred Canoas or Boats, wherein fifteene hundred Indians of Ieperus were carried, we went vp the Riuer Parabol, to seeke our Enemies Iuberic Sabaie.

Iuberic Sabaie.

In this Voyage also that captaine of the Carios, who betrayed the Towne Carieba to vs, ioyned himselfe with vs, bringing with him one thousand Carios, to aide vs against Dabero.

46. leagues from Assumption.

We goe forward therefore with all our forces gathered together on the Land and Riuer, and come so neere vnto our Enemies Iuberic Sabaie, that we are but two leagues distant from them. When we had arriued there, our Generall Eyollas, sent two Indians of the Carios to the Enemie into their Towne, who should perswade them in the Christians behalfe, that returning into their Countrie, with their wiues and children, and all their household-stuffe, they should serue the Christians with due subiection, as they did before, which if they refused to doe, they would driue them all out of the Countrie. To this Dabero the King of the Carios, for answer, commandeth to tell our Generall, That he neither acknowledged him, nor the Christians, but if they came, they would kill them by casting bones at them. They also send away the two Indian messengers well bumbasted with cudgels, with this straight charge, that they should speedily withdraw themselues from the Campe, otherwise it should come to passe, that they should be slaine.

R. Stuesia. We came to a Riuer, called Stuesia in the Indian language, almost as broad as Danubius, halfe the height of a man deepe in some places also deeper. This Riuer doth sometimes so increase by inundation, that it doth much hurt to the Countrie, and by reason of such inundation or ouerflowing, they cannot trauaile by land. We were to passe ouer this Riuer, and because the enemie had pitched their tents on the other side of the Riuer, they did vs much hurt in the passing ouer. When they saw that we had now passed ouer the Riuer, speedily taking their flight, conuaied themselues into their towne, halfe a league distant from the Riuer; we so pursued them, that we came to their towne of Iuberic Sabaie, at the verie same moment that they themselues entred, which also presently we so besieged round, that none of them might either goe out or in: we also forthwith armed our selues with targets made of the skinnes of the Amydas, as aforesaid. We wan their towne.

Our Generall commanded, before we should inuade them by force of armes, that we should neither kill the women, nor their children, but onely leade them away captiues; whose commandement also we obayed, but all the men that we could light vpon, must dye, yet many escaping by flight, preserued themselues, and our confederates the Iperus got one thousand of the enemies heads. All these things thus performed, those Carios, who escaped by flight, came, together with their King, and crauing pardon of our Generall, intreated that their wiues and children might be restored vnto them, and then they would performe all obedience of subiection vnto vs, as before, and serue vs faithfully. Our Generall therefore receiued them to fauour, who afterward also continued constantly in our friendship and amitie, so long surely as I abode in those Countries. And this warre continued a yeare and an halfe, and fell out in the yeare 1546.

§. III.

A long and troublesome March from Assumption into Peru. The Authors returne.

44. REturning therefore with our Shippes to our Citie the Assumption, wee staied there two whole yeares. But when in the meane time, neither the Ships came out of Spaine, nor any thing was signified by messengers, our Generall going forth with three hundred and fiftie Spaniards, and two thousand Carios, in the yeare 1548. saileth vp the Riuer Parabol, with seuen Brigantines, and two hundred Canoas, or Boates. But those of the people, whom the Shippes could not hold, trauaile by land with one hundred and thirty horses. Hee made Don. Franck Mendoza Captaine; giuing also prouision for two yeares.

These things therefore being thus setled. The Generall hauing sent backe fiftie to Assumption with three hundred Christian Souldiers, one hundred and thirty Horses, and two thousand Carios, hauing gone forward eight dayes iourney, found no Nation; but the ninth day wee light vpon a Nation called Naperus, the people thereof liue onely by fish and flesh. They are of a strong and tall stature. Their women, which are not beautifull, couer their secrets. This Country is sixe and thirtie leagues distant from the Mountaine Saint Ferdinand: here we lay all night. The day following, continuing on our iourney, we came the fourth day after, to another Nation called Mapais, which is very populous; the Subiects are compelled to serue their Noblemen, with fishing, and labours, and other worke, no otherwise then our Boores with vs, doe their Nobles. But this Nation aboundeth with Mais, Mandeoch, Ade, Mande pore, Mandeoch porpie, Padades, Mandues, Bachkeku, and other rootes, and things to eate. It hath also Stagges, Indian Sheepe, Estridges Ducks, Geese, and many other kindes of Foule. Their Woods abound in great plentie with Hony, of the which also they make Wine, and put it to other necessary vses.

Naperus.

Mapais.

Two kindes of Amidas, one able to beare men. Acosta mentions those of Peru to bear fiftie pounds or little more.

The Sheepe (which they call Amidas) are of two kindes, some of them domesticall, and some wilde, which they vse for carriages, and to ride vpon, and for other seruices, almost as we doe our Horses, as I also rid, being carried on such a Sheepe in this very iourney, more then forty leagues, when my legge was lame. They vse the same Beasts also in Peru for carriage of Merchandise, as our people doe packe Horses.

These Mapais are men of a tall stature, and warlike, conuerting all their labour and study to warlike affaires. Their women are faire, and couer their secrets. They doe no worke and labour in the fields, but the whole care of maintaining the Family, lyeth vpon the man; neither doe they they any thing elſe at home, ſaue ſpinne, and weaue Cotten, or dreſſe meate for their husbands.

We were not aboue halfe a league from this Nation when they comming forth of the towne, they met vs neere a certaine little Village, where they perſwaded vs quietly to refreſh our ſelues that night, for they would giue vs whatſoeuer we had neede of, but this they did deceitfully and treacherouſly: that alſo we might be more ſecure, they gaue our Generall foure ſiluer Crownes, ſuch as are vſually worne vpon the head, and foure Plates of ſiluer, whereof euery one of them was a ſpanne and an halfe long, and halfe a ſpanne broad. Theſe Plates they binde to their foreheads for ornament, as we haue ſaid before. They preſented our Captaine alſo with three yong women.

When we had turned into this Village, ſupper being ended, and the watch ſet, that the people might be ſafe from the treacherie of the enemie, wee gaue our ſelues to reſt. About midnight our Generall had loſt his yong wenches.

45. After this, two thouſand of the foreſaid Mapais came vnto vs, that ouercharging vs vnawares they might vtterly ouerthrow and kill vs, but they got no great matter at our hands, and in this conflict and bickering more then one thouſand men were ſlaine. They betake themſelues to flight, whom we purſued with great haſte, euen to their Towne, but found no man there, no not ſo much as their wiues and children: our Generall therefore diſpatching one hundred and fiftie harquebuſſe ſhot, and two thouſand fiue hundred Indian Caries, purſueth theſe Mapais three dayes, and two nights with great ſpeede, ſo that we did but dine, and reſted by night refreſhing our ſelues foure or fiue houres with ſleepe.

The third day we ſuddenly came vpon them gathered together in a certaine wood with their wiues and children, but they were not thoſe we ſought, but were their friends; who were nothing afraid of vs, nor did they ſuppoſe that we would euer haue come vnto them. Notwithſtanding the innocent were forced to pay for the fault of the guilty; for when we light vpon them, we ſlew many of them, and tooke of the men, women, and children, about three thouſand perſons, and if it had bin day, as it was night, none of them had ſcaped our hands; for an huge numoer of this people had gathered themſelues together in a certaine Mountaine incloſed round with woods. I had gotten for my part of the ſpoile about nineteene men and women, not very old, together with certaine other things.

Theſe things performed, returning to our Campe, we quietly repoſed our ſelues for eight daies; for we found there, ſufficient plenty of victuall, and other neceſſary things; from this Nation Mapais, vnto Saint Ferdinandes Mount, where our Shippes rode, were fiftie leagues, and from the Nation Naperus thirtie ſix.

Marching on againe from thence, we came to a Nation called Zemis, ſubiect to the foreſaid Mapais. They liue almoſt as the Boores doe with vs, vnder the power of their Lords. In this iourney we light vpon fields tilled, and ſet with Mais, and other rootes, and theſe fruites and meates, are all the yeare long found in the fields; for before one reape and gather the one into the barne, another is ready for the harueſt. And this alſo being reaped and gathered, it is time to ſowe another. Turning aſide thence, we came into another Towne, whoſe inhabitants when they ſaw vs at hand, fled all away. This towne is foure leagues diſtant from the foreſaid Mapais. Departing hence, and trauailing ſix leagues in two dayes iourney, we light on another Nation called Tohanna, but we found no men here, but great plenty of foode. The men of this Countrie alſo are ſubiect to the Mapais. Zemis. Fields of Mais, &c. Tohanna.

Going from hence we met with no Nation in our iourney in foure dayes ſpace. But the ſeuenth day we came to a Nation called Peionas, foureteene leagues diſtant from the former Tohanna. In this Countrie a great number of people came together; and their Captaine came forth to meete vs, guarded with a great multitude of men, yet peaceably, and earneſtly beſought our Generall not to enter into their Towne, but that we ſhould ſtay without, in the place where he came to meete vs; and our Generall would not conſent, but directly marched forward, will he, nill he, entred into the Towne. Peionas.

We ſtaied with theſe Peionas three dayes, and our Generall demanded many things of them concerning the nature and condition of this Countrey. When we were to depart, theſe Peionas gaue vs an Interpreter and a guide, that we might finde water to drinke, for there is great ſcarcity of water in this Country, hauing trauailed foure leagues, we came to a Nation called Mayegory, and ſtaying one onely day there, taking an Interpreter againe, and a guide, we marched forward. And theſe people were gentle and curteous. Mayegory.

Departing alſo from theſe people, when we had marched eight leagues, we came to a Nation, whoſe people, which were many in number, were called Marrones. They alſo gently and curteouſly entertained vs: we abode here two dayes, and receiuing a relation of the nature, and condition of the place, taking alſo a guide with vs, we went further forward. Departing foure leagues from theſe, we came to another Nation, yet not ſo populous, called Paronies. This Countrie aboundeth not with victuall and foode, yet notwithſtanding it is 3000. ſtrong of men able for warre. In this Countrie we reſted one day onely. Marrones. Paronies.

Symanos. Wall of bushes

Hauing trauailed twelue leagues from this place, we came to a Nation, whose people are called Symanios, where a great multitude of men came together. Their towne is situate vpon an high hill, and compassed round about with Bryar bushes, as with a wall.

Barconos.

46. We trauailed sixteene leagues further in foure daies iourney, and at length were brought vnto a certaine Nation, called Barconos: the men thereof, seeing our comming chanced to them beyond their expectation and opinion, presently betooke themselues to flight, as soone as wee came neere their towne; yet they could not escape out of our power. But when we onely craued foode of them, being very ready, they willingly gaue vs Hens, Geese, Sheepe, Estridges, Stags, and other foode abundance.

Leybanios. Grashoppers.

Departing thence, the third day after we came to a Nation, whose people were called Leybanios. They dwell twelue leagues remoued from the former. These people had but little foode, for the Grashoppers had corrupted almost all their fruites. Therefore resting one onely night with them, after hauing trauailed sixteene leagues in foure dayes iourney, we came to another Nation called Carcbconos. The Grashoppers also had done them great displeasure, but had not so much hurt them as they had done the former: abiding with them one day, we vnderstood this of the condition and quality of the Countrie, that we should finde no water in foure and twenty or thirty leagues space: we approached to these Suboris in six dayes space: But many of our men died of thirst, although with these Carcbconos we had furnished our selues with indifferent store of water for this iourney. But in this iourney we found a roote aboue ground, hauing great and broad leaues wherein water remaineth as it were in some vessels, nor is it powred out thence, nor also so easily consumed, and one of these rootes containeth about halfe a measure of water. These Suboris had great scarcitie of water also, neither had they any other thing besides to drink, and it had not now rained for three whole moneths: yet of the roote called Mandepore, they make drinke after this manner. They gather together the said roote into a Morter, and out of them being stamped they wring forth a iuice like milke: if water may be had, wine also may be made of these rootes. In this Village there was one Well onely, which was to be kept by a watchman. So that we were not much troubled with the desire either of Siluer or Gold, but the common complaint of all men, would be for want of water. In this Countrie farre and wide also no riuer waters are to be found beside these, but they vse onely that water which they gather in the cisternes. These Suboris make warre with the bordering Indians, onely for water. The Suboris, who should haue shewed vs the way, by night priuily stole away. We were therefore now to seeke out the way our selues, and at length we light vpon those people called Peisennos; they refusing our friendship withstood vs by armes, but got little at our hands. We tooke some of these Peisennos, who told vs that there had bin three Spaniards in their towne, whereof one called Ikieronimus was a trumpeter, whom Iohn Eyollas (who was sent by Don Petro Mendoza, to discouer these Countries) left sicke there, as we haue at large before rehearsed. They said therefore that the Peisennos had slaine these three Spaniards, foure daies before our comming thither, being aduertised thereof by the Suboris: but they should deerely pay for this fact of theirs. Abiding foureteene daies in their towne, we sought them round about vs euerie where, till at last taking them vnawares in a wood, but not al, we partly slew them, & partly led them away captiues.

47. Taking our iourney, at length we came to the Maigenes, but the people thereof resisting vs with strong hand, would not entertaine vs as friends. Their Towne being situate vpon an hill, was compassed round on euerie side with a thicke and broad quickset hedge, as high as a man might reach with his Sword. Wee Christians therefore with our Carios, began to assault this Towne in two diuers places. But in this assault twelue Christians, together with some few of the Carios were slaine, and they put vs to a great deale of trouble, before we could take and win this towne.

Fight betwixt Carios and Maigenes.

Eight daies after the Towne taken fiue hundred of our Carios, taking their Bowes and Arrowes, departing secretly and without our priuitie, about two or three leagues from our Campe, seeke out the Maigenos, who were fled. On whom when they lighted, these two Nations fought with so great and constant resolution, that more then three hundred men of the Carios, but of the enemies, almost innumerable, were slaine; for there was so great a multitude of them, that they spread almost a whole league in length. But the Carios sending a messenger to the towne where we were, earnestly entreated our Generall, that they would come with some supply of Souldiers to helpe them; for the Maigenos had so beset them round in a wood, that they could neither goe forward nor returne backe againe.

Which when our Generall vnderstood, he presently commandeth the Horses to be made ready, and to send away and dispatch one hundred and fiftie Christians, but of the Carios assembled a thousand men, leauing the rest of the Souldiers in the tents to guard them, that wee being absent, the Maigenos our enemies might inuade them. We went forth therefore with this force (to wit) the said horse, one hundred and fiftie Christians, and one thousand Carios, to helpe the Carios our friends. But so soone as the Maigenos perceiued our comming, remouing their tents, they committed themselues to flight, and albeit we pursued them with as much speede as wee could, yet could we neuer ouertake them.

Returning therefore to our tents, we abode there three daies; for we had found in this towne of the Maiagenos, great plentie of foode, and other things. Hauing trauailed a continuall iourney of thirteene daies, that is to say (in our iudgement and theirs who are skilfull in the celestiall motions) two and fiftie leagues, we came to a Nation, whose people are called Carcokies: and hauing trauailed further the space of nine daies, we came into a certaine little Countrie, sixe leagues long and broad, which was all so thicke ouerspread with excellent Salt, as if it had sowed Salt in great abundance, and this Salt is not corrupted winter nor summer. Carcokies. Salt Country.

We rested two daies in this Salt Countrie, going forward, at length, after foure daies iourney, we came to the foresaid Nation Carcokies: But when we were yet foure leagues from their towne, our Generall sent fiftie Christians, fiftie Cariós to prouide vs lodgings. Hauing entred the towne, we found such an innumerable multitude of men gathered together, as in all this iourney we had not seene the like: wherefore being very pensiue and carefull aboue measure, sending a messenger presently backe vnto our Generall: who taking his iourney the very same euening, came vnto vs betweene three and foure of the clocke in the morning. But the Carcokies supposing there had bin no more men there then we, whom they had seene before, had now promised themselues the victorie. But when they vnderstood that our Generall followed vs with a greater force, they were very sad and sorrowfull, and performed all friendly offices and kindenesse vnto vs; for they could doe none other, seeing they were afraid of their wiues, children, and their towne. They brought vs therefore flesh of Deere, Geese, Hens, Sheepe, Estridges, Conies, and whatsoeuer else of this kinde of Venison, and also of Birds, they had also Turkish Coine, Wheate, Rise, and certaine Rootes, of all which things there was great plentie in this Countrie. Samdeli.

The men of this Countrie weare a blew stone in their lippes, as broad as a Dye. Their weapons are Darts, the staues of Speares, and round Targets made of the skins of the Indian Sheepe called Amidas. Their women haue a little hole in their lips, in the which they put Christall either of a greene or blew colour: they haue garments of Cotten, like to a shirt, but without sleeues: they are beautifull enough: they doe nothing else but spinne, and order things appertaining to the houshold; for tillage of the ground, and other things necessarie for the maintenance of the familie, are looked vnto by the men.

48. When we had gone three daies iourney from this towne, we came to a certaine Riuer called Machcasies, a league and a halfe broad: and when we saw not how we might passe safely ouer without danger, at length we found out this meanes, that for euery two persons wee should make a Boate of twigs and timber, whereon being carried downe the Riuer, they might come to the other side of the banke; but in this passage foure of our men were drowned. This Riuer hath most sauourie Fish. Many Tygars also are found about these places, and this Riuer is but foure leagues onely distant from the towne Machcasies. Machcasies.

The Inhabitants comming forth to meete vs, entertained vs curteously, speaking to vs in the Spanish tongue, whereat being astonished and sore afraid at the first, wee demanded of them to what Lord they were subiect, and who was their supreame Gouernour? They therefore answered vs, and our Captaine, that they were subiect to a certaine Noble man in Spaine, whose name was Petro Ausuetes. Spanish tongue. They ariue in the Kingdome of Peru. Pedro Ansuetes.

Entring into this Towne, we found certaine men and women, and little Infants also swarming with very little vermin, like our fleas. These little vermin, if they lay hold of the toes of the feete, or any other part of the body, they gnaw and enter alwaies more and more deepely in, and at length become wormes, such as are found in our filberds; yet if it be done in time, this mischiefe may be preuented, that it shall not hurt, but if deferring the cure it be neglected, at length by eating and gnawing, it consumeth and corrupteth whole toes. Strang worms.

From the often named Citie of the Assumption of Mary, to this Towne, are numbered (according to the account of the Astronomers) three hundred seuentie two leagues. And when we had staied there about twentie daies, a Letter was brought vs from a Citie of the Kingdome of Peru, called Lima, where the Viceroy or Lieutenant of Cæsars Maiestie, who at that time was Liecutiatus Lagasca, had an house. The Letter contained, that our Generall Martin Don Fiottas should goe no further forward, vpon paine of death, but abiding in the Towne Machcasies, should expect his further commandement. A Letter out of Peru.

But after this our Generall sent away foure persons to the Gouernor to Peru. These foure persons iourneying sixe weekes in Peru, came first to that Nation called Potasi, next to another called Ruskens. The third Nation to which they came, was called Plata, and the fourth, which was the Metropolis or the chiefe Citie, was called Lima. Potosi.

49. This also is worthie of obseruation. That the Countrie of Machcasies is so fruitfull, that we neither found, not saw any like it in fruitfulnesse, in all this our Iourney. For if an Indian going forth into the Wood, make an hole or a cleft in the first tree that commeth to hand, smiting an Hatchet into it, fiue or sixe measures of so pure Honie flowe out, as if it were sweete Wine, or Muskadell. The Bees that make this Honie are without stings, and are very small. This Honie being eaten with Bread, or mingled with other food, yeeldeth pleasant meate. They Hony in trees. Bees without stings.

make also Drinke thereof, or Wine, of the same taste that Muskadell hath, but sweeter. Our Generall Eyollas so wrought with the people, that wee could stay no longer here, by reason of the want of prouision. For we had scarce victuall for one moneth.

In performing this Iourney we spent a yeere and an halfe, doing nothing else, but making continuall warre. And in this Iourney we had brought into our subiection about twelue thousand men, women, and children, who were compelled to serue vs as bond-slaues: as I for mine owne person did possesse about fiftie men, women, and children.

Ciuill contentions.

50. Wee, with our Generall Martin Don Eyollas, came vnto the Citie Assumption, but Abriego a Captaine which had rebelled against Captaine Mendoza, and slaine him would neither open the Citie to our Generall, nor yeeld it vp vnto him, nor acknowledge him for Generall, and his Gouernour.

But the said Diego Abriego, being forced to forsake the Citie with fiftie Christians, who ioyned themselues with him, fled thirtie leagues from vs, so that we could atchieue nothing against him. This warre continued two whole yeeres space betweene vs, the two Captaines so opposing themselues one against the other, that neither was safe from danger of other.

51. In the meane season, while these things were thus done, I receiued Letters out of Spaine, and shewed to Martin Don Eyollas, I presently desired a friendly and curteous dismission from him, I tooke my Iourney in the name of God, vpon Saint Stephens Day, which was the sixe and twentieth of December, in the yeere 1552. and departing from the Assumption of Marie, carried vpon the Riuer of Plate, with my twentie Indians in two Canoas or Boats, when wee had now gone sixe and fortie leagues, we first arriued at a certaine Towne called Iuberic Sabaie. In that Towne foure others also, together with two Portugals ioyned themselues with vs, hauing gone fifteene leagues, we came to a Towne called Gaberetbo. After this hauing gone sixteene leagues further in foure dayes, we came to a certaine Village called Barotij. Whence departing againe, hauing gone foure and fiftie leagues in nine dayes, wee came to a Towne called Barede, where staying two dayes, we sought prouision and Boats to carrie vs, for wee were to goe one hundred leagues vp the Riuer Parana by Boat. At length being brought to a certaine Towne called Gingie, wee abode there foure dayes. And thus farre the Countrie and Empire of Cæsars Maiestie extendeth it selfe, all which places in former time were subiect to the People Caries.

52. After this therefore, all the Nation Tonpin, beginneth the Countrie and Iurisdiction of the Portugall, and we were compelled, leauing Parana, and our Boats, to trauell by land vnto these Tonpin, which continued sixe whole moneths; in which Iourney we were to goe ouer Desarts, Mountaines and Valleyes, and for the feare waxed of wilde and rauening beasts, we durst not safely take our sleepe, &c.

Wee wandred eight whole dayes through Woods and Thickets, so that although hauing trauelled farre and wide, yet in all my life time I had neuer gone so rough, troublesome, and tedious a way: nor had we any thing which we might eate, so that wee were compelled to sustaine our selues with Honie, and Roots, whersoeuer we could get them: and for the danger also, to wit, that we feared lest our enemies would pursue vs, we had not so much time as to take any venison.

Biesaie.

After this wee came to a Nation called Biesaie, where staying foure dayes, wee prouided our selues againe of victuall, but durst not come neere their Towne, because we were so few.

Riuer Vrquam. Huge Water-snakes.

In this Countrie there is a Riuer called Vrquam, wherein we saw Water-snakes, and Serpents called Tuesca, in the Spanish Tongue Schene Eyba, which were sixteene paces long, and foure fathome thicke. These Serpents doe much hurt: for if a man wash himselfe in that Riuer, or any beast swim ouer, forthwith such a Serpent swimming to them, windeth his tayle about the man, or beast, and drawing them vnder water, deuoureth them.

Schenetueba.

Proceeding further hence we trauelled about one hundred leagues, in a continued Iourney of a whole moneths space, and at length came into a large Towne called Schenetueba, and rested there three dayes.

Going againe further, we came into a certaine Towne of Christians, whose Captaine was Iohn Reinneill.

53. Moreouer, proceeding further thence, we came to the Towne of Saint Vincent. From the Citie of the Assumption of Marie, to the Towne of Saint Vincent in Brasill, are reckoned three hundred and seuentie leagues.

Setting sayle from the Towne of Saint Vincent, on Saint Iohn Baptists Day, which was the foure and twentieth of Iune, in the yeere of our Lord 1553. wee arriued at Lisbon, the third of September, in the yeere 1553. and while wee abode fourteene dayes there, two of my Indians died, which I brought with me out of those Countries.

He arriued at Antwerpe, whence he had set forth at first in Ianuarie 1554.

I had thought here to haue added the Voyages of Iohannes Stadius, (another German, which serued the Portugals in Brasill about Schmidels later time) published in Theodore de Bry; and had the same by me translated. But containing little light for the Countrie, and People; and relating in manner onely his owne Tragedies, in his taking by the Sauages, and often perils of being eaten by them, as some of his friends were before his face, with other like Sauage arguments wherewith wee haue glutted you already: I being already too voluminous, haue omitted the same, and hasten to other Relations.

The Obſeruations of Sir RICHARD HAWKINS, Knight, in his Voyage into the South Sea. An. Dom. 1593. once before publiſhed, now renewed and corrected by a written Copie, illuſtrated with notes, and in diuers places abbreuiated.

§. I.

What happened in this Voyage before they came neere the Æquinoctiall Line, with diuers accidentall Diſcourſes vſefull for Nauigators.

With the Counſels conſent, and helpe of my Father, Sir Iohn Hawkins, Knight, I reſolued a Voyage to be made for the Ilands of Iapan, of the Philippinas, and Moluccas, the Kingdome of China, and East Indies, by the way of the Straites of Magelan, and the South Sea.

For this purpoſe in the end of the yeere 1588. returning from the Iourney againſt the Spaniſh Armado, I cauſed a Ship to bee builded in the Riuer of Thames, betwixt three and foure hundred tunnes, which was finiſhed in that perfection as could be required. For ſhee was pleaſing to the eye, profitable for ſtowage, good of ſayle, and well conditioned. On the day of her lanching, ſhee was named, The Repentance.

This ſhip was named the Repentance: an ominous name and vnfortunate, as vſually thoſe celeſtiall characters ſort not to terreſtriall fabrikes: inſtanced in the Reuenge, Thunderbolt, and this Repentance, with the Ieſus of Sir Io. Hawk.

The Repentance being put in perfection, and riding at Detford, the Queenes Maieſtie paſſing by her, to her Palace of Greenwich, commanded her Barge-men to rowe round about her, and viewing her from Poſt to Stemme, diſliked nothing but her Name, and ſaid, that ſhee would Chriſten her a new, and that thenceforth ſhee ſhould bee called the Daintie; which name ſhee brooked as well for her proportion and grace, as for the many happie Voyages ſhee made in her Maieſties ſeruices: Hauing taken (for her Maieſtie) a great Byſten, of fiue hundred tunnes, loden with Iron, and other Commodities, vnder the conduct of Sir Martin Forbuſher; A Carack bound for the East Indies, vnder my Fathers charge, and the principall cauſe of taking the great Carack, brought to Dartmouth by Sir Iohn Borrow, and the Earle of Cumberlands ſhips, Anno 1592. with others of moment in her other Voyages. To vs, ſhee neuer brought but coſt, trouble, and care.

Conſiderations for pretended Voyages.

Hauing made an eſtimate of the charge of Victuals, Munition, Impreſts, Sea-ſtore, and neceſſaries for the ſaid ſhip; conſorting another of an hundred tunnes, which I waited for daily from the Straites of Giberalter, with a Pinnace of ſixtie tunnes, all mine owne: And for a competent number of men for them; as alſo of all ſorts of merchandiſes for trade and traffiche in all places where we ſhould come; I began to wage men, to buy all manner of victuals & prouiſions, and to lade her with them, and with all ſorts of commodities (which I could call to minde) fitting; and diſpatched order to my ſeruant in Plimouth, to put in a readineſſe my Pinnace; as alſo to take vp certaine prouiſions, which are better cheape in thoſe parts then in London, as Beefe, Porke, Bisket, and Sider. The eight of Aprill, 1593. I cauſed the Pilot to ſet ſayle from Black-wall, and to vaile downe to Graueſ-end, whither that night I purpoſed to come. And for that ſhee was very deepe loden, and her Ports open, the water beganne to enter in at them; which nobodie hauing regard vnto, thinking themſelues, ſafe in the Riuer, it augmented in ſuch manner, as the weight of the water began to preſſe downe the ſide, more then the winde: At length when it was ſeene and the ſheete ſlowne, ſhe could hardly be brought vpright. But God was pleaſed, that with the diligence and trauell of the Companie, ſhee was freed of that danger: which may be a gentle warning to all ſuch as take charge of ſhipping, euen before they ſet ſayle, either in Riuer or Harbour, or other part, to haue an eye to their Ports, and to ſee thoſe ſhut and calked, which may cauſe danger; for auoiding the many miſhaps, which daily chance for the neglect thereof, and haue beene moſt lamentable ſpectacles and examples vnto vs: Experiments in the Great Harrie, Admirall of England, which was ouer-ſet and ſunke at Portſmouth with her Captaine. Caruw, and the moſt part of his companie drowned in a goodly Summers day, with a little ſlaw of winde; for that her Ports were all open, and making a ſmall hole, by them entred their deſtruction; where if they had beene ſhut, no winde could haue hurt her, eſpecially in that place. In the Riuer of Thames, Maſter Thomas Candiſh had a ſmall ſhip ouer-ſet through the ſame negligence. And one of the Fleet of Sir Francis Drake, in Santo Domingo Harbour, turned her keele vpward likewiſe, vpon the ſame occaſion; with many others, which we neuer haue knowledge of.

Prouiſions beſt prouided at Plimouth, then at London. Note.

Danger of Ports open.

Comming neere the South fore-land, the winde began to vere to the South-east and by South, so as we could not double the point of the Land, and being close aboord the shoare, and putting our ship to stay, what with the chapping Sea, and what with the Tide vpon the Bowe, shee missit staying, and put vs in some danger, before we could flat about; therefore for doubling the Point of any Land better to beare a short board, then to put all in perill.

Being cleere of the race of Portland, the winde began to suffle with fogge and misling raine, and forced vs to a short sayle, which continued with vs three dayes; the winde neuer vering one point, nor the fogge suffering vs to see the Coast. The third day in the fogge, we met with a Barke of Dartmouth, which came from Rochell, and demanding of them, if they had made any land, answered, that they had onely seene the Edie stone that morning, which lieth thwart of the Sound of Plimouth, and that Dartmouth (as they thought) bare off vs North-North-east: which seemed strange vnto vs; for we made account that wee were thwart of Exmouth: within two houres after, the weather beganne to cleere vp, and wee found our selues thwart of the Berry, and might see the small Barque bearing into Torbay, hauing ouer-shot her Port: which errour often happeneth to those that make the land in foggie weather, and vse not good diligence by sound, by lying off the land, and other circumstances, to search the truth; and is cause of the losse of many a ship, and the sweete liues of multitudes of men. That euening, wee anchored in the range of Dartmouth, till the floud was spent; and the ebbe come, wee set sayle againe. And the next morning early, being the sixe and twentieth of Aprill, we harboured our selues in Plimouth.

Parts requisite in a good Mariner.

And in this occasion, I found by experience, that one of the principall parts required in a Mariner, that frequenteth our coastes of England, is to call his Tides, and to knowe how they set from point to point, with the difference of those in the Channell from those of the shoare.

Abuses of some Sea-faring men.

After the hurts by a cruell storme (in which the Pinnace was sunke, and the Dainties Mast cut ouer-boord) repaired, I beganne to gather my companie aboord, which occupied my good friends, and the Iustices of the Towne two dayes, and forced vs to search all lodgings, Tauerns, and Ale-houses. (For some would euer bee taking their leaue and neuer depart:) some drinke themselues so drunke, that except they were carried aboord, they of themselues were not able to goe one steppe: others knowing the necessitie of the time, faigned themselues sicke; others to bee indebted to their Hosts, and forced mee to ransome them; one his Chest; another, his Sword; another, his Shirts; another, his Carde and Instruments for Sea: And others, to benefit themselues of the Impreast giuen them, absented themselues; making a lewd liuing in deceiuing all, whose money they could lay hold of: which is a scandall too rife amongst our Sea-men; by it they committing three great offences. First, Robberie of the goods of another person: Secondly, Breach of their faith and promise: Thirdly, Hindrance (with losse of time) vnto the Voyage; all being a common iniurie to the owners, victuallers, and companie; which many times hath beene an vtter ouerthrow, and vndoing to all in generall. An abuse in our Commonwealth necessarily to be reformed.

Master Thomas Candish.

Master Thomas Candish in his last Voyage, in the Sound of Plimouth, being readie to set sayle, complained vnto mee, that persons which had absented themselues in Impresta, had cost him aboue a thousand and fiue hundred pounds: These Varlets within a few dayes after his departure, I saw walking the streetes of Plimouth, whom the Iustice had before sought for with great diligence, and without punishment. And therefore it is no wonder that others presume to doe the like. Impunitas peccandi illecebra. The like complaint made Master George Reymond; and in what sort they dealt with mee, is notorious, and was such, that if I had not beene prouident, to haue had a third part more of men, then I had need of, I had beene forced to goe to the Sea vnmanned; or to giue ouer my Voyage. And many of my companie, at Sea vaunted how they had cousened the Earle of Cumberland, Master Candish, Master Reymond, and others, some of fiue poundes, some of tenne, some of more, and some of lesse. And truely, I thinke, my Voyage prospered the worse, for theirs and other lewd persons companie, which were in my ship: which, I thinke, might be redressed by some extraordinarie, seuere, and present Iustice to bee executed on the offenders by the Iustice in that place, where they should bee found.

Master George Reymond.

Note.

He addes another remedie in taking away Impresta.

The consequence of Instructs at departure.

The greater part of my companie gathered aboord, I set sayle the twelfth of Iune, 1593. I cannot but aduise all such, as shall haue charge committed vnto them, euer before they depart out of the Port, to giue vnto their whole Fleet not directions for ciuill gouernment, but also where, when, and how to meete, if they should chance to lose companie, and the signes how to knowe one another afarre off, with other points and circumstances, as the occasions shall minister matter different, at the discretion of the wise Commander, by publication of that which is good and necessarie for the guide of his Fleet and people; but all secret instructions, to giue them sealed, and not to be opened, but comming to a place appointed.

Lanching out into the channell, the winde being at East and by South, and east South-east, which blowing hard, and a floud in hand, caused a chapping Sea, and my Vice-admirall bearing a good sayle made some water, and shooting off a Peece of Ordnance, I edged towards her, to know knowe the cause; who answered me, that they had sprung a great leake, and that of force they must returne into the Sound, which seeing to be necessarie, I cast about, where anchoring, and going aboord, presently found, that betwixt winde and water, the Calkers had left a seame vncalked, which being filled vp with Pitch onely, the Sea labouring that out, had beene sufficient to haue sunke her in short space, if it had not beene discouered in time. False calking.

And for more securitie, I hold it for a good custome vsed in some parts, in making an end of calking and pitching the ship, the next tide to fill her with water, which will vndoubtedly discouer the defect, for no pitcht place without calking, can suffer the force and peaze of the water. For preuention thereof.

In neglect whereof, I haue seene great damage and danger to ensue. The Arke Royall of his Maiesties, may serue for an example: which put all in danger at her first going to the Sea, by a trivuell-hole left open in the post, and couered onely with Pitch. In this point no man can be too circumspect, for it is the securitie of ship, men, and goods. Example. See Cap. Prings last Voyage: in which the Great Iames was oft endangered thereby.

This being remedied, I set sayle in the morning, and ranne South-west, till wee were cleare of Visbent; and then South South-west, till wee were some hundred leagues off, where wee met with a great Hulke, of some fiue or sixe hundred tunnes, well appointed, the which my companie, (as is natural to all Mariners) presently would make a prize, and loden with Spaniards goods, and without speaking to her, wished that the Gunner might shoot at her, to cause her to amain. Which is a bad custome receiued and vsed of many ignorant persons, presently to gunne at all whatsoeuer they discouer, before they speake with them; being contrarie to all discipline, and many times is the cause of dissention betwixt friends, and the breach of Amitie betwixt Princes; the death of many, and sometimes losse of ships and all, making many obstinate, if not desperate. Aduice for shooting at Sea.

Comming within the hayling of the Hulke, we demanded whence she was? whither she was bound? and what her loding? Shee answered, that she was of Denmarke comming from Spaine, loden with Salt: we willed her to strike her Top-sayles, which shee did, and shewed vs her Charter-parties, and Bils of loding, and then saluted vs, as is the manner of the Sea, and so departed. Two English ships haue hereby much wronged each other by mistaking.

Wee directed our course to the Maderas. The Madera Ilands are two: the great, called La Madera, and the other Porto Santo; of great fertilitie, and rich in Sugar, Conserues, Wine, and sweet Wood, whereof they take their name. Other commodities they yeeld, but these are the principall. The chiefe Towne and Port is on the Souther side of the Madera, well fortified; they are subiect to the Kingdome of Portugall; the Inhabitants and Garrison all Portugals. The Madera Ilands.

The third of Iulie, wee past along the Ilands of Canaria, which haue the name of a Kingdome, and containe these seuen Ilands, Grand Canaria, Tenerifa, Palma, Gomera, Lancerota, Fortenentura, and Fierro. These Ilands haue abundance of Wine, Sugar, Conserues, Orcall Pitch, Iron, and other commodities, and store of Cattell and Corne, but that a certaine Worme, called Gorgosho, breedeth in it, which eateth out the substance, leauing the huske in manner whole. The head Iland, where the Iustice, which they call Audiencia, is resident; and whither all suits haue their appellation, and finall sentence, is the Grand Canaria, although the Tenerifa is held for the better and richer Iland, and to haue the best Sugar: and the Wine of the Palma is reputed for the best. The Pitch of these Ilands melteth not with the Sunne, and therefore is proper for the higher workes of shipping. Betwixt Fortenentura and Lancerota is a goodly Sound, fit for a meeting place for any Fleet. Where is good anchoring, and abundance of many sorts of Fish. There is water to be had in most of these Ilands, but with great vigilance. For the naturals of them are venturous and hardie, and many times clime vp and downe the steepe Rockes and broken Hills, which seeme impossible, which I would hardly haue beleeued, had I not seene it, and that with the greatest arte and agilitie that may bee: Their Armes for the most part, are Lances of nine or ten foot, with a head of a foot and halfe long, like vnto Boare-speares, saue that the head is somewhat more broad. Canarie Ilands. Gorgosho. The description of Tenerif, and the Pike.

Two things are famous in these Ilands, the Pike of Tenerifa, which is the highest Land in my iudgement that I haue seene, and men of credite haue told they haue seene it more then fortie leagues off. It is like vnto a Sugar loafe, and continually couered with Snowe, and placed in the middest of a goodly Valley, most fertile, and temperate round about it. Out of which, going vp the pike, the cold is so great, that it is vnsufferable, and going downe to the Townes of the Iland, the heat seemeth most extreme, till they approch neere the coast. The other is a tree in the Iland Fierro, which some write & affirme, with the dropping of his leaues, to giue water for the Of a Tree in Fierro. One M. Lewis Iackson, now dwelling in Holborne, told me that A. 1618. he had beene in this Iland, and seene this Tree, which he thus described; It is as big as an Oake of middle size, the barke white like Hardbeame; sixe or seuen yards high, with ragged boughs; the leafe like that of the Bay, white on the bottome, and greene on the other side. It beareth neither fruit nor flower. It is scituate in the decliuitie of a Hill; in the day it is withered, dropping in the night (a cloude hanging thereon) yeelding water sufficient for the whole Iland; which containeth 8000. soules, and aboue 100000. beasts, Camels, Mules, Goats, &c. It falls into a Pond made of bricke, floored with stones very thight, by pipes of Lead conueighed from the Tree to it, and thence diuided into seuerall Ponds through all the Iland. They which dwell vp-hill fetch it in barrels. They water therewith also their Corne-grounds. The Pond holds 20000. tuns, and is filled in a night. He added a report (perhaps deuised to keepe off busie fingers, or with busie tongues to multiplie wonders) that the Moores hauing taken that Iland from the Christians, went to fell that Tree, but each blowe recoyled on the striker. Hee affirmed also that hee had beene vp the Pike of Teneriff, two miles. He saith the South side is healthfull, the North very Aguish, and subiect to Calentures; and the Inhabitants on one side looke lustie, on the other withered.

sustenance of the whole Iland, which I haue not seene, although I haue beene on shoare on the Iland: but those which haue seene it, haue recounted this mysterie differently to that which is written, in this manner; That this Tree is placed in the bottome of a Valley euer flourishing with broad leaues, and that round about it are a multitude of goodly high Pines, which ouer-top it, and as it seemeth, were planted by the Diuine prouidence, to preserue it from Sunne and winde. Out of this Valley ordinarily rise euery day, great vapours and exhalations, which by reason that the Sunne is hindered to worke his operation, with the height of the Mountaine towards the South-east, conuert themselues into moisture, and so bedew all the trees of the Valley, and from those which ouer-top this Tree, drops downe the dew vpon his leaues, and so from his leaues into a round Well of stone, which the Naturals of the Land haue made to receiue the water; of which the people and cattell haue great relefe: but sometimes it raineth and then the Inhabitants doe reserue water for many dayes to come in their Cisternes and Tynaxes, which is that they drinke of, and wherewith they principally sustaine themselues.

The Citie of the Grand Canaria, and chiefe Port is on the West side of the Iland; the head Towne and Port of Tenerifa, is towards the South part, and the Port and Towne of the Palma and Gomera, on the East side. In Gomera, some three leagues Southward from the Towne, is a great Riuer of water, but all these Ilands are perilous to land in, for the siege caused by the Ocean Sea, which alwaies is forcible, and requireth great circumspection; whosoeuer hath not vrgent cause, is either to goe to the Eastwards, or to the Westwards of all these Ilands, as well to auoide the calmes, which hinder sometimes eight or ten dayes sayling, as the contagion which their distemperature is wont to cause, and with it to breede Calenturas, which wee call burning Feuers. These Ilands are said to be first discouered by a Frenchman, called Iohn de Betancourt, about the yeere 1405. They are now a Kingdome subiect to Spaine.

The first discouerers of these Ilands.

Exercises vpon the Southwards of the Canaries.

Being cleare of the Ilands, and seeing my selfe past hope of returning backe, without some extraordinarie accident, I began to set order in my Companie and victuals. And for that, to the Southwards of the Canaries, is for the most part an idle Nauigation, I deuised to keepe my people occupied, as well to continue them in health (for that too much ease in hot Countries is neither profitable nor healthful) as also to diuert them from remembrance of their home; & from play, which breedeth many inconueniences, and other bad thoughts and workes which idlenesse is cause of; and forshifting my companie, as the custome is, into Starboord and Larboord men, the halfe to watch and worke whilest the others slept, and take rest; I limited the three dayes of the weeke, which appertained to each, to be employed in this manner: the one for the vse and cleansing of their Armes, the other for roomaging, making of Sayles, Nettings, Decking, and defenses of our Ships; and the third, for cleansing their bodies, mending and making their apparell, and necessaries, which though it came to be practised but once in seuen dayes, for that the Sabboth is euer to be reserued for God alone, with the ordinarie obligation which each person had besides, was many times of force to be omitted; and thus wee directed our course betwixt the Ilands of Cape de Verde and the Maine. These Ilands are held to bee scituate in one of the most vnhealthiest Climates of the world, and therefore it is wisedome to shunne the sight of them, how much more to make abode in them?

Cape de Verde.

The vnwholsomnesse thereof.

In two times that I haue beene in them, either cost vs the one halfe of our people, with Feuers and Fluxes of sundrie kindes; some shaking, some burning, some partaking of both; some possest with frensie, others with slouth, and in one of them it cost mee sixe moneths sicknesse, with no small hazard of life: which I attribute to the distemperature of the aire, for being within fourteene degrees of the Equinoctiall Line, the Sunne hath great force all the yeere, and the more for that often they passe, two, three, and foure yeeres without raine; and many times the earth burneth in that manner as a man well shod, cannot indure to goe where the Sunne shineth. With which extreme heate the bodie fatigated, greedily desireth refreshing, and longeth for the comming of the Breze, which is the North-east winde, that seldome fayleth in the afternoone at foure of the clocke, or sooner: which comming cold and fresh, and finding the pores of the bodie open, and (for the most part) naked, penetrateth the very bones, and so causeth sudden distemperature, and sundrie manners of sickenesse, as the Subiects are diuers, whereupon they worke. Departing out of the Calmes of the Ilands, and comming into the fresh Breze, it causeth the like, and I haue seene within two dayes, after that wee haue partaked of the fresh aire, of two thousand men aboue an hundred and fiftie haue beene crazed in their health. The Inhabitants of these Ilands vse a remedie for this, which at my first being amongst them, seemed vnto mee ridiculous, but since, time and experience hath taught to bee grounded vpon reason. And is, that vpon their heads they weare a Night-cap, vpon it a Moutero, and a Hat ouer that, and on their bodies a sute of thicke Cloth, and vpon it a Gowne, furr'd or lined with Cotton, or Bayes, to defend them from the heate in that manner, as the Inhabitants of cold Countries, to guard themselues from the extremitie of the cold. Which doubtlesse, is the best diligence that any man can vse, and whosoeuer proueth it, shall finde himselfe lesse annoyed with the heate, then if he were thinly cloathed, for that where the cold aire commeth, it pierceth not so subtilly.

The heate. The Breze. Another cause of Feuers is the dewes which fall euery night: so that the exceeding moisture and vnsoundnesse thereof causeth men lying or watching in the open aire to fall sicke. The remedie.

The

The Moone also in this climate, as in the coast of Guynne, and in all hot Countries, hath forcible operation in the body of man; and therefore, as the Planet, most preiudiciall to his health, is to be shunned; as also not to sleepe in the open Ayre, or with any Scuttle or Window open, whereby the one or the other may enter to hurt. For a person of credit told me, that one night in a Riuer of Guynne, leauing his window open in the side of his Cabin, the Moone shining vpon his shoulder, left him with such an extraordinary paine, and furious burning in it, as in aboue twenty houres, he was like to run mad; but in fine, with force of Medicines and cures, after long torment he was eased. The influence of the Moone in hot Countries.

Of these Ilands are two pyles: the one of them lyeth out of the way of Trade, most Westerly, and so little frequented: the other lyeth some fourescore leagues from the Maine, and containeth sixe in number, to wit, Saint Iago, Fuego, Mayo, Bonauilla, Sal, and Brana. They are belonging to the Kingdome of Portugall, and inhabited by people of that Nation, and are of great trade, by reason of the neighbourhood they haue with Guynne and Byne: but the principall is, the buying and selling of Negros. They haue store of Sugar, Salt, Rice, Cotten-wooll, and Cotton-cloth, Ambergreece, Cyuit, Olyphants teeth, Brimstone, Pummy stone, Spunge, and some Gold, but little, and that from the mayne.

Saint Iago is the head Iland, and hath one Citie and two townes, with their Ports. The Citie called Saint Iago, whereof the Iland hath his name, hath a Garrison and two Forts, scituated in the bottome of a pleasant Valley, with a running streame of water passing through the middest of it, whether the rest of the Ilands come for Iustice, being the seate of the Audiencia, with his Bishop. The other Townes are Playa, some three leagues to the Eastwards of Saint Iago, placed on high, with a goodly Bay, whereof it hath his name: and Saint Domingo, a small Towne within the Land. They are on the Souther part of the Iland, and haue beene sacked sundry times in Anno 1582. by Manuel Serades, a Portugall, with a Fleete of French-men: in Anno 1585. they were both burnt to the ground by the English, Sir Francis Drake being Generall: and in Anno 1596. Saint Iago was taken, and sacked by the English, Sir Anthony Sherley being Generall. The second Iland is Fuego, so called, for that day and night there burneth in it a Vulcan, whose flames in the night are seene twentie leagues off in the Sea. It is by nature fortified in that sort, as but by one way is any accesse or entrance into it, and there cannot goe vp aboue two men a breast. The Bread which they spend in these Ilands, is brought from Portugall and Spaine, saiuing that which they make of Rice or of Mayes, which we call Guynne wheate. The best watering is in the Ile of Brana, on the west part of the Iland, where is a great Riuer, but foule Anchoring, as is in all these Ilands, for the most part. The fruits are few, but substantiall, as Palmitos, Plantanos, Potatos, and Coco Nuts.

Saint Iago.

Sacked by Manuel Serades, Sir Francis Drake, and Sir Anthony Sherley.

Fuego.

Fiery hill.

Brana, good watering.

The Palmito is like to the Date tree, and as I thinke a kinde of it, but wilde. In all parts of Afrique and America they are found, and in some parts of Europe, and in diuers parts different. In Afrique, and in the West Indies they are small, that a man may cut them with a knife, and the lesser the better. But in Brasil they are so great, that with difficulty a man can fell them with an Axe, and the greater the better: one foote within the top is profitable, the rest is of no value; and that which is to be eaten is the pith, which in some is better, in some worse.

The Palmito.

The Plantane is a tree found in most parts of Afrique and America, of which two leaues are sufficient to couer a man from top to toe: It beareth fruite but once, and then drieth away, and out of his root sprouteth vp others new. In the top of the tree is his fruit, which groweth in a great bunch, in the forme and fashion of puddings, in some more, in some lesse. I haue seene in one bunch aboue foure hundred Plantans, which haue weighed aboue fourescore pound waight. They are of diuers proportions, some great, some lesser, some round, some square, some triangle, most ordinarily of a span long, with a thicke skinne that peeleth easily from the meate; which is either white or yellow, and very tender like Butter; but no conserue is better, nor of a more pleasing taste. For I neuer haue seene any man, to whom they haue bred mislike, or done hurt with eating much of them, as of other fruites. The best are those which ripen naturally on the tree, but in most parts they cut them off in branches, and hang them vp in their houses, and eate them as they ripe. For the Birds and Vermine presently in ripning on the tree, are feeding on them. The best that I haue seene are in Brasil, in an Iland called Placentia, which are small and round, and greene when they are ripe: whereas the others in ripening become yellow. Those of the West Indies and Guynne are great, and one of them sufficient to satisfie a man: the onely fault they haue is, that they are windie. In some places they eate them instead of bread, as in Panama, and other parts of Tierra firme. They grow and prosper best when their rootes are euer couered with water; they are excellent in Conserue, and good sodden in different manners, and dried on the tree, not inferior to Suckets.

The great leaues.

Placentia.

The Coco nut is a fruit of the fashion of a Hasell-nut, but that it is as bigge as an ordinary Bowle, and some are greater. It hath two shels, the vttermost framed (as it were) of a multitude of threds, one laid vpon another, with a greene skin ouer-lapping them, which is soft and thicke: the innermost is like to the shell of a Hasell-nut in all porportion, saiuing that it is greater and thicker, and some more blacker. In the top of it is the forme of a Munkies face, with twd eyes, his nose and his mouth. It containeth in it both meate and drinke, the meate white as milke, and like to that of the kernell of a Nut, and as good as Almonds blanckt, and of great quantity: The water is cleare, as of the Fountaine, and pleasing in taste, and somewhat answereth that of the water distilled of Milke. Some say it hath a singular property in nature, for conserving the smoothnesse of the skin; and therefore in Spaine and Portugall, the curious Dames doe ordinarily wash their faces and necks with it. If the holes of the shell be kept close, they keepe foure or six moneths good and more; but if it be opened, and the water kept in the shell, in few daies it turneth to Vinegar. They grow vpon high Trees, which haue no boughes, onely in the top they haue a great cap of leaues, and vnder them groweth the fruite vpon certaine twigges; and some affirme that they beare not fruite before they be aboue forty yeares old. They are in all things like to the Palme trees, and grow in many parts of Asia, Affrique and America. The shels of these nuts are much esteemed for drinking cups, and much cost and labour is bestowed vpon them in casuing, grauing and garnishing them, with Siluer, Gold, and precious stones.

Coquillos. In the Kingdome of Chile and in Brasil, is another kinde of these, which they call Coquillos, as we may interpret (little Cocos) and are as bigge as Wal-nuts, but round and smooth, and grow in great clusters: the trees in forme are all one, and the meate in the nut better, but they haue no water.

A third kinde. Another kinde of great Cocos groweth in the Andes of Peru, which haue not the delicate meate nor drinke, which the others haue, but within are full of Almonds, which are placed as the graines in the Pomegrannet, being three times bigger then those of Europe, and are much like them in taste.

Cyuet-Cats. In these Ilands are Cyuet-Cats, which are also found in parts of Asia, and Affrique; esteemed for the Ciuet they yeelde, and carry about them in a cod in their hinder parts, which is taken from them by force. In them also are store of Monkies, and the best proportioned that I haue seene; and Parrots, but of colour different to those of the West Indies; for they are of a russet or gray colour and great speakers.

§. II.

Considerations of Currents: the Scorbute: fire in Ships; Fishes which attend them; Sea-hawking and hunting: their comming to Brasil and obseruations thereof.

WIth a faire and large winde we continued our course, till we came within fiue degrees of the Equinoctiall line, where the winde tooke vs contrary by the South-west, about the twentieth of July, but a faire gale of winde and a smooth Sea, so that wee might heare all a * tawt: and to aduantage our selues what we might, we stood to the Eastwards, being able to lye South-east and by South. The next day about nine of the clock, my company being gathered together to serue God, which we accustomed to doe euery morning and euening, it seemed vnto me that the colour of the Sea was different to that of the daies past, and which is ordinarily where is deepe water; and so called the Captaine and Master of my Ship, I told them that to my seeming the water was become very whitish, and that it made shew of Sholde water. Whereunto they made answere, that all the lines in our Ships could not fetch ground; for we could not be lesse then threescore and ten leagues off the Coast, which all that kept reckoning in the Ship agreed vpon, and my selfe was of the same opinion. And so we applied our selues to serue God, but all the time that the seruice endured, my heart could not be at rest, and still me thought the water began to waxe whiter, and whiter. Our prayers ended, I commanded a leade and a line to be brought, and hauing the lead in fourescore fathoms wee had ground, which put vs all into a maze, and sending men into the top, presently discouered the land of Guyana, some fiue leagues from vs, very low Land. I commanded a Peece to be shot, and lay by the lee, till my other Ships came vp. Which hailing vs, we demanded of them how farre they found themselues off the land; who answered, some threescore and ten, to fourescore leagues: when we told them we had sounded, and found but fourescore fathoms, and that we were in sight of Land, they began to wonder; But hauing consulted what was best to be done, I caused my Shallop to be manned, which I towed at the Sterne of my Ship continually, and sent her and my Pinnace a head to sound, and followed them with an easie sayle, till we came in seuen and six fathome water, and some two leagues from the shore anchored, in hope by the Sea, or by the Land to finde some refreshing. The Sea wee found to be barren of fish, and my Boates could not discouer any landing place, though a whole day they had rowed along the coast, with great desire to set foote on shore, for that the lodge was exceeding great and dangerous. Which experienced, we set saile, notwithstanding the contrariety of the winde, sometimes standing to the West-wards, sometimes to the East-wards, according to the shifting of the winde.

Errors in reckoning.

Here is to be noted, that the errour which we fell into in our accompts, was such as all men fall into where are currants that set East or West, and are not known, for that there is no certain rule yet practised for triall of the longitude, as there is of the latitude, though some curious and experimented of our Nation, with whom I haue had conference about this point, haue shewed me two or three manner of wayes how to know it. This, some yeares before was the losse of the Edward Cotton, bound for the coast of Brasil, which taken with the winde contrarie neere the line, standing to the East-wards, and making accompt to be fiftie or sixtie leagues off the coast, with all her sailes standing, came suddenly a ground vpon the sholes of Madrebomba; and so was cast away. Note. The losse of Edward Cotton.

This currant from the line Equinoctiall, to twentie degrees Northerly, hath great force, and setteth next of any thing East, directly vpon the shore, which we found by this meanes: Standing to the West-ward, the winde Northerly, when we lay with our Ships head West and by South, we gained in our height more then if we had made our way good West South-west, for that the currant tooke vs vnder the bow: but lying west or West & by North, we lost more in twelue houres then the other way we could get in foure and twentie. By which plainly we saw, that the currant did set East next of any thing. Whether this currant runneth euer one way, or doth alter, and how, we could by no meanes vnderstand, but tract of time and obseruation will discouer this, as it hath done of many others in sundry Seas. Current-consideration.

The currant that setteth betwixt New-fonnd-land and Spaine, runneth also East and West, and long time deceiued many, and made some to count the way longer, and others shorter, according as the passage was speedie or slow, not knowing that the furtherance or hinderance of the currant was cause of the speeding or slowing of the way. And in Sea Cards I haue seene difference of aboue thirtie leagues betwixt the Iland Tercera and the Maine. And others haue recounted vnto me, that comming from the Indies, and looking out for the Ilands of Azores, they haue had sight of Spaine. And some haue looked out for Spaine, and haue discouered the Ilands. The selfe same currant is in the Leuant Sea, but runneth trade betwixt the Maines, and changeable sometimes to the East-wards, sometimes to the West-wards. In Brasil and the South Sea, the currant likewise is changeable, but it runneth euer alongst the Coast, accompanying the winde: and it is an infallible rule, that twelue or twentie foure houres (before the winde alters) the currant begins to change. New found-land Current. Leuant Sea. Brasil and South Sea.

In the West Indies onely the currant runneth continually one way, and setteth alongst the coast from the Equinoctiall line towards the North. No man hath yet found that these currants keepe any certaine time or runne so many dayes or moneths, one way as another, as doth the course of ebbing and flowing, well knowne in all Seas: onely neere the shoare they haue small force; partly, because of the reflux which the coast causeth, and partly for the ebbing and flowing, which more or lesse is generall in most Seas. Currents of smaller force neere the shore

When the currant runneth North or South, it is easily discouered by augmenting or diminishing the height, but how to know the setting of the currant from East to West in the maine Seas, is difficult, and as yet I haue not knowne any man, or read any Author, that hath prescribed any certaine meane or way to discouer it. But experience teacheth, that in the maine Sea, for the most part it is variable; and therefore best and safest rule to preuent the danger (which the vncertaintie and ignorance hereof may cause) is carefull and continuall watch by day and night, and vpon the East and West course euer to be before the Ship, and to vse the meanes possible to know the errour, by the rules which new Authors may teach: Beating off and on, sometimes to the Westwards, sometimes to the Eastwards, with a faire gale of winde.

Being betwixt three and foure degrees of the Equinoctiall line, my Company within a few daies began to fall sicke, of a disease which Sea-men are wont to call the Scuruie: and seemeth to be a kinde of dropsie, and reigneth most in this climate of any that I haue heard or read of in the world; though in all Seas it is wont to helpe and increase the miserie of man; it possesseth all those of which it taketh hold, with a loathsome sloathfulnesse, that euen to eate they would be content to change with sleepe and rest, which is the most pernicious enemie in this sicknesse that is knowne. It bringeth with it a great desire to drinke, and causeth a generall swelling of all parts of the body, especially of the legges and gummes, and many times the teeth fall out of the iawes without paine. The signes to know this disease in the beginning are diuers, by the swelling of the gummes, by denting of the flesh of the legges with a mans finger, the pit remaining without filling vp in a good space: others show it with their lasinesse, others complaine of the cricke of the backe, &c. all which, are for the most part, certaine tokens of infection. The cause is thought to be the stomacks feeblenesse, by change of aire in vntemperate climates, of diet in salt meates, boiled also in salt water and corrupted sometimes; the want of exercise also either in persons or elements, as in calmes. And were it not for the moouing of the Sea by the force of windes, tydes, and currants, it would corrupt all the world. The experience I saw in Anno 1590. lying with a Fleete of her Maiesties Ships about the Ilands of the Azores almost six moneths, the greatest part of the time we were becalmed: with which all the Sea became so replenished with seuerall sorts of gellies, and formes of Serpents, Adders, and Snakes, as seemed wonderfull: some greene, some blacke, some yellow, some white, some of diuers colours, and many of them had life, and some there were a yard and halfe, and two yards long; which had I not seene, I could hardly haue beleeued. And hereof are witnesses all the Companies of the Shippes which were then present; so that hardly a man could draw a Bucket of water cleere of some corruption. In which Voyage, towards the end thereof many of euery Ship (saue of the Nonpareil, which was vnder my charge, and had onely one man sicke in all the Voyage) fell sicke of A discourse of the Scuruey, or Scorbute. The remedies of this diſeaſe, and began to die apace, but that the ſpeedie paſſage into our Countrie was remedy to the crazed, and a preſeruatiue for thoſe that were not touched.

The beſt preuention for this diſeaſe (in my iudgement) is to keepe cleane the Shippe, to beſprinkle her ordinarily with Vinegar, or to burne Tarre, and ſome ſweet ſauours, to feede vpon as few ſalt Meats in the hot Country as may be, and eſpecially to ſhun all kindes of ſalt Fiſh, and to reſerue them for the cold Climates, and not to dreſſe any meate with ſalt water, nor to ſuffer the companie to waſh their Shirts nor Cloathes in it, nor to ſleepe in their Cloathes when they are wet. For this cauſe it is neceſſarily required, that prouiſion be made of apparell for the Company, that they may haue wherewith to ſhift themſelues. Being a common calamitie amongſt the ordinary ſort of Mariners, to ſpend their thrift on the ſhore, and to bring to Sea no more Cloathes then they haue backes; for the body of man is not refreſhed with any thing more, then with ſhifting cleane Cloathes: a great preſeruatiue of health in hot Countries. The ſecond Antidote is, to keepe the company occupied in ſome bodily exerciſe of worke, of agilitie, of paſtimes, of dancing, of vſe of Armes; theſe helpe much to baniſh this infirmitie. Thirdly, In the morning at diſcharge of the watch, to giue euery man a bit of bread, and a draught of drinke, either Beere, or Wine mingled with water (at the leaſt, the one halfe) or a quantitie mingled with Beere, that the poores of the bodie may be full, when the vapours of the Sea aſcend vp. The morning draught ſhould bee euer of the beſt, and choiſeſt of that in the ſhip. Pure wine I hold to be more hurtfull, then the other is profitable. In this, others will be of a contrary opinion, but I thinke partiall. If not, then leaue I the remedies thereof to thoſe Phiſicions and Surgeons who haue experience. And I wiſh that ſome learned man would write of it, for it is the plague of the Sea, and the ſpoyle of Mariners; doubtleſſe, it would bee a Worke worthy of a worthy man, and moſt beneficiall for our Countrie, for in twentie yeeres (ſince I haue vſed the Sea) I dare take vpon me, to giue account of ten thouſand men conſumed with this diſeaſe.

By early eating and drinking.

That which I haue ſeene moſt fruitfull for this ſickneſſe, is ſoure Oranges and Lemmons, and a water which amongſt others (for my particular prouiſion) I carried to the Sea, called Doctor Steuens water, of which, for that his vertue was not then well knowne vnto me, I carried but little, and it tooke end quickly, but gaue health to thoſe that vſed it. The Oyle of Vitry is beneficiall for this diſeaſe; taking two drops of it, and mingled in a draught of water, with a little Sugar. It taketh away the thirſt, and helpeth to cleanſe and comfort the ſtomacke: But the principall of all is the Ayre of the Land; for the Sea is naturall for Fiſhes, and the Land for men. And the oftner a man can haue his people to Land, (not hindering his Voyage) the better it is, and the profitableſt courſe that he can take, to refreſh them.

Hauing ſtood to the Weſtwards ſome hundred leagues and more, the winde continuing with vs contrary, and the ſickneſſe ſo feruent, that euery day there died more or leſſe: my company in generall began to be diſmayed, and to deſire to returne homewards, which I hindered by good reaſons and perſwaſions: As, that to the Weſt Indies, we had not aboue eight hundred leagues, to the Ilands of Azores little leſſe, and before wee come to the Ilands of Cape de Verde, that wee ſhould meete with the Breze; for euery night we might ſee the reach goe contrary to the winde which we ſayled by; verifying the old Prouerbe amongſt Mariners; That bee hath need of a long Maſt, that will ſayle by the Reach; and that the neereſt Land and ſpeedieſt refreſhing wee could looke for, was the Coaſt of Braſill, &c.

Prouerbe.

As wee approached neerer and neerer the Coaſt of Braſill, the winde beganne to vere to the Eaſtwardes, and about the middle of October, to bee large and good for vs; and about the eighteenth of October, wee were thwart of Cape Saint Auguſtine, which lieth in ſixe degrees to the Southwards of the Line: and the one and twentieth in the height of Farnambuca, but ſome foureſcore leagues from the Coaſt; the twentie foure, in the height of Bayea de Todos Santos, neere the end of October, betwixt ſeuenteene and eighteene degrees, wee were in ſixteene fathomes, ſonriding of the great Scoles, which lye alongſt the Coaſt, betwixt the Bay of Todos Santos, and the Port of Santos alias nueſtra ſenora de Vitoria; which are very perillous.

But the diuine Prouidence hath ordained great flockes of ſmall Birds (like Snites) to liue vpon the Rockes, and broken lands of theſe Sholes, which are met with ordinarily twentie leagues before a man come in danger of them.

It ſhall not be amiſſe here to recount the Accidents which befell vs during this contrary wind, and the curioſities to be obſerued in all this time. Day and night we had continually a faire gale of wind, and a ſmooth Sea, without any alteration; one day the Carpenters hauing Calked the Decke of our ſhip, which the Sunne with his extreame heate had opened, craued licenſe to heate a little Pitch in the Cooke roome: which I would not conſent vnto by any meanes; for that my Cooke roomes were vnder the Decke, knowing the danger; vntill the Maſter vndertooke, that no danger ſhould come thereof, But hee recommended the charge to another, who had a better name, then experience. He ſuffered the Pitch to riſe, and to runne into the fire, which cauſed ſo furious a flame as amazed him, and forced all to flee his heate; one of my company, with a double paire of Gloues tooke off the Pitch-pot, but the fire forced him to let ſlip his hold-faſt, before he could ſet it on the Hearth, and ſo ouerturned it, and as the Pitch began to runne, ſo the fire to enlarge it ſelfe, that in a moment a great part of the ſhip was on a light fire. I being in my Cabin, preſently imagined what the matter was, and for all the haſte I could make, before I came, the fire was aboue the Decke: for remedie whereof, I commanded all my company to caſt their Rugge Gownes in our the Sea, with Ropes fastened vnto them. These I had prouided for my people to watch in: for in many hot Countreyes the nights are fresh and cold; and deuided one Gowne to two men, a Starboord and a Larboord man; so that hee which watched had euer the Gowne: for they which watched not, were either in their Cabbins, or vnder the Decke, and so heated them both. The Gownes being well soaked, euery man that could took one, and assaulted the fire; and although some were sindged, others scalded, and many burned, God was pleased that the fire was quenched, which I thought impossible; and doubtlesse, I neuer saw my selfe in greater perill in all the dayes of my life. Let all men take example by vs, not to suffer (in any case) Pitch to be heate in the ship, except it be with a shoo heate in the fire, which cannot breed danger: nor to permit fire to be kindled, but vpon meere necessitie; for the inconuenience thereof (is for the most part) remediles. Great care is to be had also in oyleding of Wood, in Hooping or Scuttling of Caske, and in any busines where violence is to be vsed with Instruments of Iron, Steele, or Stone; and especially in opening of Powder, those are not to be vsed, but Mallets of Wood, for many mischances happen beyond all expectation. I haue beene credibly informed by diuers persons, that comming one of the Indies, with Scuttling a Butt of water, the water hath taken fire, and flamed vp, and put all in hazard. And a Seruant of mine Thomas Grey told me, that in the ship wherein he came out of the Indies, Anno 1600. there happened the like; and that if with Mantles they had not smoothered the fire; they had beene all burned with a Pipe of Water, which in Scuttling tooke fire. Master Iohn Hazlelocke reported, that in the Arsenall of Venice happened the like, he being present. For mine owne part, I am of opinion, that some waters haue this propertie, and especially such as haue their passage by Mines of Brimstone, or other Minerals, which (as all men know) giue extraordinary properties vnto the waters which runne by them: Or it may be that the water being in Wine Caske, and kept close, may retaine an extraordinary propertie of the Wine. Tea, I haue drunke Fountaine and Riuer waters many times, which haue had a sauour as that of Brimstone. Three leagues from Bayon in France, I haue proued of a Fountaine that hath this sauour, and is medicinable for many Diseases. In the South Sea, in a Riuer some fiue leagues from Cape Saint Francisco, in one degree and an halfe to the Northwards of the Line, in the Bay of Atacames, is a Riuer of fresh water, which hath the like sauour. Diuers ships as the Primrose, Iesus of Lubeck, Robuck, Blacke Lion, &c. haue beene burned. By hooping & scutling of Caske. Note. By natures of waters.

We had no small cause to giue God thankes, and tooke an occasion hereby, to banish swearing out of our ships, which amongst the common sort of Mariners and Sea-faring men, is too ordinarily abused. So with a generall consent of all our company, it was ordained that in euery shippe there should be a Palmer or Ferula, which should be in the keeping of him, who was taken with an Oath, and that hee who had the Palmer should giue to euery other that hee tooke swearing in the Palme of the hand a Palmada with it, and the Ferula. And whosoeuer at the time of Euening, or Morning Prayer, was found to haue the Palmer, should haue three blowes giuen him by the Captaine, or Master, and that he should be still bound to free himselfe by taking another, or else to runne in danger of continuing the penalties; which executed, few dayes reformed the Vice; so that in three dayes together, was not one Oath heard to be sworne. This brought both Ferulaes and swearing out of vse. By swearing. An excellent order for ship-swearing. Custome feeds vice, which seuerity starueth

Ordinarily such ships as Nauigate betweene the Tropickes, are accompanied with three sorts of fish; The Dolphin, which the Spaniards call Dorado: the Bonito, or Spanish Makerill: and the Sharke, alias Tiburon. The Dolphin I hold to be one of the swifteſt fishes in the Sea: He is like vnto a Breame, but that he is longer and thinner, and his scales very small. Hee is of the colour of the Rain-bow, and his head different to other fishes; for, from his mouth halfe a span it goeth straite vpright, as the head of a Wherry, or the Cut-water of a ship. He is very good meate if he be in season, but the best part of him, is his head, which is great. They are some bigger, some lesser; the greatest that I haue seene, might be some foure foot long. I hold it not without some ground, that the ancient Philosophers write, that they bee enamoured of a man: for in meeting with shipping, they accompany them till they approach to cold Climates; this I haue noted diuers times. For disembarking out of the West Indies, Anno 1583. within three or foure dayes after, we met a Scole of them, which left vs not till wee came to the Ilands of Azores, neere a thousand leagues. At other times I haue noted the like. But some may say, that in the Sea are many Scoles of this kind of fish, and how can a man know if they were the same?

Who may be thus satisfied, that euery day in the morning, which is the time that they approach neerest the ship, we should see foure, fiue, and more, which had (as it were) our eare-mark, one hurt vpon the backe; another neere the taile; another about the finnes, which is sufficient proof that they were the same. For if those which had receiued so bad entertainment of vs would not forsake vs, much lesse those which wee had not hurt; yet that which makes them most in loue with ships and men, are the scraps and refreshing they gather from them. Pi. by discourse of diuers fishes and their description. The Dolphin.

The Bonito, or Spanish Mackerell, is altogether like vnto a Mackerell, but that it is somewhat more browne; he is reasonable food, but drier then a Mackerell. Of them there are two sorts, the one is this which I haue described; the other so great, as hardly one man can lift him; At such times as we haue taken of these, one sufficed for a meale for all my company. These from the finne of the taile forwards haue vpon the chyne seuen small yellow hillockes, close one to another. The Bonito.

ther. The Dolphins and Bonitos are taken with certaine Instruments of Iron, which we call Vysgeis, in forme of an Eele-speare, but that the blades are round, and the points like vnto the head of a broad Arrow; these are fastned to long staues of ten or twelue foote long, with Lines tied vnto them, and so shot to the fish, from the Beake-head, the Poope, or other parts of the ship, as occasion is ministred. They are also caught with Hookes and Lines, the Hooke beeing bayted with a red Cloth or with a white Cloth, made into the forme of a fish, and sowed vpon the Hooke.

The Sharke. The Sharke or Tiberune, is a fish like vnto to those which wee call Dog-fishes, but that hee is far greater. I haue seene of them eight or nine foot long; his head is flat and broad, and his mouth
His mouth. in the middle, vdderneath, as that of the Scate; and he cannot bite of the baite before him, but by making a halfe turne; and then he helpeth himselfe with his taile, which serueth him in stead of a Rudder. His skinne is rough (like to the fish which we call a rough Hound) and Russet, with Superstition. reddish spots, sauing that vnder the belly hee is all white: hee is much hated of Sea-faring men, who haue a certaine foolish Superstition with them, and say that the ship hath seldome good successe, that is much accompanied with them. It is the most rauenous fish knowne in the Sea; for
All-deuouring. he swalloweth all that hee findeth. In the Puch of them hath beene found Hats, Caps, Shooes, Shirts, legges and armes of men, ends of Ropes, and many other things; whatsoeuer is hanged by the ships side, he sheereth it, as though it were with a Razor; for he hath three rowes of teeth
Three rowes of teeth. on either side, as sharpe as nailes; some say, they are good for Pick-tooths. They spawne not, as Whelping. the greatest part of fishes doe, but Whelpe, as the Dogge or Wolfe; and for many dayes after that she hath whelped euery night, and towardes any storme, or any danger which may threaten them hurt, the Damme receiueth her Whelpes in her mouth, and preserueth them, till they be able to shift for themselues. I haue seene them go in and out, being more then a foot and halfe long; and after taking the Dam, we haue found her young ones in her belly. My company tooke many. At the taile of one, they tied a great logge of wood, at another, an emptie Batixia well stopped; one they yoked like a Hogge; from another, they plucked out his eyes, and so threw them into the Sea. In catching two together, they bound them taile to taile, and so set them a swimming; another, with his belly slit, and his bowels hanging out which his fellowes would haue euery one a snatch at; with other infinite Inuentions to entertaine the time, and to auenge themselues; for that they deprined them of swimming, and fed on their flesh being dead: they are taking with Harping Irons, and with great hookes made of purpose, with Swyuels and Chaines; for no Line, nor small Rope can hold them, which they share not asunder.

Pilats fishes. There doth accompany this fish, diuers little fishes, which are called Pilats fishes, and are euer vpon his sinnes, his head, or his backe, and feede of the scraps and superfluities of his preyes. They are in forme of a Trowte, and streaked like a Mackerell, but that the streakes are white and blacke, and the blacke greater then the white.

Sea hawking and hunting. The manner of Hunting and Hawking representeth that which we reasonable creatures vse, sauing onely in the disposing of the game. For by our industry and abilitie the Hound and Hawke is brought to that obedience, that whatsoeuer they seize, is for their Master; but here it is otherwise. For the game is for him that seizeth it. The Dolphins and Bonitos are the Hounds, and the Flying fishes. Alcatraces the Hawkes, and the flying fishes the game: whose wonderfull making magnifieth the Creator, who for their safetie, and helpe, hath giuen them extraordinary manner of finnes, which serue instead of wings, like those of the Bat or Rere-mouse; of such a delicate skinne, interlaced with bones so curiously, as may well cause admiration in the beholders. They are like vnto Pilchards in colour, and making; sauing that they are somewhat rounder, and (for the most part) bigger. They flee best with a side winde, but longer then their wings bee weate, they cannot sustaine the weight of their bodies; and so the greatest flight that I haue seene them make, hath not beene aboue a quarter of a mile. They commonly goe in Scoles; and serue for food for the greater fishes, or for the Foules. The Dolphins and Bonitos doe continually hunt after them, and the Alcatraces lie soaring in the Aire, to see when they spring, or take their flight; and ordinarily, hee that escapeth the mouth of the Dolphin, or Bonito, helping himselfe by his wings, falleth prisoner into the hands of the Alcatrace, and helpeth to fill his gorge.

Alcatrace. The Alcatrace is a Sea-fowle, different to all that I haue seene, either on the Land, or in the Sea. His head like vnto the head of a Gull, but his bill like vnto a Snites bill, somewhat shorter, and in all places alike. He is almost like to a Heronshaw, his legs a good spanne long, his wings very long, and sharpe towards the points, with a long taile like to a Pheasant, but with three or foure feathers onely, and these narrower. He is all blacke, of the colour of a Crow, and of little flesh; for hee is almost all skinne and bones. Hee soareth the highest of any Fowle that I haue seene, and I haue not heard of any, that haue seene them rest in the Sea.

The fight of the Whale, with the Sword-fish and Thresher. Now of the fight betwixt the Whale and his contraries; which are the Sword-fish and the Thresher. The Sword-fish is not great, but strongly made, and in the top of his chine (as a man may say) betwixt the necke and shoulders, he hath a manner of Sword in substance, like vnto a bone of foure or fiue inches broad, and aboue three foote long, full of prickles of either side; it is but thinne, for the greatest that I haue seene, hath not beene aboue a finger thicke. The Thresher is a greater fish, whose taile is very broad and thicke, and very weighty. They fight in this manner; the Sword-fish placeth himselfe vnder the belly of the Whale, and the Thresher vpon the Ryme of the water, and with his tayle thresheth vpon the head of the Whale, till he force him to giue way, which the Sword-fish perceiuing, receiueth him vpon his sword, and wounding him in the belly forceth him to mount vp againe: (besides that, he cannot abide long vnder water, but must of force rise vp to breath) and when in such manner they torment him, that the fight is sometimes heard aboue three leagues distance, and I dare affirme, that I haue heard the blowes of the Thresher two leagues off, as the report of a peece of Ordnance, the Whales roaring being heard much farther. It also happeneth sundry times, that a great part of the water of the Sea round about them, with the bloud of the Whale changeth his colour. The best remedy the Whale hath in this extremitie to helpe himselfe, is to get him to land, which hee procureth as soone as he discouereth his aduersaries, and getting the shore, there can fight but one with him, and for either of them hand to hand he is too good.

The strokes heard two leagues.

Of Whales, see our Greeneland discourses. li. 3. c. 2. & f.

Amber-greece is thought by some to breede in the Whales belly by eating of a certaine heard, but that which carrieth likliest probabilitie is, that it is a liquor which issueth out of certaine Fountaines, in sundry Seas, and being of a light and thicke substance, participating of the Ayre, suddenly becommeth hard, as the yellow Amber, of which they make Beades, which is also a liquor of a Fountaine in the Germaine Sea: in the bottome it is soft and white, and partaking of the Ayre becommeth hard and stonie: Also the Corrall in the Sea is soft, but commeth into the Ayre, becommeth a stone. Those who are of this former opinion, thinke the reason (why the Amber-greece is sometimes found in the Whale) to be for that hee swalloweth it, as other things, which he findeth swimming vpon the water, and not able to digest it, it remaineth with him till his death.

Corall.

From the Tropicke of Cancer to three or foure degrees of the Equinoctiall, the breze which is the North-east winde, doth raigne in our Ocean Sea the most part of the yeere, except it be neere the shore, and then the winde is variable. In three or foure degrees of either side the line, the winde hangeth Southerly, in the moneths of Iuly, August, September, and October: all the rest of the yeere from the Cape boua esperança to the Ilands of Azores, the breze raigneth continually; and some yeares in the other moneths also or calmes, but he that purposeth to crosse the line from the Northwards to the Southwards, the best and surest passage is, in the moneths of Ianuary, February, and March. In the moneths of September, October and November is also good passage, but not so sure as in the former.

Best times to passe the line frō the Northwards to the Southward.

Betwixt nineteene and twenty degrees to the Southwards of the line, the winde tooke vs contrary, which together with the sickneſse of my people made me to seeke the shore, and about the end of October, we had sight of the land, which presently by our height and the making of it, discouered it selfe to be the Port of Souzas, alias nostra Senora de Victoria, and is easie to be knowne, for it hath a great high hill ouer the Port, which (howsoeuer a man commeth with the land) riseth like a bell, and comming neere the shore presently is discouered a white Tower or Fort, which standeth vpon the top of a hill ouer the Harbour, and vpon the Sea-most-land: It is the first land a man must compasse before he enter into the Port: comming within two leagues of the shore we anchored, and the Captaines and Masters of my other Ships, being come aboord, it was thought conuenient (the weakeneſse of our men considered, for wee had not in our three Ships twenty foure men sound) and the winde vncertaine when it might change, wee thought with policie to procure that which we could not by force, and so to offer traffique to the people of the shore.

Port of Santo.

Entring the Port, within a quarter of a mile is a small Village, and three leagues higher vp, is the chiefe towne: where they haue two Forts, one on either side of the Harbour, and within them ride the Ships whih come thither to discharge or loade. In the small Village is euer a Garrison of a hundreth Souldiers, whereof part assist there continually, and in the white Tower vpon the top of the hill, which commandeth it.

Here my Captaine, whom I sent with a Letter, had good entertainment, and those of the shore receiued his message and Letter, dispatching it presently to the Gouernor, who was some three leagues off in another place; at least, they beare vs so in hand. In the time that they expected the Post, my Captaine with one other entertained himselfe with the Souldiers ashore, who after the common customs of their profession (except when they be besonios) sought to please him, and finding that he craued but Oranges, Lemmons, and matters of small moment for refreshing for his Generall, they suffered the women and children to bring him what he would, which he gratified with double Pistolets, that I had giuen him for that purpose. So got he vs two or three hundreth Oranges and Lemmons, and some few Hens.

The answere of the Gouernor was, that he was sorry that he could not accomplish our desire, being so reasonable & good: for that in consideration of the war betweene Spaine and England, he had expresse order from his King, not to suffer any English to trade within his iurisdiction, no, not to land, or to take any refreshing vpon the shore. And therefore craued pardon, and that we should take this for a resolute answere: And further, required vs to depart the Port within three daies, which he said he gaue vs, for our courteous manner of proceeding: If any of my people from that time forwards, should approach to the shore, that hee would doe his best to hinder and annoy them. With this answere we resolued to depart; and before it came, with the first faire winde, we determined to be packing: but the winde suffered vs not all that night, nor the next day. In which time I liued in a great perplexitie, for that I knew our owne weakenesse, and what they might doe vnto vs, if that they had knowne so much. For any man that putteth himselfe into the enemies Port, had needs of Argus eyes, and the winde in a bagge, especially, where the enemy is strong, and the tydes of any force. For, with either ebbe or flood, those who are on the shore, may thrust vpon him inuentions of fire, and with swimming or other deuises may cut his cables. A common practise in all hot Countries. The like may be effected with Raffes, Canoas, Boates or Pinnaces, to annoy and assault him; and if this had beene practised against vs, or taken effect, our Ships must of force haue yeelded themselues; for they had no other people in them but sick men; many times opinion & feare preserueth the Ships, and not the people in them. Wherefore is it the part of a prouident Gouernor, to consider well the dangers that may befall him, before he put himself into such places: so shall he euer be prouided for preuention. In Saint Iohn de Vlua, in the New-Spain, when the Spaniards dishonoured their Nation with that foule act of periury, and breach of faith, giuen to my Father, Sir, Iohn Hawkins (notorious to the whole world) the Spaniards fired two great Ships, with intention to burne my Fathers Admirall, which he preuented by towing them with his Boates another way. The great Armado of Spaine, sent to conquer England, Anno 1588. was with that selfe-same industry ouerthrowne: for the setting on fire six or seuen Ships (whereof two were mine) and letting them driue with the flood, forced them to cut their Cables, and to put to Sea, to seeke a new way to Spain. In which, the greatest part of their best Ships and men were lost and perished.

Spaniards periury.

Their punishment.

The next night, the winde comming off the shore, we set saile, and with our Boates and Barkes sounded as we went. It flowed vpon the Barre not aboue foure foote water, and once in foure and twenty houres (as in some parts of the West Indies) at full Sea there is not vpon the barre aboue seuenteene or eighteene foote water. The harbour runneth to the South-westwards. he that will come into it, is to open the harbours mouth a good quarter of a league before he beare with it, and be bolder of the Wester-side, for of the Easterland lyeth a great ledge of Rockes, for the most part vnder water, which sometimes breake not, but with small shipping, a man may goe betwixt them and the point.

Note for the harbour.

The vertue of Oranges.

Comming aboord of our Ships, there was great ioy amongst my company, and many with the sight of the Oranges and Lemmons, seemed to recouer heart: This is a wonderfull secret of the power and wisedome of God, that hath hidden so great and vnknowne vertue in this fruit, to be a certaine remedy for this infirmity; I presently caused them all to be reparted amongst our sicke men, which were so many, that there came not aboue three or foure to a share: but God was pleased to send vs a prosperous winde the next day, so much to our comfort, that not any one died before we came to the Ilands, where we pretended to refresh our selues: And although our fresh water had failed vs many dayes (before we saw the shore) by reason of our long Nauigation, without touching any land, and the excessiue drinking of the sicke and diseased (which could not be excused) yet with an inuention I had in my Ship, I easily drew out of the water of the Sea sufficient quantitie of fresh water to sustaine my people, with little expence of fewell, for with foure billets I stilled a hogshead of water, and therewith dressed the meate for the sicke and whole. The water so distilled, we found to be wholesome and nourishing.

Distilling of Salt water.

The coast from Santos to Cape Frio lyeth West and by South Southerly. So wee directed our course West South-west. The night comming on, and directions giuen to our other Ships, wee set the watch, hauing a faire fresh gale of winde and large. My selfe, with the Master of our Ship, hauing watched the night past, thought now to giue nature that which she had beene depriued of, and so commended the care of Steeridge to one of his Mates; who with the like trauell past being drowsie, or with the confidence which he had of him at the Helme, had not that watchfull care which was required; he at the Helme steered West and West by South, & brought vs in a little time close vpon the shore: doubtlesse he had cast vs all away, had not God extraordinarily deliuered vs: for the Master being in his dead sleepe, was suddenly awaked, and with such a fright, that he could not be in quiet: whereupon, waking his youth, which ordinarily slept in his Cabin by him, asked him how the watch went on; who answered, that it could not be an houre since he laid himselfe to rest. He replyed, that his heart was so vnquiet, that he could not by any meanes sleepe, and so taking his Gowne, came forth vpon the Decke, and presently discouered the land hard by vs. And for that it was sandie and low, those who had their eyes continually fixed on it, were dazeled with the reflection of the Starres, being a faire night, and so was hindered from the true discouery thereof. But he comming out of the drake, had his sight more forcible, to discerne the difference of the Sea, and the shoare. So that forthwith hee commanded him at the Helme, to put it close a starbourd, and taking our Ship, we edged off; and sounding, found scant three fathome water, whereby we saw euidently, the miraculous mercy of God, that if hee watched ouer vs, as he doth continually ouer his, doubtlesse wee had perished without remedie: to whom be all glory and praise euerlasting world without end.

Vnskilfulnesse of the Masters Mate.

Prouidence of God, and the care of the Master.

It

In this point of Steeridge, the Spaniards & Portugals doe exceede all that I haue seene, I meane for their care, which is chiefest in Nauigation. And I wish in this, and in all their workes of Discipline and reformation, we should follow their examples, as also those of any other Nation. In euery Shippe of moment, vpon the halfe decke, or quarter decke, they haue a chaire or seate; out of which whilst they Nauigate, the Pilot, or his Adiutants (which are the same officers which in our Ships wee terme, the Master and his Mates) neuer depart, day nor night, from the sight of the Compasse, and haue another before them, whereby they see what they doe; and are euer witnesses of the good or bad Steeridge of all men that take the Helme. Care of Steeridge. Exquisit in the Spaniards and Portugals.

The next day about ten of the clocke, we were thwart of Cape Blanco, which is low sandie land and perilous, for foure leagues into the Sea (thwart it) lye bankes of sand, which haue little water on them; on a sudden we found our selues amongst them, in lesse then three fathome water, but with our Boate and Shallop we went sounding, and so got cleare of them. The next day following, we discouered the Ilands, where we purposed to refresh our selues: they are two, and some call them Saint Iames his Ilands, and others, Saint Annes. They lye in two and twentie degrees and a halfe to the Southwards of the line; and towards the euening (being the fift of Nouember) we anchored betwixt them and the maine, in six fathome water, where we found our other Ships. Cape Blanco. Saint Iulmes Ilands, alias Saint Anthes.

All which being well Moored, we presently began to set vp Tents & Booths for our sick men, to carry them ashore, and to vse our best diligence to cure them. For which intent our three Surgeons, with their seruants, and adherents, had two Boates to waite continually vpon them, to fetch whatsoeuer was needefull from the Ships, to procure refreshing, and to Fish either with Nets or Hooks, and Lines. Of these implements we had in abundance, and it yeelded vs some refreshing. For the first daies the most of those which had health, occupied themselues in romeging our Ship, in bringing ashore of emptie Caske, in filling of them, and in felling and cutting of wood: which being many workes, and few hands, went slowly forwards.

Neere these Ilands are two great Rocks or small Ilands adioyning. In them wee found great store of yong Gannets in their nests, which we reserued for the sick, and being boyled with pickled Porke well watered, and mingled with Oatmeale, made reasonable Pottage, & was good refreshing and sustenance for them. This prouision failed vs not, till our departure from them. Vpon one of these Rocks also, we found great store of the hearbe Purslane, which boyled and made into Sallets, with oyle and vineger, refreshed the sicke stomackes, and gaue appetite. Gannets. Purslane.

With the ayre of the shore, and good cherishing, many recouered speedily: some died away quickly, and others continued at a stand. We found here some store of Fruits; a kinde of Cherry, that groweth vpon a tree like a Plum-tree, red of colour, with a stone in it, but different in making to ours, for it is not altogether round, and dented about: they haue a pleasing taste. In one of the Ilands we found Palmito trees, great and high, and in the top a certaine fruite like Cocos, but no bigger then a Wal-nut. We found also a fruit growing vpon trees in cods, like Beanes, both in the cod and the fruite. Some of my Company proued of them, and they caused vomits and purging. One other fruit we found, very pleasant in taste, in fashion of an Artechoque, but lesse; on the outside of colour red; within white, and compassed about with prickles: our people called them Prick-peares: no Conserue is better, They grow vpon the leaues of a certaine roote, that is like vnto that which we call semper viua; and many are wont to hang them vp in their houses: but their leaues are longer and narrower, and full of prickes on either side. The Fruite groweth vpon the side of the leafe, and is one of the best fruites that I haue eaten in the Indies. In ripening, presently the Birds or Vermine are feeding on them; a generall rule to know what fruite is wholesome and good in the Indies, and other parts. Finding them to be eaten of the Beasts or Fowles, a man may boldly eate of them. Cherries. Palmitos. Purgatiues. Artechoques, or Prick-peares. A good note to take or refuse vnknown fruits.

The water of these Ilands is not good; the one for being a standing water, and full of venemous wormes and Serpents, which is neere a Butt-shot from the Sea-shore, where wee found a great Tree fallen, and in the roote of it the names of sundry Portugals, French-men, and others, and amongst them Abraham Cockes, with the time of their being in this Island. The other, though a running water, yet passing by the rootes of certaine trees, which haue a smell as that of Garlique, taketh a certaine contagious sent of them. Here two of our men died with swelling of their bellies: the accident we could not attribute to any other cause, then to this suspicious water. It is little, and falleth into the sand, and soketh through it into the Sea; and therefore we made a well of a Pipe, and placed it vnder the rocke from which it falleth, and out of it filled our Caske: but we could not fill aboue two tuns in a night and a day. Contagious water.

After our people began to gather their strength, we manned out Boates, and went ouer to the Maine, where presently we found a great Riuer of fresh and sweete water, and a mightie Marish Country, which in the winter seemeth to be continually ouer-flowne with this Riuer, and others, which fall from the mountainous Country adiacent. We rowed some leagues vp the Riuer, and found that the further vp we went, the deeper was the Riuer, but no fruit, more then the sweate of our bodies for the labour of our hands. At our returne we loaded our Boate with water, and afterwards from hence we made our Store.

Waſte & loſſe of men. Hawke burnt.

The ſickneſſe hauing waſted more then the one halfe of my people, we determined to take out the victuals of the Hawke, and to burne her; which we put in execution. And being occupied in this worke, we ſaw a Ship turning to windwards, to ſuccour her ſelfe of the Ilands; but hauing deſcried vs, put off to Sea-wards. Two daies after, the winde changing, we ſaw her againe running alongſt the coaſt, and the Daintie not being in caſe to goe after her, for many reaſons, wee manned the Fancie, and ſent her after her; who about ſetting of the Sunne fetched her vp, and ſpake with her; when finding her to be a great Fly-boate, of (at leaſt) three or foure hundreth tuns, with eighteene Peeces of Artillery, would haue returned, but the winde freſhing in, put her to Leewards; and ſtanding in to ſuccour her ſelfe of the land, had ſight of another ſmall Bark, which after a ſhort chaſe ſhe tooke, but had nothing of moment in her, for that ſhe had bin vpon the great Sholes of Abreoios in 18. degrees, and there throwne all they had by the boord, to ſaue their liues. This and the other chaſe were the cauſe that the Fancie could not beate it vp in many dayes: but before wee had put all in a readineſſe, the winde changing, ſhee came vnto vs, and made Relation of that which had paſt; and how they had giuen the ſmall Barke to the Portugals, and brought with them onely her Pilot, and a Merchant called Pedro de eſcalante of Potoſi.

Sholes of Abreoios.

Induſtry of the Indians. They ſurpriſe the French.

In this Coaſt the Portugals, by induſtry of the Indians, haue wrought many feates. At Cape Frio they tooke a great French Shippe in the night, the moſt of her company being on the ſhore with Canoas, which they haue in this Coaſt ſo great, that they carrie ſeuentie and eightie men, in one of them. And in Iſla Grand, I ſaw one that was aboue threeſcore foote long, of one tree as are all I haue ſeene in Braſil, with proviſions in them for twenty or thirty daies. At the Iland of San-ſebaſtian, neere Saint Vincent, the Indians killed about eightie of Maſter Candiſh his men, and tooke his Boate, which was the ouerthrow of his Voyage.

Great Canoa. San-ſebaſtian.

There commeth not any Ship vpon this Coaſt, whereof theſe Canoas giue not notice preſently to euery place. And we were certified in Iſla Grand, that they had ſent an Indian from the Riuer of Ienero, through all the Mountaines & Mariſhes, to take a view of vs, and accordingly made a Relation of our Ships, Boates, and the number of men, which wee might haue. But to preuent the like danger that might come vpon vs being careleſſe and negligent, I determined one night, in the darkeſt and quieteſt of it, to ſee what watch our Company kept on the ſhore; manned our Light-horſman, and Boat, armed them with Bowes and Targets, and got aſhore ſome good diſtance from the places where were our Boothes, and fought to come vpon them vndiſcouered: we vſed all our beſt endeuours to take them at vnawares, yet comming within fortie paces we were diſcouered; the whole and the ſicke came forth to oppoſe themſelues againſt vs. Which we ſeeing, gaue them the Hubbub, after the manner of the Indians, and aſſaulted them, and they vs; but being a cloſe darke night, they could not diſcerne vs preſently vpon the Hubbub. From our Ship the Gunner ſhot a peece of Ordnance ouer our heads, according to the order giuen him, and thereof we tooke occaſion to retire vnto our Boates, and within a little ſpace came to the Boothes and landing places, as though we came from our Ships to aide them. They began to recount vnto vs, how that at the Weſter point of the Iland, out of certaine Canoas, had landed a multitude of Indians, which with a great out-cry came vpon them, & aſſaulted them fiercely, but finding better reſiſtance then they looked for, and ſeeing themſelues diſcouered by the Ships, tooke themſelues to their heeles, and returned to their Canoas, in which they imbarked themſelues, and departed. One affirmed, he ſaw the Canoas; another, their long haire; a third, their Bowes; a fourth, that it could not be, but that ſome of them had their paiments: And it was worth the ſight, to behold thoſe which had not moued out of their beds in many moneths (vnleſſe by the helpe of others) had gotten, ſome a bow-ſhot off into the woods, others into the tops of trees, and thoſe which had any ſtrength, ioyned together to fight for their liues. In fine, the Booths and Tents were left deſolate.

Wiſe ſtratagem

The merry euents of a carefull watch.

To colour our buſineſſe the better, after we had ſpent ſome houre in ſeeking out, and ioyning the Company together, in comforting, and commending them, I left them an extraordinary Guard for that night, and ſo departed to our Shippes, with ſuch an opinion of the aſſault, giuen by the Indians, that many ſo poſſeſſed (through all the Voyage) would not be perſwaded to the contrary; Which impreſſion wrought ſuch effect in moſt of my Company, that in all places where the Indians might annoy vs, they were after moſt carefull and vigilant, as was conuenient.

Tides in the Ilands.

In theſe Ilands it heigheth and falleth ſome fiue or ſixe foote water, and but once in two and twentie houres; as in all this Coaſt, and in many parts of the Weſt Indies; as alſo in the coaſt of Peru and Chyly (ſauing where are great Bayes or indraughts) and there the tydes keep their ordinary courſe of twice in foure and twenty houres. In the leſſer of theſe Ilands, is a Coue for a ſmall Ship to ride in, Land-lockt, and ſhe may moore her ſelfe to the trees of either ſide: this we called Palmito Iland, for the abundance it hath of the greater ſort of Palmito trees, the other hath none at all. A man may goe betwixt the Ilands with his Ship, but the better courſe is out at one end. In theſe Ilands are many Scorpions, Snakes, and Adders, with other venemous Vermine. They haue Parots, and a certaine kinde of fowle like vnto Pheſants, ſomewhat bigger, and ſeeme to be of Palmito Iland.

The creatures.

their nature. Here we spent aboue a moneth in curing of our sicke men, supplying our wants of wood and water, and in other necessary workes. And the tenth of December (all things put in order) we set saile for Cape Frio, hauing onely sixe men sicke, with purpose there to set ashore our two Prisoners before named: and anchoring vnder the Cape, we set our Boate ashoare, but they could not finde any conuenient place to land them in, and so returned: the winde being Southerly, and hot good to goe on our voyage, we succoured our selues within Isla Grand, which lyeth some dozen or fourteene leagues from the Cape, betwixt the West, and by South and West South-west: the rather to see our Prisoners on shore. Cape Frio.

In the mid way betwixt the Cape and this Iland, lyeth the Riuer Ienero, a very good Harbour, fortified with a Garrison, and a place well peopled. The Isla Grand is some eight or tenne leagues long, and causeth a goodly harbour for shipping: it is full of great sandie Bayes, and in the most of them is store of good water: within this Iland are many other smaller Ilands, which cause diuers sounds and creekes; and amongst these little Ilands, one, for the pleasant situation and fertilitie thereof, called Placentia. This is peopled, all the rest desert: on this Iland our Prisoners desired to be put ashore, and promised to send vs some refreshing. Whereto wee condescended, and sent them ashore with two Boates well manned and armed, who found few Inhabitants in the Iland; for our people saw not aboue foure or fiue houses, notwithstanding our Boates returned loaden with Plantines, Pitias, Potatoes, Sugar-canes, and some Hens. Amongst which they brought a kinde of little Plantine, greene, and round, which were the best of any that I haue seene. With our people came a Portugall, who said, that the Iland was his; hee seemed to be a Mistebo (who are those that are of a Spanish and an Indian brood) poorely appatelled and miserable; we feasted him, and gaue him some trifles; and hee according to his abilitie answered our courtesie with such as he had. Ienero. Little Iland.

The winde continuing contrary, we emptied all the water we could come by, which we had filled in Saint Iames his Iland, and filled our Caske with the water of this Isla Grand. It is a wilderneese couered with Trees and Shrubs so thicke, as it hath no passage through, except a man make it by force. And it was strange to heare the howling and cries of wilde Beasts in these Woods day and night, which we could not come at to see by any meanes; some like Lyons, others like Beares, others like Hogs, and of such and so many diuersities, as was admirable. Here our Nets profited vs much, for in the sandy Bayes they tooke vs store of fish. Vpon the shore at full Seamarke, we found in many places certain shels, like vnto mother of Pearles, which are brought out of the East Indies, to make standing cups, called Caracolles, of so great curiositie as might moue all the beholders to magnifie the maker of them: and were it not for the brittlenesse of them, by reason of their exceeding thinnesse, doubtlesse they were to be esteemed farre aboue the others, for more excellent workmanship I haue not seene in shels. Isla Grand. Shels of mother of Pearle.

The eighteenth of December we set saile, the winde at North-east, and directed our course for the Straits of Magalianes. The twenty two of this moneth, at the going too of the Sun, we descried a Portugall ship, and gaue her chase, and comming within hailing of her, she rendred her selfe without any resistance, she was of an hundred tuns bound for Angola to load Negroes, to be carried and sold in the Riuer of Plate: It is a trade of great profit, and much vsed, for that the Negroes are carried from the head of the Riuer of Plate, to Potosi, to labour in the Mines. It is a bad Negro, who is not worth there fiue or six hundreth peeces, euery peece of ten Ryals, which they receiue in Ryals of Plate, for there is no other Merchandize in those parts. The loading of this Ship was meale of Cassani, which the Portugals call Farina de Paw, made of a certaine roote which the Indians call Yuca, much like vnto Potatoes. Of it are two kindes, the one sweete and good to be eaten (either rosted or sodden) as Potatoes; and the other of which they make their bread, called Cassani, deadly poison, if the liquor or iuyce be not throughly pressed out. This Farina, in making Pancakes, and frying them with butter or oyle, and sometimes with Manteca de Puerco; when strewing a little Sugar vpon them, it was meate that our company desired aboue any that was in the Ship. Price of Negroes. Cassani meale

The Indians also accustome to make their drinke of this meale, and in three seuerall manners. First, is chewing it in their mouthes, and after mingling it with water, after a loathsome manner, yet the commonnest drinke that they haue; and that held best which is chewed by an old woman. The second manner of their drinke, is baking it till it be halfe burned, then they beate it into Powder; and when they will drinke, they mingle a small quantity of it with water, which giueth a reasonable good taste. The third, and best, is baking it (as aforesaid) and when it is beaten into Powder, to seeth it in water; after that it is well boyled, they let it stand some three or foure daies, and then drinke it. So it is much like the Ale which is vsed in England, and of that colour and taste. And for Beuerage.

The Indians are very curious in planting and manuring of this Yuca: It is a little shrub, & carrieth branches like hazell wands; being grown as big as a mans finger, they breake them off in the middest, and so pricke them into the ground; it needeth no other art or husbandry, for out of each branch grow two, three or foure roots, some bigger, some lesser: but first they burne and manure the ground, the which labour, and whatsoeuer else is requisite, the men doe not so much The manner of planting Iuca.

as helpe with a finger, but all lyeth vpon their poore women, who are worſe then ſlaues: for they labour the ground, they plant, they digge and delue, they bake, they brew, and dreſſe their meate, fetch their water, and doe all drudgerie whatſoeuer; yea, though they nurſe a childe, they are not exempted from any labour: their childe they carrie in a Wallet about their necke, ordinarily vnder one arme, becauſe it may ſucke when it will.

The men haue care for nothing but for their Canoes, to paſſe from place to place, and of their Bowes and Arrowes to hunt, and their Armes for the warre, which is a ſword of heauie blacke wood, ſome foure fingers broad, an inch thicke, and an Elle long, ſomewhat broader towards the top then at the handle. They call it Macana, and it is carued and wrought with inlaid works very curiouſly, but his edges are blunt. If any kill any game in hunting, he bringeth it not with him, but from the next tree to the game, hee bringeth a bough (for the trees in the Indies haue leaues for the moſt part all the yeare) and all the way as he goeth ſtreweth little peeces of it, here and there, and comming home giueth a peece to his woman, and ſo ſends her for it. If they goe to the Warre, or in any iourney, where it is neceſſary to carry prouiſion or Merchandize, the women ſerue too carrie all, and the men neuer ſuccour nor eaſe them, wherein they ſhew greater Barbariſme then in any thing (in my opinion) that I haue noted amongſt them, except in eating one another.

We tooke out of this Prize, for our prouiſion, ſome good quantitie of this meale, and the Sugar ſhe had, being not aboue three or foure Cheſts: after three dayes we gaue the Ship to the Portugals, and to them libertie. In her was a Portugall Knight, which went for Gouernour of Angola, of the habit of Chriſt, with fiftie Souldiers, and Armes for a hundreth and fiftie, with his wife and daughter. He was old, and complained, that after many yeeres ſeruice for his King, with ſundry miſhaps, he was brought to that poore eſtate, as for the reliefe of his wife, his daughter and himſelfe, he had no other ſubſtance, but that he had in his Ship. It moued compaſſion, ſo as nothing of his was diminiſhed, which though to vs was of no great moment, in Angola it was worth good Crownes. Onely we diſarmed them all, and let them depart, ſaying, that they would returne to Saint Vincents. We continued our courſe for the Straits, my people much animated with this vnlookt for refreſhing, and praiſed God for his bountie, prouidence, and grace extended towards vs. Here it will not be out of the way to ſpeake a word of the particularities of the Countrie.

The deſcription of Braſil.

Braſil is accounted to be that part of America, which lyeth towards our North Sea, betwixt the Riuer of the Amazons, neere the line to the Northwards, vntill a man come to the Riuer of Plate in 36. degrees to the Southwards of the line. This coaſt generally lyeth next of any thing South and by Weſt. It is a temperate Countrie, though in ſome parts it exceedeth in heate; it is full of good ſuccours for ſhipping, and plentifull for Riuers and freſh waters. The principall habitations, are Fernambuca, the Bay De todos los Santos, Neſtra Senora de victoria, alias Santos, the Riuer Ienero, Saint Vincents, and Placentia: euery of them prouided of a good Port. The windes are variable, but for the moſt part trade alongſt the Coaſt.

Its Hauens.

Strang worme. Variation of the Compaſſe.

A worme there is in this Countrie, which killed many of the firſt Inhabitants, before God was pleaſed to diſcouer a remedie for it, vnto a religious perſon. It is like a Magot, but more ſlender and longer, and of a greene colour, with a red head. This worme creepeth in at the hinder parts, where is the euacuation of our ſuperfluities, and there (as it were) gleweth himſelfe to the gut, there feedeth of the bloud and humors, and becommeth ſo great, that ſtopping the naturall paſſage, he forceth the principall wheele of the clocke of our body to ſtand ſtill, and with it the accompt of the houre of life to take end, with moſt cruell torment and paine, which is ſuch, that he who hath beene throughly puniſhed with the Collique can quickly decipher or demonſtrate. The Antidote for this pernicious worme is Garlique: and this was diſcouered by a Phiſitian to a Religious perſon.

THARLTONS treacherie: Diſcouerie of Land vnknowne: Entrance of the Straits, accidents therein, and deſcription thereof: diuers occaſionall diſcourſes for the furtherance of Marine and Naturall knowledge.

IN our Nauigation towards the Straits, by our obſeruation we found, that our Compaſſe varied a point and better to the Eaſtwards.

In the height of the Riuer of Plate, we being ſome fiftie leagues off the coaſt, a ſtorme tooke vs Southerly, which endured fortie eight houres: In the firſt day about the going downe of the Sunne, Robert Tharlton, Maſter of the Fancie, bare vp before the winde, without giuing vs any token or ſigne, that ſhe was in diſtreſſe. We ſeeing her to continue her courſe, bare

bare vp after her, and the night comming on, we carried our light, but ſhe neuer anſwered vs, for they kept their courſe directly for England, which was the ouerthrow of the Voyage, as well for that we had no Pinnace to goe before vs, to diſcouer any danger, to ſeeke out roades and anchoring, to helpe our watering and refreſhing; as alſo for the victuals, neceſſaries, and men which they carried away with them: which though they were not many, yet with their helpe in our fight, we had taken the Vice-admirall, the firſt time ſhee bourded with vs, as ſhall be hereafter manifeſted. For once we cleered her Decke, and had wee beene able to haue ſpared but a dozen men, doubtleſſe, we had done with her what we would, for ſhe had no cloſe fights. Moreouer, if ſhe had beene with me, I had not beene diſcouered vpon the coaſt of Perw. But I was worthy to be deceiued, that truſted my Ship in the hands of an hypocrite, and a man which had left his Generall before in the like occation, and in the ſelfe ſame place: for being with Maſter Thomas Candiſh, Maſter of a ſmall Shippe in the Voyage wherein hee died, this Captaine being aboord the Admirall, in the night time forſooke his Fleete, his Generall and Captaine, and returned home. Pitie it is that ſuch perfidious perſons are not more ſeuerely puniſhed.

The ouerthrow of the Voyage by a perfidious man.

Theſe abſentings and eſcapes are made moſt times onely to pilfer and ſteale, as well by taking of ſome prize when they are alone, and without command, to hinder or order their bad proceedings, as to appropriate that which is in their intruſted ſhippe; caſting the fault, if they bee called to account, vpon ſome poore and vnknowne Mariners, whom they ſuffer with a little pillage, to abſent themſelues, the cunninglier to colour their greateſt diſorders, and Robberies.

The cunning of Runnawayes.

The ſtorme ceaſing, and being out of all hope, wee ſet ſaile and went on our courſe. During this ſtorme, certaine great Fowles as bigge as Swannes, ſoared about vs, and the winde calming, ſetled themſelues in the Sea, and fed vpon the ſweepings of our ſhip; which I perceiuing, and deſirous to ſee of them, becauſe they ſeemed farre greater then in truth they were, I cauſed a Hook and Line to be brought me; and with a piece of a Pilchard I baited the Hooke, and a foot from it, tied a piece of Corke, that it might not ſinke deepe, and threw it into the Sea, which, our ſhip driuing with the Sea, in a little time was a good ſpace from vs, and one of the Fowles beeing hungry, preſently ſeized vpon it, and the Hooke in his vpper beake. It is like to a Faulcons bill, but that the point is moore crooked, in that manner, as by no meanes hee could cleere himſelfe, except that the Line brake, or the Hooke righted: Plucking him towards the ſhip, with the wauing of his wings he eaſed the weight of his body: and being brought to the ſterne of our ſhip, two of our company went downe by the ladder of the Poope, and ſeized on his neck and wings; but ſuch were the blowes he gaue them with his Pinnions, as both left their hand faſt, beeing beaten blacke and blue; we caſt a ſnare about his necke, and forciced him into the ſhip. By the ſame manner of fiſhing, we caught ſo many of them, as refreſhed and recreated all my people for that day. Their bodies were great, but of little fleſh and tender, in taſte anſwerable to the food whereon they feed. They were of two colours, ſome white, ſome grey; they had three ioynts in each wing; and from the point of one wing to the point of the other, both ſtretched out, was aboue two fathomes.

Birds like Swans. Such the Hollanders found in the Straits which they called Mayres. Gugh with Line & Hooke.

Proue good refreſhment.

The wind continued good with vs, till we came to 49. degrees and 30. minutes where it tooke vs Weſterly, being (as we made our account) ſome fifty leagues from the ſhoare. Betwixt 49. and 48. degrees is Port Saint Iulian, a good Harbour, and in which a man may graue his ſhippe, though ſhe draw fifteene or ſixteene foot water: But care is to bee had of the people called Patagones. They are treacherous, and of great ſtature, moſt giue them the name of Giants.

Care of the Patagones.

The ſecond of February, about nine of the clocke in the morning, wee deſcried land, which bare South-weſt of vs, which we looked not for ſo timely; and comming neerer and neerer vnto it, by the lying, wee could not coniecture what Land it ſhould be, for wee were next of any thing in 48. degrees, and no Plat, nor Sea-card which we had, made mention of any Land, which lay in that manner, neere about that height; In fine, wee brought our Lar-boord tacke aboord, and ſtood to the North-eaſt-wards all that day and night, and the winde continuing Weſterly and a faire gale, we continued our courſe alongſt the Coaſt the day and night following. In which time we made account we diſcouered well neere threeſcore leagues off the Coaſt. It is bold, and made ſmall ſhew of dangers. The land is a goodly Champion Countrey, and peopled; wee ſaw many fires, but could not come to ſpeake with the people; for the time of the yeere was farre ſpent to ſhoote the Straits, and the want of our Pinnaſſe diſabled vs for finding a Port or Road; not being diſcretion with a ſhip of charge, and in an vnknowne Coaſt, to come neere the ſhoare before it was ſounded; which were cauſes, together with the change of the winde (good for vs to paſſe the Strait) that hindered the further Diſcouery of this Land, with its ſecrets: This I haue ſorrowed for many times ſince for that it had likelihood to bee an excellent Countrey. It hath great Riuers of freſh waters; for the out-ſhoot of them colours the Sea in many places, as we ranne alongſt it. It is not Mountaynous, but much of the diſpoſition of England, and as temperate. The things we noted principally on the Coaſt, are theſe following; the Weſtermoſt point of the Land, with which wee firſt fell, is the end of the Land to the Weſtwards, as wee found afterwards. If a man bring this point South-weſt, it riſeth in three Mounts or round Hillockes:

Land vnknowne.

bringing it more Westerly, they shoot themselues all into one; and bringing it Easterly, it riseth in two Hillockes. This we called Point Tremountaine. Some twelue or fourteene leagues from this point to the Eastwards, faire by the shoare, lyeth a low flat Iland of some two leagues long, we named it Faire Iland; for it was all ouer as greene and smooth, as any Meddow in the Spring of the yeare.

Point Tremountaine.
Faire Iland.

Some three or foure leagues Easterly from this Iland, is a goodly opening, as of a great Riuer, or an arme of the Sea, with a goodly low Countrey adjacent. And eight or tenne leagues from this opening, some three leagues from the shoare, lyeth a bigge Rocke, which at the first we had thought to be a ship vnder all her sayles; but after, as we came neere, it discouered it selfe to bee a Rocke, which we called Conduit-head; for that howsoeuer a man commeth with it, it is like to the Conduit-heads about the Citie of London. All this Coast so farre as we discouered, lyeth next of any thing East and by North, and West and by South. The Land, for that it was discouered in the Reigne of Queene Elizabeth, my Souereigne Lady and Mistris, and a Mayden Queene, and at my cost and aduenture, in a perpetuall memory of her chastitie, and remembrance of my endeuours, I gaue it the name of Hawkins Maiden land. Before a man fall with this Land, some twenty or thirty leagues, he shall meet with beds of Oreweed, driuing to and fro in that Sea, with white flowres growing vpon them, and sometimes farther off; which is a good shew and signe the Land is neere, whereof the Westermost part lyeth some threescore leagues from the neerest Land of America.

Beds of Oreweed, with white flowres.

With our faire and large wind, wee shaped our course for the Straits, and the tenth of February wee had sight of Land, and it was the head-land of the Straits to the Northwards, which agreed with our height, wherein wee found our selues to bee, which was in 52. degrees and 40. minutes. Within a few houres we had the mouth of the Straits open, which lieth in 52. degrees and 50. minutes. It riseth like the North foreland in Kent, and is much like the Land of Margates. It is not good to borrow neere the shoare, but to giue it a faire birth; within a few houres we entred the mouth of the Straits, which is some fixe leagues broad, and lieth in 52. degrees, and 50. minutes; doubling the Point on the starbood, which is also flat of a good birth, we opened a faire Bay, in which we might descry the Hull of a ship beaten vpon the Beach. It was of the Spanish Fleet, that went to inhabit there, in Anno 1582. vnder the charge of Pedro Sarmiento, who at his returne was taken Prisoner, and brought into England. In this Bay the Spaniards made their principall habitation, and called it the Citie of Saint Philip, and left it peopled; But the cold barrennesse of the Countrey, and the malice of the Indians, with whom they badly agreed, made speedy end of them, as also of those, whom they left in the middle of the Straits, three leagues from Cape Froward to the Eastwards, in another habitation.

Our comming to the Straits.
Description thereof.
Pedro Sarmiento buildeth San Philip.

We continued our course alongst this Reach (for all the Straits is as a Riuer altering his course, sometimes vpon one point, sometimes vpon another) which is some eight leagues long, and lieth West North-west. From this we entred into a goodly Bay, which runneth vp into the Land Northerly many leagues; and at first entrance, a man may see no other thing, but as it were, a maine Sea. From the end of this first Reach, you must direct your course West South-west, and some fourteene or fifteene leagues lyeth one of the narrowest places of all the Straits; This leadeth vnto another Reach, that lyeth West and by North some six leagues. Here in the middle of the Reach, the wind tooke vs by the North-west, and so we were forced to anchor some two or three dayes. In which time we went ashoare with our Boats, and found neere the middle of this Reach, on the starboord side, a reasonable good place to ground and trimme a small ship; where it higheth some nine or ten foot water. Here we saw certaine Hogs, but they were so farre from vs, that we could not discerne whether they were of those of the Countrey, or brought by the Spaniards; these were all the beasts which we saw in all the time we were in the Straits.

Hogs.

In two tides we turned through this reach, and so recouered the Ilands of Pengwins; they lye from this reach foure leagues South-west and by West. Till you come to this place, care is to be taken of not comming too neere to any point of the land; for being (for the most part) sandy, they haue sholding off them, and are somewhat dangerous. These Ilands haue beene set forth by some to be three, we could discouer but two; And they are no more except that part of the Mayne, which lyeth ouer against them, be an Iland; which carrieth little likelihood, and I cannot determine it. A man may saile betwixt the two Ilands, or betwixt them and the Land on the Larboord side; from which Land to the bigger Iland is as it were a bridge or ledge, on which is foure or fiue fathom water; and to him that commeth neere it, not knowing thereof, may iustly cause feare; for it sheweth to be shold water with his ripling, like vnto a Race. Betwixt the former Reach, and these Ilands, runneth vp a goodly Bay into the Countrey to the North-wards. It causeth a great Indraught, and aboue these Ilands runneth a great tide from the mouth of the Straits to these Ilands, the Land on the Larboord-side is low Land and sandy (for the most part, and without doubt, Ilands) for it hath many openings into the Sea, and forcible Indraughts by them, and that on the Starboord side, is all high Mountaynous Land, from end to end; but no wood on either side. Before we passed these Ilands, vnder the Lee of the bigger Iland we anchored, the winde beeing at North-east, with intent to refresh our selues with the Fowles of these Ilands.

Ilands of Pengwins.
Note.
Since it hath bin plainly found that all the South part are Ilands.

Ilands they are of diuers ſorts, and in great plentie, as Pengwins, wild Ducks, Guls and Gannets; of the principall we purpoſed to make prouiſion, and thoſe were the Pengwins. Good prouiſion in the Straits.

The Pengwin is in all proportion like a Gooſe, and hath no feathers, but a certaine downe vpon all parts of his bodie: and therefore cannot flee, but auayleth himſelfe in all occaſions with his feet, running as faſt as moſt men. He liueth in the Sea, and on the Land feedeth on fiſh in the Sea, and as a Gooſe on the ſhore vpon graſſe. They harbour themſelues vnder the ground in Burrowes, as the Conies; and in them hatch their young. All parts of the Iland where they haunted were vndermined, ſaue onely one Valley which (it ſeemeth) they reſerued for their food; for it was as greene as any Medow in the moneth of Aprill, with a moſt fine ſhort graſſe. The fleſh of theſe Pengwins is much of the ſauour of a certaine Fowle taken in the Ilands of Landey and Silley, which we call Puffins, by the taſte it is eaſily diſcerned that they feed on fiſh. They are very fat, and in dreſſing muſt be ſtead as the Byter; they are reaſonable meate roſted, baked, or ſodden; but beſt roſted. We ſalted ſome doozen or ſixteene Hogſheads, which ſerued vs (whileſt they laſted) in ſteed of powdred Beefe. The hunting of them (as wee may well terme it) was a great recreation to my company and worth the ſight, for in determining to catch them, neceſſarily was required good ſtore of people, euery one with a cudgell in his hand, to compaſſe them round about, to bring them, as it were, into a Ring; if they chanced to breake out, then was the ſport; for the ground beeing vndermined, at vnawares it failed, and as they ranne after them, one fell here, another there, another offering to ſtrike at one, lifting vp his hand, ſunke vp to the armepits in the earth, another leaping to auoid one hole, fell into another. And after the firſt ſlaughter, in ſeeing vs on the ſhoare, they ſhunned vs, and procured to recouer the Sea: yea many times ſeeing themſelues perſecuted they would tumble downe from ſuch high Rocks and Mountaines, as it ſeemed impoſſible to eſcape with life. Yet as ſoone as they came to the Beach, preſently we ſhould ſee them runne into the Sea, as though they had no hurt. Where one goeth, the other foloweth, like ſheepe after the Bel-weather: but in getting them once within the Ring cloſe together, few eſcaped, ſaue ſuch as by chance hid themſelues in the borrowes, and ordinarily there was no Droue which yeelded vs not a thouſand, and more: the manner of killing them which the Hunters vſed, beeing in a cluſter together, was with their cudgels to knocke them on the head, for though a man gaue them many blowes on the body they dyed not: Beſides the fleſh bruized is not good to keepe. The maſſacre ended, preſently they cut of their heads, that they might bleed well: ſuch as we determined to keepe for ſtore, we ſaued in this manner. Firſt, wee ſplit them, and then waſhed them well in Sea-water, then ſalted them, hauing laine ſome ſixe houres in Salt, we put them in preſſe eight houres, and the bloud being ſoaked out, wee ſalted them againe in our other caske, as is the cuſtome to ſalt Beefe, after this manner they continued good ſome two moneths, and ſerued vs in ſteed of Beefe. Hunting the Pengwin. The keeping for ſtore.

The Guls and Gannets, were not in ſo great quantitie, yet we wanted not young Guls to eate all the time of our ſtay about theſe Ilands. It was one of the delicateſt foods, that I haue eaten in all my life. The Guls.

The Duckes are different to ours, and nothing ſo good meate; yet they may ſerue for neceſſitie: They were many, and had a part of the Iland to themſelues ſeuerall, which was the higheſt Hill and more then a Muſket ſhot ouer. In all the dayes of my life, I haue not ſeene greater arte and curioſitie in creatures voide of reaſon, then in the placing and making of their Neſts; all the Hill being ſo full of them, that the greateſt Mathematician of the World, could not deuiſe how to place one more then there was vpon the Hill, leauing onely one path-way for a Fowle to paſſe betwixt. The Hill was all leuell, as if it had beene ſmoothed by arte; the Neſts made onely of earth, and ſeeming to be of the ſelfe-ſame mould; for the Neſts and the ſoile is all one, which, with water that they bring in their Beakes, they make into Clay, or a certaine dawbe, and after faſhion them round, as with a compaſſe. In the bottome they containe the meaſure of a foot; in the height about eight inches; and in the top, the ſame quantitie ouer; there they are hollowed in, ſomwhat deep, wherein they lay their Egges, without other preuention. And I am of opinion, that the Sun helpeth them to hatch their young: their Neſts are for many yeares, and of one proportion, not one exceeding another in bigneſſe, in height, nor circumference; and in proportionable diſtance one from another. In all this Hill, nor in any of their Neſts, was to be found a blade of graſſe, a ſtraw, a ſticke, a feather, a meat, no, nor the filing of any Fowle, but all the Neſts and paſſages betwixt them, were ſo ſmooth and cleane, as if they had bin newly ſwept & waſhed. Ducks. Cunning Architecture. Their neatneſſe.

One day hauing ended our hunting of Pengwins, one of our Mariners walking about the Iland, diſcouered a great company of Seales, or Sea-wolues (ſo called for that they are in the Sea, as the Wolues on the Land) aduiſing vs, that he left them ſleeping, with their bellies toaſting againſt the Sunne: we prouided our ſelues with ſtaues and other weapons, and ſought to ſteale vpon them at vnawares, to ſurprize ſome of them, and comming downe the ſide of a Hill, we were not diſcouered, till wee were cloſe vpon them; notwithſtanding, their Sentinell (before wee could approach) with a great howle waked them: we got betwixt the Sea and ſome of them, but they ſhunned vs not; for they came diredtly vpon vs; and though we dealt heere and there a blow, yet not a man that withſtood them, eſcaped the ouerthrow. They reckon not Of Seales, or Sea-woolues.

of a Musket shot, a sword pierceth not their skinne, and to giue a blowe with a staffe, is as to smite vpon a stone: only in giuing the blowe vpon his snout, presently he falleth downe dead. After they had recouered the water, they did as it were, scorne vs, defie vs, and daunced before vs, vntill we had shot some Musket shot through them, and so they appeared no more.

Description of the Seale. This fish is like vnto a Calfe, with foure legs, but not aboue a spanne long: his skinne is hairy like a Calfe: but these were different to all that euer I haue seene, yet I haue seene of them in many parts; for these were greater, and in their former parts like vnto Lions, with shagge haire, and mostaches. They liue in the Sea, and come to sleepe on the Land, and they euer haue one that watcheth, who aduiseth them of any accident. They are beneficiall to man in their skinnes for many purposes: In their mostaches for Pick-tooths, and in their fatte to make Traine-oyle.

Their Sentinel.

Wee embarqued our selues, and set sayle with the winde at North-west, which could serue vs but to an end of that reach, some dozen leagues long, and some three or foure leagues broad. It lieth next of any thing, till you come to Cape Agreda, South-west; from this Cape to Cape Froward, the coast lieth West South-west. Some foure leagues betwixt them, was the second peopling of the Spaniards: and this Cape lieth in 55. degrees and better. Thwart Cape Froward, the winde larged with vs, and we continued our course towards the Iland of Elizabeth; which lieth from Cape Froward some foureteene leagues West and by South. This reach is foure or fiue leagues broad, and in it are many channels or openings into the Sea; for all the land on the Souther part of the Straites are Ilands and broken land; and from the beginning of this reach to the end of the Straits, high mountainous Land on both sides, in most parts couered with Snowe all the yeere long. Betwixt the Iland Elizabeth, and the Maine, is the narrowest passage of all the Straites; it may be some two Musket shot from side to side. From this Straite to Elizabeth Bay, is some foure leagues, and the course lieth North-west and by West. This Bay is all sandie, and cleane ground on the Easterne part; but before you come at it, there lieth a point of the shoare a good birth off, which is dangerous. And in this reach, as in many parts of the Straites, runneth a quicke and forcible tide. In the Bay it higheth eight or nine foot water. The Northerne part of the Bay hath foule ground, and Rockes vnder water: and therefore it is not wholsome borrowing of the Maine. One of Master Thomas Candish his Pinasses (as I haue been enformed) came aground vpon one of them, and he was in hazard to haue left her there.

The second peopling of the Spaniards.

Elizabeths Bay.

From Elizabeth Bay to the River of Ieronimo, is some fiue leagues. The course lieth West and by North, and West. Here the winde scanted, and forced vs to seeke a place to anchor in. Our Boats going alongst the shoare, found a reasonable Harbour, which is right against that which they call, River Ieronimo: but it is another channell, by which a man may dissemboque the Straite, as by the other which is accustomed; for with a storme, which tooke vs one night, suddenly wee were forced into that opening vnwittingly; but in the morning, seeing our errour, and the winde larging, with two or three boords we turned into the old channell, not daring for want of our Pinasse to attempt any new Discouerie. This Harbour wee called Blanches Bay; for that it was found by William Blanch, one of our Masters Mates. Here hauing moored our ship, we beganne to make our prouision of wood and water, whereof was plentie in this Bay, and in all other places from Pengwin Ilands, till within a dozen leagues of the mouth of the Straites.

The River of Ieronimo.

Another channell.

Blanches Bay.

Now finding our Deckes open, with the long lying vnder the Line, and on the coast of Brasill, the Sunne hauing beene in our Zenith many times, we calked our ship, within boord and without, aboue the Deckes. And such was the diligence wee vsed, that at foure dayes end, wee had aboue threescore Pipes of water, and twentie Boats of wood stowed in our ship: no man was idle, nor otherwise busied but in necessarie workes: some in felling and cleauing of wood; some in carrying of water; some in romaging; some in washing, others in baking; one in heating of Pitch, another in gathering of Muskles: no man was exempted, but knew at euening, whereunto he was to betake himselfe the morning following.

Obiection of waste. Answere.

Some man might aske mee, how wee came to haue so many emptie Caske in lesse then two moneths; for it seemeth much, that so few men in such short time, and in so long a Voyage should waste so much? Whereto I answere, that it came not of excessiue expense; for in health we neuer exceeded our ordinarie; but of a mischance which befell vs vnknowne in the Iland of Saint Iames, or Saint Anne, in the coast of Brasill, where wee refreshed our selues, and according to the custome, laid our Caske ashoare, to trimme it, and after to fill it, the place being commodious for vs. But with the water a certaine worme, called Broma by the Spaniard, and by vs Arters, entred also, which eate it so full of holes, that all the water soaked out, and made much of our Caske of small vse. This we remedied the best wee could, and discouered it long before we came to this place.

Warning against wormes which eate through ships.

Hereof let others take warning, in no place to haue Caske on the shoare, where it may be auoyded; for it is one of the prouisions which are with greatest care to be preserued in long Voyages, and hardest to be supplied. These Arters, or Broma, in all hot Countries enter into the plankes of ships, and especially where are Riuers of fresh water, (the common opinion is, that they are bred in fresh water, and with the the current of the Riuers are brought into the Sea) but experience teacheth, that they breede in the great Seas, in all hot climates, especially neere the Equinoctiall Line: for lying so long vnder, and neere the Line, and towing a Shalop at our sterne, comming to cleanse her in Brasill, wee found her all vnder water couered with these Wormes, as bigge as the little finger of a man, on the outside of the planke, not fully couered, but halfe the thicknesse of their bodie, like to a gellie wrought into the planke as with a Gowdge. In little time, if the ship be not sheathed, they put all in hazard; for they enter in no bigger then a small Spanish Needle, and by little and little their holes become ordinarily greater then a mans finger. The thicker the planke is, the greater he groweth; yea, I haue seene many ships so eaten, that the most of their plankes vnder water haue beene like Honie-combes, and especially those betwixt winde and water. If they had not beene sheathed, it had beene impossible that they could haue swomme. The entring of them is hardly to be discerned, the most of them being small as the head of a Pinne. Which, all such as purpose long Voyages, are to preuent by sheathing their ships.

Of sheathing ships.

And for that I haue seene diuers manners of sheathing, for the ignorant I will set them downe which by experience I haue found best. In Spaine, and Portugall, some sheath their ships with Lead; which, besides the cost and weight, although they vse the thinnest sheet-lead that I haue seene in any place, yet it is nothing durable, but subiect to many casualties. Another manner is vsed with double plankes, as thicke without as within, after the manner of furring; which is little better then that with Lead: for besides his weight, it dureth little, because the Worme in small time passeth through the one and the other.

In Spaine and Portugall, with double plankes.

A third manner of sheathing had beene vsed amongst some with fine Canuas; which is of small continuance, and so not to be regarded.

With Canuas.

The fourth preuention, which now is most accounted of is to burne the vpper planke till it come to be in euery place like a Cole, and after to pitch it: this is not bad.

With burnt plankes.

In China, (as I haue beene enformed) they vse a certaine Betune or Varnish, in manner of an artificiall Pitch, wherewith they trimme the outside of their ships. It is said to bee durable, and of that vertue, as neither worme, nor water pierceth it; neither hath the Sunne power against it. Some haue deuised a certaine Pitch, mingled with Glasse, and other ingredients, beaten into powder, with which if the ship be pitched, it is said, the worme that toucheth it, dieth: but I haue not heard, that it hath beene vsefull. But the most approued of all is the manner of sheathing vsed now adayes in England, with thinne boords, halfe inch thicke, the thinner the better, and Elme better then Oake; for it riueth not, it indureth better vnder water, and yeeldeth better to the ships side.

In China with Varnish.

In England.

The inuention of the materials incorporated betwixt the planke and the sheathing, is that indeed which anayleth; for without it many plankes were not sufficient to hinder the entrance of this worme: this manner is thus: Before the sheathing boord is nayled on, vpon the inner side of it, they smeare it ouer with Tarre, halfe a finger thicke, and vpon the Tarre, another halfe thicke of haire, such as the Whitelymers vse, and so nayle it on, the nayles not aboue a spanne distance one from another: the thicker they are driuen, the better. Some hold opinion, that the Tarre killeth the worme; others, that the worme passing the sheathing, and seeking a way through, the haire and the Tarre so inuolue, that hee is choaked therewith; which mee thinkes is most probable: this manner of sheathing was inuented by my Father; and experience hath taught it to be the best, and of least cost.

Best manner of sheathing.

Such was the diligence we vsed for our dispatch to shoot the Straits, that at foure dayes end, we had our water and wood stowed in our ship, all our Copper-worke finished, and our ship calked from Post to Stemme: the first day in the morning (the winde being faire) we brought our selues into the channell, and sayled towards the mouth of the Straites, praising God: and beginning our course with little winde, wee descried a fire vpon the shoare, made by the Indians for a signe to call vs; which seene, I caused a Boat to bee man'd, and wee rowed ashoare, to see what their meaning was, and approaching neere the shoare, we saw a Canoa made fast vnder a Rocke with a Wyth, most artificially made with the rindes of trees, and sewed together with the finnes of Whales; at both ends sharpe and turning vp, with a greene bough in either end, and ribbes for strengthening it. After a little while we might discerne on the fall of the Mountaine (which was full of trees and shrubs) two or three Indians naked, which came out of certaine Caues or Cotes. They spake vnto vs, and made diuers signes; now pointing to the Harbour, out of which we were come; and then to the mouth of the Straites: but we vnderstood nothing of their meaning. Yet left they vs with many imaginations, suspecting it might bee to aduise vs of our Pinnace, or some other thing of moment: but for that they were vnder couert, and might worke vs some treacherie (for all the people of the Straits, and the Land neere them, vse all the villanie they can towards white people, taking them for Spaniards, in reuenge of the deceit that Nation hath vsed towards them vpon sundry occasions:) as also for that by our stay wee could reape nothing but hinderance of our Nauigation, wee hasted to our ship, and sayled on our course.

The Naturals.

From Blanches Bay to long Reach, which is some foure leagues, the course lieth West South-west entring into the long Reach, which is the last of the Straits, and longest. For it is some thirtie two leagues, and the course lieth next of any thing North-west. Before the setting of the Sunne, wee had the mouth of the Straites open, and were in great hope the next day to be in the South Sea: but about seuen of the clocke that night, we saw a great cloude arise out of the North-east, which began to cast forth great flashes of lightnings, and suddenly sayling with a fresh a freſh gale of winde at North-eaſt, another more forcible tooke vs aſtayes, which put vs in danger: for, all our ſayles being a taut, it had like to haue ouerſet our ſhip, before we could take in our ſayles. And therefore in all ſuch ſemblances it is great wiſedome to carrie a ſhort ſayle, or to take in all ſayles. Here we found what the Indians fore-warned vs of: for they haue great inſight in the change of weather, and beſides haue ſecret dealing with the Prince of Darkneſſe, who many times declareth vnto them things to come: By this meanes and other witch-crafts, which he teacheth them, he poſſeſſeth them, and cauſeth them to doe what pleaſeth him. Within halfe an houre it began to thunder and raine, with ſo much winde as wee were forced to lie a hull, and ſo darke, that we ſaw nothing, but when the lightning came. This being one of the narroweſt Reaches of all the Straites, we were forced, euery glaſſe, to open a little of our fore-ſayle, to caſt about our ſhips head: any man may conceiue if the night ſeemed long vnto vs, what deſire we had to ſee the day. In fine, Phœbus with his beautifull face lightned our Hemiſphere, and reioyced our hearts (hauing driuen aboue twentie foure leagues in twelue houres lying a hull: whereby is to be imagined the force of the winde and current.)

Note.

Tempeſt.

Wee ſet our fore-ſayle, and returned to our former Harbour: from whence, within three or foure dayes, we ſet ſayle againe with a faire winde, which continued with vs till we came within a league of the mouth of the Strait, here the winde tooke vs againe contrarie, and forced vs to returne againe to our former Port: where being ready to anchor, the winde ſcanted with vs in ſuch manner, as we were forced to make aboord. In which time, the winde and tide put vs ſo farre to lee-wards, that we could by no meanes ſeize it: So wee determined to goe to Elizabeth Bay, but before we came at it, the night ouertooke vs: and this Reach being dangerous and narrow, we durſt neither hull, nor tne, or turne to and againe with a ſhort ſayle, and therefore bare alongſt in the middeſt of the channell, till we were come into the broad Reach, then lay a hull till the morning.

When we ſet ſayle and ran alongſt the coaſt, ſeeking with our Boate ſome place to anchor in; ſome foure leagues to the Weſtwards of Cape Froward, we found a goodly Bay; which we named Engliſh Bay: where anchored, wee preſently went aſhoare, and found a goodly Riuer of freſh water, and an old Canoa broken to pieces, and ſome two or three of the houſes of the Indians, with pieces of Seale ſtinking ripe. Theſe houſes are made in faſhion of an Ouen ſeuen or eight foot broad, with boughs of trees, and couered with other boughes, as our Summer houſes; and doubtleſſe doe ſerue them but for the Summer time, when they come to fiſh, and profite themſelues of the Sea. For they retire themſelues in the Winter into the Countrie, whereit is more temperate, and yeeldeth better ſuſtenance: for on the Mayne of the Straites, we neither ſaw beaſt nor fowle, Sea-fowle excepted, and a kinde of Black-bird, and two Hogs towards the beginning of the Straits. Here our ſhip being well moored, we began to ſupplie our wood and water, that we had ſpent. Which being a dayes worke, and the winde during many dayes contrary, I endeauored to keep my people occupied, to diuert them from the imagination which ſome had conceiued; that it behoued we ſhould returne to Braſill, and winter there, and ſo ſhoot the Straits in the Spring of the yeere. One day wee rowed vp the Riuer, with our Boate and Light-horſeman, to diſcouer it, and the Inland: where hauing ſpent a good part of the day, and finding ſhoald water, and many Trees fallen thwart it, and little fruit of our labour, nor any thing worth the noting, wee returned. Another day, wee trained our people aſhoare, being a goodly ſandy Bay: another, wee had a hurling of Batchelors againſt married men; this day we were buſied in wreſtling, the other in ſhooting; ſo we were neuer idle, neither thought we the time long.

Engliſh Bay.

The natiues houſes.

Sloth cauſe of imagination.

After wee had paſt here ſome ſeuen or eight dayes, one euening with a ſlaw from the ſhoare, our ſhip droue off into the channell, and before wee could get vp our Anchor, and let our Sayles, we were driuen ſo farre to lee-wards, that wee could not recouer into the Bay; and night comming on, with a ſhort ſayle, we beate off and on till the morning. At the breake of the day conferring with the Captaine and Maſter of my ſhip, what was beſt to bee done, wee reſolued to ſeeke out Tobias Coue, which lieth ouer againſt Cape Fryo, on the Southerne part of the Straits. becauſe in all the Reaches of the Straits (for the moſt part) the winde bloweth trade, and therefore little profit to be made by turning to winde-wards. And from the Ilands of the Pengwins to the end of the Straites towards the South-ſea, there is no anchoring in the channell: and if we ſhould be put to lee-wards of this Coue, we had no ſuccour till we came to the Ilands of Pengwins; and ſome of our companie which had been with M. Th. Candiſh in the Voyage in which he died, and in the ſame Coue many weekes, vndertooke to be our Pilots thither. Whereupon wee bare vp, being ſome two leagues thither, hauing ſo much winde as we could ſcarce lie by it with our courſe and bonnet of each; but bearing vp before the winde, we put out our Topſayles and Spritſayle, and within a little while the winde began to fayle vs, and immediatly our ſhip gaue a mightie blowe vpon a Rocke, and ſtucke faſt vpon it. And had wee had but the fourth part of the winde, which we had in all the night paſt, but a moment before wee ſtrucke the Rocke, our ſhip, doubtleſſe, with the blowe had broken her ſelfe all to pieces.

Tobias Coue.

Setting of the ſhip vpon a Rocke.

To the laborious God propitious.

All our labour was fruitleſſe till God was pleaſed that the floud came, and then wee had her off with great ioy and comfort, when finding the current fauourable with vs, wee ſtood ouer to Engliſh Bay, and fetching it, we anchored there, hauing beene ſome three houres vpon the Rock; and with the blowe, as after we ſaw, when our ſhip was brought a ground in Perico (which is the Port of Panama) a great part of her ſheathing was beaten off on both ſides of her Bulges, and ſome foure foot long, and a foot ſquare of her falſe ſtemme, ioyning to the Keele, wreſted acroſſe, like vnto a Hogs yoake, which hindered her ſayling very much.

They ſounded a Coue ſome ſixteene leagues from the mouth of the Straite, which after wee called Crabby Coue. It brooked his name well for two cauſes; the one, for that all the water was full of a ſmall kinde of red Crabbes; the other, for the crabbed Mountaines which ouer-topped it: a third wee might adde, for the crabbed entertainment it gaue vs. In this Coue wee anchored, but the winde freſhing in, and three or foure Hills ouer-topping (like Sugar-loaues) altered and ſtraightned the paſſage of the wind in ſuch manner, as forced it downe with ſuch violence in flawes and furious bluſtrings, as was like to ouerſet our ſhip at Anchor, and cauſed her to driue, and vs to weigh; but before we could weigh it, ſhe was ſo neere the Rocks and the puffes and guſts of wind ſo ſudden and vncertain, ſomtimes ſcant, ſomtimes large, that it forced vs to cut our Cable, and yet dangerous if our ſhip did not caſt the right way. Here neceſſitie, not being ſubiect to any law, forced vs to put our ſelues into the hands of him that was able to deliuer vs. Wee cut our Cable and Sayle all in one inſtant: And God to ſhew his power and gracious bountie towards vs, was pleaſed that our ſhip caſt the contrarie way towards the ſhoare, ſeeming that hee with his owne hand did wend her about: for in leſſe then her length, ſhe flatted, and in all the Voyage but at that inſtant, ſhee flatted with difficultie, for that ſhee was long; the worſt propertie ſhee had. On either ſide we might ſee the Rockes vnder vs, and were not halfe a ſhips length from the ſhoare, and if ſhee had once couched, it had beene impoſſible to haue eſcaped.

Crabby Coue.

Gods gracious deliuerance.

From hence wee returned to Blanches Bay, and there anchored, expecting Gods good will and pleaſure. Here beganne the bitterneſſe of the time to encreaſe with bluſtering and ſharpe windes, accompanied with raine and fleeting ſnowe, and my people to bee diſmayed againe, in manifeſting a deſire to returne to Braſill, which I would neuer conſent vnto, no, not ſo much as to heare of.

And all men are to take care, that they goe not one foote backe, more then is of meere force: for I haue not ſeene, that any who haue yeelded thereunto, but preſently they haue returned home. As in the Voyage of Maſter Edward Fenton; in that which the Earle of Cumberland ſet forth, to his great charge; as alſo in that of Maſter Thomas Candiſh, in which he died. All which pretended to ſhoote the Straites of Magelan, and by perſwaſion of ſome ignorant perſons, being in good poſſibilitie, were brought to conſent to returne to Braſill, to winter, and after in the Spring to attempt the paſſing of the Straite againe. None of them made any abode in Braſill: for preſently as ſoone as they looked homeward, one, with a little bluſtering winde taketh occaſion to leaſe companie; another complaineth, that he wanteth victuals; another, that his ſhip is leake; another, that his maſts, ſayles, cordidge faileth him. So the willing neuer want probable reaſons to further their pretences. As I ſaw once (being but young, and more bold then experimented) in the yeere 1582. in a Voyage, vnder the charge of my Vncle William Hawkins of Plimouth, Eſquire, in the Indies, at the Weſter end of the Iland of San Iuan de Portorico; One of the ſhips (called the Barke bonner) being ſomewhat leake, the Captaine complayned that ſhee was not able to endure to England: whereupon a Counſell was called, and his reaſons heard, and allowed. So it was concluded, that the Victuall, Munition, and what was ſeruiceable, ſhould be taken out of her, and her men diuided amongſt our other ſhips; the Hull remayning to be ſunke, or burned. To which I neuer ſpake word till I ſaw it reſolued; being my part rather to learne, then to adviſe. But ſeeing the fatall ſentence giuen, and ſuſpecting that the Captaine made it worſe then it was, rather vpon policie to come into another ſhip, which was better of ſayle, then for any danger they might runne into: with as much reaſon as my capacitie could reach vnto, I diſſwaded my Vncle priuately; And vrged, that ſeeing wee had profited the Aduenturers nothing, we ſhould endeauour to preſerue our principall; eſpecially, hauing men and victuals. But ſeeing I preuayled not, I went further, and offered to finde out in the ſame ſhip, and others, ſo many men, as with me would be content to carrie her home, giuing vs the third part of the value of the ſhip, as ſhee ſhould be valued at, at her returne, by foure indifferent perſons; and to leaue the Vice-admirall, which I had vnder my charge, and to make her Vice-admirall. Whereupon it was condeſcended, that wee ſhould all goe aboord the ſhip, and that there it ſhould be determined. The Captaine thought himſelfe ſomewhat touched in Reputation, and ſo would not thus further triall ſhould be made of the matter, ſaying, that if another man was able to carrie the ſhip into England, he would in no caſe leaue her, neither would he forſake her till ſhee ſunke vnder him. The Generall commended him for his reſolution, and thanked me for my offer, tending to the generall good; my intention being to force thoſe who for gaine could vndertake to carrie her home, ſhould alſo doe it gratis, according to their Obligation. Thus, this leake-ſhip went well into England; where, after ſhe made many a good Voyage in nine yeeres.

Voyage ouerthrowne by giuing way to murderers.

Edward Fenton and Maſter Thomas Candiſh.

Maſter William Hawkins.

As the weather gaue leaue, wee entertained our ſelues the firſt dayes in neceſſarie affaires and workes, and after in making of Coale, with intent (the winde continuing long very contrarie) to ſee if wee could remedie any of our broken Anchours; a Forge I had in my ſhip, and of fiue Anchors which we brought out of England, there remained but one that was ſeruiceable.

In the Ilands of Pengwins we loſt one, in Crabbie Cone another: a third, vpon another occaſion, we broke an arme, and the fourth, on the Rocke had the eye of his Ring broken. This (one day deuiſing with my ſelfe) I made to ſerue, without working him a new. Which when I tooke firſt in hand, all men thought it ridiculous: but in fine, we made it in that manner ſo ſeruiceable, as till our ſhip came to Callao, which is the Port of Lyma, ſhee ſcarce vſed any other Anchor, and when I came from Lyma to Panama, which was three yeeres after, I ſaw it ſerue the Admirall in which I came (a ſhip of aboue 500. tuns) without other arte or addition, then what my owne inuention contriued.

The mending of an vnſerviceable Anchor.

And for that in the like neceſſitie, or occaſion, others may profit themſelues of the induſtrie, I will recount the manner of the forging our eye without fire, or Iron. It was in this ſort. From the eye of the ſhanke, about the head of the croſſe, we gaue two tunnes with a new ſtrong Halſer, betwixt three and foure inches, giuing a reaſonable allowance for that, which ſhould be the eye, and ſerued in ſtead of the Ring, then we faſtned the two ends of the Halſer, ſo as in that part it was as ſtrong as in any other, and with our Capſten ſtretched the two bightes, that euery part might beare proportionably, then armed we all the Halſer round about with ſixe yarne Synnets, and likewiſe the ſhanke of the Anchor, and the head with a ſmooth Mat made of the ſame Synnet: this done, with an inch Rope, we woolled the two bightes to the ſhanke, from the croſſe to the eye, and that alſo which was to ſerue for the Ring, and fitted the ſtocke accordingly. This done, thoſe who before derided the inuention, were of opinion, that it would ſerue for need; onely they put one difficultie, that with the fall or pitch of the Anchor in hard ground, with his waight he would cut the Halſer in ſunder on the head; for preuention whereof, we placed a panch (as the Mariners terme it) vpon the head of the Anchor, with whoſe ſoftneſſe this danger was preuented, and the Anchor paſt for ſeruiceable.

Entertainment of time to auoid idleneſſe.

A kind of hot Spice in the Straits.

In gathering of Winters Barke.

Some of our idle time we ſpent in gathering the barke and fruit of a certaine Tree, which we found in all places of the Straits, where we found Trees. This Tree carrieth his fruit in cluſters like a Hawthorne, but that it is greene, each berry of the bigneſſe of a Pepper-corne, and euery of them contayning within foure or fiue granes, twice as bigge as a Muſtard-ſeed, which broken, are white within, as the good Pepper, and bits much like it, but hotter. The barke of this Tree, hath the ſauour of all kinde of Spices together, moſt comfortable to the ſtomack, and held to bee better then any Spice whatſoer. And for that a learned Countriman of ours Doctor Turner, hath written of it, by the name of Winters Barke, what I haue ſaid may ſuffice. The leafe of this Tree is of a whitiſh greene, and is not vnlike to the Aſpen leafe.

Of Pearles in the Straits.

Diſcourſe of Pearles how they breed.

Otherwhiles we entertained our ſelues in gathering of Pearles out of Muſcles, whereof there are abundance in all places, from Cape Froward, to the end of the Straits. The Pearles are but of a bad colour, and ſmall, but it may be that in the great Muſcles in deeper water, the Pearles are bigger, and of greater value, of the ſmall ſeed Pearle, there was great quantitie, and the Muſcles were a great refreſhing vnto vs: for they were exceeding good, and in great plentie. And here let mee craue pardon if I erre, ſeeing I diſclaime from being a Naturaliſt, by deliuering my opinion touching the breeding of theſe Pearles, which I thinke to be of a farre different nature and qualitie to thoſe found in the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, which are found in Oyſters, growing in the ſhell, vnder the ruffe of the Oyſter, ſome ſay of the dew, which I hold to be ſome old Philoſophers conceit, for that it cannot be made probable, how the dew ſhould come into the Oyſter: and if this were true, then, queſtionleſſe, we ſhould haue them in our Oyſters, as in thoſe of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies: but thoſe Oyſters were by the Creator, made to bring forth this rare fruit, all their ſhels being (to looke to) Pearle it ſelfe. And the other Pearles found in our Oyſters and Muſcles, in diuers parts are ingendred out of the fatneſſe of the fiſh, in the very ſubſtance of the fiſh, ſo that in ſome Muſcles haue bin found twentie and thirtie, in ſeuerall parts of the fiſh, and theſe not perfect in colour, nor cleerneſſe, as thoſe found in the Pearle-oyſters, which are euer perfect in colour and cleerneſſe, like the Sunne in his riſing, and therefore called Orientall, and not (as is ſuppoſed) becauſe out of the Eaſt, for they are as well found in the Weſt, and no way inferiour to thoſe of the Eaſt Indies. Other fiſh, beſides Seales and Crabbes, like Shrimpes, and one Whale with two or three Porpuſſes, we ſaw not in all the Straits.

Preuention of Rats.

Heere wee made alſo a ſuruay of our victuals, and opening certaine Barrels of Oatten meale, wee found a great part of ſome of them, as alſo of our Pipes and Fats of bread, eaten and conſumed by the Rats; doubtleſſe, a fift part my company did not eate ſo much, as theſe deuoured, as we found daily in comming to ſpend any of our prouiſions. When I came to the Sea, it was not ſuſpected, that I had a Rat in my ſhip; but with the bread in Caske, which wee tranſported out of the Hawke, and the going to and againe of our Boats vnto our prize, (though wee had diuers Cats and vſed other preuentions) in a ſmall time they multiplyed in ſuch a manner, is incredible; It is one of the generall calamities of all long Voyages, and would bee carefully preuented, as much as may be. For beſides that which they conſume of the beſt victuals, they eate the ſayles; and neither packe, nor cheſt, is free from their ſurprizes. I haue knowne them to make make a hole in a Pipe of water, and seying the Pumpe, haue put all in feare, doubting lest some leak had bin sprung vpon the ship. Moreouer, I haue heard credible persons report, that ships haue beene put in danger by them to be sunke, by a hole made in the bulge. All which is easily remedied at the first, but if once they be somewhat increased, with difficultie they are to be destroied. And although I propounded a reward for euery Rat which was taken, and sought meanes by poison, and other industrious deuises to consume them, yet their increase being so ordinary and many; wee were not able to cleare our selues from them. The calamities they bring to a ship.

At the end of fourteene dayes, one euening being calme, and a goodly cleare in the Easterboord, I willed our Anchor to be weyed, and determined to goe into the Channell, being gotten into the Channell, within an houre, the wind came good, and we sailed merrily on our Voyage; and by the breake of the day, we had the mouth of the Straits open, and about foure of the clock in the afternoone, we were thwart of Cape Desire; which is the Westermost part of the Land on the Souther side of the Straits. Backwardnes in the company. Cape Desire.

§. IIII.

Entrance into the South Sea; discouery of the South parts of the Straits to bee but Ilands by Sir FRANCIS DRAKE (which the Hollanders ascribe to MAIRE and SCHOVTEN.) Of the Iland Mocha, and the parts adioyning.

FRom Cape Desire, some foure leagues Northwest, lie foure Ilands, which are very small, and the middlemost of them is of the fashion of a Sugar-loafe. Wee were no sooner cleere of Cape Desire, and his ledge of Rockes (which lie a great way off into the Sea) but the wind tooke vs contrary by the North-west; and so wee stood off into the Sea two dayes and two nights to the Westwards. In all the Straits it ebbeth and floweth more or lesse, and in many places it hieth very little water, but in some Bayes, where are great Indraughes, it highteth eight or ten foot, and doubtlesse, further in, more. South part of the Straits Ilands. The Hollanders challenge the discouery of new Straits by Maire and Schouten before twice sailed about by Sir F. Drake. See sup. the Preface to the second Chapter of lib. 3. Sir F. Drake imbraceth the Southermost point of the World. Since this, in that Voiage wherein W. Adams was Pilot (whose voiage and Seb. Wertes ye haue in the former Tome) Theodore Gerards one of that fleet, was caried by tempest, as they write to 64. degrees South, in which height the country was mountainous & couered with snow, looking like Norway. It seemed to extend towards the Ilands of Salomon. Simon de Cordes another of that fleet after prosperous successe in Chili, was taken by the Portugals at the Molucas, and caried to Malaca prisoner. Mocha, Baldivia and Conception wonne from the Spaniards by the Indians. Beefe kept most safely in Pickell.

If a man be furnished with wood and water, and the winde good, hee may keepe the Mayne Sea, and goe round about the Straits to the Southwards, and it is the shorter way; for besides the experience which we made, that all the South part of the Straits is but Ilands, many times hauing the Sea open, I remember, that Sir Francis Drake told mee, that hauing shot the Straits, a storme tooke him first at North-west, and after vered about to the South-west, which continued with him many dayes, with that extremitie, that he could not open any sayle, and that at the end of the storme, he found himselfe in fiftie degrees, which was sufficient testimony and proofe, that he was beaten round about the Straits, for the least height of the Straits is in fiftie two degrees and fiftie minutes; in which stand the two entrances or mouthes. And moreouer, hee said, that standing about, when the winde changed, hee was not well able to double the Southermost Iland, and so anchored vnder the lee of it; and going ashoare, carried a Compasse with him, and seeking out the Southermost part of the Iland, cast himselfe downe vpon the vttermost point groueling, and so reached out his bodie ouer it. Presently he imbarked, and then recounted vnto his people, that he had beene vpon the Southermost knowne Land in the World, and more further to the Southwards vpon it, then any of them, yea, or any man as yet knowne. These testimonies may suffice for this truth vnto all, but such as are incredulous, and will beleeue nothing but what they see; for my part, I am of opinion, that the Straite is nauigable all the yeere long, although the best time bee in Nouember, December, and Ianuary, and then the windes more fauourable, which other times are variable, as in all narrow Seas.

Being some fiftie leagues a Sea-boord the Straits, the winde vering to the West-wards, wee cast about to the Northwards; and lying the Coast along, shaped our course for the Iland Mocha. About the fifteenth of Aprill, we were thwart of Baldivia, which was then in the hands of the Spaniards, but since the Indians, in Anno 1599. dispossessed them of it, and the Conception; which are two of the most principall places they had in that Kingdome, and both Ports. Baldivia had its name of a Spanish Captaine so called, whom afterwards the Indians tooke Prisoner, and it is said, they required of him the reason why hee came to molest them, and to take their Countrey from them, hauing no title nor right thereunto; he answered, to get Gold; which the barbarous vnderstanding, caused Gold to bee molten, and powred downe his throate, saying, Gold was thy desire, glut thee with it. It standeth in forty degrees, hath a pleasant Riuer and Nauigable; for a Ship of good burthen may goe as high vp as the Citie, and is a goodly Wood Countrey.

Heere our Beefe began to take end, and was then as good, as the day wee departed from England; it was preserued in Pickell, which, though it bee more chargeable, yet the profit payeth the charge, in that it is made durable, contrary to the opinion of many, which hold it impossible, that Beefe should be kept good passing the Equinoctiall Line. And of our Porke I eate in the house of Don Beltran de Castro in Lima, neere foure yeeres olde, very good, preserued after the same manner, notwithstanding, it had lost his Pickle long before.

Some degrees before a man come to Baldivia to the Southwards, as Spaniards haue told mee, lyeth the Iland Chule, not easily to be discerned from the Mayne; for he that passeth by it, cannot but thinke it to bee the Mayne. It is said to bee inhabited by the Spaniards, but badly, yet rich of Gold.

Iland Chule.

The nineteenth of Aprill, being Easter-euen, we anchored vnder the Iland Mocha. It lyeth in thirty nine degrees, it may bee some foure leagues ouer, and is a high mountaynous Hill, but round about the foot thereof, some halfe league from the Sea-shore, it is Champaine ground, wel inhabited and manured. From the Straits to this Iland, we found, that either the Coast is set out more Westerly then it is, or that we had a great current, which put vs to the Westwards; for wee had not sight of Land in three dayes after our reckoning was to see it; but for that wee coasted not the Land, I cannot determine, whether it was caused by the current, or lying of the Land. But Spaniards which haue sayled alongst it, haue told me, that it is a bold and safe Coast, and reasonable sounding of it.

Iland Mocha.

Note.

In this Iland of Mocha we had communication and contraction with the Inhabitants; but with great vigilancie and care; for they and all the people of Chily, are mortall enemies to the Spaniards, and held vs to bee of them, and so esteemed Sir Francis Drake, when hee was in this Iland, which was the first Land also that hee touched on this Coast. They vsed him with so fine a treachery, that they possessed themselues of all the Oares in his Boat, sauing two, and in striuing to get them also, they slue, and hurt all his men; himselfe who had fewest wounds, had three, and two of them in the head. Two of his company which liued long after, had the one seuenteene; his name was Iohn Bruer, who afterward was Pilot with Master Candish; and the other aboue twentie, a Negro Seruant to Sir Francis Drake. And with me they vsed a policie, which amongst barbarous people was not to be imagined, although I wrought sure; for I suffered none to treate with me, nor with my people with Armes. Wee were armed, and met vpon a Rocke compassed with water, whether they came to parley and negotiate. Being in communication with the Casiques, and others, many of the Indians came to the heads of our Boates, and some went into them. Certaine of my people standing to defend the Boats with their Oares, for that there went a bad sege, were forced to lay downe their Muskets; which the Indians perceiuing, endeauoured to fill the barrels with water, taking it out of the Sea in the hollow of their hands. By chance casting mine eye aside, I discouered their slyneſſe; and with a Truncheon, which I had in mine hand, gaue the Indians three or foure good Lambeskinnes.

Treacherie of the Indians.

The sheepe of this Iland are great, good, and fat; I haue not tasted better Mutton any where. They were as ours, and doubtlesse of the breed of those, which the Spaniards brought into the Countrey. Of the sheepe of the Countrey, wee could by no meanes procure any one, although we saw of them, and vsed meanes to haue had of them.

Of Sheepe.

This Iland is situate in the Prouince of Arawca, and is held to bee peopled with the most valiant Nation in all Chily, though generally the Inhabitants of that Kingdome are very courragious. They are clothed after the manner of antiquitie, all of woollen; their Casiockes made like a Sacke, square, with two holes for the two armes, and one for the head; all open below, without lining or other art: but of them, some are most curiously woven, and in colours, and on both sides alike. Their houses are made round, in fashion like vnto our Pidgeon houses, with a louer in the top, to euacuate the smoake when they make fire. They brought vs a strange kinde of Tobacco, made into little cakes, like Pitch, of a bad smell, with holes through the middle, and so laced many vpon a string. The people of this Iland, as of all Chily, are of good stature, and well made, and of better countenance then those Indians which I haue seene in many parts. They are of good vnderstanding, and agilitie, and of great strength; Their weapons are Bowes, and Arrowes and Macanas, their Bowes short and strong, and their Arrowes of a small Reed, or Cane, three quarters of a yard long, with two Feathers, and headed with a flint-stone, which is loose, and hurting, the head remaineth in the wound, some are headed with bone, and some with hard wood, halfe burnt in the fire. We came betwixt the Iland and the Mayne; On the South-west part of the Iland lieth a great ledge of Rockes, which are dangerous; and it is good to be carefull how to come too neere the Iland on all parts.

Their apparel, and housing.

Strange Tobacco.

People of Chily

Their weapons

Immediatly when they discouered vs, both vpon the Iland and the Mayne, wee might see them make sundry great fires, which were to giue aduice to the rest of the people to bee in a readinesse: for they haue continuall and mortall warre with the Spaniards, and the shippes they see, they beleeue to be their Enemies. The Citie Imperiall lyeth ouer against this Iland, but eight or ten leagues into the Countrey: for all the Sea-coast from Baldivia, till thirtie sixe Degrees, the Indians haue now (in a manner) in their hands free from any Spaniards.

Their hate to the Spaniards.

Imperiall.

Hauing refreshed our selues well in this Iland, for that little time we stayed, which was some three dayes we set sayle with great ioy, and with a faire winde sayled alongst the Coast, and some ſome eight leagues to the North-wards, wee anchored againe in a goodly Bay, and ſent our Boats aſhoare, with deſire to ſpeake with ſome of the Indians of Arauca, and to ſee if they would be content to entertaine amitie, or to chop and change with vs. But all that night and the next morning appeared not one perſon, and ſo we ſet ſaile againe; and towards the Euening the wind began to change, and to blow contrary, and that ſo much, and the Sea to riſe ſo ſuddenly, that wee could not take in our Boats, without ſpoyling of them. This ſtorme continued with vs tenne dayes beyond expectation, for that wee thought our ſelues out of the Climate of fowle weather, but truely it was one of the ſharpeſt ſtormes that euer I felt to endure ſo long.

A cruel ſtorme in the Sea of Ladies. In it they loſt their light horſman Saint Maries.

The ſtorme tooke end, and we ſhaped our courſe for the Iland of Saint Maries, which lyeth in thirtie ſeuen degrees and fortie minutes, and before you come vnto the Iland ſome two leagues, in the Trade way lieth a Rocke, which afarre off, ſeemeth to be a ſhip vnder ſayle. This Iland is little and low, but fertill and well peopled with Indians and ſome few Spaniards in it. Some ten leagues to the Northwards of this Iland, lieth the Citie Conception, with a good Port; from this wee coaſted alongſt till wee came in thirtie three degrees and forty minutes. In which height lay the Ilands of Iuan Fernandes, betwixt threeſcore and foureſcore leagues from the ſhoare, plentifull of fiſh, and good for refreſhing. I purpoſed for many reaſons not to diſcouer my ſelfe vpon this Coaſt, till we were paſt Lyma, (otherwiſe called Ciudad de los Reyes, for that it was entred by the Spaniard the day of the three Kings;) but my company vrged me ſo farre, that except I ſhould ſeeme in all things to ouer-beare them, in not condiſcending to that which in the opinion of all (but my ſelfe) ſeemed profitable and beſt, I could not but yeeld vnto, though it carried a falſe colour, as the end prooued, for it was our perdition. This all my company knoweth to be true, whereof ſome are yet liuing, and can giue teſtimonie.

Good to auoid diſcouery.

But the Mariner is ordinarily ſo carried away with the deſire of Pillage, as ſometimes for very appearances of ſmall moment, he looſeth his Voyage, and many times himſelfe. And ſo the greedineſſe of ſpoile, onely hoped for in ſhips of Trade, which goe too and fro in this Coaſt, blinded them from forecaſting the perill, whereinto wee expoſed our Voyage, in diſcouering our ſelues before we paſt the Coaſt of Callao, which is the Port of Lyma; To bee ſhort, wee haled the Coaſt aboord, and that Euening wee diſcouered the Port of Valparizo, which ſerueth the Citie of Saint Iago, ſtanding ſome twentie leagues into the Countrey; when preſently wee deſcried foure ſhippes at an Anchor: whereupon wee manned, and armed our Boate, which rowed towards the ſhippes: they ſeeing vs turning in, and fearing that which was, ranne aſhoare with that little they could ſaue; and left vs the reſt: whereof, wee were Maſters in a moment, and had the rifling of all the Store-houſes on the ſhoare.

Wilfulneſſe of Mariners.

They ſeize vpon foure ſhips.

This night, I ſet a good guard in all the ſhippes, longing to ſee the light of the next morning, to put all things in order; which appearing, I beganne to ſuruay them, and found nothing of moment, ſaue fiue hundred Botozios of Wine, two or three thouſand of Hennes, and ſome refreſhing of Bread, Bacon, dryed Beefe, Waxe, Candles, and other neceſſaries. The reſt of their lading was plankes, Sparres, and Timber, for Lyma, and the Valleyes, which is a rich Trade; for it hath no Timber, but that which is brought to it from other places. They had alſo many packs of Indian Mantles (but of no value vnto vs) with much Tallow, and Manteca de Puerco, and abundance of great new Cheſts, in which we had thought to bee ſome great maſſe of wealth, but opening them, found nothing but Apples therein; all which was good Merchandize in Lyma, but to vs of ſmal account. The Merchandize on ſhore, in their ſtore-houſes was the like, and therefore in the ſame predicament. The Owners of the ſhips gaue vs to vnderſtand, that at a reaſonable price they would redeeme their ſhips and loading, which I harkened vnto; and ſo admitted certaine perſons which might treate of the matter, and concluded with them for a ſmall price, rather then to burne them, ſauing for the greateſt, which I carried with me, more to giue ſatisfaction to my people, then for any other reſpect; becauſe they would not be perſwaded, but that there was much Gold hidden in her; otherwiſe ſhe would haue yeelded vs more then the other three.

And the Ware-houſes.

Being in this Treaty, one morning, at the breake of day, came another ſhip towring into the harbor, and ſtanding into the ſhoare, but was becalmed. Againſt her we manned a couple of Boats, and tooke her before many houres. In this ſhip we had ſome good quantitie of Gold, which ſhee had gathered in Baldinia, and the Conception, from whence ſhee came. Of this ſhip was Pilot, and part owner, Alonſo Perez bueno, whom we kept for our Pilot on this Coaſt; till moued with compaſſion (for that he was a man charged with wife and children) we ſet him aſhoare betwixt Santa and Truxillo. Out of this ſhip we had alſo ſtore of good Bacon, and ſome prouiſion of Bread, Hens, and other victuall. We gaue them the ſhip, and the greateſt part of her loading freely.

They ſeize vpon another ſhip, and ſome gold.

Here wee ſupplied our want of Anchors, though not according to that which was requiſite, in regard of the burden of our ſhip; for in the South Sea, the greateſt Anchor for a ſhip of ſixe or eight hundred tunnes, is not a thouſand waight; partly, becauſe it is little ſubiect to ſtormes, and partly, becauſe thoſe they had till our comming, were all brought out of the North Sea by Land; for they make no Anchors in those Countreyes. And the first Artillerie they had, was also brought ouer Land; which was small, the carriage and passage from Nombre de Dios, or Porto Bello to Panama, being most difficult and steepe, vp hill and downe hill, they are all carried vpon Negroes backes. But some yeeres before my imprisonment, they fell to making of Artillery, and since they forge Anchors also. We furnished our ship also with a shift of sailes of Cotton-cloth, which are farre better in that Sea, then any of our double sayles, for that in all the Nauigation of that Sea, they haue little raine and few stormes, but where raine and stormes are ordinary, they are not good; for with the wet they grow so stiffe, that they cannot be handled.

And the first Artillerie.

Sayles of Cotton-cloth.

In treating of the ransomes, and transporting and lading the prouisions wee made choice of, wee spent some sixe or eight dayes, at the end whereof, with reputation amongst our enemies, and a good portion towards our charges and our ship as well stored and victualled, as the day we departed from England, we set sayle.

They depart from Lyma, and conceale their weaknes.

The time we were in this Port, I took small rest, and so did the Master of our ship, Hugh Cornish, a most carefull, orderly, and sufficient man, because wee knew our owne weakneſſe; for entring into the Harbour, wee had but seuentie fiue men and boyes, fiue ships to guard, and euery one moored by himselfe, which (no doubt) if our enemies had knowne, they would haue wrought some stratagem vpon vs; for the Gouernour of Chili was there on shoare in view of vs, an ancient Flanders Souldier, and of experience, wisdome, and valour, called Don Alonso de Soto Mayor, of the habit of Saint Iago, who was after Captaine Generall in Terra firme, and wrought all the inuentions vpon the Riuer of Chagres, and on the shoare, when Sir Francis Drake purposed to goe to Panama, in the Voyage wherein he died. As also at my comming into Spaine, hee was President in Panama, and there, and in Lyma, vsed mee with great courtesie, like a Noble Souldier, and liberall Gentleman; hee confessed to mee after, that hee lay in ambush, with three hundred horse and foot, to see if at any time we had landed, or neglected our watch, with Balsas, which is a certaine Raffe made of Masts or Trees fastened together, to haue attempted something against vs. But the enemy I feared not so much as the Wine; which, notwithstanding all the diligence and preuention I could vse day and night, ouerthrew many of my people. A foule fault, because too common amongst Sea-men, and destrueth some rigorous punishment with seueritie to be executed.

The noblenes of Alonso de Soto.

The enemy lesse dangerous then the Wine.

A league or better before a man discouer this Bay to the South-wards, lieth a great Rocke, or small Iland, neere the shoare, vnder which, for a need, a man may ride with his ship. It is a good marke, and sure signe of the Port, and discouering the Bay a man must giue a good birth to the Harbour; for it hath perillous Rockes lying a good distance off. It neither ebbeth nor floweth in this Port, nor from this, till a man come to Guayaquill, which is three degrees from the Equinoctiall Line to the South-wards; let this be considered. It is a good Harbour for all winds, that partake not of the North; for it runneth vp South and by West, and South South-west, but it hath much foule ground.

Description of the Bay.

Note of tides.

In one of these ships we found a new deuice for the stopping of a sudden leake in a ship vnder water, without board, when a man cannot come to it within board; which was, taking a round wicker Basket, and to fill it with pieces of a Iunke or Rope chopped very small, and of an inch long, and after tozed all as Oacombe; then the Basket is to bee couered with a Net, the Meshes of it being at the least two inches square, and after to be tied to a long Pike or Pole, which is to goe a crosse the Baskets mouth, and putting it vnder water, care is to be had to keepe the Baskets mouth towards the ships side: if the leake bee any thing great, the Oacombe may bee somewhat longer, and it carrieth likelihood to doe good, and seemeth to bee better then the stitching of a Bonnet; or any other diligence, which as yet I haue seene. Another thing I noted of these ships, which would be also vsed by vs, that euery ship carrieth with her a spare Rudder, and they haue them to hang and vnhang with great facilitie: and besides, in some part of the ship, they haue the length, breadth, and proportion of the Rudder marked out, for any mischance that may befall them; which is a very good preuention.

A new deuise for stopping a leake without boord.

Spare Rudders and to take off at pleasure.

Ten leagues to the Northwards of this Harbour, is the Bay of Quintera, where is good anchoring, but an open Bay; where Master Thomas Candish (for the good hee had done to a Spaniard, in bringing him out of the Straits of Magellan, where, otherwise, hee had perished with his company) was by him betrayed, and a doozen of his men taken and slaine: But the iudgement of God left not his ingratiude vnpunished; for, in the fight with vs, in the Vice-admirall, he was wounded and maymed in that manner, as three yeeres after, I saw him begge with crutches; and in that miserable estate, as he had beene better dead, then aliue.

Bay of Quintera.

Ingratitude punished.

From Balparizo, wee sayled directly to Coquinbo, which is in thirtie degrees, and comming thwart the place, we were becalmed, and had sight of a ship: but for that she was farre off, and night at hand, she got from vs, and we hauing winde entred the Port, thinking to haue had some shipping in it; but we lost our labour: and for that the Towne was halfe a league vp in the Countrey, and we not manned for any matter of attempt, worthy prosecution, we made no abode on the shoare; but presently set sayle for the Peru. This is the best Harbour that I haue seene in the South Sea, it is land-locked for all winds, and capeable of many shippes; but the ordinary place where where the ſhips lade, and vnlade, and accommodate themſelues, is betwixt a Rocke, and the Mayne on the Weſter ſide, ſome halfe a league vp within the entrance of the Port, which lieth South, and South and by Eaſt, and North and by Weſt. In the in-countrie, directly ouer the Port, is a round piked hill, like a Sugar loafe, and before the entrance on the Southerne point of the Port comming in, out of the Sea, is a great Rocke, a good birth from the ſhoare; and theſe are the markes of the Port, as I remember.

Being cleare of this Port, we ſhaped our courſe for Arica, and left the Kingdomes of Chily, one of the beſt Countries that the Sun ſhineth on: for it is of a temperate climate, and abounding in all things neceſſarie for the vſe of man, with infinite rich Mynes of Gold, Copper, and ſundry other mettals. The pooreſt houſes in it, by report of their Inhabitants, haue of their owne ſtore, Bread, Wine, Fleſh, and Fruit; which is ſo plentifull, that of their ſuperfluitie they ſupplie other parts: ſundrie kindes of cattell; as Horſes, Goates, and Oxen brought thither by the Spaniards, are found in heards of thouſands, wilde, and without owner; beſides thoſe of the Countrie, which are common to moſt parts of America: in ſome of which are found the Bezar ſtones, and thoſe very good and great.

Arica in Chili much commended.

For all ſorts of fruits.

Amongſt others they haue little beaſts, like vnto a Squirrell, but that hee is grey, his skinne is the moſt delicate ſoft, and curious Furre that I haue ſeene of much eſtimation, (as is reaſon) in the Peru; few of them come into Spaine, becauſe difficult to be come by, for that the Princes and Nobles lay waite for them, they call this beaſt Chinchilla, and of them they haue great abundance. All fruits of Spaine, they haue in great plentie, ſauing ſtone fruit, and Almonds: for in no part of the Indies, haue I knowne, that Plummes, Cherries, or Almonds haue borne fruit: but they haue certaine little round Cocos, as thoſe of Braſil, of the bigneſſe of a Wall-nut, which is as good as an Almond: beſides, it hath moſt of the fruits naturall to America. The Gold they gather, is in two manners; the one is waſhing the earth in great Trayes of wood in many waters; as the earth waſteth away, the Gold in the bottome remaineth. The other is, by force of Art, to draw it out of the Mynes, in which they finde it. In moſt parts of the Countrie, the earth is mingled with Gold; for the Butizias (in which the Wine was) which wee found in Balpharizo, had many ſparkes of Gold ſhining in them. Of it the Gold-ſmiths I carried with me (for like purpoſes) made experience.

Chinchilla a rare beaſt.

Litle Cocos.

And plentie of Gold.

When Baldivia and Arawca were peaceable, they yeelded greateſt plentie, and the beſt: but now, their greateſt Mynes are in Coquimbo; as alſo the Mynes of Copper, which they carrie to the Peru, and ſell it better cheape, then it is ordinarily ſold in Spaine. The Indians knowing the end of the Spaniards moleſtation, to be principally the deſire of their riches, haue enacted, that no man, vpon paine of death, doe gather any Gold. In Coquimbo it raineth ſeldome, but euery ſhowre of raine, is a ſhowre of Gold vnto them; for with the violence of the water falling from the Mountaines, it bringeth from them the Gold: and beſides, giues them water to waſh it out, as alſo for their ingenious to worke; ſo that ordinarily euery weeke they haue Proceſſions for raine.

The Indians forbid the ſearch of gold. Euery ſhowre, a ſhowre of gold.

In this Kingdome they make much linnen and woollen Cloth, and great ſtore of Indian Mantles, with which they furniſh other parts, but all is coarſe ſtuffe. It hath no Silke, nor Iron, except in Mynes, and thoſe as yet not diſcouered. Pewter is well eſteemed, and ſo are fine linnen, woollen cloth, Haberdaſhers wares, edge-tooles, and Armes, or Munition. It hath his Gouernour, and Audiencia, with two Biſhops: the one of Saint Iago, the other of the Imperiall; all vnder the Vice-roy, Audiencia, and Primate of Lyma. Saint Iago is the Metropolitan and Head of the Kingdome, and the ſeate of Iuſtice, which hath his appellation of Lyma.

Linnen and woollen cloth made in Coquimbo.

The people are induſtrious and ingenious, of great ſtrength, and inuincible courage; as in the warres, which they haue ſuſtained aboue fortie yeeres continually againſt the Spaniards, hath beene experienced. For confirmation whereof, I will alledge onely two proofes of many; the one was of an Indian Captaine, taken priſoner by the Spaniards; and for that, hee was of name and knowne to haue done his deuoire againſt them, they cut off his hands, thereby intending to diſenable him to fight any more againſt them: but he returning home, deſirous to reuenge this iniurie, to maintain his liberty, with the reputation of his nation, and to helpe to baniſh the Span. with his tongue intreated & incited them to perſeuere in their accuſtomed valor and reputation abaſing the enemie, and aduancing his Nation; condemning their contraries cowardlineſſe, and confirming it by the cruelty vſed with him, and others his companions in their miſhaps; ſhewing them his armes without hands, & naming his brethren, whoſe halfe feet they had cut off, becauſe they might be vnable to ſit on horſebacke with force, arguing, that if they feared them not, they would not haue vſed ſo great inhumanitie; for feare produceth crueltie, the companion of cowardiſe. Thus encouraged he them to fight for their liues, limbes, and libertie, chooſing rather to die an honourable death fighting, then to liue in ſeruitude, as fruitleſſe members in their Common-wealth. Thus, vſing the office of a Sergeant Maior, and hauing loden his two ſtumpes with bundles of Arrowes, ſuccoured thoſe, who in the ſucceeding battell had their ſtore waſted, and changing himſelfe from place to place, animated and encouraged his Countri-men, with ſuch comfortable perſwaſions, as it is reported, and credibly beleeued, that hee did much more good with his words, and presence, without striking a stroke, then a great part of the Armie did with fighting to the vtmost.

The other proofe is, that such of them as fight on horsebacke, are but slightly armed, for that their Armour is a Beasts hide, fitted to their body, greene, and after worne till it be drie and hard. He that is best armed, hath him double: yet any one of them with these Armes, and with his Launce, will fight hand to hand with any Spaniard armed from head to foot. And it is credibly reported, that an Indian being wounded through the bodie by a Spaniards Launce, with his own hands hath crept on vpon the Launce, and come to grapple with his Aduersarie, and both fallen to the ground together. By which is seene their resolution and inuincible courage, and the desire they haue to maintayne their reputation and libertie.

The mischiefe of corrupt, or scarcie prouisions

This let me manifest, that there haue beene and are certaine persons, who before they goe to Sea, either robbe part of the prouisions, or in the buying, make penurious, vnwholsome, and smartlesse penie-worths; and the last I hold to be the least; for they robbe onely the Victuallers and owners, but the others steale from owners, victuallers, and companie, and are many times the onely ouerthrowers of the Voyage, for the companie thinking themselues to be stored with foure or sixe moneths Victuals, vpon surmay, they finde their Bread, Beefe or Drinke short; yea, perhaps all, and so are forced to seeke home in time of best hopes and employment. This mischiefe is most ordinarie in great actions. Lastly, some are so cunning, that they not onely make their Voyage by robbing before they goe to Sea, but of that also which commeth home. Such Gamesters, a wise man of our Nation resembled to the Mill on the Riuer of Thames, for grinding both with flood and ebbe: So, these at their going out, and comming home, will be sure to robbe all others of their shares.

Of detayning and defrauding of wages.

But the greatest and most principall robberie of all, in my opinion, is the defrauding or the detayning of the Companies thirds or wages, accursed by the iust God, who forbiddeth the hire of the labourer to sleep with vs. To such I speake, as either abuse themselues in detayning it; or else to such as force the poore man to sell it at vile and lowe prices: And lastly, to such as vpon fained cauils and suits, doe deterre the simple and ignorant sort from their due prosecutions: which being too much in vse amongst vs, hath bred in those that follow the Sea a iealousie in all employments, and many times causeth mutinies and infinite inconueniences. To preuent this, a Chest with three lockes was appointed: I kept one, the Master another, the third one chosen by the Companie.

Of Mariners by challenge of Pillage.

No lesse worthie reformation are the generall abuses of Mariners and Souldiers, who robbe all they can, vnder the colour of Pillage, and after make Ordnance, Cables, Sayles, Anchors, and all aboue Deckes to belong vnto them of right, whether they goe by thirds or wages: this proceedeth from those pilfering warres, wherein euery Gallant that can arme out a Ship, taketh vpon him the name and office of a Captaine, not knowing what to commaund, or what to execute. Such Commanders for the most part consort and ioyne vnto themselues disorderly persons, Pirates, and Ruffians, vnder the title of men of valour and experience: they meeting with any Prize, make all vpon the Deckes theirs of dutie, &c.

The lawes of Oleron, concerning Pillage.

In the time of warre in our Countrie, as also in others, by the lawes of Oleron (which to our ancient Sea-men were fundamentall) nothing is allowed for Pillage but Apparell, Armes, Instruments, and other necessaries belonging to the persons, in that ship which is taken: and these to, when the ship is gained by dint of sword; with a prouiso, that if any particular Pillage, exceed the value of sixe crownes, it may be redeemed for that value, by the generall stocke, and sold for the common benefit. If the prize render it selfe without forcible entrie, all in generall ought to be preserued and sold in masse, and so equally diuided; yea, though the ship be wonne by force and entrie, yet whatsoeuer belongeth to her of takling, Sayles, or Ordnance, is to be preserued for the generalitie: saying a Peece of Artillerrie for the Captaine; another for the Gunner, and a Cable and Anchor for the Master, which are the rights due vnto them; and these to be deliuered, when the ship is in safety, and in harbour, either vnloden or sold: which Law or Custome well considered, will rise to be more beneficiall for the Owners, Victuallers, and Companie, then the disorders newly crept in and before remembred. For the Sayles, Cables, Anchors, and Hull, being sold (euery one apart) yeeld not the one halfe which they would doe if they were sold all together, besides the excusing of charges, and robberies in the vnloding and parting.

In the warres of France, in the time of Queene Marie, and in other warres (as I haue heard of many ancient Captaines) the Companie had but the fourth part, and euery man bound to bring with him the Armes, with which he would fight: which in our time, I haue knowne also vsed in France: and if the Companie victualed themselues, they had then the one halfe, and the Owners the other halfe for the ship, powder, shot, and munition. If any Prize were taken, it was sold by the tunne, ship and goods, so as the loading permitted it; that the Merchant hauing bought the goods, hee might presently transport them whither soeuer he would: By this manner of proceeding, all rested contented, all being truly payd; for this was iust dealing, if any deserued reward, he was recompenced out of the generall stocke. If any one had filched or stolne, or committed offence, he had likewise his desert: and who once was knowne to be a disordered person, or a thiefe, no man would receiue him into his ship: whereas now a dayes many vaunt themselues of their thefts and disorders; yea, I haue seene the common sort of Mariners, vnder the name of pillage, maintaine and iustifie their robberies most insolently, before the Queens Maiesties Commissioners, with arrogant and vnseemly termes. Opinion hath held such for tall fellowes, when in truth, they neuer proue the best men in difficult occasions. For their mindes are all set on spoyle, and can be well contented to suffer their associates to beare the brunt, whilest they are prolling after pillage, the better to gaine and maintaine the aforesaid attributes, in Tauernes, and disorderly places. For the orderly and quiet men, I haue euer found in all occasions to be of best vse, most valiant, and of greatest sufficiency. Yet I condemne none: but those who will be reputed valiant, and are not, examine the accusation. All whatsoeuer is found vpon the Decke, going for Merchandise, is exempted out of the censure of pillage; Silkes, Linnen, or Woollen cloth in whole pieces, Apparell, that goeth to be sold, or other goods whatsoeuer (though they be in remnants) manifestly knowne to bee carried for that end; or being comprehended in the Register, or Bills of lading, are not to be contayned vnder the name of Pillage.

Note or brand rather for tal-tongued-fingred fellowes. What ought to be reputed pillage.

But as I haue said of the consort, so can I not but complaine of many Captaines and Gouernours, who ouercome with like greedy desire of gaine, condiscend to the smothering and suppressing of this ancient discipline, the cleanlier to smother their owne disloyalties, in suffering these breake-bulkes to escape, and absent themselues, till the heate be past, and partition made. Some of these cause the Bills of lading to be cast into the Sea, or so to be hidden, that they neuer appeare. Others send away their prisoners, who sometimes are more worth then the ship and her lading, because they should not discouer their secret stolne treasure: for many times, that which is left out of the Register or Bills of lading (with purpose to defraud the Prince of his Customes (in their conceits, held to be excessiue) is of much more value, then that which the ship and lading is worth. Yea, I haue knowne ships worth two hundred thousand pounds, and better, cleane swept of their principall riches, nothing but the bare bulke being left vnsacked. The like may be spoken, of that which the disorderly Mariner, and the Souldier termeth Pillage.

Against the disloyalties of Captaines.

Concealment; of much more value, then the Trading.

My Father, Sir Iohn Hawkins, in his instructions, in actions vnder his charge, had this particular Article: That whosoeuer rendred, or tooke any ship, should be bound to exhibite the Bills of lading; to keepe the Captaine, Master, Merchants, and persons of account, and to bring them to him to be examined, or into England: If they should bee by any accident separated from him, whatsoeuer was found wanting (the prisoners being examined) was to be made good by the Captaine and Companie, which tooke the ship, and this vpon great punishments.

The preuention of vndue pillagings.

Running alongst the coast, till wee came within few leagues of Arica, nothing happened vnto vs of extraordinarie noueltie or moment, for wee had the Breze fauourable, which seldome happeneth in this climate, finding our selues in 19. degrees, wee haled the shoare close aboord, purposing to see, if there were any shipping in the Road of Arica. It standeth in a great large Bay, in 18. degrees: and before you come to it, a league to the Southwards of the Road and Towne, is a great round Hill, higher then the rest of the land of the Bay, neere about the Towne: which we hauing discouered, had sight presently of a small Barque, close aboord the shoare becalmed; manning our Boat, wee tooke her, being loden with fish from Moormereno; which is a goodly head-land, very high, and lieth betwixt 24. and 25. degrees, and whether ordinarily some Barques vse to goe a fishing euery yeere.

Arica.

Moormereno.

In her was a Spaniard and sixe Indians; The Spaniard, for that he was neere the shoare, swam vnto the Rockes, and though we offered to returne him his barke, and fish (as was our meaning) yet he refused to accept it, and made vs answere, that he durst not, for feare lest the Iustice should punish him. In so great subiection are the poore vnto those who haue the administration of Iustice in those parts, and in most parts of the Kingdomes and Countries subiect to Spaine. Insomuch, that to heare the Iustice to enter in at their doores, is to them destruction and desolation: for this cause wee carried her alongst with vs. In this meane while, wee had sight of another tall ship, comming out of the Sea, which wee gaue chase vnto, but could not fetch vp, being too good of sayle for vs. Our small Prize and Boate standing off vnto vs, descried another shippe, which they chased and tooke also, loden with fish, comming from the Ilands of Iuan Fernandes.

The seuerities of Spaine.

After we opened the Bay and Port of Arica, but seeing it cleane without shipping, wee haled the coast alongst, and going aboord to visite the bigger Prize, my Companie saluted mee with a vollie of small shot. Amongst them one Musket brake, and carried away the hand of him that shot it, through his owne default, which for that I haue seene to happen many times, I thinke it necessary to note in this place, that others may take warning by his harme. The cause of the Muskets breaking, was the charging with two bullets, the powder being ordayned to carrie but the weight of one, and the Musket not to suffer two charges, of powder or shot. By this ouersight, the fire is restrained with the ouerplus of the weight of shot, and not being able to force both of them out, breaketh all to pieces, so to finde a way to its owne Centre.

Ouercharging of Artileries.

And I am of opinion, that it is a great errour, to proue great Ordnance, or small shot, with double charges of powder, or shot; my reason is, for that ordinarily the mettall is proportioned to the waight of the shot, which the Peece is to beare, and the powder correspondent to the waight of the bullet: and this being granted, I see no reason why any man should require to proue his peece with more, then is belonging to it of right: for I haue seene many goodly peeces broken with such trials, being cleane without hony combes, cracke, flawe, or other perceauable blemish, which no doubt, with their ordinary allowance would haue serued many yeares. If I should make choice for my selfe, I would not willingly, that any peece should come into Fort, or ſhip (vnder my charge) which had borne at any time more then his ordinary allowance, miſdoubting, leaſt through the violence of the double charge, the Peece may be craſed within, or ſo forced, as at another occaſion, with his ordinary allowance he might breake in peeces: how many men ſo many mindes: for to others, this may ſeeme harſh, for that the contrary cuſtome hath ſo long time beene receiued, and therefore I ſubmit to better experience, and contradict not but that in a demy culuering, a man may put two Saker or Minion ſhots, or many of ſmaller waight: and ſo in a Musket, two Calieuer ſhot, or many ſmaller, ſo they exceede not the ordinary waight, preſcribed by proportion, art, and experience.

or

The amity of the Indians.

Hauing viſited our prizes, and finding in them nothing but fiſh, we tooke a ſmall portion for our victualling, and gaue the bigger Ship to the Spaniards againe, and the leſſer wee kept with purpoſe to make her our Pinnace. The Indians (which we tooke in her) would by no meanes depart from vs, but deſired to goe with vs for England, ſaying that the Indians and Engliſh were brothers; and in all places where wee came, they ſhewed themſelues much affectionated vnto vs. Theſe were Natiues of Moremorene, and the moſt brutiſh of all that euer I had ſeene: and except it were in forme of men and ſpeech, they ſeemed altogether voide of that which appertained to reaſonable men. They were expert ſwimmers, but after the manner of Spaniels, they diue, and abide vnder water a long time, and ſwallow the water of the Sea, as if it were of a freſh Riuer, except a man ſee them, he would hardly beleeue how they continue in the Sea, as if they were Mermaides, and the water their naturall Element. Their Countrie is moſt barren, and poore of foode: if they take a fiſh aliue out of the Sea, or meete with a peece of ſalted fiſh, they will deuoure it without any dreſſing, as ſauourly as if it had beene moſt curiouſly ſodden or dreſſed, all which makes me beleeue, that they ſuſtaine themſelues of that which they catch in the Sea. The Spaniards profit themſelues of their labour and trauell, and recompence them badly, they are in worſe condition then their ſlaues, for to thoſe they giue ſuſtenance, houſe-roome, and clothing, and teach them the knowledge of God; but the other they vſe as beaſts, to doe their labour without wages, or care of their bodies or ſoules.

Their rude manners and expert ſwimming.

§. V.

The Viceroy ſends an Armado againſt the Engliſh; which viewes them and returneth: is againe ſet forth: their fight; the Engliſh yeelde vpon compoſition: Diuers martiall diſcourſes.

Bay of Piſco. Cape Sangalean

BY generall accord we eaſed our ſelues of a leake priſe, and continued our courſe alongſt the coaſt, till we came thwart of the Bay of Piſco, which lyeth within 15. degrees and 15. minutes. Preſently after we were cleare of Cape Sangalean, and his Ilands, we ranged this Bay with our Boate and Pinnace. It hath two ſmall Ilands in it, but without fruite, and being becalmed, we anchored two dayes thwart of Chilca.

Chilca.

Aduiſe giuen by Sea and Land.

By Sea and by Land, thoſe of Clyly had giuen aduiſe to Don Garcia Hurtado de Mendoca, Marquis of Canete, Vice-roy of Peru, reſident in Lima, of our being on the Coaſt. He preſently with all poſſible diligence, put out ſix Ships in warlike order, with well neere two thouſand men, and diſpatched them to ſeeke vs, and to fight with vs, vnder the conduct of Don Beltrian de Caſtro Ydelaluca, his wiues brother; who departing out of the Port of Callao, turned to wind-ward, in ſight ouer the ſhore, from whence they had daily intelligence, where wee had beene diſcouered. And the next day after our departure out of Chilca, about the middle of May, at breake of day, we had ſight each of other, thwart of Canete, we being to wind-wards of the Spaniſh Armado, ſome two leagues, and all with little or no winde. Our Pinnace or prize being furniſhed with Oares came vnto vs, out of which we thought to haue taken our men, and ſo to leaue her; but being able to come vnto vs at all times, it was held for better, to keepe her till neceſſitie forced vs to leaue her: and ſo it was determined, that if we came to likelihood of boording, ſhe ſhould lay our Boate aboord, and enter all her men, and from thence to enter our Ship, and ſo to forſake her: Although by the euent in that occaſion, this proued good, notwithſtanding I hold it to be reproued, where the enemy is farre ſuperiour in multitude and force, and able to come and boord, if he liſt: and that the ſureſt courſe, is to fortifie the principall, and the beſt that may be, and to cut off all impediments, where a man is forced to defence; for that no man is aſſured to haue time anſwerable to his purpoſe and will, and vpon doubt whether the others in hope to ſaue themſelues, will not leaue him in greateſt extremitie.

We preſently put our ſelues in the beſt order we could, to fight, and to defend our ſelues: our prayers we made vnto the Lord God of battels, for his helpe and our deliuerance, putting our ſelues wholly into his hands. About nine of the clocke, the Breſe began to blow, and wee to ſtand off into the Sea, the Spaniards cheeke by iole with vs, euer getting to the wind-wards vpon vs; for that the ſhipping of the South Sea, is euer moulded ſharpe vnder water, and long; all all their voyages depending vpon turning to wind-wards, and the Breese blowing euer Southerly.

As the Sunne began to mount aloft, the winde began to fresh: which together with the rowling Sea, that euer beateth vpon this coast, comming out of the westerne-board, caused a chapping Sea, wherewith the Admirall of the Spaniards snapt his maine Mast asunder, and so began to lagge a sterne, and with him, other two Ships. The Vice-admirall split her maine-saile, being come within shot of vs vpon our broad side, but to lee-wards: the Reare-admirall cracked her maine-yard asunder in the middest, being a head of vs: one of the Armado, which had gotten vpon the broad side of vs, to wind-wards, durst not assault vs.

With these disgraces vpon them, and the hand of God helping and deliuering vs, night comming, we began to consult what course was best to be taken, to free our selues; wherein were diuers opinions: some said it was best to stand off to the Sea close by, all the night: others to lye it a bull: others to cast about to the shoare-wards two glasses, and after all the night to stand off to Sea close by. The Admirall of the Spaniards with the other two were a sterne of vs, some foure leagues: the Vice-admirall a mile right to lee-wards of vs: the Reare-admirall in a manner right a head, some culuering shot; and one vpon our loofe, within shot also, the Moone was to rise within two houres. After much debating, it was concluded, that we should beare vp before the winde, and seeke to escape betwixt the Admirall and the Vice-admirall, which we put in execution, not knowing of any other disgrace befallen them, but that of the Reare-admirall: till after our surrender, when they recounted vnto vs all that had past. In the morning at breake of day, we were cleare of all our Enemies, and so shaped our course alongst the Coast, for the Bay of Atacames, where we purposed to trim our Pinnace, and to renew our wood and water, and so to depart vpon our Voyage with all possible speede.

The Spanish Armado, returned presently to Callao, which is the Port of Lyma, or of the Citie of the Kings. It was first named Lyma, and retaineth also that name of the Riuer, which passeth by the Citie called Lyma, the Spanish Armado being entred the Port, the people began to goe ashore, where they were so mocked and scorned by the women, as scarce any one by day would shew his face, they reuiled them with the name of cowards and golnias, and craued licence of the Vice-roy to be admitted into their roomes, and to vndertake the surrendry of the English Shippe. I haue beene certified for truth, that some of them affronted their Souldiers with Daggers and Pistols by their sides. This wrought such effects in the hearts of the disgraced, as they vowed either to recouer their reputation lost, or to follow vs into England, and so with expedition, the Vice-roy commanded two Shippes and a Pinnace to be put in order, and in them placed the chiefe Souldiers and Marriners of the rest, and furnished them with victuals and munition.

Returne of the Spanish Armado.

Scoffed at.

The foresaid Generall is once againe dispatched to seeke vs; who ranged the Coasts and Ports, enforming himselfe what he could: Some fiftie leagues to the North-wards of Lyma, in sight of Mongon, we tooke a Ship halfe loaden with Wheate, Sugar, Miell de Canas, and Cordouans kins: which for that she was leake, and sailed badly, and tackled in such manner (as the Marriners would not willingly put themselues into her) we tooke what was necessary for our prouision, and fired her. Thwart of Truxillo, wee set the company of her ashoare, with the Pilot which we had taken in Balparizo, reseruing the Pilot of the burnt Shippe, and a Greeke, who chose rather to continue with vs, then to hazard their liues in going ashore; for that they had departed out of the Port of Santa (which is in eight degrees) being required by the Iustice not to weigh anchor before the Coast was knowne to be cleare.

They set forth the second time.

It is a thing worthy to be noted, and almost incredible, with how few men they vse to saile a Shippe in the South Sea, for in this prise, which was aboue an hundred tunnes, were but eight persons: and in a Ship of three hundreth tuns, they vse not to put aboue foureteene or fifteene persons: yea I haue beene credibly enformed, that with foureteene persons, a Ship of fiue hundred tuns hath beene carried from Guayaquil to Lyma, deepe loaden: which is aboue two hundred leagues. They are forced euer to gaine their Voyage by turning to wind-wards, which is the greatest toyle and labour that the Marriners haue; and slow sometimes in this Voyage foure or fiue moneths, which is generall in all the Nauigations of this coast: but the security from stormes, and certainty of the Breese (with the desire to make their gaine the greater) is the cause that euery man forceth himselfe to the vttermost, to doe the labour of two men.

Few men vsed a Ship in the South Sea.

In the height of the Port of Santa, some seuen hundred and fiftie leagues to the West-wards, lye the Ilands of Salomon, of late yeares discouered. At my being in Lyma, a Fleete of foure saile was sent from thence to people them; which through the emulation and discord that arose amongst them, being landed and setled in the Countrey, was vtterly ouerthrowne, onely one Shippe, with some few of the people, after much misery, got to the Philippines. This I came to the knowledge of, by a large relation written from a person of credit, and sent from the Philippines to Panama: I saw it at my being there, in my voyage towards Spaine. Hauing edged neere the coast, to put the Spaniards on shore, a thicke fogge tooke vs, so that we could not see the land; but recouering our Pinnace and Boate, we sailed on our course, till wee came thwart of the Port called Malabrigo. It lieth in seuen degrees.

Port of Santa. Plantation of the Ilands of Salomon.

Malabrigo.

In

Current. In all this Coaſt the currant runneth with great force, but neuer keepeth any certaine courſe, ſauing that it runneth alongſt the coaſt, ſometimes to the South-wards, ſometimes to the North-wards, which now runneth to the North-wards, forced vs ſo farre into the Bay (which a point of the land cauſeth, that they call Punta de Auguſſa) as thinking to cleare our ſelues by rouing North-weſt, we could not double this point, making our way North North-weſt. Therefore ſpeciall care is euer to be had of the current: and doubtleſſe, if the prouidence of Almighty God had not freede vs, we had runne alhore vpon the Land, without ſeeing or ſuſpecting any ſuch danger; his name be euer exalted and magnified, for deliuering vs from the vnknowne danger, by calming the winde all night: the Suns riſing manifeſted vnto vs our errour and perill, by diſcouering vnto vs the land within two leagues right a head. The current had carried vs without any winde, at the leaſt foure leagues: which ſeene, and the winde beginning to blow, we brought our tackes aboord, and in ſhort time cleared our ſelues.

Punta de Auguſſa.

Point of Auguſſa. Illas de Lobos. Thwart of this point of Auguſſa, lye two deſert Ilands; they call them Illas de Lobos, for the multitude of Seales, which accuſtome to haunt the ſhore. In the bigger is very good harbour, and ſecure: they lye in ſix degrees and thirty minutes. The next day after we loſt ſight of thoſe Ilands, being thwart of Payta, which lyeth in fiue degrees, and hauing manned our Pinnace and Boate to ſearch the Port, we had ſight of a tall Ship, which hauing knowledge of our being on the coaſt, and thinking her ſelfe to be more ſafe at Sea, then in the harbour, put her ſelfe then vnder ſaile: to her we gaue chaſe all that night, and the next day; but in fine, being better of ſaile then we, ſhe freed her ſelfe. Thus being to lee-ward of the Harbour, and diſcouered, we continued our courſe alongſt the ſhore. That euening, wee were thwart of the Riuer of Guyayaquill, which hath in the mouth of it two Ilands: the Souther-moſt and biggeſt, called Puna, in three degrees; and the other to the North-wards, Santa clara.

Puna. Puna is inhabited, and is the place where they build their principall ſhipping: from this Riuer, Lima and all the valleyes are furniſhed with Timber, for they haue none but that which is brought from hence, or from the Kingdome of Chile. By this Riuer paſſeth the principall trade of the Kingdome of Quito; it is Naugable ſome leagues into the Land, and hath great abundance of Timber.

Medicinable Riuer. Thoſe of the Peru, vſe to ground and trim their Shippes in Puna, or in Panama, and in all other parts they are forced to carene their Shippes. In Puna it higheth and falleth, fifteene or ſixteene foote water, and from this Iland, till a man come to Panama, in all the coaſt it ebbeth and floweth more or leſſe; keeping the ordinary courſe, which the Tides doe in all Seas. The water of this Riuer, by experience, is medicinable, for all aches of the bones, for the ſtone and ſtrangurie: the reaſon which is giuen, is, becauſe all the bankes and low land adioyning to this Riuer, are repleniſhed with Salſaperillia: which lying for the moſt part ſoaking in the water, it participateth of this vertue, and giueth it this force. In this Riuer, and all the Riuers of this coaſt, are great abundance of Alagartoes; and it is ſaid that this exceedeth the reſt, for perſons of credit haue certified me, that as ſmall fiſhes in other Riuers abound in ſcoales, ſo the Alagartoes in this; they doe much hurt to the Indians and Spaniards, and are dreadfull to all whom they catch within their clutches.

Scoales of Crocodiles.

P. de S. Elena. Some fiue or ſix leagues to the North-wards of Puna, is la Punta de Santa Elena; vnder which is good anchoring, cleane ground, and reaſonable ſuccour. Being thwart of this point, wee had ſight of a Shippe, which wee chaſed, but being of better ſaile then wee, and the night comming on, we loſt ſight of her; and ſo anchored vnder the Iſla de Plata; to recouer our Pinnace and Boate, which had gone about the other point of the Iland, which lyeth in two degrees, and fortie minutes. The next day we paſt in ſight of Puerto Viejo, in two degrees ten minutes; which lying without ſhipping, we directed our courſe for Cape Paſſaos. It lyeth directly vnder the Equinoctiall line; ſome foureſcore leagues to the Weſt-wards of this Cape, lyeth a heape of Ilands, the Spaniards call Illas de los Galapagos; they are deſert and beare no fruite: from Cape Paſſaos, we directed our courſe to Cape Saint Franciſco, which lyeth in one degree to the North-wards of the line: and being thwart of it, we deſcried a ſmall Shippe, which we chaſed all that day and night, and the next morning our Pinnace came to bourd her; but being a Ship of aduiſe, and full of paſſengers, and our Ship not able to fetch her vp, they entreated our people badly, and freed themſelues, though the feare they conceiued, cauſed them to caſt all the diſpatches of the King, as alſo of particulars into the Sea, with a great part of their loading, to be lighter and better of ſaile, for the Ships of the South Sea loade themſelues like lighters or ſand barges, preſuming vpon the ſecuritie from ſtormes.

Puerto viejo.

Being out of hope to fetch vp this Shippe, we ſtood in with the Cape, where the Land beginneth to trend about to the Eaſt-wards. The Cape is high land, and all couered ouer with trees, and ſo is the land ouer the Cape, and all the coaſt (from this Cape to Panama) is full of wood, from the Straits of Magelan, to this Cape of San Franciſco. In all the coaſt from head-land to head-land, the courſes lye betwixt the North and North and by Weſt, and ſometimes more Weſterly, and that but ſeldome: It is a bold coaſt, and ſubiect to little foule weather, or alteration of windes, for the Breſe, which is the Southerly winde, bloweth continually from Balparizo to Cape

Cape San Francisco, except it be a great chance. Trending about the Cape, wee haled in East North-east, to fetch the Bay of Atacames, which lyeth some seuen leagues from the Cape. In the mid way (some three leagues from the shore) lyeth a banke of sand, whereof a man must haue a care; for in some parts of it there is but little water. Bay of Atacames.

The tenth of June we came to an anchor in the Bay of Atacames, which on the Wester part hath a round hammock. It seemeth an Iland, & in high Springs, I iudge, that the Sea goeth round about it. To the Eastwards it hath a high sandie Cliffe, and in the middest of the Bay, a faire birth; from the shoare lieth a bigge blacke Rocke aboue water: from this Rocke to the sandy Cliffe, is a drowned Marsh ground, caused by his lownesse; And a great Riuer, which is broad but of no depth.

Manning our Boate, and running to the shoare, wee found presently in the Westerne bight of the Bay, a deepe Riuer, whose Indraught was so great, that we could not benefit our selues of it, being brackish, except at a low water; which hindred our dispatch, yet in fiue dayes, wee filled all our emptie Caske, supplied our want of wood, and grounded and put in order our Pinnasse. Here, for that our Indians serued vs to no other vse, but to consume our victuals, we eased our selues of them; gaue them Hookes and Lines which they craued, and some bread for a few dayes, and replanted them in a farre better Countrey, then their owne, which fell out luckily for the Spaniards of the Shippe which wee chased thwart of Cape San Francisco; for victuals growing short with her, having many mouthes, shee was forced to put ashoare fifty of her passengers, neere the Cape; whereof more then the one halfe died with famine, and continuall wading through Riuers and waters: the rest (by chance) meeting with the Indians, which we had put ashore, with their fishing, guide, and industry were refreshed, sustained, and brought to habitation. They dismisse their Indians. Distresse of Spaniards.

Our necessary businesse being ended, we purposed the fifteenth day of May, in the morning, to set saile, but the fourteenth in the euening, we had sight of a Shippe, some three leagues to Sea-wards; and through the importunitie of my Captaine and Companie, I condiscended that our Pinnace should giue her chase, which I should not haue done, for it was our destruction; I gaue them precise order, that if they stood not in againe at night, they should seeke me at Cape San Francisco, for the next morning I purposed to set sayle without delay, and so seeing that our Pinnace slowed her comming, at nine of the cloeke in the morning, we waied our Anchors, and stood for the Cape; where we beate off and on two dayes; and our Pinnace not appearing, wee stood againe into the Bay, where we descried her, turning in without a maine Mast, which standing off to the Sea, chase by, with much winde and a chopping Sea, bearing a raut-sayle, whereas little was too much (being to small purpose) sothinely they bare it by the board; and standing in with the shore, the winde, or rather God blinding them for our punishment, they knew not the land; and making themselues to be to wind-wards of the Bay, bare vp and were put into the Bay of San Mathew: It is a goodly harbour, and hath a great fresh Riuer, which higheth fifteene or sixteene foote water, and is a good Countrey, and well peopled with Indians; they haue store of Gold and Emeralds. Here the Spaniards from Guayaquil made an habitation; whilst I was prisoner in Lyma, by the Indians consent; but after not able to suffer the insolencies of their guests, and being a people of stomacke and presumption, they suffered themselues to bee perswaded and led by a Molato. This leader many yeares before had fled vnto them from the Spaniards, him they had long time held in reputation of their Captaine Generall, and was admitted also vnto a chiefe Office by the Spaniards, to gaine him vnto them. But now the Indians vniting themselues together, presuming that by the helpe of this Molato they should force the Spaniards out of the Countrey, put their resolution in execution, droue their enemies into the woods, and slew as many as they could lay hands on, few escaped with life; and those who had that good hap, suffered extreame misery before they came to Quito; the place of neerest habitation of Spaniards. Occasion of their ruine. A raut-saile is that which proportionably is to high for the vessell. Bay of S. Mathew. The Indians led by a Molato Chase the Spaniards.

To this Bay, as soone as our people in the Pinnace saw their errour, they brought their tackes aboord, and turned and tyded it vp, as they could. Assoone as we came to Anchor, I procured to remedy that was amisse; in two dayes we dispatched all we had to doe, and the next morning we resolued to set sayle and to leaue the coast of Peru and Quito. The day appearing, we began to weigh our Anchors, and being a Pike ready to cut sayle, one out of the top descried the Spanish Armado, comming about the Cape: which by the course it kept, presently gaue vs to vnderstand, who they were: though my company (as is the custome of Sea men) made them to be the Fleete bound for Panama, loaden with treasure, and importuned that in all haste wee should cut sayle and stand with them, which I contradicted, for that I was assured that no Shipping would stirre vpon the coast, till they had securitie of our departure (except some Armado that might be sent to seeke vs) and that it was not the time of the yeare to carry the treasure to Panama. And besides, in riding still at an Anchor, they euer came neerer vnto vs, for they stood directly with vs, and we kept the weather gage; where if wee had put our selues vnder sayle (the ebbe in hand) we should haue giuen them the aduantage, which we had in our power, by reason of the point of the Bay. And being the Armado (as it was) we gained time to fit our selues, Spanish Armado.

the better to fight. And truly (as before, to a ſtiffe-necked Horſe) ſo now againe, I cannot but reſemble the condition of the Mariner to any thing better, then to the current of a furious Riuer, repreſſed by force or Arte, which neuertheleſſe ceaſſeth not to ſeeke a way to ouerthrowe both fence and banke: Euen ſo the common ſort of Sea-men, apprehending a conceit in their imagination, neither experiment, knowledge, examples, reaſons nor authoritie, can alter or remoue them from their conceited opinions. In this extremitie, with reaſon I laboured to conuince them, and to contradict their pretences: but they altogether without reaſon, or againſt reaſon, breake out, ſome into vaunting and bragging, ſome into reproaches of want of courage, others into wiſhings, that they had neuer come out of their Countrie, if wee ſhould refuſe to fight with two ſhips whatſoeuer. And to mend the matter, the Gunner (for his part) aſſured me that with the firſt tire of ſhot, he would ſay the one of them in the ſuds: And our Pinnace, that ſhe would take the other to taske. One promiſed, that he would cut downe the Maine-yard, another that hee would take their Flagge; and all in generall ſhewed a great deſire to come to triall with the Enemie. To ſome I turned the deafe eare, with others I diſſembled, and armed my ſelfe with patience (hauing no other defence nor remedie for that occaſion) ſoothing and animating them to the execution of what they promiſed, and perſwaded them to haue a little ſufferance, ſeeing they gained time and aduantage by it. And to giue them better ſatisfaction I condiſcended, that our Captaine with a competent number of men, ſhould with our Pinnace goe to diſcouer them; with order, that they ſhould not engage themſelues in that manner, as they might not be able to come vnto vs, or we to ſuccour them. In all theſe diuiſions and opinions, our Maſter, Hugh Dennis (who was a moſt ſufficient man for gouernment and valour, and well ſaw the errours of the multitude) vſed his office, as became him; and ſo did all thoſe of beſt vnderſtanding.

Pride and vnruſineſſe forerunners of ruine.

The vnaduiſed courage of the multitude.

In ſhort ſpace, our Pinnace diſcouered what they were, and caſting about to returne vnto vs, the Vice-admirall (being next her) began with her chaſe to ſalute her with three or foure Peeces of Artilerie, and ſo continued chaſing her, and gunning at her. My Companie ſeeing this, now began to change humour: And I then, to encourage and perſwade them to performe the execution of their promiſes and vaunts of valour, which they had but euen now proteſted, and giuen aſſurance of, by their profers and forwardneſſe. And that we might haue Sea-roome to fight, we preſently weighed Anchor, and ſtood off to Sea with all our ſayles, in hope to get the weather gage of our contraries. But the winde ſcanting with vs, and larging with them, we were forced to lee-ward. And the Admirall weathering vs, came roome vpon vs: which being within Muſket ſhot, wee hailed firſt with our noiſe of Trumpets, then with our Waytes, and after with our Artilerie: which they anſwered with Artilerie, two for one. For they had double the Ordnance we had, and almoſt ten men for one. Immediatly they came ſhearing aboord of vs, vpon our lee quarter contrarie to our expectation, and the cuſtome of men of Warre. And doubtleſſe, had our Gunner beene the man hee was reputed to be, and as the world ſold him to me, ſhee had receiued great hurt by that manner of boording: But contrarie to all expectation, our ſtearne-Peeces were vnprimed, and ſo were all thoſe which we had to lee-ward (ſaue halfe one in the quarter) which diſcharged wrought that effect in our contraries, as that they had fiue or ſixe foot water in hold, before they ſuſpected it.

The beginning of the fight.

The inexperience of the Spaniards, and of the Engliſh Gunner. And careleſneſſe of the Engliſh.

Hereby all men are to take warning by me, not to truſt any man in ſuch extremities, when he himſelfe may ſee it done: and comming to fight, let the Chieftaine himſelfe bee ſure to haue all his Artilerie in a readineſſe, vpon all occaſions. This was my ouerſight, this my ouerthrow. For I, and all my Companie, had that ſatisfaction of the ſufficiency and care of our Gunner, as not any one of vs euer imagined there would be any defect found in him. For my part, I with the reſt of our Officers, occupied our ſelues in clearing our Deckes, lacing our Nettings, making of Bulwarkes, arming our Toppes, fitting our Waſt-clothes, tallowing our Pikes, ſlinging our Yards, doubling our Sheetes and Tackes, placing and ordering our People, and procuring that they ſhould be well fitted and prouided of all things; leauing the Artilerie, and other Inſtruments of fire, to the Gunners diſpoſe and order, with the reſt of his Mates and Adherents: which (as I ſaid) was part of our perdition. For bearing me euer in hand, that he had fiue hundred Cartredges in a readineſſe, within one houres fight, wee were forced to occupie three perſons, onely in making and filling Cartredges, and of fiue hundred elles of Canuas and other Cloth giuen him for that purpoſe, at ſundry times, not one yard was to be found. For this we haue no excuſe, and therefore could not auoide the danger, to charge and diſcharge with the Ladle, eſpecially in ſo hot a fight. And comming now to put in execution the ſinking of the ſhip, as he promiſed, hee ſeemed a man without life or ſoule. So the Admirall comming cloſe vnto vs, I my ſelfe, and the Maſter of our ſhip, were forced to play the Gunners.

How farre a Commander is to truſt his officers.

Deceit of the Gunner, and his extreme careleſneſſe, and ſuſpicious diſloyaltie.

Thoſe Inſtruments of fire, wherein he made me to ſpend exceſſiuely (before our going to Sea) now appeared not; Neither the braſſe Bals of Artificiall fire to be ſhot with Slurbowes (whereof I had ſixe Bowes, and two hundreth Bals, which are of great account and ſeruice, either by Sea or Land) he had ſtowed them in ſuch manner (though in double Barrels) as the ſalt water had ſpoyled them all; ſo that comming to vſe them, not one was ſeruiceable. Some of our Companie had him in ſuſpicion, to be more friend to the Spaniards, then to vs; for that hee had ſeruued ued some yeates in the Peruan, as Gunner, and that he did all his of purpose. For when the Peeces were cleere, when we came to vse them, and charged the last first in, and after the powder. Besides, after our surrendry; it was said to his charge, that he should say, he had a Brother that seru'd the King in Peru, and did the vttermost he could in the Armado, and knew he would not for all the world, he should be slaine. Whether this were true or no, I know not, but I am sure all in generall gaue him an ill report, and that hee, in whose hands the chiefe execution of the whole fight consisted, executed nothing as was promised and expected.

It is requisite that all Captaines and Commanders were such, and so experimented in all offices, that they might be able as well to controule as to examine all manner of errors in officers. For the Gouernment of Sea-men doth suffereth a blind without exquisite experience. The deficience whereof hath ouerthrowne some ancient Sea-men to straighten the attributes of Mariners in such sort, as that it ought not to be giuen but to the man who is able to build a Ship, to fit and prouide her of all things necessarie, and after to carry her about the world, besides, to be true saylers. Hereby giuing vs to vnderstand, that hee should know the plots and peeces of the Ship, the value of the timber, planke and Iron worke, fit to be able of it well to build in proportion, and to procure all materials in iust price. And againe, to know how to lay the sayles, what length is competent to euery Roape, and to be of sufficiencie to reprehend and reforme those who erre, and doe amisse. In prouiding his Ship for victuals, munition and necessaries, as before is said he must be expected that he be able to make his estimate, and (that once prouided and perfected) in season, and with expedition to see it loden and stowed commodiously, with care and proportion. After that, Hee is to order the spending thereof, that in nothing he be defrauded at home, and at Sea, euer to know how much is spent, and what remaineth to be spent. To the Art of Nauigation, he is bound also to know, so much, as to be able to giue directions to the Pilot & Master, and consequently to all the rest of inferior officers.

In matter of guide and disposing of the Sayles, with the ordering of the Ship, and the worke about the same thereunto, within board and without, all is to be committed to the Masters charge. The Pilot is to looke carefully to the Sterridge of the Ship, to be watchfull in taking the heights of Sunne and Starre; to note the way of his Ship, with the augmenting and lessening of the winds, &c. The Boatswaine is to see his Ship kept cleane; his Maines, yards and rackings well geared, mated and armed; his shrouds and staies well set; his sides repaired, and sufficiently prouided with mariners, blocks, ordinance; his boate fitted with Sayle, Oares, thongs, tholes, boyes, needles and rosiers. His cables well fitted, safely stopped and secured, with the rest to him appertaining. The Steward is to see the prouision of victuals and necessaries, committed vnto his charge; and by a iust and weighty to deliuer the portions appointed, and with discretion and good tearmes, to giue satisfaction to all. The Carpenter is to view the maines and yards, the sides of the Ship, her decker and cabines, her pumpes and boate; and moreouer to occupie himselfe in the most seruiceable worke, except he be otherwise commanded. The Gunner is to care for the bringing and tacking of his Artillery; the fitting of his shot, Tampins, coynes, wedges and ramstaues, &c. To be prouident in working his fire worke, making and filling his Cartredges, in accommodating his ladles, sponge, and other necessaries; in fitting and drying his powder; in cleansing the armes, munition, and such like workes, intrusted vnto him.

In this manner euery officer in his office, ought to be an absolute Commander, yet ready in obedience and loue, to sacrifice his will to his superiors command: This cannot but cause vnitie, and vnitie cannot but purchase a happie issue to dutifull trauels. Lastly, except it be in vrgent and precise cases, the Head should neuer direct his command to any, but the officers, and those secretly, except the occasion require publication; or that it concerne all in generall. Such orders would be (for the most part) in writing, that all might know what in generall is commanded and required.

Directions in secret.

All order.

The reason why the Admirall came to leewards (as after I vnderstood) was for that her Artillery being very long, and the winde fresh, bearing a taut sayle, to fetch vs vp, and to keepe vs company, they could not vse their Ordnance to the weather of vs, but lay thrashing in the winds: And doubtlesse it is most proper for shippes to haue short Ordnance, except in the sterne or chase. The reasons are many: viz. easier charging, ease of the Shippes sides, better trauersing and mounting, yea, greater securitie of the Artillery, and consequently of the Shippes. For the longer the Peece is, the greater is the retention of the fire, and the torments and danger of the Peece the greater. But here will be contradiction by many, that dare auouch that longer Peeces are to be preferred; for that they burne their powder better, and carry the shot further, and so necessarily of better execution: whereas the short Artillery many times spends much of their powder without burning, and workes thereby the slanderous effect. To which I answere, that for Land seruice, Forts, or Castles, the long Peeces are to be preferred; but for shipping, the short are much more seruiceable. And the powder in them, being such as it ought, will be all fired long before the shot come forth; and to reach farre in fights at Sea, is to little effect: For he that purposeth to annoy his Enemie, must not shoote at random, nor at point blanke, if he purpose to accomplish with his desire, neither must he spend his shot nor powder, but where a pot-gun may reach his enemy: how much the nearer, so much the better: and this duely executed, the short Artillery will worke his effect, as well as the long; otherwise, neither short nor long are of much importance: but here, my meaning is not, to approue the ouershort Peeces, deuised by some persons, which at euery shot they make, deuice out of their carriages, but those of different length, and which keepe themselues, betwixt seauen and eight foote.

Why the Spanish Admirall came to leewards.

Rules for Ordnance.

Intertainment of Spaniards.

The entertainment we gaue vnto our contraries, being otherwise then was expected, they fell off, and ranged ahead, hauing broken an peeces all our gallerie: and presently they cast about vpon vs, and being able to keepe vs company, with their fighting sailes lay a weather of vs, ordinarily within Musket shot; playing continually with them and their great Artillerie; which we endured, and answered as we could. Our Pinnace engaged her selfe so farre, as that before she could come vnto vs; the Vice-admirall had like to cut her off, and comming to lay vs aboord, and to enter her then, the Vice-admirall boorded with her; so that some of our company entred our Ship ouer her bow-sprit, as they themselues reported. Wee were not a little comforted with the sight of our people in safetie, within our Ship, for in all, wee were but threescore and fifteene men and boyes, when we began to fight, and our enemies thirteene hundred men and boyes, little more or lesse, and those of the choise of Peru.

The English 75. The Spaniards 1300.

The Spanish discipline.

Here is shall not be out of the way, to discourse a little of the Spanish Discipline, and manner of their gouernment in generall, which is in many things different to ours. In this expedition came two Generals, the one Don Beltran de Castro, who had the absolute authoritie and command: The other Michael Angell Pulpon, a man well in yeares, and came to this preferment by his long and painefull seruice, who though he had the title of Generall by Sea, I thinke it was rather of courtesie shew by Patent, and for that he had beene many yeares Generall of the South Seas, for the carriage and swaftage of the Siluer from Lyma to Panama; Hee seemed to be an assistant, to supply that with his counsell, aduice, and experience, whereof Don Beltran had neuer made triall (for he commanded not absolutely, but with the confirmation of Don Beltran) for the Spaniards neuer giue absolute authorities to more then one. A custome that hath beene, and is approued in all Empires, Kingdomes, Common-wealths, and Armies, rightly disciplined: the mixture hath beene seldome seene to prosper, as will manifestly appeare, if we consider the issue of all actions and iourneys committed to the gouernment of two or more generally.

The Souldiers.

The Gunner.

The Marriner.

The Spaniards in their Armadaes by Sea, imitate the discipline, order and officers, which are in an Army by Land, and deuide themselues into three bodies, to wit, Souldiers, Marriners and Gunners. Their Souldiers watch and watch, and their officers in euery Ship round, as if they were on the shoare; this is the onely taske they vndergoe, except cleaning their Armes, wherein they are not ouer curious. The Gunners are exempted from all labour and care, except about the Artillerie. And these are either Almaynes, Flemmings, or strangers; for the Spaniards are but indifferently practised in this Art. The Marriners are but as slaues to the rest, to worke and to toyle day and night, and those but few and bad, and not suffered to sleepe or harbour themselues vnder the deckes. For in faire or foule weather, in stormes, sowne or rowne, they must passe vnder of couert or succour.

Officers in a Ship of War.

Captaine of the Ship.

Captaine of the Soldiers.

M. Del Campo. &.

There is ordinarily in euery Ship of warre a Captaine, whose charge is, as that of our Masters with vs, and also a Captaine of the Souldiers, who commandeth the Captaine of the Ship, the Souldiers, Gunners and Marriners in her; yea, though there be diuers Captaines, with their companies in one Shippe (which is vsuall amongst them) yet one hath the supreame authoritie, and the residue are at his ordering and disposing. They haue their Maistros de Campo, Sergeant, Master, Generall (or Captaine) of the Artillery, with their Alfere Maior, and all other officers, as in a Campo. If they come to fight with another Armada, they order themselues as in a battell by land: In a Vanguard, rereward, maine battell, and wings, &c. In euery particular Ship the Souldiers are set all vpon the deckes; their forecastle they account their head Front, or Vanguard of their company; that abaft the Mast, the rereward; and the waste, the maine battell, wherein they place their principall force, and on which they principally relye, which they call their place de armas or place of Armes; which taken, their hope is lost. The Gunners fight not, but with their great Artillerie: the Marriners attend onely on the tackling of the Ship, and handling of the sailes, and are vnarmed, and subiect to all misfortunes; not permitted to shelter themselues, but to be still aloft, whether it be necessary or needelesse. So ordinarily, those which first faile are the Marriners and Sailers, of which they haue greatest need. They vse few close fights or fireworks, & all this proceedeth (as I iudge) of errour in placing land Captaines for Gouernors and Commanders by Sea, where they seldome vnderstand what is to be done or commanded.

Ill order.

Spying of the Spaniards into our Discipline.

Some that haue beene our prisoners, haue perfited themselues of that they haue seene amongst vs: and others disguised, vnder colour of treaties, for ransoming of prisoners, for bringing of presents, & other Imbassages, haue noted our formes of shipping, our manner of defences and discipline: Sithence which espiall in such actions as they haue beene imployed in, they seeke to imitate our gouernment, and reformed discipline at Sea, which doubtlesse is the best, and most proper that is at this day knowne, or practised in the whole world, if the execution be answerable to that which is knowne and receiued for true and good amongst vs.

Their imitation of our Discipline.

*English*man lost the English and therefore the man.

In the Captaine (for so the Spaniards call their Admirall) was an English Gunner, who to gaine grace with those vnder whom he serued, preferring himselfe, and offered to sinke our Ship with the first shot he made; who, by the Spaniards relation, being trauersing a peece in the bowe, to make his shot, had his head carried away with the first or second shot, made out of our Ship. It fell also two or three of those which stood next him. A good warning for those which fight against their Country.

The fight continued so hot on both sides, that the Artillery and Muskets neuer ceased playing. Our contraries, towards the euening, determined the third time to lay vs aboard, with resolution to take vs, or to hazard all. The order they set downe for the execution hereof, hereof, was, that the Captaine (or Admirall) should bring himselfe vpon our weather bow, and so fall aboord of vs, vpon our broad side: And that the Vice-admirall, should lay his Admirall aboord vpon his weather quarter, and so enter his men into her; that from her, they might enter vs, or doe as occasion should minister.

The Captaine of the Vice-admirall, being more hardie then considerate, and presuming with his ship and company to get the prize, and chiefe honour; waited not the time to put in execution the direction giuen, but presently came aboord to wind-wards vpon our broad side. Which doubtlesse was the great and especiall Prouidence of Almightie God, for the discouraging of our enemies, and animating of vs. For although she was as long, or rather longer then our ship, being rarely built, and vtterly without fights or defence; what with our Muskets, and what with our fire-works we clered her decks in a moment; so that scarce any person appeared. And doubtlesse if we had entred but a doozen men, we might haue enforced them to haue rendred vnto vs, or taken her, but our company being few, and the principall of them slaine, or hurt; wee durst not, neither was it wisdome, to aduenture the separation of those which remayned: and so held that for the best and soundest resolution, to keepe our forces together in defence of our owne.

The Spaniards pay deerly for their rashnesse.

The Vice-admirall seeing himselfe in great distresse, called to his Admirall for succour: who presently laid him aboord, and entred a hundred of his men; and so cleered themselues of vs. In this boording the Vice-admirall had at the least thirtie and six men hurt, and slaine; and amongst them his Pilot shot through the bodie, so as he died presently. And the Admirall also receiued some losse; which wrought in them a new resolution; only with their Artillery to batter vs; and so with time to force vs to surrender, or to sink vs, which they put in execution; and placing themselues within a Musket shot of our weather quarter, and sometimes on our broad side, lay continually beating vpon vs without intermission; which was doubtlesse the best and securest determination they could take, for they being rare ships, and without any manner of close fights, in boording with vs, their men were all open vnto vs, and we vnder couert and shelter. For on all parts our ship was Musket free, and the great Artillery of force must cease on either side (the ships being once grapled together) except we resolued to sacrifice our selues together in fire. For it is impossible, if the great Ordnance play (the ships being boorded) but that they must set fire on the ship they shoot at; and then no suretie can bee had to free himselfe, as experience daily confirmeth. A Peece is as a Thunder-clap. As was seene in the Spanish Admirall after my imprisonment, crossing from Panama to Cape San Francisco, a Rayao, (for so the Spaniards call a Thunderclap) brake ouer our ship, killed one in the fore-top, astonished either two or three in the shroudes, and split the Mast in strange manner; where it entred, it could hardly be discerned, but where it came forth, it draue out a great splinter before it; and the man slaine, was cleane in a manner without signe or token of hurt, although all his bones turned to powder, and those who liued and recouered, had all their bodies blacke, as burnt with fire. In like manner the Peece of Ordnance burteth not those which stand aside, nor those which stand aslope from his mouth, but those alone which stand directly against the true point of his leuell: though sometimes the wind of the shot ouerthroweth one, and the splinters (beeing accidents) mayne and hurt others. But principally where the Peece doth resemble the Thunderclap, as when the ships are boorded. For then, although the Artillerie be discharged without shot, the fury of the fire, and his piercing nature is such, as it entreth by the seames, and all parts of the ships sides, and meeting with so fit matter as Pitch, Tarre, Oaombe, and sometimes with powder, presently conuerteth all into flames. For auoyding whereof, as also the danger and damage which may come by Pikes and other inuentions of fire, and if any ship be oppressed with many ships at once, and subiect by them to be boorded; I hold it a good course to strike his fire and mayne yards close to his decke, and to fight with sprit-saile, and my son, and top-sailes loose: so shall hee bee able to hinder them from oppressing him. Some haue thought it a good policie to launce out some ends of masts or yards by the Ports or other parts: but this is to be vsed in the greater ships, for in the lesser, though they be neuer so strong, the waight of the bigger will beate out the opposite sides, and doe hurt, and make great spoile in the lesser. And in boording, ordinarily the lesser ship hath al the harme, which the one ship can doe vnto the other.

Great Ordnance fire a ship neere.

Policies to auoide boordings.

Here is offered to speake of a point much canuassed amongst Carpenters, and Sea Captaines, diuersly maintained, but yet vndetermined: that is, whether the race or loftie built ship, be best for the Merchant; and those which imploy themselues in trading: I am of opinion, that the race ship is most conuenient; yet so, as that euery perfect ship ought to haue two decks, for the better strengthening of her; the better succouring of her people; the better preserving of her Merchandize and victuall, and for her greater safetie from Sea and stormes. But for the Princes ships, and such as are imployed continually in the Warres, to bee built lofue I hold very necessarie for many Reasons. First, for Maiestie and terrour of the Enemie; Secondly, for harbouring of many men: Thirdly, for accomodating more men to fight; Fourthly, for placing and vsing more Artillerie; Fifth, for better strengthning and securing of the ship; Sixtly, for ouer-topping and subiecting the Enemie; Seuenthly, for greater safegard and defence of the shippe and company. For it is plaine, that the shippe with three decks, or with two and an halfe, shewes more pompe then another of her burthen with a decke and halfe, or two decker, and breedeth great terror to the enemy, discouering her selfe to be a more powerfull ship as she is, then the other, which being indeed a ship of force, seemeth to be but a Barke, and with her low building hideth her burthen. And who doubteth that a decke and a halfe cannot harbour that proportion of men, that two deckes, and two deckes and a halfe can accommodate to fight, nor carrie the Artillerie so plentifully, nor so commodiously. Neither can the ship be so strong with a decke and a halfe, as with two deckes, nor with two as with three, nor carrie her Masts so taut, nor spread so great a clue, nor contriue so many sights to answere one another for defence & offence. And the aduantage the one hath of the other, experience daily teacheth.

Courses for Artillery after boording.

That which hath beene spoken of the danger of the Artillerie in boording is not to be wrested, nor interpreted to cut off vtterly the vse of all Artillerie after boording, but rather I hold nothing more conuenient in ships of Warre, then Fowlers and great Bases in the cage workes, and Murderers in the Cobridge heads, for that their execution and speedie charging and discharging is of great moment.

Disuse of engines of Antiquitie.

Many I know haue left the vse of them, and of sundry other preuentions, as of sherebookes, stones in their tops, and arming them, Pikebolts in their wales and diuers other engines of Antiquitie. But vpon what inducement I cannot relate, vnlesse it be because they neuer knew their effects and benefit, and may no doubt be vsed without the inconueniences before mentioned in great Ordnance. As also such may bee the occasion, that without danger some of the great Artillery may be vsed, and that with great effect, which is in the discretion of the Commanders and their Gunners, as hath beene formerly seene and daily is experimented. In the Reuenge of her Maiesties, good experience was made, who sunke two of the Spanish Armado lying aboord her.

In these boordings and skirmishes diuers of our men were slaine, and many hurt, and my selfe amongst them receiued six wounds; one of them in the necke very perillous; another through the arme perishing the bone, and cutting the sinewes close by the Arme-pit; the rest not so dangerous. The Master of our ship had one of his eyes, his nose, and halfe his face shot away. Master Henry Courton was slaine; on these two I principally relied for the prosecution of our voyage, if God by sicknes, or otherwise should take me away. The Spaniards with their great Ordnance lay continually playing vpon vs, and now and then parled and inuited vs to surrender our selues a Buena Querra. The Captaine of our ship, in whose direction and guide, our liues, our honour, and welfare now remained; seeing many of our people wounded and slaine, and that few were left to sustaine and maintaine the fight, or to resist the entry of the enemy (if hee should againe boord vs) and that our contraries offered vs good partido: came vnto me accompanied with some others, and began to relate the state of our ship, and how that many were hurt and slain, and scarce any men appeared to trauerse the Artillery, or to oppose themselues for defence if the enemy should boord with vs againe. And how that the Admirall offered vs life and liberty, and to receiue vs a Buena querra, and to send vs into our owne Countrey. Saying, that if I thought it so meet, hee and the rest were of opinion that wee should put out a flag of truce, and make some good composition. The great losse of blood had weakned me much. The torment of my wounds newly receiued made me faint, and I laboured for life, within short space expecting I should giue vp the ghost.

Sir R. H. wounded.

The Spaniards parley.

But this parly pierced through my heart, and wounded my soule; words failed mee whereewith to expresse it, and none can conceiue it, but hee which findeth himselfe in the like agonie: yet griefe and rage ministred force, and caused me to breake forth into this reprehension and execution following.

Great is the Crosse, which almightie God hath suffered to come vpon mee; that assaulted by our professed enemies, and by them wounded (as you see) in body, lying gasping for breath) those whom I reputed for my friends to fight with me, those which I relied on as my brethren to defend me in all occasions. Those whom I haue nourished, cherished fostered and loued as my children to succour me, helpe me, and to sustaine my reputation in all extremities, are they who first draw their swords against me, are they which wound my heart, in giuing me vp into mine enemies hands, whence proceedeth this ingratitude? whence this faintnesse of heart? whence this madnesse? is the cause you fight for, vniust? is the honor and loue of your Prince and Countrey buried in the dust? your sweet liues, are they become loathsome vnto you? will you exchange your liberty for thraldome, will you consent to see that, which you haue sweat for, and procured with so great labour and aduenture at the dispose of your enemies? can you content your selues to suffer my blond spild before your eyes? and my life bereft me in your presence? with the blond and liues of your deere brethren to be vnreuenged? is not an honourable death to be preferred, before a miserable and slauish life? The one sustaining the honor of our Nation, of our predecessors, and of our societie; the other ignominious to our selues, and reproachfull to our Nation. Can you be perswaded that the enemy will performe his promise with you, that neuer leaueth to breake it with others when he thinketh it aduantagious? and know you not, that with him all is conuenient that is profitable? Hold they not this for a maxime; that, nulla fides est seruanda cum hereticis. In which number they account vs to be. Haue you forgotten their faith violated with my father, in S. Iohn de Vlua, the conditions & capitulations being firmed by the Viceroy, & twelue Hostages, all principall personages giuen for the more securitie of either partie to other? Haue you forgotten their promise broken with Iohn Vibao, & his company, in Florida, hauing conditioned to giue them shipping and victuals to carry them into their country? immediately after they had deliuered their weapons & armes, had they not their throats cut? haue you forgotten how they deale with Iohn Oxenham, & his Company, in this Sea, yeelding vpon compoſition? and how after a long impriſonment, and many miſeries (being carried from Panama to Lyma) and there hanged with all his Company, as Pyrates, by the Iuſtice? And can you forget how daily they abuſe our noble natures, which being void of malice, meaſure all by ſinceritie; but to our loſſe? for that when we come to demand performance, they ſtop our mouthes: Either with laying the inquiſition vpon vs, or with delinering vs into the hands of the ordinary Iuſtice, or of the Kings Miniſters. And then vrged with their promiſes, they ſhrinke vp to the ſhoulders, and ſay, That they haue now no further power ouer vs. They ſorrow in their hearts, to ſee their promiſe is not accompliſhed; but now they cannot doe vs any good office, but to pray to God for vs, and to intreat the Miniſters in our behalfe. Came wee into the South-ſea to put out flags of truce? And left we our pleaſant England, with all her contentments, with intention or purpoſe to anaile our ſelues of white rags?

The reſt of this conference, being long, is omitted.

The Captaine and Company were perſwaded to reſolution; and in accompliſhment of this promiſe and determination, they perſeuered in ſuſtaining the fight all this night, with the day and night following, and the third day after. In which time the Enemy neuer left vs day nor night, beating continually vpon vs with his great and ſmall ſhot. Sauing that euery morning, an houre before breake of day, hee edged a little from vs to breath, and to remedie ſuch defects as were amiſſe; as alſo to conſult what they ſhould doe the day and night following. This time of interdiction we imployed in repairing our Sayles and Tacklings, in ſtopping our Leakes, in fiſhing and woolling our Maſts and Yards, in mending our Pumpes, and in fitting and prouiding our ſelues for the day to come: though this was but little ſpace for ſo many workes, yet gaue it great reliefe and comfort vnto vs, and made vs better able to endure the defence: for otherwiſe our ſhip muſt of force haue ſuncke before our ſurrendrie, hauing many ſhot vnder water, and our Pumpes ſhot to pieces euery day. In all this ſpace, not any man of either part tooke reſt or ſleepe, and little ſuſtenance, beſides Bread and Wine.

They reſolue to fight out.

The Enemy breatheth.

The Engliſh repaire their defects.

In the ſecond dayes fight, the Vice-admirall comming vpon our quarter, William Blanch, one of our Maſters mates, with a luckie hand, made a ſhot vnto her with one of our ſterne Peeces; it carried away his maine Maſt cloſe by the deck: wherewith the Admirall beare vp to her to ſee what harme ſhee had receiued, and to giue her ſuch ſuccour, as ſhee was able to ſpare: which we ſeeing, were in good hope that they would haue now left to moleſt vs any longer, hauing wherewithall to entertaine themſelues in redreſſing their owne harmes. And ſo we ſtood away from them cloſe by as wee could: which wee ſhould not haue done, but proſecuted the occaſion, and brought our ſelues cloſe vpon her weather gage, and with our great and ſmall ſhot hindered them from repairing their harmes: if we had thus done, they had beene forced to cut all by the boord, and it may be (lying a hull, or to le-wards of vs) with a few ſhot we might haue ſunke her. At the leaſt, it would haue declared to our enemies that we had them in little eſtimation, when able to go from them, we would not: and perhaps beene a cauſe to haue made them to leaue vs.

Vice-admirals maſt ſhot away

Aduantages omitted.

But this occaſion was let ſlip, as alſo, that other to fight with them, ſayling quarter winds, or before the wind: for hauing ſtood off to Sea a day and a night, we had ſcope to fight at our pleaſure, and no man hauing ſea roome is bound to fight as his enemy will with diſaduantage, being able otherwiſe to deale with equalitie: contrariwiſe, euery man ought to ſeeke the meanes hee can, for his defence and greateſt aduantage to the anoyance of his contrary.

Now we might with our fore-ſaile low ſet haue borne vp before the winde, and the enemy of force muſt haue done the like, if he would fight with vs, or keep vs company; and then ſhould we haue had the aduantage of them. For although their Artillery were longer, waightier, and many more then ours, and in truth did pierce with greater violence; yet ours being of greater bore, and carrying a waightier and greater ſhot, was of more importance and of better effect for ſinking and ſpoyling: for the ſmaller ſhot paſſeth through, and maketh but his hole, and harmeth that which lyeth in his way; but the greater ſhaketh and ſhiuereth all it meeteth, and with the ſplinters, or that which it encountreth, many times doth more hurt, then with his proper circumference: as is plainely ſeene in the battery by land, when the Saker, the Demy-coluerin, the Coluerin, and Demi-canon (being peeces that reach much further point blanke then the Canon) are nothing of like importance for making the breach, as is the Canon; for that this ſhot being ponderous pierceth with difficultie, yea worketh better effects, tormenting, ſhaking and ouerthrowing all; whereas the others, with their violence, pierce better, and make onely their hole, and ſo hide themſelues in the Woolf or Rampire.

The difference of ſhot.

Their effects.

Beſides (our ſhip being yare and good of ſteeridge) no doubt but we ſhould haue plaied better with our Ordnance, and with more effect then did our enemies; which was a greater terrour, being able to fight with leſſe diſaduantage, and yet to fight with the moſt that could be imagined, which I knew not of, neither was able to direct though I had knowne it; being in a manner ſenſleſſe, what with my wounds, and what with the agony of the ſurrendry propounded, for that had ſeldome knowne it ſpoken of, but that it came afterwards to be put in execution.

Errors in fight.

The General not being able to ſuccour his Vice-admirall, except he ſhould vtterly leaue vs, gaue them order to ſhift as well as they could for the preſent, and to beare with the next Port, and there to repaire their harmes. Himſelfe preſently followed the Chaſe, and in ſhort ſpace fetched vs vp, and began a freſh to batter vs with his great and ſmall ſhot. The Vice-admirall (hauing ſaued what they could) cut the reſt by the boord, and with Fore-ſayle and Myſon came after vs alſo, and before the ſetting of the Sun, were come vpon our broad ſide, we bearing all our Sayles, and after kept vs company, lying vpon our weather quarter, and anoying vs what ſhee could.

Here I hold it neceſſary, to make mention of two things, which were moſt preiudiciall vnto vs, and the principall cauſes of our perdition, the errours and faults of late dayes, crept in amongſt thoſe who follow the Sea, and learned from the Flemings and Eaſterlings. I wiſh that by our misfortunes others would take warning, and procure to redreſſe them as occaſions ſhall be offered. The one, is to fight vnarmed, where they may fight armed. The other, is in comming to fight, to drinke themſelues drunke. Yea, ſome are ſo mad, that they mingle Powder with Wine to giue it the greater force, imagining that it giueth ſpirit, ſtrength and courage, and taketh away all feare and doubt. The latter is, for the moſt part true, but the former is falſe and beaſtly, and altogether againſt reaſon. For though the nature of wine with moderation, is to comfort and reuiue the heart, and to fortifie and ſtrengthen the ſpirit; yet the immoderate vſe thereof worketh quite contrary effects.

Learned from the Flemings & Eaſterlings.
1. To fight vnarmed.
2. To drinke to exceſſe.

In fights, all receits which adde courage and ſpirit, are of great regard to be allowed and vſed; and ſo is a draught of wine to be giuen to euery man before he come to action, but more then enough is pernicious; for, exceeding the meanes, it offendeth, and infeebleth the ſences, conuerting the ſtrength (which ſhould reſiſt the force of the enemy) into weakeneſſe: it dulleth and blindeth the vnderſtanding, and conſequently depraueth any man of true valour. For that hee is diſenabled to iudge and apprehend the occaſion, which may bee offered to aſſault and retire in time conuenient, the raynes of reaſon being put into the hands of paſſion and diſorder. For after I was wounded, this nimium bred great diſorder and inconuenience in our ſhip, the pot continually walking, infuſed deſperate and fooliſh hardineſſe in many, who blinded with the fume of the liquor, conſidered not of any danger, but thus, and thus would ſtand at hazard; ſome in vaine glory vaunting themſelues; ſome other raylng vpon the Spaniards; another inuiting his companion to come and ſtand by him, and not to budge a foote from him: which indiſcreetly they put in execution, and coſt the liues of many a good man, ſlaine by our enemies Muſkettiers, who ſuffered not a man to ſhew himſelfe, but they preſently ouerthrew him with ſpeed and watchfulneſſe. For preuention of the ſecond errour, although I had great preparation of Armour, as well of proofe, as of light Corſolets, yet not a man would vſe them, but eſteemed a pot of wine, a better defence, then an armour of proofe: which truly was great madneſſe, and a lamentable fault, worthy to be baniſhed from amongſt all reaſonable people, and well to be weighed by all Commanders. For if the Spaniard ſurpaſſeth vs in any thing, it is in his temperance and ſuffering: and, where he hath had the better hand of vs, it hath beene (for the moſt part) through our owne folly, for that wee will fight vnarmed with him being armed. And although I haue heard many maintaine, that in ſhipping, armour is of little profit; all men of good vnderſtanding, will condemne ſuch deſperate ignorance. For beſides, that the ſlighteſt armour ſecureth the parts of a mans bodie (which it couereth) from pike, ſword, and all hand weapons: it likewiſe giueth boldneſſe and courage; a man armed, giueth a greater and a weightier blow, then a man vnarmed, he ſtandeth faſter, and with greater difficultie is to be ouerthrowne.

Folly of the bold Engliſh.

The Spaniard ſurpaſſeth vs onely in temperance.

And I neuer read, but that the gliſtering of the armour hath beene by Authors obſerued, for that (as I imagine) his ſhow breedeth terrour in his contraries, and deſpaire to himſelfe if he be vnarmed. And therefore in time of warre, ſuch as deuote themſelues to follow the profeſſion of Armes (by Sea or by Land) ought to couet nothing more then to bee well armed, for as much as it is the ſecond meanes, next Gods protection, for preſerning and prolonging many mens liues. Wherin the Spaniſh nation deſerueth commendation aboue others, euery one from the higheſt to the loweſt, putting their greateſt care in prouiding faire and good Armes. Hee which cannot come to the price of a Corſlet; will haue a coate of Mayle, a Iacket, at leaſt, a Buffe-ierkin, or a priuie Coate; And hardly will they bee found without it, albeit they liue, and ſerue (for the moſt part) in extreame hot Countries.

The vſe & profit of arming, exactly obſerued by the Spaniſh.

Whereas I haue knowne many bred in cold Countries, in a moment complaine of the weight of their Armes, that they ſmother them and then caſt them off, chuſing rather to be ſhot through with a bullet, or launched through with a pike, or thruſt through with a ſword, then to endure a little trauaile and ſuffering. But let mee giue theſe lazie ones this leſſon, that hee that will goe a warfare, muſt reſolue himſelfe to fight, and he that putteth on this reſolution, muſt be contented to endure both heate and weight, firſt, for the ſafeguard of his life, and next for ſubduing of his enemy; both which are hazarded and put into great danger, if hee fight vnarmed with an enemy armed. Now for mine owne opinion, I am reſolued that armour is more neceſſary by Sea, then by Land, yea, rather to be excuſed on the ſhoare, then in the ſhip. My reaſon is, for that on the ſhoare the bullet onely hurteth, but in the ſhip, I haue ſeene the ſplinters kill and hurt many at once, and yet the ſhot to haue paſſed without touching any perſon. As in the Galeon, in which I came out of the Indies, in Anno 1597. in the rode of Tarcera, when the Queenes Maieſties ſhips, vnder the charge of the Earle of Eſſex, chaſed vs into the roade; with the ſplinters of one ſhot, were ſlaine, maymed, and ſore hurt, at the leaſt a dozen perſons, the moſt part whereof had beene excuſed if they had beene armed.

Armes more neceſſary by Sea, then at Land.

And doubtleſſe, if theſe errours had beene foreſeene, and remedied by vs, many of thoſe who were ſlaine and hurt, had beene on foot, and wee enabled to haue ſuſtained and maintained the fight much better and longer; and perhaps at laſt had freed our ſelues. For if our enemy had come to board with vs, our cloſe fights were ſuch as wee were ſecure, and they open vnto vs. And what with our Cubridge heads, one answering the other, our hatches vpon bolts, our brackes in our Deckes and Gunner roome, it was impossible to take vs as long as any competent number of men had remained, twentie persons would haue sufficed for defence, and for this such ships are called Impregnable, and are not to be taken, but by surrender, nor to be ouercome, but with boording or sinking, as in vs by experience was verified; and not in vs alone, but in the Reuenge of the Queenes Maiestie, which being compassed round about with all the Armado of Spaine, and boorded sundry times by many at once, is said to haue sunke three of the Armado by her side. The Reuenge auenged.

A third and last cause of the losse of sundry of our men, most worthy of note for all Captaines, owners, and Carpenters: was the race building of our ship; the onely fault shee had, and now adayes held for a principall grace in any ship: but by the experience which I haue had, it seemeth for sundry reasons verie preiudiciall for ships of Warre. For in such, those which tackle the sayles, of force must bee vpon the deckes, and are open without shelter or any defence: yet here it will bee obiected, That for this inconuenience, waste clothes are prouided, and for want of them it is vsuall to lace a bonnet, or some such shadow for the men: worthily may it bee called a shadow, and one of the most pernitious customes that can bee vsed for this shadow or defence, being but of linnen or woollen cloth emboldneth many, who without it would retire to better securitie, whereas now thinking themselues vnseene, they become more bold then otherwise they would, and thereby shot through, when they least thinke of it. Some Captaines obseruing this error, haue sought to remedie it in some of his Maiesties ships, not by altering the building, but by deuising a certaine defence made of foure or fiue inch planks, of fiue foot high, and sixe foote bread, running vpon wheeles, and placed in such parts of the ship, as are most open. These they name Bienders, and made of Elme, for the most part, for that it shiuers not with a shot, as Oake and other Timber will doe, which are now in vse and seruice, but best it is when the whole side hath one blender, and one armour of proofe for defence of those, which of force must labour and be aloft. The third cause. Race-ships of Warre disliked. Waste-clothes, not so vsefull as other deuises.

This race building, first came in by ouermuch homing in of our ships, and receiued for good, vnder colour of making our ships thereby the better sea-ships, and of better aduantage to hull and try: but in my iudgement it breedeth many inconueniences, and is farre from working the effect they pretend, by disinabling them for bearing their cage worke correspondent, to the proportion and mould of the ship, making them tender sided, and vnable to carry sayle in any fresh gaile of winde, and diminishing the play of their Artillery, and the place for accommodating their people to fight, labour, or rest. And I am none of those who hold opinion, that the ouer-much homing in, the more the better, is commodious and easier for the ship, and this is out of the experience that I haue learned, which with forcible reasons I could proue, to be much rather discommodious and worthy to be reformed. But withall I hold it not necessarie to discourse here of that particularitie, but leaue the consequence to men of vnderstanding, and so surceasse.

All this second day, and the third day and night, our Captaine and company sustained the fight, notwithstanding the disaduantage where they fought: The enemy being euer to windwards, and wee to lee-ward, their shot much damnifying vs, and ours little annoying them, for whensoeuer a man encountereth with his enemie at Sea, in gayning the weather gage, hee is in possibilitie to sinke his contrarie, but his enemy cannot sinke him; and therefore he which is forced to fight with this disaduantage, is to procure by all meanes possible to shoote downe his contraries Masts or Yards, and to teare or spoyle his tackling and sayles: for which purpose, Billets of some heauie wood fitted to the great Ordnance, are of great importance. And so are Arrowes of fire to be shot out of Slur-bowes, and Cases of small shot ioyned two and two together, with pieces of Wyer of fiue or sixe inches long, which also shot out of Muskets are of good effect for tearing the sayles, or cutting the tackling. Some are of opinion, that Crosse-barres and Chaine-shot, are of moment for the spoyling of Masts and Yards, but experience daily teacheth them not to bee of great importance, though neere at hand, I confesse, they worke great execution: but the round shot, is the onely principall and powerfull meane to breake Mast or Yard. And in this our fight, the Admirall of the Spaniards had his Fore-mast shot through, with two round shot, some three yards beneath the head; had either of them entred but foure inches further into the heart of the Mast, without all doubt it had freed vs, and perhaps put them into our hands. The disaduantage of Ships to lee-ward. And the best remedie. Crosse-barre, and Chainshot misliked. The Spaniards Fore Mast thrice shot through.

The third day, in the after-noone, which was the two and twentieth of Iune, 1594. according to our computation, and which I follow in this my discourse, our sayles being torne, our Masts all perished, our Pumpes rent and shot to pieces, and our ship with fourteene shot vnder water, and seuen or eight foot of water in hold; many of our men being slaine, and the most part of them (which remained) sore hurt, and in a manner altogether fruitlesse, and the enemy offering still to receiue vs a buena querra, and to giue vs life and libertie, and imbarkation for our Countrey. Our Captaine, and those which remained of our Companie, were all of opinion that our best course was to surrender our selues before our ship sunke. And so by common consent agreed the second time, to send a seruant of mine Thomas Sanders, to signifie vnto mee the estate of our ship and company: and that it was impossible by any other way to expect for hope of deliuerance or life, but by the miraculous hand of God in vsing his Almightie power, or by an honourable surrender, which in euerie mans opinion was thought most conuenient. So was I desired by him to giue also my consent, that the Captaine might capitulate with the Spanish Generall, The Company againe importunate to come to composition.

rall, and to compound the beſt partido he could by ſurrendring our ſelues into his hands, vpon condition of life and libertie. This hee declared vnto mee, being in a manner void of ſence, and out of hope to liue or recouer: which conſidered, and the circumſtances of his relation, I anſwered as I could, that he might iudge of my ſtate, ready euery moment to giue vp the Ghoſt, and vnable to diſcerne in this cauſe what was conuenient, except I might ſee the preſent ſtate of the Ship. And that the honour or diſhonour, the wel-fare or miſery, was for them, which ſhould be partakers of life: At laſt, for that I had ſatisfaction of his valour and true dealing in all the time, he had ſerued me, and in correſpondence of it, had giuen him (as was notorious) charge and credit in many occaſions, I bound him, by the loue and regard he ought me, and by the faith and duetie to Almighty God, to tell me truely, if all were as he had declared. Whereunto he made anſwere, that he had manifeſted vnto me the plaine and naked truth, and that he tooke God to witneſſe of the ſame truth: with which receiuing ſatisfaction, I forced my ſelfe what I could, to perſwade him to animate his companions, and in my name to intreate the Captaine and the reſt to perſeuere in defence of their libertie, liues, and reputation, remitting all to his diſcretion: not doubting, but he would be tender of his duetie, and zealous of my reputation, in preferring his libertie, and the libertie of the Company aboue all reſpects whatſoeuer. As for the welfare hoped by a ſurrender, I was altogether vnlikely to be partaker thereof, Death threatning to depriue me of the benefit, which the enemie offered; but if God would be pleaſed to free vs, the ioy and comfort I ſhould receiue, might perhaps giue mee force and ſtrength to recouer health.

Which anſwere being deliuered to the Captaine, he preſently cauſed a flagge of truce to be put in place of our Enſigne, and began to parley of our ſurrendry with a Spaniard, which Don Beltran appointed for that purpoſe, from the poope of the Admirall, to offer in his name, the conditions before ſpecified; with his faithfull promiſe and oath, as the Kings Generall, to take vs a buena querra, and to ſend vs all into our owne Countrey. The promiſe he accepted, and ſaid, that vnder the ſame he yeelded, and ſurrendred himſelfe, Ship and Company. Immediately, there came vnto me another ſeruant of mine, and told me, that our Captaine had ſurrendred himſelfe and our Ship; which vnderſtood, I called vnto one Iuan Gomes de Pineda, a Spaniſh Pilot, which was our Priſoner, and in all the fight we had kept cloſe in hold, and willed him to goe to the Generall Don Beltran de Caſtro from me, to tell him, that if he would giue vs his word and oath, as the Generall of the King, and ſome pledge for confirmation, to receiue vs a buena querra, and to giue vs our liues and liberty, and preſent paſſage into our owne Countrey, that wee would ſurrender our ſelues, and Ship into his hands: Otherwiſe, that he ſhould neuer enioy of vs, nor ours, any thing, but a reſolution euery man to dye fighting.

With this Meſſage I diſpatched him, and called vnto me all my Company, and encouraged them to ſacrifice their liues fighting and killing the enemy, if hee gaue but a fillip to any of our companions. The Spaniards willed vs to hoiſe out our boate, which was ſhot all to peeces; and ſo was theirs. Seeing that he called to vs to amaine our ſailes, which wee could not well doe, for that they were ſlung, and we had not men enough to hand them. In this parley, the Vice-admirall comming vpon our quarter, & not knowing of what had paſt, diſcharged her two chaſe peeces at vs, and hurt our Captaine very ſore in the thigh, and maimed one of our Maſters Mates, called Hugh Maires, in one of his Armes, but after knowing vs to be rendred, he ſecured vs: And we ſatisfied them that we could not hoiſe out our boate, nor ſtrike our ſayles, the Admirall laid vs abourd, but before any man entred, Iohn Gomes went vnto the Generall, who receiued him with great curteſie, and asked him what we required; whereunto hee made anſwere that my demand was that in the Kings name, he ſhould giue vs his faith and promiſe, to giue vs our liues, to keepe the Lawes of faire warres and quarter, and to ſend vs preſently into our Countrey; and in confirmation hereof, that I required ſome pledge, whereunto the Generall made anſwere, that in the Kings Maieſties name his Maſter, he receiued vs a buena querra, and ſwore by God Almighty, and by the habit of Alcantara (whereof he had receiued Knighthood, and in token whereof, he wore in his breaſt a greene croſſe, which is the enſigne of that Order) that hee would giue vs our liues with good entreatie, and ſend vs as ſpeedily as he could into our owne Countrey. In confirmation whereof, he tooke off his gloue, and ſent it to me as a pledge.

The Engliſh ſurrender.

Gloue ſent for pledge.

With this meſſage Iohn Gomes returned, and the Spaniards entred and tooke poſſeſſion of our Ship, euery one crying buena querra, buena querra, oy por immaniana por ti: with which our Company began to ſecure themſelues.

The Generall was a principall Gentleman of the ancient Nobilitie of Spaine, and brother to the Conde de Lemos, whoſe intention no doubt was according to his promiſe; and therefore conſidering that ſome bad intreaty and inſolency might be offered vnto me in my Ship, by the common Souldiers, who ſeldome haue reſpect to any perſon in ſuch occaſions, eſpecially in the caſe I was, whereof he had enformed himſelfe; for preuention, he ſent a principall Captain, brought vp long time in Flanders, called Pedro Alueres de Pulgar, to take care of me, and whileſt the Ship were one abourd the other, to bring me into his Ship: which he accompliſhed with great humanity and courteſie; deſpiſing the barres of Gold which were ſhared before his face, which hee might alone haue enioyed, if he would: And truely he was, as after I found by triall, a true true Captaine; a man worthy of any charge, and of the noblest condition that I haue knowne any Spaniard.

The Generall receiued me with great courtesie and compassion, euen with teares in his eyes, and words of great consolation and commanded mee to bee accommodated in his owne Cabbine, where hee sought to cure and comfort mee the best hee could; the like hee vsed with all our hurt men, sixe and thirtie at least. And doubtlesse as true courage, valour, and resolution, it requisite in a Generall in the time of battell. So humanitie, mildnesse, and courtesie after victorie. The mildnesse of a Generall after victorie.

Whilest the ships were together, the Maine-mast of the Daintie fell by the boord, and the people being occupied in ransacking and seeking for spoile and pillage neglected the principall; whereof ensued, that within a short space the Daintie grew so deepe with water, which increased for want of preuention, that all who were in her desired to forsake her, and weaued and cried for succour to be saued, being out of hope of her recouerie. Whereupon, the Generall calling together the best experimented men hee had, and consulting with them what was best to bee done: it was resolued, that Generall Michael Angel should goe aboord the Daintie, and with him threescore Mariners, as many Souldiers; and with them the English men, who were able to labour to free her from water, and to put her in order if it were possible: and then to recouer Perico the Port of Panama for that of those to wind-wards it was impossible to turne vp to any of them, and neerer then to leward was not any that could supply our necessities and wants, which lay from vs East, North-east, aboue two hundred leagues. The Daintie in danger of perishing.

Michael Angel, being a man of experience and care accomplished that hee tooke in hand, although in cleering and bayling the water, in placing a pumpe, and in fitting and mending her Fore-saile he spent aboue six and thirtie houres. During which time the Ships lay all a hull; but this worke ended, they set saile and directed their course for the Iles of Pearles: And for that the Daintie sailed badly, what for want of her Maine-saile, and with the aduantage which all the South Sea ships haue of all those built in our North Sea. The Admirall gaue her a taw, which notwithstanding (the wind calming with vs as wee approached neerer to the Land) twelue daies were spent before wee could fetch sight of the Ilands, which lie alongst the Coast beginning some eight leagues West South-west from Panama, and run to the Southwards neere thirtie leagues. They are many and most inhabited, and those which haue people haue some Negros, slaues vnto the Spaniards, which occupie themselues in labour of the Land, or in fishing for Pearles. Michael Angel recouereth the ship. Many Ilands.

In times past many enriched themselues with that trade, but now it is growne to decay. The manner of fishing for Pearles is, with certaine long Pinnasses or small Barkes, in which there goe foure, fiue, six, or eight Negros, expert swimmers and great diuers, whom the Spaniards call Buzos, with tract of time, vse, and continuall practise, hauing learned to hold their breath long vnder water for the better atchieuing their worke. These throwing themselues into the Sea, with certaine instruments of their Art, goe to the bottome and seeke the Bankes of the Oysters in which the Pearles are ingendred, and with their force and Art remoue from their foundation, in which they spend more or lesse time, according to the resistance the firmnesse of the ground affordeth. Once losed, they put them into a bag vnder their armes, and after bring them vp into their Boats, hauing loaden it they goe to the shoare, there they open them and take out the Pearles: they lie vnder the vttermost part of the circuit of the Oyster in rankes and proportions, vnder a certaine part which is of many pleights and folds, called the Ruffe, for the similitude it hath vnto a Ruffe. The Pearles increase in bignesse, as they bee neerer the end or ioynt of the Oyster. The meate of those which haue these Pearles is milkie, and not verie wholsome to be eaten. In Anno 1583. in the Iland of Margarita, I was at the dregging of Pearle Oysters, after the manner we dreg Oysters in England, and with mine owne hands I opened many, and tooke out the Pearles of them; some greater, some lesse, and in good quantitie. Fishing for Pearles.

They are found in diuers parts of the world, as in the West Indies, in the South Sea, in the East Indian Sea, in the Straits of Magellane, and in the Scottish Sea. Those found neere the Poles are not perfect, but are of a thicke colour, whereas such as are found neere the line are most orient and transparent: the curious call it their water, and the best is a cleere white shining, with fierie flames. And those of the East India haue the best reputation, though as good are found in the West India: the choice ones are of great valew and estimation, but the greatest that I haue heard of, was found in these Ilands of Pearles; the which King Philip the second of Spaine, gaue to his daughter Elizabeth, wife to Albertus, Arch-Duke of Austria, and Gouernour of the States of Flanders, in whose possession it remaineth, and is called, la Peregrina, for the rarenesse of it, being as big as the pomell of a Poniard. The places where Pearle are found. Great Pearle.

In this Nauigation, after our surrender, the Generall tooke speciall care for the good intreatie of vs, and especially of those who were hurt. And God so blessed the hands of our Surgions (besides that they were expert in their Art) that of all our wounded men not one died, that was aliue the day after our surrendry, and many of them with eight, ten, or twelue wounds, and some with more. The thing that ought to moue vs to giue God Almightie especiall thankes and praises The Generall continueth his honourable vsage, towards the sicke and wounded.

was, that they were cured in a manner without Instruments or Salues: For the Chests were all broken to pieces; and many of their Simples and Compounds throwne into the Sea; those which remayned, were such, as were throwne about the ship in broken pots and bagges, and such as by the Diuine Prouidence were reserued, at the end of three dayes, by order from the Generall, were commanded to be sought and gathered together. These with some Instruments of small moment, bought and procured from those, who had reserued them to a different end, did not onely serue for our cures, but also for the curing of the Spaniards, beeing many more, then those of our Company. For the Spanish Surgeons were altogether ignorant in their profession, and had little or nothing wherewith to cure. And I haue noted, that the Spaniards in generall are nothing so curious, in accommodating themselues, with good and carefull Surgeons, nor to fit them with that which belongeth to their profession, as other Nations are, though they haue greater need then any, that I doe know.

Spanish Surgeons ignorant.

At the time of our surrender, I had not the Spanish Tongue, and so was forced to vse an Interpreter, or the Latine, or French; which holpe mee much for the vnderstanding of those, which spake vnto me in Spanish; together with a little smattering I had of the Portugall.

Through the Noble proceeding of Don Beltran with vs, and his particular care towards mee, in curing and comforting me, I began to gather heart, and hope of life, and health; my seruants which were on foot, aduised me ordinarily of that which past. But some of our enemies, badly inclined, repined at the proceedings of the Generall; and said, he did ill to vse vs so well; That we were Lutherans; and for that cause, the faith which was giuen vs, was not to be kept nor performed: Others, that we had fought as good Souldiers, and therefore deserued good quarter. Others, nicknamed vs with the name of Corsarios, or Pirats; not discerning thereby that they included themselues within the same imputation. Some were of opinion, that from Panama, the Generall would send vs into Spaine; Others said, that he durst not dispose of vs, but by order from the Vice-roy of Peru, who had giuen him his authoritie. This hit the naile on the had.

To all I gaue the hearing, and laid vp in the store-house of my memory, that which I thought to be of substance, and in the store-house of my consideration, endeauoured to frame a proportionable resolution to all occurrents, conformable to Gods most holy Will. Withall I profited my selfe of the meanes, which should bee offered, and beare greatest probabilitie to worke our comfort, helpe, and remedie. And so, as time ministred oportunitie, I began, and endeauoured to satisfie the Generall, and the better sort in the points I durst intermeddle. And especially to perswade (by the best reasons I could) that wee might bee sent presently from Panama: Alleaging the promise giuen vs, the cost and charges ensuing, which doubtlesse would bee such as deserued consideration and excuse: besides that, now whilest hee was in place, and power, and authoritie in his hands, to performe with vs, that he would looke into his honour, and profit himselfe of the occasion, and not put vs into the hands of a third person; who perhaps being more powerfull then himselfe, he might be forced to pray and intreate the performance of his promise; whereunto he gaue vs the hearing, and bare vs in hand, that he would doe, what he could.

Misprision of the terme Pirats.

What a Pirate is.

The Generall, and all in generall, not only in the Peru, but in all Spaine, and the Kingdomes thereof (before our surrendry) held all Englishmen of warre, to bee Corsarios, or Pirats; which I laboured to reforme, both in the Peru, and also in the Counsels of Spaine, and amongst the Chieftaines, Souldiers, and better sort, with whom I came to haue conuersation; Alledging that a Pirate, or Corsario, is he, which in time of peace, or truce spoyleth, or robbeth those, which haue peace or truce with them: but the English haue neither peace nor truce with Spaine, but warre; and therefore not to bee accounted Pirats. Besides, Spaine broke the peace with England, and not England with Spaine; and that by Ymbargo, which of all kinds of defiances, is most reproued, and of least reputation; The ransoming of prisoners, and that by the Canon, being more honorable, but aboue all, the most honorable is with Trumpet and Herald, to proclaime and denounce the warre by publike defiance. And so if they should condemne the English for Pirats, of force, they must first condemne themselues. Moreouer, Pirats are those, who range the Seas without licence of their Prince; who when they are met with, are punished more seuerely by their owne Lords, then when they fall into the hands of strangers: which is notorious to bee more seuerely prosecuted in England (in time of peace) then in any the Kingdomes of Christendome. But the English haue all license, either immediately from their Prince, or from other thereunto authorized, and so cannot in any sense be comprehended vnder the name of Pirats, for any hostilitie vndertaken against Spaine, or the dependancies thereof.

Three sorts of defiances.

The custome of Spaine for warre.

And so the state standing as now it doth, if in Spaine a particular man should arme a ship, and goe in warfare with it against the English, and happened to be taken by them: I make no question, but the company should be intreated according to that manner, which they haue euer vsed since the beginning of the warre: without making further inquisition. Then if he were rich or poore, to see if hee were able to giue a ransome, in this also they are not very curious. But if this Spanish ship should fall athwart his Kings Armado, or Gallies, I make no doubt but they would hang the Captaine and his company for Pirats. My reason is, for that by a speciall Law it is enacted: that no man in the Kingdomes of Spaine, may arme any ship, and goe in warfare, without the Kings speciall licence and commission; vpon paine to be reputed a Pirate, and to be chastized with the punishment due to Corsarios. In England the case is different, for the warre once proclamed, euery man may arme that will, and hath wherewith; which maketh for our greater encouragement, from being comprehended within the number of Pirats.

With these, and or like Arguments to the purpose (to auoid tediousnesse) I omit; I conuinced all those whom I heard to harpe vpon this string, which was of no small importance for our good entreatie, and motiues for many, to further and fauour the accomplishment of the promise lately made vnto vs.

One day after dinner (as was the ordinary custome) the Generall, his Captaines, and the better sort of his followers, being assembled in the Cabbin of the Poope in conference, an eager contention arose amongst them, touching the capitulation of Buena Querra and the purport thereof. Some said, that onely life and good entreatie of the prisoners, was to be comprehended therein; others enlarged, and restrained it, according to their humours and experience. In fine my opinion was required, and what I had seene, and knowne touching that point: wherein I pawsed a little, and suspecting the Worst, feared that it might be a baite laid to catch me withall, and so excused my selfe; saying, that where so many experimented Souldiers were ioyned together, my young iudgement was little to be respected; whereunto the Generall replied: That knowledge was not alwaies incident to yeeres, (though reason requireth, that the aged should be the wisest) but an Art acquired by action, and management of affaires. And therefore they would bee but certified, what I had seene, and what my iudgement was in this point, vnto which, seeing I could not well excuse my selfe, I condescended; and calling my wits together; holding it better, to shoot out my bolt, by yeelding vnto reason, (although I might erre) then to stand obstinate, my will being at warre with my consent, and fearing my denial might bee taken for discourtesie, which peraduenture might also purchase mee mislike with those, who seemed to wish mee comfort and restitution. I submitted to better iudgement, the reformation of the present assembly; saying, Sir, vnder the capitulation of Buena Querra, (or faire warres) I haue euer vnderstood, and so it hath beene obserued in these, as also in former times, that preseruation of life, and good entreatie of the prisoner, haue beene comprehended: and further by no meanes to bee vrged to any thing contrary to his conscience, as touching his Religion; nor to be seduced, or mouued from the allegeance due to his Prince and Country: but rather to ransome him for his moneths pay. And this is that which I haue knowne practised in our times, in generall amongst all Ciuill and Noble Nations. But the English, haue enlarged it one point more towards the Spaniards vnder a Buena Querra, in these warres; haue euer deliuered them, which haue beene taken vpon such compositions without ransome: but the couetousnesse of our age hath brought in many abuses, and excluded the principall Officers from partaking of the benefit of this priuiledge, in leauing them to the discretion of the Vulgar, being many times poorer then the common Souldiers, their qualities considered, whereby they are commonly put to more, then the ordinary ransome, and not being able of themselues to accomplish it, are forgotten of their Princes, and sometimes suffer long imprisonment, which they should not.

A disputation concerning Buena Querra.

The Resolution, &c.

The noble vsage of the English.

But a-used in these dayes.

With this, Don Beltran said, This ambiguitie you haue well resolued; And like a worthy Gentleman (with great courtesie and liberalitie) added; Let not the last point trouble you: but be of good comfort, for I beare giue you my word anew, that your ransome (if any shall be thought due) shall be but a couple of Grey-hounds for me; and other two for my Brother, the Conde de Lemes, And this I sweare to you by the habit of Alcantara. Prouided alwayes, that the King my Master leaue you to my disposse, as of right you belong vnto me.

Don Beltran satisfied and answereth.

For amongst the Spaniards in their Armadoes, if there bee an absolute Generall, the tenth of all is due to him, and he is to take choise of the best: where in other Countries, it is by lot, that the Generals tenth is giuen; And if they be but two ships, hee doth the like, and being but one, she is of right the Generals. This I hardly believed, vntill I saw a Letter, in which the King willed his Vice-roy, to giue Don Beltran thankes for our ship and Artillery, which hee had giuen to his Maiestie. I yeelded to the Generall, most heartie thankes for his great fauour, where with he bound me euer to seeke how to serue him, and deserue it.

In this discourse Generall Michaell Angell demanded, for what purpose serued the little short Arrowes, which we had in our ship, and those in so great quantitie: I satisfied them, that they were for our Muskets. They are not as yet in vse amongst the Spaniards, yet of singular effect and execution as our enemies confessed: for the vpper worke of their ships being Muskets proofe, in all places they passed through both sides with facilitie, and wrought extraordinary disasters, which caused admiration, to see themselues wounded with small shot, where they thought themselues secure; and by no meanes could find where they entred, nor come to the sight of any of the shot.

Short arrowes for Muskets.

Hereof they proued to profit themselues after, but for that they wanted the Tampkings, which are first to bee driuen home, before the Arrow bee put in, and as then vnderstood not the secret, they reiected them, as vncertaine, and therefore not to bee vsed, but of all the shot vsed now a dayes; for the annoying of an Enemie in fight by Sea, few are of greater moment for many respects: which I hold not conuenient to treate of in publike.

Tampkin is a small piece of wood turned fit for the mouth of a Peece.

A little to the South wards of the Iland of Pearle, betwixt seuen and eight degrees, is the great Riuer of Saint Buena Ventura. It falleth into the South Sea with three mouthes, the head of which which, is but a little distant from the North Sea. In the yeere 1575. or 1576. one Iohn Oxnam of Plimouth, going into the West Indies, ioyned with the Symarons. These are fugitiue Negroes, and for the bad intreatie which their Masters had giuen them, were then retired into the Mountaines, and liued vpon the spoyle of such Spaniards, as they could master, and could neuer bee brought into obedience, till by composition they had a place limited them for their freedome, where they should liue quietly by themselues. At this day they haue a great habitation neere Panama, called Saint Iago de los Negros, well peopled, with all their Officers and Commanders of their owne, saue onely a Spanish Gouernour.

What the Symarons are.

Their habitation.

Their assistance.

By the assistance of these Symarons, hee brought to the head of this Riuer, by piecemeale, and in many Iourneyes a small Pinnace, hee fitted it by time in warlike manner, and with the choice of his Companie, put himselfe into the South Sea, where his good happe, was to meete with a couple of shippes of trade, and in the one of them a great quantitie of Gold. And amongst other things two pieces of speciall estimation, the one a Table of massy Gold, with Emralds, sent for a present to the King; the other a Lady of singular beautie, married, and a mother of children. The latter grew to bee his perdition: for hee had capitulated with these Symarons, that their part of the bootie, should be onely the prisoners, to the end to execute their malice vpon them, such was the rancour they had conceiued against them, for that they had beene the Tyrants of their libertie.) But the Spaniards not contented to haue them their slaues; who lately had beene their Lords, added to their seruitude, cruell intreaties. And they againe to feede their insatiable reuenges, accustomed to roast and eate the hearts of all those Spaniards, whom at any time they could lay hand vpon.

Iohn Oxnam capitulateth with them,

His folly, and Breach of promise.

His pursuit.

Iohn Oxnam (I say) was taken with the loue of this Lady, and to winne her good will, what through her teares and perswasions, and what through feare and detestation of their barbarous inclinations; breaking promise with the Symarons, yeelded to her request, which was, to giue the prisoners libertie with their shippes; for that they were not vsefull for him: notwithstanding Oxnam kept the Lady, who had in one of the rescued shippes, either a Sonne, or a Nephew. This Nephew with the rest of the Spaniards, made all the haste they could to Panama, and they vsed such diligence, as within few houres, some were dispatched to seeke those, who little thought so quickly to bee ouertaken. The pursuers approaching the Riuer, were doubtfull by which of the afore-remembred three mouthes, they should take their way. In this wauering one of the Souldiers espied certaine feathers, &c.

See the Storie before. This is added of later intelligence.

Comming in sight of the Ilands of Pearles, the winde beganne to fresh in with vs, and wee profited our selues of it: but comming thwart of a small Iland, which they call La Pacheta, that lieth within the Pearle Ilands, close aboord the Mayne, and some eight or tenne leagues South and by West from Panama, the winde calmed againe.

La Pacheta.

This Iland belongeth to a priuate man, it is a round hummocke, containing not a league of ground, but most fertile. Insomuch that by the owners industrie, and the labour of some few slaues, who occupie themselues in manuring it; and two Barkes, which he employeth in bringing the fruit it giueth, to Panama; it is said to be worth him euery weeke, one with another, a barre of siluer; valued betwixt two hundreth and fiftie, or three hundreth Pezos; which in English money, may amount to fiftie or threescore pounds: and for that, which I saw at my being in Panama, touching this, I hold to be true.

In our course to fetch the Port of Panama, we put our selues betwixt the Ilands and the Main: which is a goodly Channell, of three, foure, and fiue leagues broad, and without danger; except a man come too neere the shoare on any side; and that is thought the better course, then to goe a Sea-boord of the Ilands, because of the swift running of the tides, and the aduantage to stop the ebbe: As also for succour, if a man should happen to be becalmed at any time beyond expectation; which happeneth sometimes.

The seuenth of Iuly wee had sight of Perico; they are two little Ilands, which cause the Port of Panama, where all the shippes vse to ride; It is some two Leagues West North-west of the Citie, which hath also a Pere in it selfe for small Barkes, at full Sea, it may haue some sixe or seuen foot water, but at lowe water, it is drie.

The Generall certifieth the Audiencia of his successe. The great ioy of the Spaniards.

The ninth of Iuly wee anchored vnder Perico, and the Generall presently aduised the Audiencia, of that which had succeeded in his Iourney: which vnderstood by them, caused Bonfires to be made, and euery man to put Luminaries in their houses; the fashion is much vsed amongst the Spaniards in their feasts of ioy, or for glad tidings; placing many lights in their Churches, in their windowes, and Galleries, and corners of their houses; which being in the beginning of the night, and the Citie close by the Sea-shoare, shewed to vs (being farre off) as though the Citie had beene on a light fire.

About eight of the clocke all the Artilerie of the Citie was shot off, which wee might discerne by the flash of fire, but could not heare the report: yet the Armado being aduised thereof, and in a readinesse, answered them likewise with all their Artilerie: which taking end (as all the vanities of this earth doe) The Generall setled himselfe to dispatch aduice for the King, for the Vice-roy of Peru, and the Vice-roy of Noua Spania, for hee also had had beene certified of our being in that Sea, and had fitted an Armado to seeke vs, and to guard his coast.

But now for a farewell, (and note it) Let mee relate vnto you this Secret; How Don Beltran shewed mee a Letter from the King his Master, directed to the Vice-roy, wherein hee gaue him particular relation of my pretended Voyage; of the shippes; their burden; their munition; their number of men, which I had in them, as perfectly as if hee had seene all with his owne eyes; Saying vnto mee: Hereby you may discerne, whether the King my Master haue friends in England, and good and speedy aduice of all that passeth. Whereunto I replyed; It was no wonder, for that hee had plenty of Gold and Siluer, which worketh this and more strange effects: for my Iourney was publique and notorious to all the Kingdome, whereunto he replyed, that if I thought it so conuenient, leaue should be giuen me to write into England to the Queens Maiestie my Mistresse, to my Father, and to other personages, as I thought good; and leauing the Letters open; that hee would send some of them, in the Kings Packet, others to his Vncle Don Rodrigo de Castro, Cardinall and Archbishop of Seuill, and to other friends of his: Not making any doubt but that they would bee speedily in England. For which I thanked him, and accepted his courtesie, and although I was my selfe vnable to write, yet by the hands of a seruant of mine, I wrote three or foure copies of one Letter to my Father, Sir Iohn Hawkins. In which I briefly made relation of all that had succeeded in our Voyage.

Note. English treachery procured by Spanish Gold.

I haue this Letter translated into Spanish, and printed by them; together with the discourse of the whole action, much agreeing with this, except where they lust to magnifie their Spanish worth.

The Dainty, named the Visitation.

The dispatches of Spaine and New Spaine, went by ordinarie course in ships of aduice; but that for the Peru was sent by a kinsman of the Generals, called Don Francisco de la Cuena. Which being dispatched, Don Beltran hasted all that euer he could, to put his ships in order, to returne to Lima. Hee caused the Daintie to be grounded and trimmed, for in those Ilands it higheth and falleth some fifteene or sixteene foot water.

And the Generall with his Captaines, and some Religious men being aboord her, and new naming her, named her the Visitation; for that shee was rendred on the day, on which they celebrate the Visitation of the Virgin Marie. In that place the ground being plaine, and without vantage (whereby to helpe the tender sided and sharpe Ships) they are forced to shoare them on either side. In the middest of their solemnitie, her props and shores of one side fayled and so shee fell ouer vpon that side suddenly, intreating many of them (which were in her) very badly, and doubtlesse had shee beene like the ships of the South Sea, shee had broken out her bulge: but being without Masts and emptie (for in the South Sea, when they bring aground a shippe, they leaue neither Mast, Balast, nor any other thing aboord, besides the bare Hull) her strength was such, as it made no great showe to haue receiued any damage, but the feare shee put them all into was not little, and caused them to runne out of her faster then a pace.

In these Ilands is no succour, nor refreshing; onely in the one of them is one house of straw, and a little spring of small moment. For the water which the Shippes vse for their prouision, they fetch from another Iland, two leagues West North-west of these; which they call Tabaga, hauing in it some fruit and refreshing, and some few Indians to inhabite it.

What succeeded to mee, and to the rest during our Imprisonment, with the rarities and particularities of the Peru, and Tierra firme, my Voyage to Spaine, and the successe, with the time I spent in prison in the Peru, in the Tercera, in Seuill, and in Madrid, with the accidents which befell mee in them; I leaue for a second part of this discourse, if God giue life, and conuenient place and rest, necessarie for so tedious and troublesome a worke: desiring God that is Almightie, to giue his blessing to this and the rest of my intentions: that it and they may be fruitfull, to his glorie; and to the good of all: then shall my desires bee accomplished, and I account my selfe most happie. To whom be all glory, and thankes from all eternitie.

A briefe Note written by Master IOHN ELLIS, one of the Captaines with Sir RICHARD HAWKINS, in his Voyage through the Strait of MAGELAN, begunne the ninth of April, 1593. concerning the said Straite, and certaine places, on the coast and Inland of Peru.

THE second of Februarie, 1593. wee fell with the Land of Terra Australis, in 50. degrees fiftie fiue leagues off the Straite of Magelan, which Land lay East and by North, or East North-east from the Straite, which is a part of Terra Australis: from which Land wee entred the Straite vpon the West South-west course: then we ran ten leagues West North-west, other ten leagues West South-west, then eight leagues South-west, and came to an anchor on the starboord side, in a hooke where you may moore any ship in twelue fathomes water. From thence wee ranne South-west and by Then Weſt North-weſt ſixteene leagues, where we anchored in good riding. Then North-weſt and by Weſt, till wee came to the Riuer of Genenera, on the ſtarboord ſide eight leagues. After wee were come out of the Straite wee went away North-weſt and by North fortie leagues into the Sea: then North, vntill wee came to the Iland of Mocha, which is in thirtie eight degrees and thirtie minutes, where we had good trade with the People. This Ile is three leagues long, where great reliefe, of Mutton, Maiz, and other things may bee had from the Indians. This Ile is twelue leagues from the mayne Land. From thence wee went North, and paſt by the Ile of Saint Marie: from thence vnto Valparaiſo, which ſtandeth in thirtie three degrees, into which Hauen I went with our Boate, and tooke foure ſhippes, in which wee had Wines, and other good prouiſion: and there wee remayned the ſpace of twelue dayes. And in this time I went on ſhoare, and tooke fiue houſes, which were full of Wine, and other good things: And in this time there came a ſhippe by the Harbour, which the Generall went to take, but hee did not: yet I with twelue men did take her, and within one houre the Generall came to vs. The ſhippe had clothes of Cotton for men to weare, of the Indian making, and ſome Gold.

Valparaiſo is a Port and a [illegible] in the bottome of the Bay, where they make excellent Wine. From thence eighteene leagues into the Land is Saint Iago, a great Towne of Spaniards. From thence wee paſſed to Arica, which is in twentie degrees, as I take it. All this Coaſt lieth North and South. From thence wee paſſed to Piſco and Chincha, where the Generall, and the Maſter Hugh Corniſh, went to goe on ſhoare, but they did not. Heere wee met with ſixe of the Kings ſhippes, which came to ſeeke vs: but at that time wee eſcaped them. Theſe places are in fourteene degrees and an halfe. From thence wee paſſed by the Citie of Lima, which is in twelue degrees and an halfe. From thence by Paita, which is an Hauen, and a Towne, and ſtandeth in fiue degrees. From thence wee paſſed by the Equinoctiall Line, and went to Atacame, where wee were taken, the two and twentieth of Iune, 1594. This place is in one degree to the Northward of the Line. There is from thence ſome eight leagues, a Bay called, The Bay of Saint Matthew. From thence wee were carried vnto Panama, which is in nine degrees to the Northward of the Line: where wee were held Priſoners. From Panama wee were returned to Paita, and ſo to Lima. Lima is neere as bigge as London within the walls: the houſes are of Lome baked, for want of Stone. There are neere twentie thouſand Negros in Lima. There are in it of Horſemen an hundred Launces, and an hundred Carbiners, at a thouſand Ducats a man by the yeere. From Lima I went to Guamanga, which is a good Citie ſixtie leagues from Lima, to the South-eaſt. Twelue leagues from Lima Eaſtward it raineth, but neuer at Lima. Twentie leagues more Southerly, towards Guamanga, at Paricaca, which is a Mountaine, it is as cold as in England in our Winter: But none will dwell there, becauſe of the cold. Then is the Valley of Chooſa hauing Hills on both ſides, and a Riuer in the middeſt. The Valley is eighteene leagues long, and well peopled, and hath diuers Townes: it is fortie leagues from Lima, and ſo through that I trauelled to Guamanga.

Cuſco. From Guamanga wee paſſed towards Cuſco on hard wayes cut out of the Rockes by Guamacapo, with great difficultie by the wayes there are Tambos or houſes to lodge people, and ſome Villages. Then wee came to Cuſco, which is a Citie about the bigneſſe of Briſtow, without a wall, hauing a Caſtle halfe a mile off on the ſide of an Hill, builded with ſtones of twentie tuns weight ſtrangely ioyned without morter. From Lima they trade to Cuſco all that comes out of Spaine. They of Quito trade to Cuſco, with wollen Cloth and Cottons: for Quito hath abundance of ſheepe about it, and is a great Citie. They driue ſheepe to Lima twentie thouſand in a Flocke, and be halfe a yeere in the Paſſage.

Potoſi. Betweene Cuſco and Potoſi there is continuall trade, and the Lords or Caciques of the Naturals will entertaine you in the way, feed you in Siluer veſſell, and giue you very good lodging, and if they like you, they will guide you with three or foure hundred Indians.

In Potoſi there are at worke neere an hundred thouſand Indians, which the Caciques bring in for ſo many dayes to worke the Mynes; and then other Caciques bring in as many more.

Maſter Lucas ſonne to Maſter Tho. Lucas. I haue alſo two Letters written by Thomas Sanders ſeruant to Sir Richard Hawkins, written to Sir Iohn Hawkins out of the priſon of Saint Lucar; in one of which hee maketh a large relation of their Voyage and taking (which is here needleſſe to reiterate) with mention of one Maſter Lucas, condemned by the Holy Houſe to the Gallies, and ſent to Nombre de Dios, in which Voyage hee died: out of

of the other I haue hither added this transcript touching the vsage and respect which Sir Richard Hawkins found in Peru.

I wrote in like sort of my Masters health, and of his entertaynment in his taking, and in the Citie of Lima by the Vice-king of the Countrey, and how hee was beloued for his valour, by all braue men in those parts, the which I learned by many which came from thence, as well rich as poore, and many Negroes, seruants to Merchants, which came from thence, and were there when hee came. Hee was receiued by all the best in the Countrie, carried by them to a Princely house all richly hanged, the which hee had to himselfe, with a great allowance from the King, besides many presents from the Queene: but within sixe or seuen dayes hee was carried by the Fathers to the Holy House, not as a man to be executed, but to rest there vntill they heard from the King what should be done with them. &c. This is part of another Letter.

Hauing occasion here to mention Sir Iohn Hawkins, I thought good, in memorie of his name, to expresse a Pardon from the Spanish King Philip the second, to him, and to the Master George Fitzwilliams, and the rest of their companie, both for the forme thereof, (being here printed from the Originall, superscribed and subscribed with the Kings owne hand) and to shew the strict prohibition of Trade in the Indies.

Chap. VII.

A briefe Relation of an * Engliſhman which had beene thirteene yeeres Captiue to the Spaniards in Peru, &c.

* I found this paper amongſt others of Maſter Hakl. without the name of the Author.

THe eleuenth of October, 1602. we departed from the Citie of Lyma, and that day wee ſet ſayle from the Calloa, in the Contadora, Captaine Andrea Brocho. The fifteenth of October wee came into Payta, and there watered, and tooke in freſh victuals: and ſet ſayle from thence the foure and twentieth of the ſame, for Mexico, 1602.

Lima.

Payta.

The fourteenth of December we came to an anchor in Acapulca, we were becalmed in 17. degrees and an halfe, foure and twentie dayes, and were ſet with the current into 23. degrees to the Northward, we came all the coaſt alongſt from Colyma and Nauydad to Acapulca. The twentieth of December we came from Acapulca, with ſixe Mules: and on Chriſtmas Day in the morning we came to Zumpanga, a Towne of Indians, where wee remayned all that day being betweene this Towne and Acapulca thirtie leagues, no Towne betwixt. The laſt of December wee came to Querna vaca a Towne in the Marqueſado of Hernan Cortes, thirteene leagues from Mexico.

Acapulca.

Zumpanga.

The firſt of Ianuarie we came into the great Citie of Mexico, where we remayned vntill the ſeuenteenth, at which time we came from Mexico, in the euening, and came two leagues that night. The next day we came to Irazing, which is ſeuen leagues from Mexico, where wee remayned two dayes. The fiue and twentieth of Ianuarie wee came to Pueblo de los Angeles, paſſing in our way the Vulcan being from Mexico twentie leagues, and thorow Chullula. The thirtieth of Ianuarie I went to Atrizco, where we were ſixe dayes, being fiue leagues from Mexico.

Mexico.

Atrizco.

The ſixteenth of Februarie we came from the Pueblo de los Angelos, with fourteene Carts, fiue or ſixe temes of Oxen in a Cart, for to come to the Citie of Vera cruz.

Angeles.

Vera Cruz.

The ſeuenth of March, 1603. wee came into the Vera cruz, the new Towne, where wee remayned vntill the eight of Aprill, ſtaying for a ſhip of aduiſe.

Tueſday the eight of Aprill, we ſet ſayle from Saint Iuo de Vllua, in a Barque of aduiſe called, the Saint Lazaro, the Captaines name was Diego Garces, being of the burden of thirtie tunnes, the Pilot named Diego Vyedall, we were eight and twentie perſons. 1603. The nine and twentieth of Aprill we had ſight of the Martyrs, and were in two fathomes water, off them we ſaw no more nor no other, while we fell with Alla Rocha in Barbarie, which was the 14. of Iune.

Saint I. de Vllua.

The ſixteenth of Iune wee had ſight of Chiprone, and Cales, that night we came into S. Lucar. The ſeuenteenth of Iune in the morning, the Kings Officers came aboord of vs for the Kings Letters, and the Letters of the Mexico Fleet: where I heard newes of our good Queene Elizabeths death, and our King Iames his comming to the Crowne in peace. Heere I was diſcharged, and had my libertie giuen me, ſo I went to Syuill the nineteenth day, where I remayned vntill the one and twentieth of September: at which time I came to Wellua in the Condado.

The fift of Nouember I came from Wellua in the George of London. Maſter Iuano Whery, the ſhip was Maſter Hangers. I arriued at the Reculluers the ſeuenth of December, 1603. being ſince my departure from England thirteene yeeres and nine moneths of captiuitie for the which the Lord be praiſed, and make me thankfull all the dayes of my life. Amen.

Chap. VIII.

The Relation of Alexandro Vrsino concerning the coaſt of Terra Firma, and the ſecrets of Peru, and Chili, where he had liued foure and thirtie yeeres.

THe firſt Towne inhabited of the Spaniards is Saint Iohn in the Ile of Porto ricco, it is a very poore Towne. They haue no Bread, but in ſtead thereof they vſe a certaine Roote called Cazane. There is in the Towne about ſixtie Spaniards, and a Fort. In Saint Domingo there is a very ſtrong Fort with aboue eightie great Peeces of Ordnance. It is one of the faireſt Cities in all the Indies: there are aboue ſeuen hundred Spaniards in it. It is a Biſhoprike. There is next the Towne of Monte Chriſto, wherein there are about eightie Spaniards. There is a ſmall Fort. Then Ocoa, which is a very good Port, where the Fleete both comming and going, doe put in for freſh water and wood, and other neceſſaries. Then Porto de Plata, a ſmall Towne, with a little Fort, about ſeuentie or eightie Spaniards. Porto Reale, a diſhabited Towne, but a very good Port. There is nothing elſe in the Ile of Spagnola, of any importance. There are aboue 22000. Negros, men and women, ſlaues.

Saint Domingo.

From

From Saint Domingo to Iamaica, an hundred leagues in this Ile there is but one Towne, which standeth three leagues within the Land. There are in it about fiftie Spaniards. In all these places they make Sugar in great abundance, but especially at Saint Domingo there are aboue eightie Ingenios, or Sugar-houses. They haue neither Siluer, nor Gold. They eate of the foresaid Roote for Bread in euery place. The Ile of Spaniola is inhabited onely by the Spaniards, there is not one Naturall of the Country. Iamaica. Not one naturall in Hispaniola.

From Iamaica to Cartagena one hundred leagues. This Cartagena is a faire Citie, a very strong Fort in the Hauen mouth and Artilerie in three parts of the Towne. A Bishoprike. They haue neither Siluer nor Gold: there are about 150. Spaniards. Next to this is Tulu inhabited of the Spaniards about some or fiftie: it is eighteene leagues from Cartagena alongst the coast. Cartagena.

Then Santa Martha, a Citie with a small Fort, about 100. Spaniards: there they gather great quantity of Gold. Very fine: they are a fierce people. Santa Martha is fiftie leagues from Cartagena longst the same coast. Vpon the same coast is Nombre de dios about seuentie leagues from Cartagena, they haue no Fort but vpon the hauen side: there lyeth foure peeces of Artillary: there are in it about sixtie Spaniards. It is vnder the gouernment of Panama. Then Veragua, about seuentie or eightie Spaniards: they gather great store of Gold aboue a million and a halfe yearely. Vpon the same coast about one hundred leagues from Veragua, lieth a towne called Costa rica, inhabited onely of the naturalles: they gather great store of Gold. Saint Martha. Nombre de dios. Veragua. Costa rica.

Ouer against Nombre de Dios on the other Sea of Sur lyeth the Citie of Panama, eighteene leagues distant from thence: there is an Audience, and a President, and an Archbishop: there are about foure hundred Spaniards: it is a very rich towne, full of treasure: all the Gold and Siluer that commeth out of these parts into Spaine, commeth by that towne: they haue no Fort but foure peeces of Ordinance onely vpon the Hauen; but to returne to the coast of the ocean Sea. From Cartagena Eastwards there is a Riuer called Rio de Labache, vpon this Riuer a prettie towne, with two hundred Spaniards, where is gathered great abundance of Pearle, about one million euery yeare: there is a little Fort. Panama.

A little beyond that you come to Boxeme, which is in the gouernment of Valenzuola, and Barbarusa, three leagues within land. Then Coro fiue leagues within land. Then Margarita with a strong Fort, in all these places is gathered most fine Gold. Nombre de Dios, Cartagena, Santa Martha, Tulu, Rio de Labache, Veragua, Barbarusa, these haue bin spoiled two or three times by the Frenchmen. Venesuela.

Margarita is the vtmost Towne of the Spaniards vpon that coast, from whence passing into the Countrie, about foure dayes iourney we came to Granada, a towne in the gouernment of Valenzuola, from thence to Trugillo, which is the vtmost towne of that Prouince. So to Villetta, where beginneth the Nueua Reyno di Granada, Vele Pampelona, Ocagna, Tunza, a proper Citie with foure hundred Spaniards. Santa Fe del Nueuo Regno di Granada, the principall Citie of the Kingdome, fiue hundred Spaniards: an Archbishop, a President, and an Audientia; Tocayma, Ayunge, Cartago, Arma, Caramanta, Santa Fe di Antiochia, Anzerma, Cali, Buga, Popaya, a gouernment. Aymage, Mocoa, Scanza, Timana, La Plata, Neua, Pasto. The end of the new Kingdome of Granada. In all these Cities is gathered great abundance of Gold. Granada.

Quito the first Citie of the Kingdome of Peru. There is a President, an Audience, and a Bishop. Riobamba, the Gouernment of the Squisos, Auila, Baeza, Acedenia, Tomibamba, Guaiaquill a Port towne in Mar del Sur, la Punta di Santa Helena, Porto, vieio in Spanish, Manta in Indian, Paita, Port Townes. Cosibamba. The gouernment of Iohn di Salina, Sarigra, Saint Iacomo de las Valles, Santa Maria de las neues, Valladolid, Combinama, Zaem, in these six townes is gathered the greatest quantitie of Gold and the finest of all the Country of Peru. Chachapoia, Moiobamba, Guanico vpon the Sea, Malabrigo, the port of Trugillo. Trugillo is two leagues within the port of Reque, Santa, Casma, Guagnara, Chancas, Lama, Caguette, Ica, Camana, (Aerquipa, Quilca and Chuli, ports of Arequipa) Arica, all these are vpon the Sea coast of Peru, Guamanga and Guancauallica, where they gather all the Quick-siluer aboue fiue millions euery yeare: the Citie of Cusco, the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome of Peru, Choguiago, Choquisaca, Potossi, and Porco, where all the Siluer is gathered in the Kingdome of Peru. And this is the end of the Kingdome of Peru. In the Prouince of Tuquema, subiect to Peru, Tuquema the principall Citie of the Prouince. Saint Iacomo de las Torres, Artian, Calchaqui. In the Prouince of Chirriguana, subiect to Peru. Santa cruze de la Sera. In the Prouince of Chili alongst the coast; Tarapaqua, Ilo, Copiape, Coquimba, la Serena, S. Iacomo, La conception, Cuyo, la Imperiala, Paraiso, Valdiuia, Ozorno. From Margarita or Barburata to Santa Fe del nueuo regno di granada is 300. leagues by land, the ordinary way. From Santa Fe to Quito 250. leagues. From Quito to Lima 300. leagues. From Lima to Choguisaca, or Potossi, or Porco 300. leagues. From Potossi to Copiapo chiefe Citie of Chili 500. leagues. And these are ordinary trauailed waies. Quito. Tucuma. Chili.

There are in Potossi and Porco 300. mines of the Spaniards, and 5000. of the Indians. The Siluer that is for the King (which is supposed to be two millions) and all the rest that is sent into Spaine is brought vpon Sheepes backes vnto Arica or Port of Peru from thence by Sea into Lima. A Sheepe will carry 100. li. three leagues in one day. Potosi and Porco.

Digitized by Google

The Gold that is gathered in Chili, the Kings part which is about a million, and of others a million and a halfe is brought by Sea vnto Lima. All the Gold and Siluer that comes to Lima is about twelue millions, from thence it comes to Panama, from Panama by land to Nombre de Dios, from thence by Sea to Cartagena. The Gold that comes out of the new Kingdome of Granada and the Prouince of Iohn di Salina is brought by a Riuer to Cartagena. So that at Cartagena there is laden out of those parts for Spaine euery yeare of the Kings about fiue millions, and as much of other Merchants.

Fiue millions laden at Cartagena yearely the Kings, and as much of other Merchants

In all the Country of Chili there are not aboue 1300. Spaniards. In Arica 100. Spaniards. Arequipa is 17. leagues distant from Chuli or Quilca the ports: it hath about 200. Spaniards. In Lima 1000. Spaniards. In Scutu 100. Spaniards. In Trugillo 200. it is a very wealthy towne (the Port of it Malabrigo two leagues from Trugillo. The Citie of Cusco is bigger then Rome: there is a Bishop and about 1000. Spaniards. They haue the Inquisition in Lima. In Paita which is the harborough for all the Fleete for fresh prouision: there are 100. men. Porto Viejo, is also another harborough where the Fleete taketh in fresh victuals. There are not three Spaniards in the towne, but about fiue leagues off there is a small towne called Manta, where there are but 50. Spaniards. In Panama 400. In February the Siluer comes from Potosi and Peru to Lima: about the same time the Ships returne from Chili to Lima with Gold.

Arequipa.

Cusco.

In Aprill they set forth from Lima foure Ships, and in fifteene dayes they arriue at Panama. From the point Saint Helen to Copaga it neuer raineth: this dry tract extendeth from the Sea coast into the Country in some places 40. miles, in some places 50. and in sundry parts of the Country it is so hot that no man can endure it, and within fiue miles of that place so cold againe, that it is inough to kill any man. This strange tract extends 1200. leagues. In the Citie of Lima and Trugillo there grow Oranges, Pomgranets, Citrons and Melons, bigger farre then those of these parts.

La Loma de Camana is a very fertile soile, yeelding abundance of grasse, which beginneth at Camana and passeth by Quilca towards Chuli eighteene leagues from Camana. The same Loma, is in some part within a mile of the Sea and in some other places a league off from the Sea. The same Loma is in breadth in some places halfe a league, and in other places a league, which is the greatest breadth that it beareth.

Betweene this Loma de Camana and the Sea, is nothing growing but barren sands and stones. And within the said Loma, is also barren for the space of eight or ten leagues. And in all the said circuit both of the Loma, and from it to the Sea, and also in towards the land the said distance of eight or ten leagues it neuer raineth. But farder into the Land where the hils and mountaines are, there it raineth and sometimes snoweth.

Santa Fe de Bogota, is the Mother Citie of the New Kingdome of Granada, an Archbishops See, and of the Chamber. Muso is subiect to it, where is store of the best Emeralds taken out of a rocke, which a long time cannot waste. The fifth thereof is of inestimable value to the King. An Indian found there a stone which was sent to King Phillip, and his daughter Clara Eugenia, the price whereof was aboue all price, nor could the Goldsmiths value it. In Saint Iuan de los llanos are men with white faces. In all the Kingdome the townes are very frequent. There are aboue 14000. Negros which worke in the Mines there.

Emeralds.

14000. Negros.

In Quito two things are deere, Wine, which is worth eight Rials a quart, if brought from Lima, and twelue from Spaine: and Asses, of which one hath beene worth 1500. Pesos, and that for the store of Mares in those parts. It is a prouerbe, What is deerest in Quito? An Asse. In Lima no houses are couered with roofes, bee they neuer so large, because they neuer haue raine. No Citie in India is richer then it.

Wine and Asses deare. Quito. Lima.

Out of Potosi are yeerely gathered great treasures. Ouer the top of this Mountaine alway hangs a cloud, euen in the cleerest dayes, as it were marking and pointing out the riches thereof. It riseth in forme of a Pyramis, three leagues high, enuironed with cold ayre. At the foot is the Citie Potosi, inhabited by twentie thousand Spanish men, and ten thousand women, as many Negroes and foure thousand Indians. Within six leagues about is no pasture of grasse, so that to it, Wood, and Corne are brought from other places. The entrance and Myne-workes are so dangerous, dangerous, what they which goe in, vse to take the Sacrament of the Altar, as if they went to their death, because few returne. The Earle of Villar made a proclamation, that all the Indians should haue leaue and libertie to labour in this Myne, and to haue foure Rialls a day for each mans worke, which they were before forced to doe for nothing; since which the King hath receiued greater profit. The King receiueth thence yeerely eight or ten millions of Siluer. The metalls lie two hundred Stades * (or mans heights) beneath the earth. Raine is very needfull for the Myne-workes, which vsually falls about Christmasse. Then the President of Charcas comes thither (as alsoe to haue care of the Quick-siluer) that in Februarie and March they may be readie for Lima. Chile hath two Bishoprickes, of Chile and Saint Iago. It brings forth the fruits of Castile, greater then Spaine it selfe. There are many Gold Mynes, if the Auracan Indians could be compelled to the workes, which doe our men great harmes. I went into Chile from Peru, and thence returned to Quito.

Potasi and the Mines.

* The Latine word is Stadia, which in ordinary sense were 25. miles.

Auracanes not subiect.

Mexico is as great as Siuill. There dwell in it three thousand Spaniards, many more women; two hundred thousand Indians, twentie thousand Negros. The Natiues are capable of Arts and Discipline. They very much honour Priests, Monkes, and Regulars, and when the Bell rings to Sermon, the Indian Boyes run vp and downe the streets crossing their fore-heads. When they goe out of the Church, they cry, Blessed be our Lord Iesus Christ, and blessed bee his Mother Saint Marie; the Priest answeres, For euer, and they, Amen. They are liberall Almes-giuers; to mee saying Masse, I remember they gaue an hundred Duckets. D. Martin Cortez Marquesse of the Valle, was author of this reuerence to Priests by his owne example, which would stand still bare headed, till a Priest were past, and sometimes would goe forth to meet him and kisse his hand. In New Spaine is such store of cattell, that one man often kills one thousand Beeues, and as many Goates, and sends their hides into Spaine. The Magurie tree or Cabuya yeelds Wine, Vineger, Hony, Beds, Threads, Needles (out of the prickles of the leaues) Tables and hafts of Kniues, besides many medicinable vses. From Mexico to Acapulpo the Hauen on the South Sea, are ninetie leagues, and well inhabited.

The Vice-roy is President at the Court at Lima, and Gouernor and Captaine Generall of that Territory, and of Charcas and Quito. He hath fortie thousand Duckets salary, and the charges of Warre are paid by the King. The Territory of Lima containeth in circuit three hundred leagues. Callao is the Port, two leagues from Lima, the chiefe in all the South Sea, where the Vice-roy vseth to abide much for furnishing the Fleets which carry the treasure.

The Mynes of Oruro are giuen ouer for want of Quick-siluer, or as some say, lest the Inhabitants of Potosi should remoue thither. Guancuelica hath rich Siluer Mynes, which yeerely yeeld eight thousand Quintals. But some Mountaines falling haue stopped the myninges. Saint Francis of Quito is vnder the line very temperate, three hundred leagues from Lima. There is a Chancery, Bishop, Deane, and Vniuersitie. The Territory of this Court extends two hundred and sixtie leagues. Neere the Citie are many burning Hills.

Saint Philip of Austria.

There is a twofold gouernment in the Indies, one of Spaniards, which is the same with that of Spaine; the other of Indians. The Spaniards in these parts neither plow the ground, nor worke in the Mynes, especiall there where they are accounted gentlemen. Scarcely shal you find any Spanish youth, which will betake himselfe to the seruice of any man, except the Vice-roy. They trade with Merchandise, are set ouer the Kings Rents, Garrisons, and Myners.

Spaniards life.

The Indians are base minded. They solemnize the Feasts of the Sacrament, Easter, and Midsomerday, with Dances, Musicke, Processions, and in the Temples religiously. On Mandy Thursday they are all chastised. In guilds they are obseruant. On a certaine day they are compelled to render account of all their goods and possessions. They procure Masses at Funeralls. They are generally wittie, liers, and strong drinkers. They will drinke two or three dayes together closly, and sometimes a whole weeke. Their Feasts are like the Negros with songs and dances. With these Rites they say they pray for the dead. They neuer make an end, till they haue spent all, and then they returne to their labours. They are very expert in the Arts which they learne, although it be writing or reading, which yet is not granted them to learne. They pay yeerely to their Gouernours a certaine tribute of Siluer and other things, after they are eighteene yeeres old, till fiftie. The Commendator receiueth these things, conditionally to maintaine a Priest and a Corrigidor, and to pay the tenths to the Church. This and other places are there giuen for two liues, the sonne or eldest daughter succeeding. The Corrigidors amongst the Indians are prohibited merchandise. A Visitor is appointed in euery Court to goe to the places of that Precinct to enquire of affaires, and to decide controuersies.

A Councell celebrated at Lima, 1583. in the third Session, Chap. 22. approued of the Pope and our King, decreed that whersoeuer one thousand Indians are found together, a Teacher and Priest should be set ouer them. The Indians Priests vse at the Kings charges to carrie with them many religious men: and the Iesuites by the supreme Councell of India, with aduise of the BB. are commanded to send many thither for the Bishops assistance.

The third and fourth part are diuided into nine shares called Ninths, of which two returne to the King, and are bestowed on the buildinge of Cathedrall Churches; another ninth and halfe on the Fabrickes, another ninth and halfe on the Hospitall buildings; the fourth remayning are paid to the Vicars, Singers, Organists and other Church Officers. The Bishopricke of Cusco is 200. leagues long and 70. broad: that of Lima is greater by the one halfe, as is that also of Quito. Whereupon the Bishops of the New World writ to the King that it were better to make them more Bishoprickes, each of which shall yet retaine 20000. Pezos. CHAP. X.

Relation of the new Discouerie in the South Sea made by PEDRO FERNANDEZ GEROS Portugez 1609. with his Petitions to the King, one Englished, another in Spanish.

THis man being a famous Pilot was sent with two ships from Peru to discouer the Ilands of Salomon. After hee had taken his course in the height of the Straits of Magellanus, little more or lesse, he did discouer a mayne Land, and sayled eight hundred leagues vpon the Coast, vntill he came to the height of fifteene degrees to the Southward of the Equinoctiall Line where hee found a very fruitfull and pleasant Countrey and well peopled, abounding with Pearles, Gold and Siluer, great store of Limons; Orenges and other Fruites excellent good, and in great quantitie: great store of Goats, Hogges, Geese, Partridges, Conies and Fowle, Pepper and Spices. The Countrey is very temperate and healthfull, great store of fish of many different sorts; full of wood and goodly high Trees for shipping; very good pasture, ground for Corne and Cattell.

The men of the Countrey are some tawnie, and some white of good disposition, more ciuill and politike then the Indians of Peru and Noua Hispania.

There is in the Coast a Bay of some twentie leagues into which there fals two great Riuers out of the Countrey, which is the place where they purpose to settle their first Plantations.

There are many Ilands in the same Coast both great and little, plentifull they are all and well inhabited.

This Captaine Giroz shall be presently sent vnto Peru, with order and Commission to take vp twelue hundred men and shipping with other necessaries for the Voyage to inhabit, and as many more shall be sent the yeere following from Noua Hispania, and for the whole businesse he is to receiue fiue hundred thousand Duckets.

The Copie of a Petition presented to the King of Spaine, by Captaine PETER FERDINAND de Quir, touching the Discouerie of the fourth part of the World, called Terra Australis incognita: and of the great riches and fertilite of the same: Printed with license in Siuill, An. 1610.

SIR,

I Captaine Fernandez de Quiros, shew vnto you, that this is the eighth * Petition, which by mee hath beene presented to your Maiesties view, to perswade the conduction of some Colo-

* Perhaps it is one of those eight or some later, which followeth in Spanish, containing more particulars then this hath: Or else it may be of Luys di Vaez, &c.

nies,

nies, vnto the Land which your Maiestie hath commanded to bee discouered in the parts of Australia incognita. And yet to this houre no resolution is taken, neither haue I receiued any answere or hope, whereby I might rest assured to obtaine my dispatch, although I haue attended fourteene moneths in your Court, and haue imployed fourteene yeeres in this Discouery without any profit or other respect but the benefit thereof; with which, notwithstanding infinite contradictions, I haue gone 20000. leagues by Land and by Sea, and haue diminished and sunke my estate, I haue trauelled with many afflictions in my person, and suffered such strange and extraordinary crosses that they seeme almost incredible to my selfe; and all, that so Religious an vndertake should not vnworthily be abandoned. In regard whereof, I do most humbly beseech your Maiestie in the bowels of the diuine charitie, that you would be pleased to take order, that I be not depriued of the fruits of this Designe, which with such instance I doe desire, and which with so much iustice are due vnto my continuall paines and trauell: nor that I bee debarred from the effects of so considerable and well grounded a request, whose principall scope is the glory of God, and of your Maiestie, and from whence infinite benefits are likely to issue forth, which will liue as long as the fabrick of the World shall subsist, and after the dissolution thereof will remaine to all Eternitie.

1. Touching the extent of these Regions newly discouered, grounding my iudgement on that which I haue seene with mine owne eyes, and vpon that which Captaine Lewes Paez de Torres Admirall of my Fleet hath represented vnto your Maiestie, the length thereof is as great as all Europe and Asia the lesse, vnto the Sea of Bachu, Persia, and all the Iles, aswell of the Ocean, as of the Mediterranean Sea, taking England and Island into this account. This vnknowne Countrey is the fourth part of the Terrestriall Globe, and extendeth it selfe to such length, that in probabilitie it is twice greater in Kingdomes and Seignories, then all that which at this day doth acknowledge subiection and obedience vnto your Maiestie: and that without neighbourhood either of Turkes or Moores, or of any other Nation which attempteth warre vpon confining Countreyes. The Land which we haue discouered, is all seated within the Torrid Zone, and a great tract thereof reacheth vnto the Equinoctiall Circle; the breath may be of 90. degrees, and in some places a little lesse. And if the successe proue answerable vnto the hopes, they will be found Antipodes vnto the better part of Africke, vnto all Europe, and to the greater portion of Asia. But you must obserue, that as the Contreyes which we haue discouered in 15. degrees of latitude, are better then Spaine, so the other which are opposed to their elevation, must by proportion and analogie proue some terrestriall Paradise.

The printed discourse (so I call it rather than translation) in English cals it the fifth part: but the Spanish hath the fourth, perhaps accounting the East Indies for a second, America the third, and this the fourth, reckoning all the first knowne parts for the first.

2. All those quarters swarme with an incredible multitude of Inhabitants, whereof some are white, others blacke and in colour like Mulatos, or halfe Moores, and others of a mingled complexion. Some weare their haire long, blacke, and scattered, others haue their haire cripsed and thicke, and others very yellow and bright. Which diuersitie is an apparant argument that there is an apparant argument, that there is commerce and communication amongst them. And this consideration together with the bountie which Nature hath bestowed on the soile, their inexperience of Artillery and Guns, and their vnskilfulnesse in labouring in Mynes, with other semblable circumstances, doth induce mee to inferre, that all the Countrey is well peopled. They know little what belongeth to artificiall Trades; for they haue neither fortifications nor walles, and liue without the awe of Kings or Lawes. They are a simple people cantoned into partialities, and exercise much disagreement amongst themselues. The Armes which they vse are Bowes and Arrowes, which are not poisoned or steeped in the iuice of venemous herbes, as the custome is of many other Countreyes; They doe also carrie Clubs, Truncheons, Pikes, Dartes to hurle with the arme, all which are framed only of wood. They doe couer themselues from the waste or girdling place down to the halfe of their thighs, they are very studious of cleanlinesse, tractable, cheerefull, and wonderously addicted to bee gratefull vnto those that doe them a courtesie, as I haue experienced many times. The which doth build in me a belief, that with the assistance of God, if they may be gently and amiably intreated, they will bee found very docible and easie of mannage, and that we shall without much worke accommodate our selues vnto them. And it is most necessary to obserue this way of sweetnesse, especially in the beginning, that the Inhabitants may be drawne along to this so holy and sauing an end, whereof we ought to take a particular care and zeale, aswell in small things, as in matters of more importance. Their houses are built of wood, couered with Palme-tree leaues; they haue Pitchers and Vessels made of earth, they are not without the mysterie of weauing, and other curiosities of that kind. They worke on Marble, they haue Flutes, Drummes, and wooden Spoones, they set apart certaine places for Oratories and Prayers, and for buriall places. Their Gardens are artificially seuered into beds, bordered and paled; Mother of Pearle and the shels which containe Pearle, they haue in much vse and estimation, of which they make Wedges, Rasors, Sawes, Culters, and such like Instruments: They also doe make thereof Pearles and great Beads to weare about their neckes. They that doe dwell in the Ilands, haue Boats very artificially made, and exceedingly commodious for sayling, which is a certaine argument that they confine vpon other Nations that are of a more polished and elegant behauiour. And this also they haue of our husbandry, that they cut Cocks and geld Boares.

3. Their bread is vſually made of three ſorts of Roots, which grow there in great abundance. Neither doe they imploy much labour in making this bread, for they do onely roſt the Roots vntill they are ſoft and tender. They are very pleaſant to the taſte, wholſome and nouriſhing, they are of a good length, there being of them of an Ell long, and the halfe of that in bigneſſe. There is great ſtore of excellent fruits in theſe Countreyes. There are ſixe kinds of Plane Trees, Almond Trees of foure ſorts, and other Trees called Obi, reſembling almoſt in fruit and greatneſſe the Melacatones; ſtore of Nuts, Orenges and Limonds. They haue moreouer Sugar-canes, large in ſize and in great plentie, they haue knowledge of our ordinarie Apples; they haue Palme-trees without numbers, out of which there may eaſily bee drawne a iuyce, which will make a liquor alluding much to Wine, as alſo Whey, Vineger, and Honey, the kernels thereof are exceeding ſweet. And they haue fruits which the Indians call Cocos, which being greene doe make a kinde of twine, and the pith is almoſt like in taſte vnto the Creame of Milke: When they are ripe they ſerue for meate and drinke both by Land and Sea: And when they wither and fall from the Tree, there ſweateth out an Oyle from them, which is very good to burne in Lampes, and is medicinable for wounds, and not vnpleaſant to be eaten. Of their rindes or barks there are made Bottles, and other like Veſſels, and the inner skin doth ſerue for calking of ſhips. Men doe make Cables and other Cordage of them, which are of ſufficient ſtrength to draw a Canon, and are fit for other domeſticke vſes. But that which is more ſpeciall, they do there vſe the leaues of Palme-trees, which they amaſſe together, to make ſayles of them for Veſſels of ſmall bulke and burthen. They make likewiſe fine thinne Mats of them, and they do ſerue to couer the houſe without, and for hangings within. And of them they doe likewiſe make Pikes, and other ſorts of weapons, as alſo Oares to row with, and Vtenſils for the houſe. You are to note, that theſe Palme-trees are their Vines, from whence they gather their Wine all the yeere long, which they make without much coſt or labour. Amongſt their herbage and Garden fruites; Wee haue ſeene Melons, Peares great and little, and ſundry ſorts of pot-herbes. And they haue alſo Beanes. For fleſh, they are ſtored with a great number of Hogs which are as tame as ours: they haue Hennes, Capons, Partriges, Duckes Turtles, Pigeons, Stock-doues, and Goats, as one of my Captaines did ſee. And the Indians themſelues haue giuen vs notice of Cowes and Oxen. There are alſo ſundry ſorts of fiſh, Harghi, Perſereyes, Lize, Soles, Trowts, Shads, Macabiſes, Caſanes, Pampani, Pilchard, Thorn-backes or Skate-fiſh, Cuculi, Congers, Porpoſes, Rochets, Muſcles, Lobſters, and many other, the names whereof I cannot now remember. But it is probable that there are diuers other kindes, ſince thoſe which I haue recounted were taken hard by our ſhips. And vpon ripe and ſerious conſideration of that which I haue repreſented vnto you, a man may eaſily collect, that ſuch plentifull and different varieties of all things, may yeeld great and ſingular delights. There is ſtuffe for Marchpanes and ſweet Confections of all ſorts, without borrowing any Spice for the compoſition of them elſewhere. And for my Mates the Mariners, beſides thoſe particulars which I haue before ſet downe, there will bee no want of Gammons, Sawſages, and other ſalt meates which Hogges doe yeeld; neither of Vineger, Spiceries, and other Sawces that ſerue for delicacie, and to awake the appetite. And you muſt obſerue, that many of theſe things, are the ſame with thoſe which we haue in our parts, and poſſibly they are there in greater abundance; by all which it is eaſily to be coniectured, that this Countrey is fit for the production of all that which groweth in Europe.

Vſes of the Coco.

4. The Riches which I haue ſeene in thoſe parts, are Siluer and Pearle; another Captaine in his Relation, doth report that he hath ſeene Gold, which are the three moſt precious Darlings that he and are cheriſhed in the boſome of Nature: wee haue alſo both ſeene much Nutmegs, Mace, Ginger, and Pepper. There is alſo notice of Cinamon; and it is likely that Cloues may be found in thoſe parts, ſince ſo many other ſorts of Spiceries and Aromaticall drugges doe proſper there; and that the rather, becauſe theſe Countryes lye very neere the parallell of the Iles of Ternenatte, Bachian, and the Molucces. There are likewiſe materials for all ſorts of Silke, and wee haue ſeene Aniſe-ſeed, and excellent good Ebonie, as alſo other kindes of wood proper for the building of as many ſhips as one will deſire, and ſtuffe to make ſayles for the ſame. Three ſorts of materials there are wherewithall to make Cordage, and one of them is very like vnto our Hemp. Moreouer out of the Oyle of Cocos, whereof I haue already made mention, there is a kind of bituminous ſtuffe extracted, called Galagala, which may be well vſed for Pitch. They make alſo a kind of Roſen with which the Indians pitch their Boats, which they call Piraguas. And ſince there are Goats and Kowes in thoſe parts, without queſtion we ſhall haue Goat-skins, Leather, Tallow, and fleſh in full abundance. The Bees which we haue ſeene there doe make proofe, that there will be no ſcarcitie of Honey and Waxe. And there is good appearance to diſcouer many other things which are not yet knowne, to ſay nothing touching the forme and ſcite of the Countrey. Vnto all which if that bee adioyned, which the induſtry of man may contribute to thoſe parts, ſince there is ſuch abundance of commodities which the Countrey it ſelfe doth yeeld, and ſuch hope to tranſport thither thoſe things which grow with vs (the beſt and choiſeſt which Peru and New Spaine bring forth, I haue reſolued to transferre thither) it is to bee hoped, that this will ſo enrich that Countrey, that it will be able to nouriſh and furniſh not only the Inhabitants of the same, and those of America, but giue an accession vnto Spaine it selfe both of Riches and extent of command: and this may bee accomplished after the manner which I haue proiected, and will vnfold vnto those which shall lend an assisting hand for the guiding and consummation of this worke. Now by that Land which we haue alreadie discouered outwardly and along the shoares, without entrance into the inward parts, we doe conceiue a certaine Argument, that as much Riches, Commodities, and greatnesse may bee hoped from thence, as wee haue already in these Countreyes. And you may bee pleased to vnderstand, that my principall ayme was to take a view only of these ample Regions which we haue discouered: for by reason of many sicknesses which haue weakened me, and some other chances whereof I will at this time make no mention, I was not able to suruay all which I desired, neither could I in a full moneth haue seene all that, which I was of my selfe inclinable to view. You are not to make your iudgement of the Indians that inhabit these Countreyes, according to the honour of the people here, or conceiue them to bee affected with the same desires, pleasures, necessities, or estimation of things that we are: But you are to make account that they are a people whose care is studiously placed vpon this, that they may liue easily in this World, and passe their dayes with the least paine and perturbation they can. And this is indeed their practise, for they do not bestow themselues on those things, which with such vexation and torment we here labour to obtaine.

5. There are found in this Countrey as many commodities, both for the support and delectation of the life of man, as may bee expected from a soyle that is Manurable, pleasant and verie temperate. It is a fat and fertile Land, wherein many places clay is found, which will proue of excellent vse to build houses, and to make Tiles and Brickes, and will serue for whatsoeuer is vsually made of earth. There is Marble and other good stones, wherewith if there bee occasion there may bee built structures of greater State and Magnificence. The Countrey aboundeth in wood, fit for all workes and vses, whereunto the same is commonly put. There are spacious and goodly plaines, and fields that are diuided and interlaced with Brookes, Trenches, and Riuers. There are great and high Rockes, sundry Torrents, Riuers great and little, on which water-mils for Corne may with much commodiousnesse be built and placed, as also Engins to make Sugar, Tucking-mils, Forges, and all other Instruments which in their vse doe require water. We haue found Salt-pits there, and which is a note of the fertilitie of the soile, there are in many places Canes whereof some are fiue or sixe handfuls thick, with fruit answerable to that proportion. The top of that Fruit is verie small and hard, and the skinne thereof is exceeding sweet. There are also flints for fire, equall in goodnesse with those of Madrid. The Bay of Saint Iames and Saint Philip, hath twentie leagues of banke, and is without mudde; into which there is a sure and safe entrance both by day and night. It is sheltered and couered with many houses, which in the day time we haue seene afarre off to send forth smoke, and in the night store of fire. The Hauen called The true Crosse, is of that spacious capacitie, that it is able to containe a thousand ships. The bottome as I haue said is without mud, and hath a blackish coloured sand wherewithall it is couered. There are no gulfes or deepe pits, but an assured and easie anchorage in what part soeuer you will, from forty to halfe a fathome; and it is betweene the mouthes of two Riuers, the one whereof is as great as that of Guadalquiuir, and hath mud of a fathome deepe, ouer which our shallops and boats did passe. For the other Riuer, when our Skiffe went to water there, they found the entrance safe & easie. And a man may from the very mouth of the riuer take in as much fresh water as he will. The place where ships may bee vnloaded hath three leagues of grauell, mingled with little flints blackish and very heauy, which will serue for ballast for ships. The bank is straight and vnited, on which much green grasse doth grow and prosper, and that makes me to conceiue that the Sea doth not beate or rage thereupon; I obserue that the Trees are straight, and the branches not dismembred, which is a token that there are no tempests there. Touching the Port, besides the commodities which I haue alreadie discoursed of, there is one of maruellous pleasure and contentation. And that is, that at the dawning of the day you shall heare from a Wood which is neere at hand, a sweet and various harmonie of a thousand Birds of all sorts, among which we could distinguish the Nightingales, Black-birds, Quailes, Gold-finches, Swallowes almost without number Parrochitos, and one Parret wee marked there, and creatures of sundry other kinds, euen downe to Grashoppers, and Field-crickets. Euery Morning and Euening we receiued a most odoriferous sweet smell, sent vnto our nostrels from the infinite diuersitie of Flowres and Herbes which grow there, amongst which wee obserued the blossomes of Orange and Basill. All which (with a number of other varieties) doth make vs thinke that the Aire is cleere and healthy, and that the nature of the place is of a good temperature. The Hauen and the Bay are therefore of the greater estimation, because they haue the Neighbourhood of so many goodly Ilands that are there, and especially of those seuen, which are said to haue two hundred leagues of extent: and surely one of them (which is some twelue leagues distant from the Hauen) is fiftie leagues in circuit. In briefe Sir, I doe affirme vnto your Maiestie, that you may giue command to haue a goodly and great Citie built in this Port and Bay which are 15. degrees and fortie minutes of the Southerne Eleuation, and those that shall inhabit there, shall haue plentie of riches, and all other conueniencies which they can desire. Time will shew and discouer all theſe commodities, and in this place there may be made the diſcharge and vnloading of all the wares and merchandizes of the Countries of Chilly, Peru, Panama, Nicaragua, Guatemala, New-Spaine, Terre-natte, and the Philippines, all which Countries are vnder the command of your Maieſtie. And if you ſhall acquire vnto your ſelfe the Dominion of theſe Seigniories which I doe now preſent, I doe make ſo great an eſteeme of them, that beſides their being the Key of all the reſt, they will (in my opinion) proue another China or Iapan, and equallize the other rich Ilands which are on this ſide of Aſia, in trafique of curious and precious merchandizes, to ſpeake nothing of the augmentation and extent of your power, and the eſtabliſhment which you may make vnto your ſelfe of your Dominions, by the acceſſion of ſo great a Countrie. That which I haue giuen vnto your view in my diſcourſe, is of much ſlenderneſſe, in regard of that which I doe probably conceiue of this land, the which I am ready to make appeare in the preſence of Mathematicians. Neither will I vexe this paper to demonſtrate vnto you, that theſe Countries will be able to nouriſh two hundred thouſand Spaniards. In ſumme, this is Sir, the world whereof Spaine is the Center, and that which I haue related, is the nayle by which you may iudge of the whole body, which I pray you to take into your obſeruation.

6. You may iudge by that which I haue already repreſented, what the goodneſſe and temperature of the ayre is: whereunto this may be added for a further teſtimonie, that although all our Companie were ſtrangers, yet neuer a one of them was ſicke, albeit they were in continuall trauell and labour, and did ſometimes ſweate, and ſometimes take wet. They dranke water faſting, and fed many times on that which the earth did there bring forth. Neither had they any regard to keepe themſelues from the * Serenes, nor from the Moone or Sunne, which indeede in thoſe parts is not ouer-vehement. Onely about midnight, they couered themſelues with Wooll, and did lye and repoſe themſelues thereupon. And for the Inhabitants, they are commonly healthie, and many of them very aged, although they haue nothing but the bare earth for their pallet; which is an argument of the wholeſomneſſe and pureneſſe of the ſoyle. For if it were a wet and weeping ground, or had any viciouſneſſe in the mould, they would raiſe their lodgings higher from the earth, as they doe that liue in the Philippines, and other Countries which I haue viewed. And this is further confirmed by their Fleſh and Fiſh, which although it be vnſalted, yet will it keepe ſweete and without corruption two dayes and more. And the Fruits which are brought from thence are exceeding good, as we had proofe by two that I tooke care to bring along with mee, although they had not their full maturitie and growth when I gathered them from the Tree. We haue not ſeene any barren and ſandie ground, nor any Thiſtles or trees that are thornie, or whoſe rootes doe ſhew themſelues, no Mariſhes or Fennes, no Snow vpon the Mountaines, no Snakes or Serpents, no Croçodiles in the Riuers, no Wormes that vſe with vs to hurt and conſume our Graine, and to worke vs ſo much diſpleaſure in our houſes, no Fleas, Caterpillers, or Gnats. This is a Prerogatiue that hath the aduantage of all the priuiledges that nature hath beſtowed on other places, and is worthy to be compared, or rather preferred before any delicacie of the Countries of India, ſome of which are abandoned and vnhabited, meerely by reaſon of theſe incommodities, and of ſundry others that are diſtaſtfull vnto the Inhabitants, as my ſelfe haue oftentimes beene witneſſe.

* The Sereno is the Dew which fals euery night in great (almoſt) ſhowers, infections to thoſe which are abroad in the aire, as is before obſerued in Drakes Voiages, &c.

7. Theſe (Sir) are the greatneſſe and goodneſſe of the Countries which I haue diſcouered, of which I haue already taken the poſſeſſion in the name of your Maieſtie, and vnder your Royall Banner, as appeareth by the Acts which I keepe ſafely in my power, whereunto I proceeded after this enſuing manner. Firſt (Sir) we erected a Croſſe, and built a Church in honour of our Ladie of Loretto. Then we cauſed twentie Maſſes to be celebrated there, and our troopes made haſte thither to gaine ſome Indulgences, granted on Whitſunday. We alſo made a ſolemne Proceſſion, and obſerued the Feaſt of the bleſſed Sacrament, the which was carried in Proceſſion, your Banner being euer diſplayed, and marching before it, through a great circuit of Countries, which were honoured with the preſence of the ſame. In three ſeuerall places we ſet vp your Title, in euery one of which we prepared and erected two Columnes, with the Armes of your Maieſtie tricked and garniſhed thereupon: ſo that I may with good right affirme, that ſince this will challenge to be one of the Parts of the world, the Impreſſe of Plus vltra is accompliſhed, and becauſe it ſtretcheth vnto the continent, whether it be forward or behinde it skils not, the bounds of your Dominions are with much ſpaciouſneſſe enlarged. Now all this which I haue performed, receiueth its roote from this the faithfull zeale which I beare vnto your Maieſtie, that to all the Titles which you already doe poſſeſſe, you may adioyne this which I repreſent, and that the name de la Auſtrialia del ſpiritu ſanta, may bee blazoned and ſpread ouer the face of the whole world to the glory of God, who hath reuealed this Countrie, and hath giuen mee the grace to guide my courſe thither, and to returne to the preſence of your Maieſtie, before whom I doe preſent and proſtrate my ſelfe with the ſame affection and zeale vnto this worke which I had before, and which hath growne vp with mee as it were from my cradle, and for the nobleneſſe and worth thereof, I doe ſtill tender and cheriſh the ſame with the greateſt loue that can be.

L. of Loretto.

8. I doe confidently beleeue, that your Maieſtie doth vſe ſo much prudence in your Councels, and and are so magnanimous and full of Christian pietie, that you will (with your best care) embrace all the conducements which may further the habitation of these new-discouered Countries. And the principall reason to put a tye and obligation vpon vs not to leaue them abandoned, is in regard that this is the sole ordinary way to establish the knowledge of God, and faith amongst them, and to bring to passe that his name may be adored and called vpon, where the Diuell vsurpeth so much reuerence and inuocation. And this ought to be embraced with the more readinesse, because it is the channell to conuey and disperse all abundance of commodities amongst your subiects. And hereby you shall be eased of many disturbances and vexations, which will assuredly be put vpon you, in case the Enemies of the Church of Rome should enter and nestle there, and should vent their erronious doctrines amongst them, whereby they would conuert all the blessings which I haue hitherto recounted vnto you, into assured incommodities and mischiefes, and would arrogate vnto themselues the names of the Lords of the Indias, to the vtter ruine and desolation of those Countries. I make no question but your Maiestie well weigheth, of what importance this danger, of which I speake, may proue, and what euill consequence some other hazards may carrie with them, which are either at this time imminent, or may succeede hereafter. And if this should happen, it would cost you innumerable thousands of gold and men, before you shall be able to giue a remedy vnto the same. Acquire therefore Sir, whiles that occasion is offered you (that one day you may purchase heauen vnto your selfe) acquire (I say) with a little money which you misplace vpon Peru, a neuer-dying reputation, and this New-world with all the benefits which it reacheth out vnto you. And since there is none that craueth a reward for these good tidings, that is brought you concerning so great & singular a blessing, which God hath bin pleased to locke vp vntill your happie time, I am he Sir, that doe demand it, and my humble request vnto you is onely this, that yon would be of that graciousnesse vnto mee, as to dispatch and giue me mine answer: for the Gallions are readie to hoise saile, and I haue much way to goe, and many things must be fitted and disposed for the voyage. There is no houre passeth, which carrieth not with it an assured losse both in regard of spirituall and temporall blessings, the damage whereof can neuer be made vp or repaired.

If vpon a bare suspition Christopherus Columbus did pursue his designe with so much obstinacie, you are not to account it strange in me, if the things which I haue beheld with mine eyes, and touched with mine hands, doe put some kinde of constraint vpon mee to be importunate.

Let it therefore please your Maiestie, amongst so many expedients which you haue at hand, to seuer and put apart some one for the accomplishment of this worke, that after all these languishments, I may at length meete with the successe of my desires. I doe assure you that you will finde my propositions most iust, and that I shall be of sufficiencie to giue you satisfaction in all things. This, Sir, is a great worke, amongst which the Diuell doth bandie himselfe with all the puissance hee may: And it is not consonant to reason, to abandon these Countries to his tyrannie and power, whereof, know your Maiestie is Defender.

Here followeth another Petition or Declaration in Spanish, which I haue not translated, that the Originall may be of more authoritie; and haue added for further explanation and notice of particulars. I had thought also to haue giuen the other in Spanish, and had accordingly prepared it, but for the English Readers sake, haue corrected the once printed Copie by it, and not troubled you with both.

EL Capitan Pedro Fernandez de Quiros: Xa he dicho a V. barnas, y los cabellos crecidos, y crespos, y a su modo graue, nos ayudo con su gente, y embarcaciones, a hazer a guada, y lenna, de que en aquella sazon estauamos muy necessitados. Este tal vino a verme a la Nao, y dentro en ella le examine, en la manera siguiente. Lo primero le mostre su isla, y la mar, y nuestras naos, y gente, y apunte a todas partes del Orizonte, y hize otras ciertas seynas, y con ellas le pregunte, si auia visto navios, y hombres como los nuestros, y a esto dixo que no. Preguntele si sabia de otras tierras lexas, ò cerca, pobladas ò despobladas, y luego que me entendio nombrò a mas de setenta Islas, y a una grande tierra que se llama Manicolo: yo sennor las fui escriuiendo a todas teniendo presente la guia de nauegar, para saber hazia el rumbo que cada una demorana, que viene a ser de aquella su isla a la parte del Sueste, Sur Sudeste, ò Este, y Nordeste; y para que yo entendiesse quales eran las pequennas, hazia pequennos circulos, y mostraua el mar con el dedo, y con el dana a entender cercana la tierra, y por las que eran mayores, hazia mayores circulos, y las mismas demostraciones: y por aquella gran tierra abrio ambos los braços, sinbolverlos a iuntar, mostrandoque proseguia. Y para dar a entender quales eran las lexanas, ò estauan de alli mas cerca, mostrana el Sol de Leuante a Poniente, recostana la cabeça sobre una mano, cerrana los ojos, y contana por los dedos las noches que en el camino se dormia, y por semeiancas dezia, quales gentes eran blancas, Negros, Indios, y mulatos, y quales estauan mezelados, y quales ran sus amigos, y enemigos, y que en algunas islas se comia carne humana; y para esto bizoque mordia su braço, mostrando claro querer mal à estagente, y deste, y de otros modos al parecer, se entendio quanto dixo, y se lo repeti tantas ve zes, que mostro cansarse dello. Y dando con la mano hazia el Sur Sudeste, y otras partes, dio bien a entender quantas mas tierras auia. Mostro desseo de bolver a su casa, dole cosas que llenasse, y se despidio de mi, dandome paz en el carrillo, y con otras muestras de amor.

Mas de sesenta Islas, y vna grande tierra que se llama Manicolo.

El siguiente dia fui a su pueblo, y para mas bien enterarme delo que Tumay declarò, llene comigo muchos Indios a la playa, y teniendo en la mano el papel, y presente la aguja de marear: a todas fui preguntando muchas vezes por las tierras a que Tumay puso nombre, y en todo conformaron todos, y dieron noticia de otras pobladas, todas de gentes de los referidos colores, y iuntamente de aquella grande tierra, en la qual con propias seynas dixeron que auia Bacas, ò Bufalos: y para dar a enterder que auia perros ladranan, y por gallos y gallinas, cantanan, y por puercos grunnian. Y assi desta manera dexan lo que querian, y respondian a quanto se les preguntana: y por que les mostraron perlas en el boton de vn rosario, dieron a entender las auia. Todas estas preguntas y diligencias, bizieron otros de mi compannia este dia, y otras vezes a estos, y a otros Indios, y siempre dixeron lo mismo, y por esto se entendio ser gente que trata verdad.

Quando sali desta isla de Taumaco, hize coger quatro muy gallardos Indios, los tres se hecharon a nado, y el que quedo, y despues se llamo Pedro, declarò en el puerto de Acapulco, y por el camino, y en la ciudad de Mexico adonde murio, auiendole visto el Marques de Montes claros lo siguiente, sin nunca variar, aunque se le pregunto en diuersos tiempos, y por muchas personas, y de muchos modos, y se le negauan, y contradezian sus dichos.

Lo primero dixo Pedro, ser natural de una isla que se llama Chicayana, mayor que la de Taumaco adonde de hallamos, y que de la una a la otra ay quatro dias de camino, de sus embarcaciones, y que Chicayana es tierra rasa y muy abundante de los frutos y a referidos, y que la gente della es de su buena color de Indio, cabello suelto y largo, y que se labran como el lo estana, poco en el rostro, muñecas, y pechos, y que tambien ay hombres blancos que tienen los cabellos rubios, y muy largos, y que ay mulatos, cuyo cabello no es frisado, ni de todo suelto, y que el era texador, y soldado flechero, y que en su lengua se llamana Luca, su muger Layna, y su hlio Ley.

Chicayana Isla.

Dixo mas, que en aquella su isla ay muchas Ostras, como de las que vi sus conchas, y traxe algunas, que aqui tengo de tres tamannos. El primero, es el comun de la Margarita; el segundo mayor al doble; y el tercero de palmo, mas y menos de diametro, y que a todas estas Ostras llaman Totefe, y que en ellas se hallan perlas, a las quales llaman Futiquilquil: y por esto le mostre las conchas, y el las tomò en las manos, y en ellas fue mostranda las partes a do se crian. Y preguntado quantas eran, y de que tamanno, dixo, que en vnas se hallan mas, y en otras menos; y para dar a entender el grandor dezia que las ay como arena, y como sal, y como pedrezitas, y como cuentas de rosarios, y como botones como tenia en vn coleto, y otras mayores, y que se pescan en menos de medio estado de fondo, de piedras y arena, y que son muy grandes los trechos de mar, que alli tienen poco fondo, y que el mismo sin gabullirse les sacana con la mano, y las ponia en su Canoa, y que solo las quieren para comer su carne, a la qual llaman Camofe, y que las conchas les sirnen para hazer anzuelos, cucharas, y otras cosas, y que las perlas no les sirnen de nada.

Dixo mas, que ay en esta misma isla de chicayana otra suerte de ostras, a la qual llaman Taquila: y para dar a entender su tamanno, sennalo el grandor de una buena rodela: y por hazerseme increyble la mucha camidad que dixo de todas perlas, y la grandeza destas Taquilas, le pregunte si nacian dentro en los cocos, o en los arboles, o en las pennas, o en la tierra, o por fuera de las conchas: dixo que no se hallan sino en le suelo del mar, y dentro en ellas las perlas, y que las ostras las vnas estan recostadas a todos lados, y otras enbiestas y abiertas hazia arriba, y que si en algunas destas ostras entran la mano que se cierra, y luego go dixo no ay mano, y que a esta cansa las sacan con palos, y con lazadas de cuerdas, y que tienen grande y muy buena carne que ellos comen, y no hazen caso de las perlas, y que las vezes que las queria el mismo las pescana, y las llenana a su casa. Y como el Otro Viage yo mismo vi a las Indios de la isla de Santacruz, traer del cuello colgadas muchas patenas mayores y menores, todas todas de conchas de nacar, entendi ser loqûe Pedro de zia, lo mismo de las patenas, y a esta causa no hazia mucha cuenta deste dicho: mas viendo que vnas vezes se enoiaua, y otras con muy grande ahinco trabaiaua por darse a entender, por esto le mostre vn guijarro negro y redondo, del tamanno de vna cirvela temprana, y le pregunte si en su tierra auia per las assi como aquella, dixo que no, porque aquel guijarro era negro, y las perlas blancas como papel, y que quando las mirana al Sol, que la vislumbre dellas lo dana en los ojos, y assi hazia con ellos como si las tuuiera presentes. Y preguntado si las auia tan grandes como el referido guijarro, dixo que otras auia chiquitas como el guijarro. Y luego puntò la cabeça del dedo pulgar con la del indice en forma de circulo, y alli con vn dedo de la otra mano, fue sennalando mayores y menores perlas, y que en cada hostia no ay mas de vna sola: y con todo temiendo ser lo que dezia las patenas de mi sospecha, le pregunto si eran chatas, o redondas, o de otras formas. No me entendio por este lenguage. Luego hizo como que queria poner el guijarro en el suelo a son de correr: y assi como lo vio, dixo con gran demostracion, que quando las echauan en el suelo yuan rodando por manera que a mi entender dio claramente a ser perlas redondas, y de los tamannos referidos, y que su hijo trahia al cuello vna dellas, y que el mismo la horadò con piedra blanca, y delgada, y que el fondo de adonde las sacana, es de dos estados mas y menos, y que en sus conchas dan de comer a los puercos. Preguntele si las grandes conchas tienen el mismo lustre que tienen las ordinarias que le mostre. dixo que si, todas estas y otras preguntas le hize muy trocadas, y como en su tierra se llaman los arcabuzes, y otras de nuestras cosas, dixo que no las ay, por manera que siempre respondio sin sospechas, y solo dio nombre con mucha resolucion a las cosas que ellos tienen. yo afirmo por verdad que no entendi escriuir la grandeza, ni el mucho numero que dixo auer de toda suerte de perlas, por parecerme noticia nunca oyda: mas considerando que naturaleza es podorosa para criar como ya se han visto grandes perlas, y de las comunes tan gran suma en el rio de la Hacha, Margarita, y Cubagua: y yo por sie tanto en inquirir esta su declaracion, pareciome deuer dezir lo que este Indio me dixo tantas vezes, y a otras muchas personas, que no con menos cuydado le examinaron, y en suma yo hago las diligencias, y escriuo como hombre que tengo de morir, y no se quando.

Dixo mas, que de la isla de Taumaco a tres dias de camino, y de Chicayana ad os; ay otra isla mayor que las dos dichas, que se llama Guaytopo, poblada de gente tan blanca, como los es en comun la nuestra, y que hasta los hombres tienen rubios los cabellos mas y menos, y tambien negros, y que se labran las barrigas, y a su mbel todo en rueda, y que todas tres islas son gente amiga, y de vna lengua, y que usan darse la paz en los carrillos, y que tienen por sennal de enemigos quando huyen los rostros, y que en esta isla ay muchos ostrales de los tres generos menores, en grandes trechos de mar, de fondo assi como el de Chicayana, y que tienen muchas perlas. Y preguntado si auia estado en ella, dixo que no. Luego le bolui a preguntar como sabia lo dicho, y lo contò desta manera, que de aquella isla salio vn nauio gran de los suyos, con mas de cincuenta personas, a buscar conchas de Carey, de que usan hazer carcillos, y otros ingenios que cuelgan de las oreias, a otra isla poblada que llaman Mecurayla; que estando a vista della, les dio vn viento contrario que los obligo a buscar su isla, de la qual estando cerca, boluio el viento a ser contrario, y que andando en estas buscas se les acabò el bastimento, a cuya falta murieron quarenta personas de hambre y sed, y que el estaua en la Isla de Taumaco, quando este nauio aportò alli con solos siete hombres muy blancos, excepto dixo que era moreno, y con tres mugeres blancas, y hermosas como Espannolas, que tenian los cabellos rubios, y muy largos, y que todas tres venian cubiertas de cabeça hasta los pies con vnos como mantos azules, o Negros, y muy delgados, a que llaman foafoa, y que de todas estas diez personas, solo quedò viuo el Indio Olan, al qual los nuestros quando alli le viero en Taumaco, tan blanco y tan bermejo, le llama ron el Flamenco, como queda referido, y que este Indio Olan y otros le contaron quanto ha dicho, de aquella isla de Guaytopo, y que el mismo vio venir a su isla de Chicayana, otro nauio de aquellos de dos vasos cargado de gente blanca y hermosa, y con muchas y muy lindas muchachas, y dio a entender contando por los dedos de diez en diez, ser por todos ciento y diez personas.

Guaytopo Isla.

Mecurayla Isla.

Dixo mas, que de otra isla que se llama Tucopio, que es a donde los dos Indios se echaron a nado, como queda referido, a cinco dias de su nauegar, ay aquella gran tierra Manicolo, poblada de mucha gente lora y mulata en grandes pueblos, y para dar a entender su tamanno, sennalò el de Acapulco, y otros mayores, y por esto le pregunte si auia pueblos tan grandes como Mexico, dixo que no, mas que muchas gentes, y que son sus amigos, y no comen carne humana, ni se entienden las lenguas, y que es tierra de muy altas serranias, y grandes rios, y que algunos dellos no se pueden vadear, sino passarse en canoas: y que para ir de la isla Tucopia a aquella tierra, quando sale el Sol les queda a la mano izquierda, que viene a ser del Sur para el Sudeste. Digo pues, que si esto es assi como lo dixo, que viene bien con la cordillera de sierras que se vieron ir corriendo a la buelta del Poniente, como esta dicho en su lugar, quando fuimos desgarrando. Mucho encarecio Pedro la grandeza po placion y fertilidad, y otras cosas desta tierra, y que el y otros Indios fueron a ella en vna de sus embarcaciones, a buscar vn trozo de vn grande arbol, de los muchos que ay en ella, para hazer vna piragua, y que vio alli vn puerto, y dio a entender ser mayor, y de boca mas cerrada que lo es el de la Bahia de san Felipe y Santiago, y que al mirò su fondo ser de arena, y su playa Del astre como el otro ya dicho, y que tiene dentro quatro rios y mucha gente, y que por la costa de aquella tierra anduuieron hazia el Poniente mas camino que ay de Acapulco a Mexico sin verle fin, y se bolvieron a su isla. Aduierto que como yo auia visto aquella isla de Tucopia, dixe a Pedro que sabia auer en ella muchas ostras y perlas, y que dixo que no ay sino mucho fondo, y que es assi verdad porque lo hizo sondar.

Tucopio Isla. Manicolo tierra grande.

Dixo mas, que de Taumaco atres dias de camino, y con viento fresco a dos, ay otra isla que se llama Fonofono, partida en muchas islas pequennas y rasas, y por esto a cautela lo dixe, que auia en ellas grandes rios: pues grandes rios en islas pequennas, y rasas, no los puede auer, dixo que no sino poços, y que son todas muy fertiles, y muy pobladas de gentes loras, Indios y mulatos, muy altos en demasia, y tanto, que con ser algo mas alto que yo, senalo en una pared todo quanto pudo alcançar con los dedos, estendidos braço y mano, y dixo ser aquella su altura, y que son sus amigos mas no de su lengua, y que en estas islas ay grandes trechos de mar, de poco y de mucho fondo, commanchas de muchas hostras, y que el mismo las saco para comerlas, y que te nian perlas de los tamannos que tiene dicho, excepto las Taquilas, y que ay allí un muy buen puerto: y tambien dixo que cerca destas islas ay otra que se dize Pilen, y otra Nupan, y que tienen lo mismo de comidas, gentes, y perlas y de aydas y no de vista, dio nombre a otras muchas islas, y de todas dixo lo dicho. Aduierteseque en todas las Indias en solo la Margarita, y en el rio de la hacha, se ha sacado y va sacando la multitud de las perlas que se sabe, dexo las pocas y no tan buenas de Panama, y digo que si es assi como esta dicho, que muchos numeros se pueden esperar de adonde dio la noticia, assi por ser muchas estas partes, como por la grandeza de los mares que dixo tienen poco fondo, y mas se aduierte que solo dixo de las ostras que alcançan a ver los ojos, y solo con las manos cogen sin zabullirse, quedando siempre reservadas las dos, quatro, ocho, y mas braças como oy se pescan en la Margarita.

Fono fono Isla.

Pupan Isla.

En Mexico llene a Pedro por dos vezes a casa de un horadador de perlas, y a mi ruego le mostro de todos los generos comunes: assi como los vio se alegro mucho, y dixo con gran demostracion y encarecimiento, que en su tierra ay muchas perlas y mas blanchas que aquellas. Mostrole mas unos barrueços, o assientos grandes y abromados, hizo mal geste, y dixoque aquello no era bueno, y que en su tierra auia mejor. Mas diligencia hizo el Alcalde mayor del puerto de Acapulco, don Pedro Flores, pues le mostro una cadena de muchas sartas de perlas, y le preguntò si en su tierra auia de aquellas cadenas, dixo que no. Luego saco de allí ciertas perlas, y se las mostrò en la mano, y le preguntò si auia assi como aquello, dixo que si, mas que no estauan horadadas, y se puede presumir que a falta de brocas, y de taladros, no se aprouechan de las perlas y de las conchas si por ser mayores, y del mismo lustre, y faciles de horadar.

Dixo mas, que en Taumaco ay un Indio gran piloto, y que sabe los nombres de muchas tierras, en las quales ha estado muchas vezes, y que de una Grantierra que se llama Pouro muy poblada, cuya gente lora, e Indios, algunos son amigos suyos, y otros muy belicosos y guerreros entresi, traxo a su isla de Taumaco un pegagayo de pecho y cuello colorado, y ciertas flechas con puntas a forma de cuchillo, y que el mismo las vio, y las tuvò, y dio a entender que les querian para con ellas matar mas facilmente, por esto le mostre un cuchillo, y dixo ser negro al respecto de las puntas. Mostrele un vaso de plata, y dixo ser las puntas tan blancas como ella, muchas vezes le contradixe este dicho, y siempre mas se afirmò.

Aduierto, que en la Babiya de san Felipe y Santiago, se hallaron en una casa muchas piedras negras y pesadas, y que a caso me traxeron dos pedrezitas, cada una dellas como una nuez, y que en la ciudad de Mexico un don Francisco Pacheco duenno de minas, y un Diego Gomez de Molina las vieron en mi mi posada, y el uno dellos me mostraron lleno de ojos de plata, por esto lo llenamos luego a casa de un ensayador que la puso en un crisol, y alla por sus razones le dio tanto fuego que el crisol se desfondo, y assi no se vio nada de toda via, yo me auia quedado con la otra parte que el ensayador roquemò y en esta se vio una puntilla que estendida al martillo se tocò luego en tres piedras, y dixeron seis plateros ser toques de plata: y para mas certificarse tocaron plomo y estanno, y otra plata conocida junto a ella, mas huuo allí quien dixo que aquel ensaye se auia de hazer por azogue, y otros que con salitron y ciertas cosas, y el ensayador afirmò ser bueno el metal, y aqui se tocò la puntilla, y dixeron dos plateros que es plata.

Estas piedras auia mostrado a Pedro, y assi como las vio, dixo que en los cerros de Taumaco a y muchas dellas, y que se llama Treque, y que tambien las ay en aquillo gran tierra Manicolo, y que todos los Indios las quieren, los unos para labrarse, y otros para inuiexarse con ellas, ylo mismo dixo Paulo de su tierra, que es la Bahia de san Felipe y Santiago de adonde se traxeron, y dizen mineros que adonde ay inuixes ay metales, y que por los inuixes se descubrieron las minas de plata y oro de S. Luis de la nueua Espanna, y las de azogue de Guancauelica del Piru. Y aduierto, que dezir Pedro que vio flechas con puntas de plata, parece que por razon de la poca que se hallò en aquel poco metal que tan a caso se traxò, y por la disposicion de la tierra, y el sitio ser paralelo del Piru, obligan a creer que puede ser assi como lo dixo.

Aduiertase mas que Pedro despues que supo darse a entender en nuestra lengua, conformò con todo lo que dixeron los Indios de Taumaco, y esto assi en la tierra grande, como en las muchas islas y muchas gentes, y algunas corpulentas labradas y por labrar, varios colores, largos cabellos rubios, negros, frisados, crespos, de que estan pobladas: y inuariablemente en la mucha abundancia de comidas de unos mismos generos que todos tienen. Y tambien se aduierta, que todo lo referido lo auemos visto desta vez, y que tanti, erra donde estuuimos surtos, parece ser la misma que va prosiguiendo, y de la grandeza que ellos dizen a suma digo, fundado en razones fuertes, que aquellas gentes estan allí por vezindad y continuacion en otras tierras mas al Sur, Leste, y Oeste, y que si no ay milagro que en aquella oculta quarta de globo, esten muy grandes y muy estendidas prouincias, llenas todas de muchas y muy varias gentes, y que en todos generos aura ventaja, quanto mas fueren subiendo de quinze grados arriba, y por venderse tan tiro, se den esperar mejor a en todo lo apuntado.

Aduiertase que la primera vez que el Adelantado Aluaro de Mendaña, fue y descubrio las islas que llamo, de Salomon, halloen ellas, y se traxeron cantidad de perlas tostadas al fuego, porque los Indios solo solo comen la carne assando las ostras, y que el segundo viage que hizo el mismo Adelantado, descubrio de nueuo la isla de Santacruz, donde murio, y que en ella yo mismo vi muchas conchas, y aquellas muchas pasenas de nacar referidas, y que de vna cierta isla alli cerca, se traxo vn muchacho que se llamò Miguelillo, y que este despues que supo nuestra lengua, dio noticia de auer en su tierra muchas perlas, son grandes muestras de ser assi. Tambien se aduierta, que desta ida anemos visto en tres islas las conchas de nacar, de los tres tamannos, y en la vna dellas Ostiones secos, adonde se hallaron algunas perlas menudas: por manera, que iuntando lo que dixo Pedro, a lo que se ha visto, son quinze las islas de que ay noticia que tienen perlas, y por la vista de sus conchas, se pueden, y deuen esperar, y tambien por ser Aquella poca altura, tan propria para criarse, y quanto Aquellas grandes Taquillas, lo dexo al tiempo; y solo aduierto, que pues Pedro dixo, que ay grandes perlas, que tambien dixo auer grandes conchas, capazes dellas. Y en suma digo, que Dios nuestro Sennor, no da de vna vez todo quanto puedo, y que primero haze la prueua del cosseso, y sufrido amor que le tienen las personas, a quien encamina vna tan gran cosa como a V. M. en esta.

Dixo mas Pedro que al diablo llaman Teruna, y que habla con los Indios de vn palo, sin ser visto, y que a el mismo, y a todos ellos de noche, y muchas vezes, les palpana los rostros, y los pechos con cosa muy fria, y que queriendo saber lo que era no hallauan nada: y esto dezia mostrando cierto recato y temor dando bien a entender se cosa mala y para ellos bien aborrecible; y tambien dixo a otros que no a mi, que antes que a su tierra fueramos ya el diablo les auia dicho que los auiamos de ir a matar. Mostraua muchos desseos de bolner a su tierra, para dezir al Senor de Tannaco, todo el bien que le auiamos hecho, y que los otros Indios sus compannneros, ellos mismos se hecharon de las naos a nado, que nosotros no les hizimos ningun mal. Y tambien mas, para dezir a todos sus naturales quan buena cosa es ser Christiano, y que a el despues que lo era, el diablo no le hablo, ni le o yo, ni de noche le palpo, y para traer su hijo, y venirse a vinir con nosotros. Y tambien dixo, que en su isla de Chicayuna, ay perros grandes como los nuestros, y que los llaman Tiuri, y que ay muchas anas como las de Europa, mas que no las sabien comer: y vna fruta quiso dezir manganas porque las vio, y mucho gengibre, y que en su tiempo haze buen frio, con ser en tan poca altura. Y mas dixo, que a los que matan hombres los aborcan, y que nuestros canallos son buenos para andar en ellos, mas no para ser seruido de los hombres. Era Pedro al parecer de edad de venticinco annos, y en aquella sazon que declaro sabia poco de la lengua Castellana, y a esta causa costo mucho trabaso esta su declaracion, porque se le ha negado y repetido muchas vezes, y parece que si viniera dixera mas razon que ha dado: mas yo creo que es mas para creer lo que esta dicho, que no lo fuera si llegara a ser se ladino, con que yo y todos quanto le tratauo le teniamos por hombre de verdad, y de verguença. Vn dia entro en la yglesia de San Francisco de Mexico, y por ver en ella muchos Crucifixos dixo, que como auia alli tantos Dioses, si le dezian que no auia mas que vn solo Dios Fuele respondido ser todos retratos del verdadeao Christo. Y con esto, y con lo demas que se le dixo parecio satisfacerse y los frayles que le oyeron se alegraron por ser pregunta de hombre que sabia discurrir; y finalmente Domingo de Ramos murio: yo fio de la misericordia de Dios, que pues por vn en estranno modo le traxo al bautismo, y a morir confessado, y olea, le y en tan sennalado dia, y con muestas de buen Christiano, que ha fido para darle su santa gloria. Y este fue su dichoso fin, del qual deno estar muy consolado, y parece que su diuina Magestad va ordenando, que casi no ay a medios humanos para, acabar Aquella su tan grande obra, ò almenos que falten Aquellos en que mas estriuo, ò puedo estriuar.

El otro Indio se llamana Paulo, era muchacho de hasta ocho annos, de color loro, cabello frisado, tenia muy hermosos oios, muy buen talle y mejor condicion, y tanto que todos quantos le trataron le querian mucho, por se tan docil, y agradable: sabia como Pedro las quatro oraciones, y se persignana con mucha alegria, y bautizado y buen Christiano le lleno Dios el dia dela Ascension: dana razon del Demonio, y que se llamana Hadanna, y de como habla con los Indios sin ser visto, y tambien la dana de perros mayores, y menores, y de vn animal como gato, y de vn granderio buzio la parte de su pueblo que en Aquella su tierra ay mucha gente guerrera, enemiga vna de otra, y que no se come carne humana: y esto se deue creer por la mucha que tienen de puercos, y gallinas, y tantas otras comidas, pues el comerse carne humana entre otras gentes, parece proceder de la esterelidad de las tierras, ò de la vestialidad dessus moradores: y porque era ninno y estana enforma, no se pudo saber del quanto se quiso. Vn pe quenno vocabulario tengo, que es lo que pude iuntar de las lenguas de Pedro y Paulo, lo que dezir, que es muy pronunciable.

Por todo lo dicho se vee claramente, que solo ha auidodos grandes partes de tierras apartadas desta Europa, y de la Africa, y Asia: la primera es la America, que descubrio, Christoual Colon, y la segunda y postrera del mundo, es la que vi, y pretendo poblar, y acabar de descubrir para V. M. Esta grandeza deue de ser abraçada, assi por tener tanto de Dios, como por ser dar principio a vna tan grande obra, y de tantos, y tan grandes bienes, que ninguna otra de su genero puede ser mas, ni tanto al presente, ni adelante, como lo podre mostrar si soy oydo, y preguntado.

Siendo pues este caso tan admirable quanto sneua, y viendo, tan empennada mi conciencia, y serme fuerças, tan grandes y tan pessadas, cargas, que por abreuiar, prometo a V. M. de pudiere llegar con ellas, y tuniere de licencia, y aora, para mas obligar a V. M. a lo que tan obligado le tiene el titulo de Rey Catolico, y defensor de la Fê, recuerdo, quan Real, y sennalada merced de Dios es esta, negada a todos los Reyes del mundo, y solo a V. M. concedida, cuyo sonido, ò retin, es fuerça causar grandes inuidias, y a su pessar de todas ellas V. M. ha de conseguir el mas principal intento que es solo hazer la guerra al infierno, que tanto estrago haze en vn numero tan copioso de almas, redimidas por la persona de Christo, con la esperanca que queda de quantas se han de saluar andando tiempos, siendo la saluacion de vna sola de tanto precio, que si necessario fuera el mismo Christo viniera, a dar la vida por ella. Y con esto queda Sennor bien entendido de quanto valor es este hecho, y quantos premios dara Dios, por auerlo (con tanto amor y feruor) intentado; y quantos mas grados de gloria tendra. V. M. si da fin a esta obra de tanta piedad y misericordia, y tan digna de recebir en la memoria de las gentes: aduirtiendo que no sera con tanto gasto de dineros, ni de hombres, ni con Aquellos estragos, ruynas, y escandalos, que suele auer para auerigar el derecho de muy pequennos estados, sino poner debaxo de la proteccion Real con medios todos muy suaues, y iustificados, quanto los puedo mostrar vna tan gran parte de toda la tierra poblada, para en ella sembrar bienes, y costellos frutos que yo espero en Dios han de ser muchos, muy dulces, muy ricos, y muy duraderos: y solo quiero por paga de tanto quanto tanto vale, que V. M. crea la importancia del caso, y quanto conuiene loque pido, y que en todo trato verdad, y que es animo de vender todo lo passado, presente, y venidero por vn precio, y este es Sennor de valde.

SImon Fernandez, a Pilot of Lisbone, told me Richard Hakluyt, before other Portugals in London, the eighteenth of March 1604. That he hauing beene in the Citie of Lima in Peru, did perfectly vnderstand, that foure ships and barkes departed from the said Citie of Lima, about the yeere 1600. in the moneth of February toward the Philippinas. Their Generall was a Mestizo, that is to say, the Sonne of a Spaniard, and an Indian woman. And that seeking to make way toward the Philippinas, they were driuen with strong Northerne winds to the South of the Equinoctiall Line, and fell with diuers rich Countreyes and Ilands, as it seemeth, not farre from the Iles of Salomon. One chiefe place they called Monte de Plata, for the great abundance of siluer that is like to be there. For they found two crownes worth of siluer, as he reported, in two handfuls of dust. And the people gaue them for Iron as much, and more in quantitie of siluer. They report that this place is two moneths saying from Lima, and as much backe againe.

Concerning this Voyage also: the Licentiate Luis de Tribaldo, a Gentleman of qualitie in the Conde de villa Mediana, the Spanish Ambassadeurs house, told me Richard Hakluyt, that two yeeres past he saw at Madrid, a Captaine of quality suing for license to conquer this place, & that he obtained the same. And that diuers religious men and Fathers were to goe to conuert them to Christianitie. They arriued at their returne from this Voyage at Peru, in the moneth of August.

CHAP. XI.

The Historie of LOPEZ VAZ a Portugall (taken by Captaine WITHRINGTON at the Riuer of Plate, Anno 1586. with this Discourse about him) touching American places, discoueries and occurents; abridged.

Part of this Discourse was published by M. Hak. out of a written copie contayning the whole. I haue added & inserted those things which I thought fit, leauing out such as before haue bin by others deliuered.

NOua Hispania was called so by the Spaniards, when they made Discouery of it, for that it was like the Country of Spaine, though the people of the Country termed the Land after their owne Countrey Language (some one part after one, some after another) the most part of the people called it Encata. This Countrey hath sundry great Prouinces in it, so fruitfull of all kinde of necessaries in it for man, that there is neither Africa, Asia, nor Europe, that is better; for that of sustenance for mans bodie there lacketh no store, as Wheat and all other Graines, all beasts necessary for man to eate or to vse, with great store of Silkes, Mynes of Gold, Siluer, Stones, and Pearle. The Countrey is very well inhabited, so that it is thought there is no part of the World better. The King of Spaine becausse hee hath many other Countries vnder him, hee doth little esteeme of this Countrey, but doth take out of it all things that are for his profit, hauing vsed those people with great crueltie, and taking of them much Tribute; this Land hath many Ports in the North Sea, and much more in the South Sea, the principall Ports in the North side is Saint Iuan de Lua. At this place doth he discharge the Armadas that come from Spaine, and from this place they carrie their Merchandize to the great Citie of Mexico: which Citie is sixtie leagues within the Land, and knowne by the Parishes in the same, to haue a hundred and fiftie thousand faire houses of Indians, and six thousand faire houses the Spaniards haue in it.

The Ports. Saint Iuan de Lua. Mexico.

The feare and reuerence that they vse towards the Spaniards is such; that one Spaniard may goe among a thousand of them, and strike the chiefest of them and vse his pleasure, without any word giuen by the Indians to the contrarie, such is the feare that these silly people haue of the Spaniards. But now, thankes be to Almightie God, the Indians of that Country and Kingdome are become Christians: yet notwithstanding now and then the old men, hauing not forgotten their former Law, doe vse their Idolatry, which being knowne are very cruelly corrected by the Frier for the same offence. The people of this Kingdome are of a sharpe wit, and good vnderstanding, for whatsoeuer it be, Sciences or other Arts, these people are very apt to learne it with small instructing, the Indians of this Countrie doe make great store of Woollen Cloth and Silkes, so that they now beginne to carrie of these Silkes for Spaine. And haue all other things necessarie that any other Kingdome of the Christians haue, onely Wine and Oyle, which the King of Spaine denieth to haue made there, but such as commeth from Spaine, because of his customes, notwithstanding the King doth allow them to plant Vineyards for to eate of the Grapes. This Land is greatly commended not for that aboue mentioned, nor yet for the Gold and Siluer Mynes that it hath, but for the great number of Ports for shipping it hath in the South Sea, where they make many great ships, with the which ships they haue traffique with them of Peru, and Paraw-na, and then they haue a Trade to the Philippinas, and to the Ilands of Molucca and China, so that the commodities which the Portugall carrieth for Portugall out of the East Indies, are likewise brought to the Citie of Mexico, by reason of their shipping, although not in so great quantitie, as they carry for Lisbone, not for that they of Mexico either want shipping or abilitie, but because the Spaniards would conquer it with the Sword as he hath done other Lands, and not by the way of Traffique, as the Portugall doth, the principall Port from whence this Merchandize doth come, is called Aguatorke, in the Coast of China on the North side.

After the Conquest of this Kingdome of Mexico, the order how the Spaniard did diuide this Land, was this. The principall Cities they refined to the King of Spaine, and to the Generall of this Conquest, who was renowmed Ferdinando Curtis, they assigned vnto him a great Valley, or as we call it a low Land betweene two Mountaines, which was called Cornouake, by which, Valley he had the name of Marquesse of the Valley, where there were great Townes, in which some affirme to be about 400000. fire houses; whereby the rent was to him better worth then three hundred thousand Duckets by the yeere. These Rents were confirmed to him and his for euer.

Cornauake Valley.

400000. fire houses in this Valley.

The other part of the Land that remayned, was parted among the rest of the Captaines and Souldiers which were at this Conquest, some had a hundred thousand Duckets by yeare, and other fortie thousand Duckets, and some fiftie thousand Duckets, and hee that had least had ten thousand Duckets by the yeare, so that now there are very few which haue this Rent, for that they are most of them dead, so that great part of the said Rents are fallen into the Kings hand, wherefore there are many insurrections against the King, which cost many a mans life.

And now to proceed farther along the Coast, which is a Land full of great Mountains, and very hot with much raine, for which cause it is a very vnholsome Country, where breedeth all noisome wormes and beasts, therefore there are very few Indians dwelling there, and no Spaniards, so that the Countrey is almost desolate. The first Land that is inhabited by the Spaniards along the Coast, is called Veragua, this is the most richest Land of Gold then all the rest of the Indies: therefore it is inhabited with Spaniards. In this place the people are alwayes sicke, and it raineth continually, and the Land yeeldeth no fruit, so that all their sustenance commeth from other places, all which necessities the Spaniards suffer with great patience for the couetousnesse of the Gold, the which Gold they get out of the Riuers with the helpe of a number of Negroes. I doe verily beleeue that if this Land were now the ancient Romanes, or else the Egyptians, they would surely make a channell from the end of this Riuer de Carmas (which issueth from the Lake of Nicaragua) to the South Sea, for that there is no more but foure leagues betweene the Sea and the Riuer, so that there they might Trade to the Molucca's, and to the Coast of China, so would it be sooner and easier done then the long and troublesome Voyages of the Portugals, and sooner made, then to goe through the Straits of Magellan; which is almost vnpossible to passe thorow.

A Channell to be made.

From this Land of Veragua vnto the Iland of Margereta, the Coast along is called the firme Land, not for that the other places are not of the firme Land, but because it was the first firme Land that the Spaniards did conquer after they had past the Ilands. This Land is very hot, and hath much raine, and for this cause is very vnhealthfull, and the most vilest place of all the rest, is called Nombre de Dios: which is the first place inhabited after you haue passed Veragua. There may be in Nombre de Dios: about foure hundred houses, and hath a very good Port for shipping. The cause why the Spaniards inhabited here in this place, was for that it should bee the way by Land to the South Sea, and for the Trade of Peru, that is from hence vnto the Citie of Panama eighteene leagues. And Panama standeth on the Coast of the South Sea. To this Towne of Nombre de Dios doth come all Spanish shipping, and there discharge them, then put they the goods into small Barkes that goe vp a Riuer to a house which is called, The house of Crosses, where the small Barkes doe discharge the goods againe. And then they put it on Mules so to carrie it to Panama, which is seuen leagues from This house of Crosses, all which they doe with much labour and great charge, because the Land hath great store of raine, and full of Mountaines, and very vnhealthfull, therefore they often want victuals, for the victuals they haue come from from Peru, and Noua Hiſpania. This Towne of Nombre de dios, ſince they haue had the traffike out of Spaine, are growne maruellous rich, and very well inhabited, but in ſhort time the people left the Towne, ſauing onely the Merchants, becauſe of the vnhealthfulneſſe * thereof.

* Here followed the hiſtories of Sir Francis Drake, and Iohn Oxenham, which you haue before more compleat.

The King of Spaine hearing of the affaires of Drake and Oxenham, ſent out of Spaine three hundred Souldiers which ſhould make warre againſt thoſe Negros that had aided the Engliſhmen, which were ſlaues vnto the Spaniards, but runne away from their Maſters, and ioyned with the Engliſhmen, thinking that way to be reuenged of the Spaniards crueltie. But when theſe three hundred Souldiers were arriued in the Countrie, at their firſt comming they tooke many of the Negros, and did on them great iuſtice; according to their faults committed, but afterwards the Souldiers were a long time before they could get one Negro. Which newes being ſent vnto the King by his Captaines, as alſo how the Countrie was full of Mountaines and Riuers, and very vnhealthfull, inſomuch that his Souldiers died, he did write to his Captaines to make agreement with thoſe Negros, to the end the Countrie might bee in quiet. And the Negros inhabited two places where the Spaniards willed them, ſo was the Kings pardon proclaimed to all thoſe Negros, from the time that they fled from their Maſters into the Mountaines vnto that preſent day, on condition that all thoſe Negros that did runne from their Maſters that day forward, they ſhould be bound to bring them dead or aliue; but if they brought them not, that then they ſhould pay for them, and to make all quiet in the Mountaines: and on theſe conditions all things were concluded and agreed vpon. So the Negros dwell in great Townes, where they haue Spaniards for their Teachers, and a Spaniard for their Iudge; and with this they hold themſelues very well contented, and are obedient vnto their Rulers.

Warre made with the Negros.

The King of Spaine hearing that Engliſhmen, as well as Frenchmen, haue vſed that Coaſt, hee cauſed two Gallies to be made, and well appointed, to keepe the Coaſt; the firſt yeere that they were made, they tooke ſixe or ſeuen French ſhippes, and after this was knowne, there vſed few Engliſhmen, or French men of warre, to come on the Coaſt, vntill this yeere 1586. that the aforeſaid Francis Drake came with a ſtrong Fleet, of about foure and twentie ſhips, and did ſuch harme as it is well knowne to all Chriſtendome: but God ſparing the King of Spaines life, he will ſufficiently prouide to keepe his Subiects from the inuaſions of other Nations.

Seuen French ſhips taken by two Gallies.

Fr. Drake with 24. ſhips.

Now, to goe forward with our begunne worke, the firſt People that is in this Coaſt, being paſt Nombre de Dios, is called Cartagena, it is a healthfuller Countrie, and a greater Towne then the other, and a better Countrie, with plentie of Victuals, and a very good Port for ſhipping, paſſing any of the reſt, and is called Cartagena, for that it reſembleth very much the Citie of Cartagena in Spaine: there are in it about foure hundred fire houſes in the Citie; it is very rich, by reaſon of the ſhips ſtaying there when they goe or come from Spaine. And if the ſhips chance to winter before they goe home, then they lie at Cartagena: alſo it is greatly enriched by the Merchandiſe that here they doe diſcharge, for to carrie to the new Kingdome of Granada; and much Gold commeth from the ſaid Kingdome vnto Cartagena. This new Kingdome of Granada, is two hundred leagues within the Land. From Cartagena to this Kingdome they cannot trauell by Land, becauſe of the Mountaines, and ſtanding waters, which lie in their way, ſo that they carrie their goods vp a Riuer, called The great Riuer of Magdalene: they can goe with their Barques vp this Riuer but twentie leagues, yet the Riuer is both large and very deepe, but there runneth a great current, ſo that the Barques diſcharge the goods at a place in the Riuer, called Branco de Malambo, into ſmall Canoas which rowe cloſe by the ſhoare ſide.

The Riuer of Branco de Malambo.

There is a paſſage by the New Kingdome, and Popayan, from Cartagena to Peru, by Land, which is about fiue hundred leagues, ſo that taking the two hundred leagues, which they goe vp the Riuer, the other three hundred leagues is a Countrie well inhabited, and quiet trauelling, ſo that oftentimes the Poſts paſſe to and fro, but becauſe the way is long, the Merchants doe not trauell that way but when they are forced thereunto, if any forraine Nations ſhould take and keepe the South Sea, the King might haue his treaſure brought to this place from Peru, and ſo into Spaine. For in times paſt there was a rebellion in Peru by the Spaniards, againſt the King, and thorow theſe Prouinces he ſent his power to ſuppreſſe them.

Santa Marta is a very poore Towne, becauſe it hath beene often robbed of the Frenchmen, and hath no trade, but by a few Indians that dwell about them. Here beginneth the great Mountaines couered all with ſnow, which compaſſeth all the Countrie of India and Peru, vntill you come to the further end of the Straites of Magelan, theſe Mountaines are ſeene with the ſnowe vpon them aboue thirtie leagues into the Sea, in the bottome of this Wilderneſſe, or Mountains, there is a Valley called Tagrona, which is the richeſt place that is knowne: but becauſe the Land that is ioyning to it is full of Mountaines, and the Inhabitants are very many, and withall of a good courage, and they vſe to poiſon their Arrowes, ſo that in ſtriking of a man, hee cannot eſcape death. Therefore it lieth vnconquered, and many Spaniſh Captaines there haue beene ſlaine.

On this Coaſt of The Firme Land, there are aboue ſeuentie Ilands of Sante Domingo, and Cuba, and Porto Rico, although it be not very great, yet it is inhabited by the Spaniard; the reſt of all the Ilands haue beene inhabited by Indians, where was good ſtore of Gold, and Pearles, and Eme-

Emeralds: but the Spaniards haue destroyed all those Indians from off the Earth, and in many of those Ilands is nothing of any value, therefore I haue small cause to intreat of them: but Santa Domingo is an Hand of great bigneſſe, and hath beene very full of people and rich Mines of Gold and Pearles, but now all is wasted away; for it was as full of people as any place of that bigneſſe in the world, yet now are there none left, for they were men of so hard a heart, that they killed themselues, rather then they would serue the Spaniards. It happened on a time, that a Spaniard called certaine Indians to goe to worke in the Mines, which kinde of labour did most grieue them, and would rather doe violence on themselues, then to goe; which the Spaniard perceiuing, he said vnto them, seeing you will rather hang your selues then to goe and worke, I will likewise hang my selfe, and goe with you, because I will make you worke in the other world: but the Indians hearing this, said, wee will willingly worke with you, because you shall not goe with vs; so vnwilling they were of the Spaniards companie: so that of all the Inhabitants of this Iland, there was none escaped death, but onely these few, which was by the meanes of this Spaniard; or else they would haue hanged themselues also. A strange way to keepe men aliue.

There is neere this Iland another Iland greater then Santa Domingo, called Cuba; it is like vnto Santa Domingo, although there is not such store of Sugar, the chiefest place in this Iland is called Labauana, and is a very good Harbour: these people are very rich, by reason of the shipping that doth touch there, which are bound for Noua Hispania and Peru, therefore there is a Castle in this Harbour kept with Spanish Souldiers; for there is no other Castle in all the Land, nor Souldiers but onely here, and in Florida. There is also another Iland inhabited with Spaniards, neere vnto this, which is called Porto Rico: it is but little, and euery way as plentifull as the other two are. Cuba. La bauana. Porto rico.

I will follow my Discourse of the Port Townes along the Coast of the maine Land, and passing once the Iland of Margareta, there are no Townes inhabited by the Spaniards, till you come to Fernanboke, which is on the Coast of Brasill: yet betweene the Iland and Fernanboke, there is the great Riuer of Maranoyn. This Riuer is one of the greatest in the world, it was first found when as the Spaniards did seeke out the other Coast, but none can goe into this Riuer because of the great current that commeth downe; and withall there are many shelues of sand lying about the mouth of it, whereby it was long before that the Riches which is in the Riuer was knowne, vntill the time that the Land of Peru was conquered; at which time a Captaine called Gonsalo Pizarro, entring into the Countrie of Peru, came into a Land which they named La Canela, because there came from thence great store of Cinnamon, but not altogether so good as that which commeth from the Indies. Proceeding further into the Countrie, he came to a great Riuer, where he saw many of the Countrie people come vp in Canoas, bringing Gold to buy and sell with the Spaniards. The Captaine seeing this, was desirous to see the end of this Riuer, but could not trauell by Land because of the Mountaines, wherefore he made a small Pinnace, to goe see from whence these Indians brought their Gold; and he sent in this Pinnace, a Captaine vnder him, called Orillana, with thirtie men, the which went downe the Riuer, but could not returne to their Captaine Pizarro, because of the great current which was very strong against them, and forced them to passe the Riuer, and enter into the Sea, and so came to the Iland of Margareta: but as they passed the Riuer, they found it well inhabited with Indians, and to haue good store of Gold. These men with their Pinnace were passing downe this Riuer a yeere and a halfe; for the Riuer lieth very crooked, which maketh a long way by water, and the Spaniards neuer durst land, because they saw the Countrie so full of people; but tooke many Canoas, where they had good store of Victuals, and some Gold. Now this Captaine Orillana comming vnto Margareta with this good newes and riches, hee determined with himselfe, not to returne againe vnto his Captaine Pizarro, which sent him, but tooke his way from hence to the King of Spaine, and presented him with the Gold that he brought out of the Riuer. Whereupon the King sent him with a Fleet of ships, and sixe hundred men, to inhabite the said Riuer: but because of the great current, and shoalds that are in this Riuer, he left the most part of his men, and ships, and with those that remained, hee went vnto certaine Ilands hard by the Riuer, and built him Pinnaces: but the Countrie being very vnhealthfull, hee himselfe died, and many of his men, and the rest that remained, went euery one the way that pleased him best. The Port Townes. Fernanboke. The Riuer of Maranoyn. La Canela. The great Riuer of Maranon. Orillana. Margareta ili Iland.

The fame of this Riuer was straightway spred thorow Spaine and Portugall, so that a Gentleman of Portugall, called Leus de Melo, which asked licence of Don Iuan the third, then King of Portugall, that he might goe and conquer this said Riuer: for from the mouth of this Riuer to the mouth of this Riuer of Plate, is that part of America, which the Kings of Portugall doe hold according to the partition that the Kings of Spaine and Portugall both made betweene themselues; so that the King of Portugall hauing this Riuer in his part, hee gaue it to the said Leus de Melo, to conquer: who taking ten ships, and eight hundred men, among which there were many Gentlemen, and comming to the mouth of this Riuer, hee lost all the shippes sauing two sayle, and in one of them that were saued was Leus de Melo, also the most part of the men that were in the ships were saued and got to shoare, and so went along vnto the Iland Margareta, from whence they were dispersed throughout all the Indies. Thus these two seuerall Fleets Brasill conquered.

of ſhips being caſt away, by ſuch euill fortune, neuer any Captaine after, would giue the attempt to conquer this ſaid Riuer. Yet from the new Kingdome of Granado, before ſpoken of, two or three Captaines haue gone by Land to diſcouer it.

Pedro de Orzua, or Oſſuna.

None of all theſe came to any plaine diſcouerie till few yeeres paſt, a Captaine of the Countrie of Nauarre, called Pedro de Orzua, who came into the Countrie of Peru, neere the place where before Captaine Pizarro had firſt diſcouered, and had with him about ſeuen hundred men, all Spaniards, which was maruell that he could haue ſo many, and amongſt them there were many Gentlemen, and old Souldiers of Peru, which cauſed many mutinies and inſurrections. With all theſe men he came to the head of this Riuer, (all the matters that come from the Mountaines of Peru, and the Riuers which runne within the Land from ſixteene degrees, and the Line, runne all into this Riuer, which cauſeth it to be ſo great.) Now at the head of this Riuer, the Captaine Pedro de Orzua made fifteene Pinnaces, with many Canoas, in which he carried aboue two thouſand Indians to helpe him, with many Horſes and other prouiſion, for to inhabite there, for it was not poſſible for him to carrie all his prouiſion by Land, for that the Mountaines bee very great, and betweene them many ſmall Riuers, which iſſue out of this great Riuer aboue twentie leagues into the Land. So this Captaine hauing all his things in good order, went downe this Riuer with all his men, and came to a plaine Countrie from the Mountaines, where the Indians did dwell, and there held a Counſell, determining in that place to build a Towne, and to fortifie it very ſtrong, becauſe he would leaue all his ſtuffe, there and ſuch men as were not Souldiers. So they began to make the ſaid Towne, and worke on it all the Winter, where becauſe it raineth much, and is with all very hot, whereby ſickneſſe did beginne to riſe among them, and alſo want of Victuals; wherefore his men began to murmure. Theſe men came all out of the Land of Peru, which is the fruitfulleſt Land in all the World, and moſt richeſt; therefore theſe men were the more giuen to haue their fill of Bread and Meat, then to lay their bodies to labour, which was the cauſe: that although the Countrie in which they were, was very fruitfull, and alſo they ſaw with their eyes, the Gold that was there, as alſo how vp in the Countrie it ſeemed much better then the place in which they were, notwithſtanding they murmured, and would needs returne for Peru, from whence they came.

Towne founded.

Lopez de Agira his mutinie.

There was among theſe men a Souldier of Biſca, called Lopez de Agira, a very little man of body, and was lame of one of his legs, but very valiant, and of good experience in the warres (this man was one of the principall mutiners in Peru, and therefore giuen vſually thereunto) this fellow asked the Souldiers, what they went to ſeeke in thoſe Wildernesſes where as they were brought, for ſaid he, if you ſeeke riches, there is enough in Peru, and there is, ſaid hee, Bread, Wine, Fleſh, and faire Women, ſo that it were better to goe thither and conquer that, and take it out of the hands of the Spaniards, for that would eaſily be done: for that all the Souldiers, & poore men of Peru would turne vnto them, and that were a better way then to goe and conquer the ſauage people in thoſe Mountaines, ſo that they once hauing the gouernment of Peru, that then the King of Spaine ſhould agree with them, if not ſaid he, we ſhall not lacke them that will ſend vs ſuccour for to haue the riches that is in the Land of Peru. By theſe perſwaſions hee brought many Souldiers to be of his minde; and agreed with a young Gentleman of Seuill, called Don Fernando de Goſman, the which was in loue with a yong woman, that the Captain Pedro de Orzua or Oſſuna had, and therefore he did the ſooner agree with Lope de Agire to fulfill his intent. On a night, the Captaine being aſleepe in his bed, theſe Souldiers entred into his Bed-chamber, & ſtabbed him with their Daggers, as alſo they ſlue all the Captains friends, and they made a great crie, ſaying, Liue the King, liue the King, wherwith all the Campe was in an vprore. Then Lope de Agire made vnto the Souldiers a long Oration, & got them all to conſent with him, ſome by force, ſome becauſe they durſt not ſay to the contrarie, and others with their good will, in the end they all agreed vnto his determined purpoſe. So they made the gentleman their head, and Lope de Agire was made Captaine, this done, and becauſe the people ſhould the better hold their opinion, hee did as great a villanie as euer any Spaniard did, for hee made an Altar, on which hee and all the Souldiers did denie their ſeruice vnto the King of Spaine, and ſo as people without a King, they choſe the ſaid Don Fernando to be their King, and did vnto him homage.

The Captaine murthered.

Fernando de Guſman choſen King.

Theſe matters being finiſhed, they agreed among themſelues which ſhould be the beſt way for them to goe to Peru, for they could not goe vp the Riuer from whence they came, for the great currant, and alſo if they ſhould goe thorough the land, they ſhould be very weake for want of Horſemen, therefore they determined to goe downe the Riuer. Then ſaid this Lope de Agire, that they would carry nothing with them, but the Pinnaces and Souldiers which ſhould fight, and that it were beſt to leaue behinde them, all the Indians that they brought from Peru, with the women, and ſicke men, vnto which their Generall Don Fernando would not agree, for that he knew that when they were gone, the people of the Countrie would kill them all. Lope de Agire hearing this, and longing to be chiefe Gouernour himſelfe ouer all, and taking vnto him thirtie of his owne Countrie men, of his own diſpoſition, he ſodainly killed Don Fernando, whom not twentie daies before hee had ſworne to obey. But now by his ſubtile working, and being withall eloquent in his talke, he cauſed the people to make himſelfe Gouernour, and made the people people beleeue that all these cruelties were done to saue themselues, but the tyrannie of this man did not end here (he was of the Countrie of Biſca, a land ioyning vnto France, therefore I rather beleeue that he was a Frenchman then a Spaniard, for that in the heart of a Spaniard there is not so much crueltie as this man had.) Now he being ready to goe his way, he determined not to carrie with him any Gentleman or other of high degree, and therefore hee slew all those which hee did know to be of high degree or Gentlemen, and then departed onely with the common Souldiers, and left behinde him all the Spanish women and sicke men, with all other creatures.

If I should rehearse all the cruell murders of this wicked man one by one, I should be ouer much tedious vnto you; onely I say in as few words as I may, that this man proceeded downe the Riuer, and had with him onely foure hundred men, but before he passed this Riuer, and came to Margareta, he had no more left but two hundred and thirtie men, for the rest hee had done to death, and left ashore among the people of the Countrie: he vsed this tirannie because hee alwaies stood in feare of his life, for that if he had seene but two Souldiers talke together, hee thought that he had alwaies consulted on his death, and therefore hee vsed the order aboue said, now he neuer went any way but that they had in his companie thirtie Biscains of his owne will and minde, for to execute his cruell desire: As these Souldiers with their Captaine came downe the Riuer, they saw many Canoas with Gold in them going to and fro, and people on both sides the Riuer, where in their passage many times they landed and got good store of Gold, and victuals.

Nothing so cruell as feare proceeding from an ill conscience.

Now did they see also that which Orellana had reported, which was that there were Amazones, women that fight in the warre with Bowes and Arrowes, but these women fight to helpe their husbands, and not by themselues as Orellana reported from the company of men; there were of these women in diuers parts of the Riuer, and saw the Spaniards fight with their husbands, and came and helped them, and shewed themselues more valiant then their husbands, and therefore is named the Riuer of the Amazones: the Spaniards intent onely was to passe downe the Riuer, and therefore neuer sought to know the Countrie within the land; yet tooke they good store of Gold, and put it into one of the Pinnaces where he went himselfe, which Pinnace at the mouth of the Riuer was cast away, but he himselfe escaped, because as yet he had not made an end of his bloudie minde. But comming to the Iland of Margareta, the Gouernour thereof thought he had beene one of the Kings Captaines, receiued him with Pinnaces, and brought to him good store of victuals, but he put him to death presently and landed on the Ilands, and tooke it and two Shippes that were in the Ilands; and tooke perforce one hundred and fiftie men to goe with him, and others that went willingly, with good store of victuals and many Horses; and then returned to the maine land, saying that with his small force hee would subdue the whole Indies; thinking that all the old Souldiers and poore people in seeing of him would all turne to his side, and take his part, and so hee went deceiued in his owne conceit, for he had not gone two dayes Iourney vp in the Land, when the Captaine of new Granado came against him with a power of men, but Lope de Agire hoping that the other Souldiers would haue come all vnto him, whereby his strength might bee the more; but hee was deceiued, for his owne men left him and tooke the Kings Captaines part. Now seeing himselfe destitute of his Souldiers, and voide of all helpe, he then shewed himselfe more cruell then did the tyrant Nero, for this man killed his owne daughter, being but sixteene yeeres of age, which he brought with him from Peru, for that she should not be made the bed of Villains, nor be called the daughter of a Traitor: these words he vsed vnto her, after he had giuen her her deaths wound: but before hee could finish this cruell deed, the Souldiers came vpon him, and cut him in pieces; yet his daughter did die of her wound in that place, and thus you haue heard the euill end of this cruell man, for hee was the cause likewise that the King would neuer suffer to haue this Riuer discouered, so that the riches resteth to this day vnknowne that is in this Riuer.

R. Amazones why so called. Note the truth of that which hath mocked men touching Amazons in Asia, Africa and America. None other haue yet by credible reports beene found but warlike wiues, and not solitary vnimamians. His treason at Margarita.

Lope de Agire slayeth his daughter, and is slaine.

Great riches hidden within the Riuer of Maragnon.

Now hauing ended with this Riuer of Marannon, all the Coast between this Riuer and the Riuer of Plate, is called the Coast of Brasill, taking the name of the wood in the Countrie, which is called Brasill wood (for there is great store of it.) Brasill was first found by Pedro Arnales Cabrall in the second time that the King of Portugall sent his ships for the East Indies, and so tooke possession of this Land, for the King of Portugall. The King Don Emanuel, hauing newes hereof, sent ships for to discouer the whole Countrie, and found it to be the Land of America, which ioyneth to the West Indies; wherefore there was some controuersie betweene him and the King of Spaine, but in the end being both kinsmen, and great friends, they agreed that the King of Portugall should hold all the Countrie that he had discouered, the which was as I haue said, from the Riuer of Marannon to the Riuer of Plate, although the Spaniards say that it is no further then the Iland of Santa Catalina, and hereupon there haue beene many controuersies, betweene the Portugals and Spaniards and many men slaine.

The coast of Brasill.

There came in the yeere 1587. into this Riuer of Plate two English Ships and a Pinnace of the honorable the Earle of Cumberland, being bound for the straights of Magelanus, and anchored ten leagues leagues within this Riuer, at a little Iland hard by the Iland called Seall Iland, &c. There is a port called la Para Iua, which few yeares paſt, the Frenchmen hearing of the troubles that were in Portugall, came to this place, and made there a Fort, and ſo the French Ships came euery yeare thither to lade Braſill wood. But they of Fernambocke with the helpe of the Spaniards went and burnt fiue ſhips within the Port, and tooke the Fort, but ſome of the Frenchmen ranne into the Mountaines, and others ſlaine, ſo that the Spaniards doe there inhabit to this day. Now to returne vnto Fernambocke, inhabited by a Portugall Captaine called Eduarte Coelio, this is the greateſt Towne in all that Coaſt, and hath aboue three thouſand houſes in it, with ſeuentie Ingenios of Sugar, and great ſtore of Braſill wood, and good ſtore of Cotton, yet are they in great want of victuals, for that all that they haue commeth out of Portugall, and from other places there on the Coaſt. It is a barred Harbour, and for ſmall Barkes, this place belongeth yet to the Sonne of Eduarte Coelio. Paſſing hence is the Cape of Saint Auguſtine, and next to that is the Riuer of Saint Franciſco, which is alſo a great Riuer. Betweene this and the Bayha, it is all a Wilderneſſe, inhabited with cruell Sauage people; for whom ſoeuer they take they kill to eate. The Towne of Baya belongeth to the King, and therefore the Gouernour that gouerneth all the Coaſt along, is in this Towne of Baya, and alſo the Biſhop; it is a Towne of a thouſand houſes, and hath fortie Ingenios of Sugar, and much Cotton, but no Braſill wood. The Sea runneth vp fourteene or fifteene leagues, where they get ſome yeeres good ſtore of Ambergreece; here there is plentie of victuals, and although it be hot, it is a healthfull Countrey, and holeſome aires. The next Coaſt is called, Las Ilhas, it is a ſmall Towne not aboue one hundred and fiftie houſes, there are but three Ingenios of Sugar, the moſt part of theſe people are labouring men, and carry victuals to Fernambock in three ſmall Barkes: this people belong vnto a Gentleman called Lucas Geraldo.

Parawa now inhabited by Spaniards.
Fernambock hath 3000. houſes.
Baya a town belonging to the King: for hee gaue moſt part of this Country to Gentlemen, becauſe they found no Mynes, &c.
As Ilhas hath 150. houſes.

From hence, the next to this Towne is called Porto Sequero: this hath foure ſmal Townes, and are in all about three hundred houſes, it belongeth to a Gentleman called Vaſco Fernandes Coytenio: from hence they goe to the Riuer of Ienero, which hath about three hundred houſes. In this place alſo the Frenchmen inhabited firſt, whoſe Captaine was called Monſieur de Villegagnon, hee made here a Fort, and planted good Ordnance thereon, and lades euery yeere great ſtore of Braſill from thence, and had great friendſhip with the Sauage people, which ſerued him very well. But the King of Portugall ſent a power of men againſt the Frenchmen, and firſt tooke the French ſhips by Sea, and then landed, and beſieged the Fort, and in time tooke them with the Captaine, and becauſe the French Captaine was a Gentleman, and neuer hurt the Portugals, therefore they gaue thirtie thouſand Duckets for his Ordnance, with all things that they had in the Fort, and ſo ſent him for France, and the Portugals inhabited the Riuer. There is not at this preſent but two Ingenios, and great ſtore of Braſil-wood, with plentie of victuals.

Porto Sequero hath foure ſmall townes.
Rio de Ienero hath 300. houſes.
Villagagnons Fort taken. Of him and it you haue before in Leuin.

From this Riuer of Ienero, they go along the Coaſt of Saint Vincent, which hath foure Townes, the greateſt is called Santos, and hath foure hundred houſes, there are here three Ingenios, but a very poore Country. About few yeeres paſt there came two Engliſh ſhips into this Harbor, which were going for the Straits of Magellanes, who being in this Port, there came thither three of the King of Spaines ſhips, and fought with the Engliſhmen, but the Engliſhmen ſunke one of them, and therefore the King commanded a Fort to be made, becauſe that no Engliſh ſhippes that were bound to the Straits ſhould not victuall there, the which Fort ſtandeth on the mouth of the Harbour, this Countrey belongeth to a Gentleman called Martin Alonſo de Souſa, this is the laſt Inhabitance in all the Coaſt of Braſill; this ſaid Coaſt is very full of Mountaines, and raineth much, therefore they cannot goe from Towne to Towne by Land. All the dwellings in this Countrey are by the Sea ſide, yet the Portugals haue many times trauelled vp in the Countrie a hundred and fiftie leagues, but finding no profit, inhabited in no place.

The Coaſt of Saint Vincent hath foure townes.
Two Engliſh ſhips by Fenton and Ward.

The Coaſt from Saint Vincent is all full of Mountaines, till you come to the Iland of Saint Catalina, from this Iland till you come to the Straites of Magellanes, is very plaine and without Woods.

The Coaſt of Saint Vincent.

The Riuer of Plate was diſcouered by Solis, and after by Sebaſtian Cabot, which went one hundred and fiftie leagues vp in it and built a Fort; after by Don Pedro de Mendoza, who hauing loſt eight ſhips, died in the way homewards: the poore men which hee left behind him for very hunger, died the moſt part of them, for that there about were very few Indians, and therefore ſmall ſtore of victuals, but onely liued by hunting of Deere and fiſhing. Of all the men that this Don Pedro left behind him, there was liuing no more but two hundred men, which in the ſhips Boats went vp the Riuer, leauing in this place called bonas ayres, three Mares and Horſes. But it is a wonder to ſee, that of thirtie Mares and ſeuen Horſes which the Spaniards left in this place, that in fortie yeeres theſe beaſts haue ſo increaſed, that the Countrey is twentie leagues vp full of Horſes, whereby one may ſee the paſture, and fruitfulneſſe of the Countrey. The Spaniards that went vp this Riuer, were three hundred leagues vp, and found the Countrey full of Indians, where were great ſtore of victuals, and the Spaniards dwelt among them as their friends, and the Indians did giue their Daughters to wife vnto the Spaniards, and ſo they dwelt in one Towne together, which the Spaniards called La Aſcenſion, which ſtandeth on the North ſide of the Riuer. Theſe foreſaid Spaniards, were twentie yeeres in this place, before any of them in Spaine heard of these poore mens dwelling in this Riuer. But the Spaniards now waxing old, and fearing that if they were dead, that then there Sonnes which they had in this Countrey, which were very many, should liue without the knowledge of any other Christians; determined among themselues to make a ship, and so to send newes into Spaine, with Letters vnto the King, of all things that had passed within the Riuer among them. Vpon this newes the King sent them three ships, with a Bishop, Friers and Priests, and more men and women to inhabit with all kind of cattell. When this succour was come, they inhabited in two places more on the North side of the Riuer, and trauelled three hundred leagues beyond the Ascension, but found neither Gold nor Siluer, but returned backe againe to Ascension: the people are so multiplyed in this Citie, that it is now one of the greatest Cities in all the Indies, and hath aboue two thousand houses, it is a fruitfull Countrey of all kind of victuall, and there is Sugar and Cotton, from this Citie of Ascension, one hundred and fiftie leagues toward the Riuers mouth, there is another Towne, which they call Santa Fee. Also fiue yeeres past, they haue inhabited againe the Towne of Bonos Ayres on the South side, because they would haue some Trade with them on the Coast of Brasill, but there fortune was such, that the first time that they went to Brasill, and would haue returned to the Riuer of Plate againe, they were taken by two shippes of England, that were going to the Straits of Magellanes. The Coast along from this Riuer to the Straits of Magellanes, is a Land which hath not beene discouered, neither by Sea nor Land, sauing only certaine Ports which they haue seene going to the Straits.

Santa Fee.
Bonos Ayres.

The next that sought to passe the Straits after Magelanes were two shippes of Genoa which came to the mouth of the Straits, and with a great storme were put back againe, and one of them whose Master was called Pancaldo, put into the Riuer of Plate, and was cast away about Bonos Ayres, and to this day there is part of the ship to be seene, and some of the men are yet liuing in the Riuer among the Spaniards, and the other ship went home to Genoa againe. Also there was a Bishop of Placencia in Spaine, coueting Riches, made a fleet of foure ships to passe the Straits, and so to goe vnto the Moluccas, and getting license of the Emperour, he sent his ships to the Straits, and had very faire wind til they came thither, and entring the Straits twentie leagues, the storme of Westerly windes tooke them, and drone three of them ashoare, and the other went into the Sea, and the storme being past, hee returned into the Strait to seeke his companions, and found many men going on the shoare side, but the ships were beaten all in pieces, and they on the Land called vnto the ship. But the Captaine seeing that his ship was but little, and had small store of victuals, he would not goe to them ashoare, but went on his Voyage, and passed the Straits, and because he was alone, he would not goe to the Moluccas, but went to the Coast of Peru vnto the Citie of Lima, where the ship is yet vnto this day, the men that were in the Straits, where the three ships were cast away, were to the number of two hundred and fiftie men, whose Captaine was called Queros, being Kinsman to the Bishop of Placentia, it is fortie yeeres since these men were left there, but neuer heard of vnto this day. A yeere after this, certaine Merchants of the Groine in Galizia, set forth other three ships, which ship also came to the Straits mouth, where one of them was cast away withall the men, and the other returned for Spaine, also I haue had intelligence that there hath beene certaine Portugall ships, which haue come to the mouth of the Straits, and left two of their Pinnasses which they sent to know the Land, and so the ships returned, and after these other two French ships were sent from the Riuer of Iuero, by Monsieur de villagagnon ouer for the Straits, but when they came into the height of fortie fiue degrees, they put backe againe by a great storme of contrary winds. After all this the Gouernour of Chili, called Don Garcia de Mendoza Sonne to the Marquesse of Tenuta, would also discouer the Straits from the South Sea, and sent from Chili two ships with a Captaine called Latherelio; but the danger to seeke the Straits by the South Sea, is more then by the North Sea, because all the stormes on the North Sea, come from the Land, and in the South Sea the wind and stormes came all out of the Sea, and forceth the ship on the shoare, so that these two ships were lost in fiftie degrees. The seeking of the Straits of Magelanes is so dangerous, and the Voyage so troublesome, that it is almost vnpossible to be obtained, so that for the space of thirtie yeeres, no man made account of it, till of late yeeres one Francis Drake an Englishman, &c.

Captaine Queros. Oniedo cals him Zamargo.

Fr. Drake. You haue his and Candishes, and other English and Dutch voyages thorow the Straits before.

Captaine Drake carried from the Coast of Peru, eight hundred sixtie sixe thousand pieces of siluer, which is eight hundred sixtie sixe Kintals at a hundred pound waight, the Kintall, and euery Kintall is worth twelue hundred Duckets of Spaine, which is a Million, thirtie nine thousand and two hundred Duckets, besides this, he carried away a hundred thousand pieces of Gold, which is ten Kintals, and euery Kintall is worth fifteene hundred Duckets of Spaine, which amounteth to a hundred and fiftie thousand Duckets, besides that which hee had in the ship that was not customed, which I doe not know of, as well Pearles, Precious stones, and other things of great value, besides the money he had in coine, with all this he went towards Noua Hispania: and at an Iland which is before you come there called The Iland of Cockles, he discharged all things out of his ship and graued her there, and remayned there fiftie dayes, from hence he went along the Coast of Hispania, where he tooke many ships laden with Spices, Silkes, and Veluets: but no Gold nor Siluer, for here is none on this Coast.

The Iland of Cockels. Others say the Iland of Caris.

Pedro Sarmiento was sent to the Straits with two ships, and at the Straits met with a storme, Fiftie degrees fiue minutes.

and he not knowing how, nor which way in a night he was put into the Straits, the other ſhip runne more into the Sea, and came into fiftie eight degrees, the ſtorme being paſt, he found many Ilands ioyning to the maine Lands, and ſo returned with faire weather all along the ſhoare, and neuer found any other way to enter the Straits, but only that which Magellanes did diſcouer, which is thought to be otherwiſe by the ſayings of others, which affirme the Straits to be full of Ilands, to the Southwards.

Pedro Sarmiento.

Pedro Sarmiento entred the Straits, where his men were in a mutinie, and would haue returned for Lima, but he hanged one of them, and ſo went on his Voyage for Spaine, and told the King that there were two narrow points in the Straits, where he might build a Fort, and that the Straits was a very good Countrey, and had great ſtore of Riches and other neceſſaries, and very well inhabited with Indians. Vpon whoſe words, and for that there were more ſhips making readie in England to paſſe the Straits; The King ſent Diego Floris de Valdes with three and twentie ſhips, and three thouſand, fiue hundred men, as alſo the Gouernour of Chili, with fiue hundred old Souldiers new come out of Flanders. Theſe ſhips had the hardeſt hap of any ſhips that went out of Spaine ſince the Indies were found, for that before they came from the Coaſt of Spaine, a ſtorme tooke them and caſt away fiue of the ſhippes, and loſt in them aboue eight hundred men, and the reſt put into Calls, notwithſtanding the King ſent them word that yet they ſhould proceed: and ſo did with ſixteene ſaile of ſhips, for that other two ſhips were ſo ſhaken with the ſtorme that they could not goe, and in the ſixteenth ſaile Pedro Sarmiento was ſent to bee Gouernour in the Straits, and had committed vnto him fiue hundred men for to ſtay in the Straits: he had alſo all kind of Artificers to make his Forts and other neceſſaries, with great ſtore of Ordnance and other Munition.

D. F. de Valdes his diſaduentures.

This fleet becauſe it was late, did winter on the Coaſt of Braſil in the Riuer of Ienero, and from hence they went where the Winter was paſt, and about the height of fortie two degrees they had a ſtorme, ſo that Diego Flores beat vp and downe about two and twentie dayes, in which time he had one of his beſt ſhips ſunke in the Sea, and in her three hundred men and twentie women, that went to inhabit the Straits, and alſo moſt part of the munition that ſhould bee left in the Straits. In the end the ſtorme grew ſo great, that the ſhips might not indure it any longer, but were put back againe vnto an Iland called Saint Catalina, and there he found a Barke, wherein were certaine Friers going for the Riuer of Plate, which Friers told him of two great ſhips of England, and a Pinnaſſe that had taken them, but tooke nothing from them, nor did them any harme, but only asked them for the King of Spaines ſhippes. Now Diego Flores knowing that theſe Engliſh ſhippes would goe to the Straits, hee alſo was determined to goe to the Straits, although it was the moneth of February, and chooſing ten ſhips of the fifteene that were left, hee ſent three ſhips that were old and ſhaken with the ſtorme, he put in them all the women and ſick men that were in the fleet, and ſent them to the Riuer of Ienero: and left two other ſhips which were not for the Sea at the Iland, and he with the other ten ſhips returned againe for the Straits.

The Riuer of Ienero.

Port of Saint Vincent.

Now the three ſhips in which the ſicke men and women were, came to the Port of Saint Vincent, where they found the two Engliſh ſhips, ſo they would haue the Engliſhmen gone out of the Harbour, and hereupon they fell at fight, and becauſe that theſe three ſhips were weake with the foule weather that they had, as alſo the men were the refuſe of all the fleet, the Engliſhmen eaſily put them to the worſt, and ſunke one of them, and might haue ſunke another if they would, but they minded not the deſtruction of any man: for it is the greateſt vertue that can be in any man, that when he may doe hurt, he will not doe it.

Fenton.

Vpon this the Engliſhmen went from this Port to Spirito Sancto, where they had victuals for their Merchandize, and ſo returned home to England, without doing any harme in the Country.

Iohn Drake.

Seale Iland.

Iohn Drake went from them in the Pinnaſſe (the cauſe why I know not) but the Pinnaſſe came into the Riuer of Plate, and within fiue leagues of Seale Iland, not far from the place where the Earle of Cumberlands ſhips tooke in freſh water, this ſaid Pinnaſſe was caſt away vpon a ledge of Rockes, but the men were all ſaued in the Boate. They were eighteene men, and went aſhoare vpon the North ſhoare, and went a dayes iourney into the Land, where they met with the Sauage people, theſe people are no man-eaters, but take all the Chriſtians that they can, and make them there ſlaues, but the Engliſhmen fought with them, and the Sauages ſlue fiue Engliſhmen, and tooke the other thirteene aliue, which were with the Sauages about fifteene monethes.

Richard Faire-weather.

But the Maſter of the Pinnaſſe, which was Richard Faireweather, beeing not able to indure this miſery that hee was in, and hauing knowledge that there was a Towne of Chriſtians on the other ſide of the Riuer, he in the night called Iohn Drake, and another young man which was with them, and tooke a Canoa which was very little, and had but two Oares, and ſo paſſed to the other ſide of the Riuer, which is aboue nine leagues broad, and were three dayes before they could get ouer, and in this time they had no meate, and comming to land, they hit vpon a high way that went towards the Chriſtians and ſeeing the footing of Horſes, they follow it, and at laſt came to a Houſe where as there was Corne ſowed, and there they met with Indians which were Seruants vnto the Spaniards, which gaue them to eate, and clothes to couer them, for they were all naked; and one of the Indians went to the Towne, and told them of the Engliſhmen, ſo

the Captaine ſent foure Horſemen, which brought them to the Towne behind them, then the Captayne clothed them, and prouided for them lodging, and Iohn Drake ſate at the Captaines Table, and ſo intreated them very well, thinking to ſend them for Spaine. But the Vice-roy of Peru hearing of this, ſent for them, ſo they ſent him Iohn Drake, but the other two they kept, becauſe that they were married in the Countrey. Thus I know no more of their affaires. But vpon this newes, there were prepared fiftie Horſemen to goe ouer the Riuer, to ſeeke the reſt of the Engliſhmen and Spaniards, that were alſo among theſe Sauage people, but I am not certaine where they went forward or not.

But now let vs returne to Diego Flores, who paſſed from the Iland of Santa Catalina, towards the Straits in the middle of February, and comming in the height of the Riuer of Plate, hee ſent the Gouernour of Chili, with three ſhips vp the Riuer Bonas Ayres, and ſo to go ouer land to Chili. Of theſe three ſhips they loſt two, but ſaued the men and the other prouiſion, and the third returned for Spaine. Then Diego Flores with the other ſeuen ſhips came as high as fiftie two degrees, which is the mouth of the Straits, and becauſe it was the end of March, which is the latter end of Summer, ſo that the Countrey was full of ſnow, and withall a ſudden ſtorme came, that he could not ſee Sarmiento and his men aſhoare, but returned the ſecond time to the Coaſt of Braſill, to the Riuer of Ienero, where he heard newes of the Engliſh ſhips, by the two ſhips that eſcaped from the Engliſhmen, whereupon hee left his Lieutenant Diego de Ribera, and Sarmiento, that they might the next yeere returne for the Straits. So Diego de Flores with foure ſhips which hee had left, and other foure which the King had ſent to ſuccour him, went all along the Coaſt to ſeeke for the Engliſhmen, but could not find them, for they were gone directly for England, ſo he went vnto a Port called Paraina, where he found fiue French ſhips, and burnt three, and tooke two, and alſo the Fort that the Frenchmen had, and put in Spaniards, and the Frenchmen runne into the Mountaynes to the Sauages, this done, he returned for Spaine. And his Lieutenant Diego de Ribera, and Sarmiento had the next yeere ſuch good fortune, that they arriued ſafely into the Straits with all their ſhips, and ſo ſet aſhore foure hundred men, and becauſe the ſhips Boat could not land being once laden, the ſhip that had all the victuals and munition, that ſhip they runne aſhoare in a Bay, and as the water did ebbe they tooke all things out of her, this beeing done, Diego de Ribera left Sarmiento with foure hundred men, thirtie women, and a ſhip with victuals for eight moneths, and with the other three returned, being in the Straits but eight dayes.

Now Pedro Sarmiento made a Towne at the mouth of the Straits on the Northſide, and put therein a hundred and fiftie men, and from hence hee went by Land, and ſent the ſhip further into the Straits, and fiftie leagues within the Straits at the narroweſt place of all, where is a very good Port, here he made another Towne, which he named the Towne of King Philip, and alſo would haue made a Fort, and planted Ordnance for the defence of the Straits, but the Snow and the Winter was ſo great, that hee could not proceed in it; but hee tooke aboue fiue and twentie Mariners into the ſhip with him, and ſaid, hee would goe ſee how the other people did, and ſo came to the Straits mouth to the Towne, and after hee had beene there a day or two with them, he ſaid, that a ſtorme put him from the Straits by force, and broke his Cables (but his men ſaid to the contrary, that he himſelfe cut his Cables; God knoweth the truth) and ſo he came to the Riuer of Ienero: and not finding any ſuccour there came from the King, hee went to Fernambocke, asking aide of the Captaine for victuals, the Captaine incontinent, laded his ſhip with victuals and clothes for the men, ſo that hauing theſe things, hee tooke his way for the Straites, but betweene the Cape of Saint Auguſtine, and the Baya, the wind came out of the Sea, with ſuch violence, that it forced the ſhip to runne aſhore, where Sarmiento had three of his men drowned, and he with the reſt hardly eſcaped; the ſhip was loſt, and all that was in her. And then he came by Land to the Baya, and the Gouernour of Braſill, bought a Barke that was there in the Harbour, and lading her with victuals and clothes for the men, hee hauing this prouiſion, with diuers other more that were needfull for his men, he tooke his Voyage for the Straits, and comming as high as fortie foure degrees, he met with a ſudden ſtorme, and was forced to throw all ouer-boord that he carried, and was yet in the end compelled to returne for the Riuer of Ienero: where hee ſtayed for ſuccour from the King a whole yeere; but there came not ſo much as a Letter for him, for the King was ſore grieued at Pedro Sarmiento, becauſe he told him that in the narroweſt place of the Straits it was but a mile ouer, but Diego de Ribera and others told the King that it was aboue a league broad, that if a ſhip came with wind and current, all the Ordnance in the World could not hurt them, whereby the King thought that Pedro Sarmiento had deceiued him, in making him to loſe ſo many men, and to be at ſo great a charges to no effect. Alſo the Gouernour of Baya, ſeeing the King wrote not to him, would giue Sarmiento no more ſuccour, wherefore Sarmiento went in his ſhip for Spaine, which he came laſt in from the Straits, and it is ſaid, that he was taken by Engliſhmen, and ſo carried for England. It is reported that this Sarmiento is the beſt Mariner in all Spaine, and hath ſayled farthеſt. After all this, the Captaine of the Riuer Ienero, ſent a ſmall ſhip with victuals for the Straits, but was alſo put backe in fortie degrees. This is all the Diſcouery that hath beene of the Straits of Magelanes, as well by the Spaniards, as other Nations, vnto this yeere 1586. It is foure yeeres ſince theſe poore and miſerable Spaniards were left in the Straits, from which time there hath no succour gone vnto them, so God he knoweth whether they be dead or aliue.

The Land that lieth from the Straits to the Coast of Chili, no man hath trauelled it by land, because of the great Mountaines of Snow that lye in that Countrey, as also I may well say, that it hath not often beene done by Sea, for that all the ships that haue passed that way, haue at the least gone thirtie leagues of the shore, because of the shoalds, and many little Ilands that lie of the mayne land, and therefore there is nothing knowne what is in that Countrey. The first Inhabitance that you haue after you passe the Straits, is on the Coast of Chili, and is called Castro, it is the worst place of all the Coast, for that in it there is small store of Gold, and little victuall, and very cold; this place is compassed with many shoalds, so that it is a Port but for small Barkes. The next to this is Baldiuia, but before I passe any further, I will declare vnto you the situation of Chili.

Baldiuia.

Chili.

This Coast lieth North and South, and is in length aboue a hundred leagues; and it is not in breadth aboue fiue and twentie leagues at the most, there runne from the great Mountaines into the Sea great store of Riuers, which maketh many Valleyes, and is the fruitfullest land in the World, for that it hath bread, wine, and other victuals great store. These Riuers bee very rich of Gold, and for to shew you in few words all that this Prouince hath: I say, that this land lacketh nothing, but might be called Paradise, but for that it lacketh only one thing, and that is peace. This land was first discouered in this order, after the Spaniards had conquered the Kingdome of Peru, as hereafter I will shew vnto you, they found in this Kingdome of Peru great store of Gold, and asking the Indians from whence it came, they answered from Chili, wherefore Don Diego de Almagro, which was one of the Captaines that conquered Peru, went vpon this newes toward Chili with three hundred Horsemen. Now he must go round about the Mountains of Snow, which way the Indians that were his guides, did carrie this Captaine, because they should die all of cold. Yet the Spaniards, although they lost some of their Horses, came to the first Inhabitance of Chili, called Copiapo: which is the first plain land in the entring of the Prouince, but from hence he returned backe againe for Peru, because he had newes that the Indians had risen against the Spaniards, & enclosed them, vpon which newes he returned without going any further into the Countrey. Now this Captayne Don Diego de Almagro, being slaine in the Warres of Peru, after his death, another Captayne called Don Pedro de Baldiuia, with foure hundred Horsemen went vnto Chili, and with small labour he ouercame halfe the Countrey, which were subiect to the Kings of Peru, for they of Chili, knowing that Peru was ouercome by the Spaniards, they straight way yeelded the Land vnto the Spaniards, but the other halfe, which was the richest, and the fruitfullest part, so had God made the men the valiants and most furious that shall be found among all the Sauage people in the whole Land.

How Chili was first discouered

El Estado de Arauco.

The Prouince which they inhabit, called El Estado de Arauco, is but a small Prouince, aboue twentie leagues in length, and is gouerned by ten principall men of the Countrey, out of which ten they choose the valiantest man for their Generall in the Warres. The Kings of Peru in times past could neuer conquer this part of Chili, nor yet any other Kings of the Indians. The weapons vsed by these people of Arauco are long Pikes, Halberds, Bowes and Arrowes: they also make them lacks of Seale-skinnes, and Head-pieces: in times past the heads of their Halberds and Pikes were of Brasse, but now they haue gotten store of Iron. They pitch their battels in manner like the Christians: for putting their Pikemen in rankes, they place Bowmen among them, and marshall their troupes with discretion and great valour. Now the Spaniards comming vnto this Prouince, sent word vnto them by other Indians, saying, that they were the children of God, and came to teach them the Word of God, and that therefore they ought to yeeld themselues vnto them; if not, they would shoot fire among them and burne them. These people not fearing the great words of the Spaniards, but desiring to see that which they had heard reported, met them in the field, and fought a most cruell battell: but by reason of the Spaniards great Ordnance and Caleeuers, they were in the end put to flight. Now these Indians thinking verily that the Spaniards were the children of God, because of their great Ordnance which made such a noise, and breathed out such flames of fire, yeelded themselues vnto them. So the Spaniards hauing diuided this Prouince, made the Indians to serue their turnes; for getting of Gold out of the Mynes, which they enioyed in such abundance, that he which had least had twentie thousand Pezos, but Captaine Baldiuia himselfe had three hundred thousand Pezos by the yeere. The fame of these riches in the end was spred as farre as Spaine; from whence soone after resorted many Spaniards to the land of Chili, whom Captaine Baldiuia caused to inhabit sixe Townes: to wit, Villa nueua de la Serena, called in the Indian Tongue Coquimbo; the second Sant Iago, which the Indians call Mapocha; the third, La Conception, called by the Indians Penco; the fourth, La Imperial; the fift, Baldiuia; and the sixt, La Villa Rica. Also he built a Fort in the middle of all the land, wherein he put Ordnance and Souldiers: howbeit all this their good successe continued not long: for the Indians, in short time perceiuing that the Spaniards were but mortall men as well as they, determined to rebell against them: wherefore the first thing that they did, they carried grasse into the said Fort for the Spaniards Horses, and wood also for them to burne, among which grasse the Indians diens conueyed Bowes and Arrowes, with great Clubs. This done, fiftie of the Indians entred the Fort, betooke themselues to their Bowes, Arrows and Clubs, and stood in the gate of the said Fort: from whence making a signe vnto other of their Nation for helpe, they wanne the Fort, and slue all the Spaniards. The newes of this ouerthrow comming to the Towne of Conception, where Captaine Baldivia was, he presently set forth with two hundred Horsemen, to seeke the Indians; taking no more men with him, because hee was in haste. And in a Plaine hee met the Indians; who comming of purpose also to seeke him, and compassing him about, slue most part of his companie, the rest escaping by the swiftnesse of their Horses: but Baldivia hauing his Horse slaine vnder him was taken aliue. Whom the Indians wished to be of good courage, and to feare nothing; for the cause (said they) why wee haue taken you, is to giue you Gold enough. And hauing made a great banquet for him, the last seruice of all was a Cup full of melted Gold, which the Indians forced him to drinke, saying, Now glut thy selfe with Gold: and so they killed him. This Baldivia was a most valiant man, who had beene an old Souldier in the Warres of Italie, and at the sacking of Rome.

The death of Baldivia.

Vpon this discomfiture the Spaniards chose for their Captaine, one Pedro de Villa grande; who assembling all the Spaniards in Chili, and taking with him ten pieces of Ordnance, marched against those Indians; but with so bad successe, that hee lost not onely the field, and many of his men, but also those ten Peeces of Ordnance which he brought. The Indians hauing thus gotten the victorie, went straightway against the Towne of Concepcion, from whence the Spaniards fled for feare, and left the Towne desolate. And in this manner were the Spaniards chased by the Indians out of the Countrie of Arauco. But newes hereof being brought to the Marquesse of Cannete, Vice-roy of Peru, he sent his sonne Don Garcia de Mendoza, against those Indians, with a great power of Horsemen, and Footmen, and store of Artilerie. This Nobleman hauing subdued Chili againe, and slaine in diuers battels aboue fortie thousand Indians, and brought them the second time vnder the Spaniards subiection, newly erected the said Fort, that stood in the midst of the Land, inhabited the Towne of Concepcion againe, and built other Townes for the Spaniards: and so leauing the Land in peace, he returned for Peru. But ere he was cleane departed out of the land, the Indians rebelled again, but could not do so much mischiefe as they did before, because the Spaniards tooke better heed vnto them. From that time vntil this present, there hath beene no peace at all: for notwithstanding many Captianes and Souldiers haue done their vttermost, yet can they not bring that People wholly in subiection. And although the Spaniards haue in this Prouince eleuen Townes and two Bishoprikes, yet haue they little enough to maintayne themselues, by reason of the Warres; for they spend all the Gold that the Land yeeldeth in the maintenance of their Souldiers: which would not bee so, if they had peace; for then they might worke in all their Mines.

11. Towns, and 2. Bishoprikes in Chili.

Thus hauing spoken somwhat of the situation of Chili, and of the troublesome conquest thereof, I will returne to my former discourse where I left; Baldivia therefore being of 150. houses, hath twice beene burnt and spoyled by the Indians; so that now it is waxen poore, but before the Indians sacked it, it was very rich: and it standeth vp a Riuer foure leagues from the Sea. Passing from hence you come to the plaine Countrie of Arauco, being situate ouer against the Iland La Mocha, on which Iland the Indians that inhabite belong to the maine Land.

A description of the Townes of Chili. Baldivia. The Prouince of Arauco, ouer against the Iland La Mocha, situate in 38. degrees and a halfe.

Hauing passed this Plaine of Arauco, the next Towne of the Spaniards that you come vnto, is La Concepcion which hath beene the greatest and the richest Towne in all Chili; but by reason that the Indians haue burned the same foure times, it is now growne very poore, and hath small store of people: it containeth about some two hundred houses. And because it adioyneth vpon the Plaine of Arauco, where these valiant Indians bee, therefore this Towne is enuironed about with a strong wall, and hath a Fort built hard by it: and here are fiue hundred Souldiers continually in Garrison. Betweene this place and Valparizo, the Indians call the Coast by the name of Mapocha. Sant Iago it selfe standing fiue and twentie leagues vp into the Countrie, is the principall Towne of all Chili, and the seat of the Gouernour; it consisteth of about eight hundred houses. The Port of Valparizo whither the goods come from Lima by shipping, hath about twentie houses standing by it. The next Towne neere the Sea side beyond this is Coquimbo, which standeth two leagues vp into the Land, and containeth aboue two hundred houses. Next vnto Coquimbo standeth a Port-towne, called Copiapo, inhabited altogether by Indians which serue the Spaniards: and here a Gentleman which is Gouernour of the Towne hath an Ingenio for Sugar: at this place endeth the whole Prouince of Chili. Here also the Mountaines ioyning hard vpon the Sea, are the cause why all the Land betweene Copiapo and Peru, containing one hundred and sixtie leagues, lieth desolate.

The first Towne on the Coast of Peru, called Atacama, is inhabited by Indians which are slaues vnto the Spaniards. But before I passe any further I will here also declare vnto you the first Discouerie of Peru, with other matters thereto belonging, and then will I returne to the Sea-coast againe: and to the end you may vnderstand me the better, I will beginne with Panama. After that the Spaniards had inhabited the North side of this mayne Land, passing ouer the Mountains they discouered the South Sea: where because they found Indian people with Gold and Pearles, they built a Towne eighteene leagues to the West of Nombre de Dios, hard vpon the Sea side, and called it Panama. From hence they discouered along the Coast of Nueua Espanna: and for that Nueua Espanna was at the same time inhabited by Spaniards, there beganne a trade from thence to Panama: but from Panama by Sea to the Coast of Peru they could not trade in a long time, because of the Southerly windes blowing on this Coast almost all the yeere long, which are a hinderance to ships sayling that way: and by Land the passage was impossible, in regard of Mountaines and Riuers: Yea it was fifteene yeeres before they passed the Iland of Puna, which is but twentie leagues from Panama. There were at this time in Panama two men, the one called Francisco Pizarro, borne in the Citie of Truxillo in Spaine, a valiant man, but withall poore; the other, called Diego de Almagro, was very rich. These men got a companie vnto them, and prouided two Caruels to discouer the Coast of Peru: and hauing obtayned licence of the Gouernour of that place, Francisco Pizarro set forth with the two foresaid Caruels, and an hundred men; and Diego de Almagro stayed in Panama, to send him Victuals and other necessaries. Now Francisco Pizarro sayling along the Coast, met with contrary windes and raine, which put him to great trouble; and hee began also after a while to lacke victuals, for hee was sayling of that in eight moneths, which they now passe in fifteene dayes, and not knowing the right course, hee ranne into euery Riuer and Bay that hee saw along the Coast; which was the chiefe cause that he stayed so long on his Voyage: also thirtie of his companie died by reason of the vnhealthfulnesse of the coast. At last he came to an Iland called by him Isla del Gallo, being situate from the maine Land sixe leagues. From hence he sent one of his ships to Panama, for a new supplie of victuals, and of men: which ship being departed, fortie of his men that remayned behinde made a mutinie, and passed vp into the Countrie, meaning to returne by Land to Panama, but in the way they all perished, for they were neuer heard of vntill this day. So that Francisco Pizarro was left vpon the said Iland onely with thirteene men: who although hee had his ship there, in which he might haue returned, yet would hee rather die then goe backe; and his thirteene men also were of his opinion, notwithstanding that they had no other victuals, but such as they had from the maine Land in the night season. Thus hee continued nine moneths, before any succour was brought him from Panama: but in the end his ship returned with fortie men onely, and victuals; whereupon hee prosecuted his Voyage, till hee came to the first plaine Countrie of Peru, called Tumbez, where hee found a Fort, made by the King of Peru, against the Indians of the Mountaines. Wherefore Pizarro, and his men were very glad, in that they had found a People of so good vnderstanding and discretion, being rich also in Gold, and Siluer, and well apparelled. At this Port of Tumbez, hee tooke thirtie thousand Pezos of Gold in trucke of Merchandise, and hauing two few men to proceed any further, he carried two Indians with him, to learne the Language, and returned backe for Panama. Vpon this Discouerie, Francisco Pizarro thought it expedient to trauell into Spaine, to craue of the King the Conquest of this Land. Whither being come, the King granted his request. And with the money which he carried ouer with him, he hired a great number of men, with a Fleet of shippes, and brought also along with him foure of his Brethren, very valiant and hardy men. And being come to Panama, he straightway went on his Voyage for Peru, being accompanied with his Partner Diego de Almagro. They sayled first to the Iland called Isla de Gallo; where Francisco Pizarro and his Brethren went on Land, and left Diego de Almagro in the ships. And the whole number which afterward landed on the mayne Land were sixtie Horsemen, and one hundred and twentie Footmen, with two great Field-peeces.

The Riuer of Peru.

But before we proceed any further, wee thinke it not amisse to describe vnto you the situation of Peru, and the naturall disposition of the Inhabitants: This Countrie was called Peru, by the Spaniards, of a Riuer so named by the Indians, where they first came to the sight of Gold. From which Riuer standing vnder the Line, till you come to Copiapo, the first Towne on the Coast of Chili, stretcheth the Land of Peru, for the space of eight hundred leagues: vpon sixe hundred whereof, from Atacama to Tumbez, did neuer drop of raine fall, since the Floud of Noah: and yet is it the fruitfullest Land for all kinde of victuals, and other necessaries for the sustentation of mans life, that is to bee found in all the world besides. The reason why it raineth not in this Land, is because it being a plaine Countrie, and very narrow, and lowe, situate betweene the Equinoctiall and the Tropike of Capricorne, there runneth on the West frontier, not aboue twenty leagues from the Sea called Mar del Sur, Eastward thereof, a mightie ridge of high Mountaines couered with snowe; the height of which Mountaines so draweth the moisture of the cloudes vnto it selfe, that no raine falleth vpon the Vallies of Peru. From these Mountains issue great store of Riuers into the South Sea, with the waters whereof drawn by certaine sluces and chanels, they moisten their Vine-yards and Corne-fields, and by this meanes the Land is so exceeding fruitfull. Betweene these Mountaines and the Mountaines of Chili, that stretch vnto the Straites of Magellan, lieth a Plaine of sixtie leagues ouer, being so cold, that it yeeldeth no Wheat, but good store of other victuals. This Countrie of Peru is full of people well apparelled, and of ciuill behauiour. It hath many mines of God, and more of Siluer, as also great store of Copper, and Tinne-mines, with abundance of Saltpeter, and of Brimstone to make Gun-powder. There are like-likewise Cattell of all sorts, among which there is a beast, in shape somewhat resembling a Camell, but no bigger then a Steere of a yeere old; they serue to carrie burdens, their flesh being good to eate, and their wooll apt for many purposes. This beast is accounted the most profitable of all others, for the vse of man: howbeit the Spaniards since their first comming haue replenished this Countrie with Horses, Kine, Sheep and Goats, and likewise with plenty of Wheat. So that in few words, this Land hath abundance of riches and victuals, and is the healthfullest place in the world. There were in times past Kings of this Land which were mighty Monarchs, whose Dominions stretched twelue hundred leagues; and their Lawes were very ciuill, saue that they were worshippers of the Sunne. At what time the Spaniards first entred this Land, there were two Brethren of the bloud Royall, which strout who should haue the Kingdome, the one called Mango Inga, and the other, Atabalipa. Now Mango had possession of all the Mountaines and the Land within them: and Atabalipa was Lord of all the Sea-coast, and of the Vallies situate between the said Mountaines and the Sea. The Indians seeing the Spaniards at the first arriue vpon their shoare, called them Viracochæ, which in their Language signifieth, The foame of the Sea: Also Atabalipa the Indian Prince sent vnto them to know what they did in his Land, and what they sought for: the Spaniards made answer, that they were the messengers of a great Lord, and that they came to speake with the Prince himselfe: who sent them word, that they should come with a very good-will, and so Atabalipa stayed for them at a Citie called Caxamalca, being thirtie leagues distant from the Sea side. Whither being come, they found the Indian Prince sitting in a Chariot of Gold, carried vpon mens shoulders, and accompanied with aboue sixtie thousand Indians all ready armed for the warres. Then the Spaniards told them that they were sent from an Emperour (vnto whom the Pope had giuen all that Land) to conuert them vnto the Christian Faith. Whereunto Atabalipa answered, that he would gladly be friends with the Emperour, because he was so great a Monarch, but in no case with the Pope, because he gaue to another that which was none of his owne.

The sheepe of Peru, called Llamas.

Atabalipa and Mango, by others called Gaspar, ill strue.

Now while they were thus in talke, the Spaniards discharging their two Field-peeces, and their Caliuers, set vpon the Indians, crying, Sant Iago. The Indians hearing the noise of the Ordnance, and small shot, and seeing the fire, thought that flames of fire had beene come downe from Heauen vpon them; whereupon they fled, and left their Prince as a bootie for the Spaniards. Whom they at the first intreated very gently, willing him not to feare, for that their comming was onely to seeke for Gold and Siluer. During the time of Atabalipas imprisonment, his Captaines had slaine his Brother Mango, and had subdued all the Mountaines, and plaine Countries. Vpon which newes Atabalipa told the Spaniards, that if they would release him, hee would giue them all that they should demand. This communication hauing continued a whole day, at length a Souldier named Soto said vnto Atabalipa; what wilt thou giue vs to set thee free? The Prince answered, I will giue whatsoeuer you will demand. Whereto the Souldier replied, Thou shalt giue vs this house full of Gold and Siluer, thus high, lifting vp his sword, and making a stroke vpon the wall. And Atabalipa said, that if they would grant him respite to send into his Kingdome, he would fulfill their demand. Whereat the Spaniards much marueling, gaue him three moneths time, but hee had filled the house in two moneths and an halfe; a matter scarce credible, yet most true: for I know aboue twentie men that were there at that time, who all affirme, that it was aboue ten millions of Gold and Siluer. Howbeit, for all this, they let not the Prince goe, but thought that in killing of him they should become Lords of the whole Land, and so the Spaniards on a night strangled him. But God the righteous Iudge seeing this villanous act, suffered none of those Spaniards to die by the course of nature, but brought them to euill and shamefull ends.

Vpon the newes of these great riches, there came store of people out of Spaine, and inhabited many places in this Countrie. The King in recompence of the good seruices of the two foresaid partners, appointed Diego de Almagro Gouernour of halfe the Land, and Francisco Pizarro of the other halfe, whom also he made a Marquesse. But these two consorts in parting of a Land belonging vnto other men, fell at variance and sharpe warre betweene themselues: and at length Pizarro hauing slaine Almagro, got all the Land into his owne hands. Howbeit, this prosperitie of Pizarro continued not long: for a bastard-sonne of Diego de Almagro, to bee reuenged of his fathers death, slue Pizarro, for which act he lost his head. In this controuersie betweene these two partners were slaine, also two brothers of Pizarro, and the third was carried prisoner into Spaine, and there died in Prison: but the fourth, called Gonsalus Pizarro, rebelled with the whole Countrie, and became a cruell Tyrant, vanquishing many of the Emperours Captaines in battell, and possessing the Countrie in peace for two yeeres: howbeit, being in the end ouercome, hee lost his head like a Traitour. And thus died they all an euill death, that were causes of the death of that innocent King Atabalipa. And yet there are mutinies raised oftentimes by the Spaniards, but the Indians neuer rebelled, after they had once peace granted vnto them. The Indian people of this Land, are parted among the Spaniards, some being slaues vnto the Gentlemen that conquered their Land, other some to others, and the residue to the King: and these Indians pay each man for his tribute seuen Pezos of fine Gold, which is about ten Ducats and an halfe. There are in this Countrie aboue fortie Cities and Townes inhabited by the Spaniards: also they haue here erected nine Bishopricks and one Archbishopricke.

Now after this Countrie was fully conquered and brought in good order, certaine Spaniards being desirous to discouer the land on the other side of the snowie Mountaines, found a very wholesome Countrie, and there inhabited. The said Prouince situate behinde the Mountaines is called The Prouince of Tucuman, wherein are fiue townes inhabited by the Spaniards, the last of them called Cordoua, from which towne vnto Santa Fee situate vpon the Riuer of Plate it is seuentie leagues. This towne of Santa Fee was built in that place, to seeke a way to Peru by the Riuer of Plate. And from hence downe the said Riuer to Buenos Ayres are 120. leagues, and from Buenos Ayres vnto Seal-island you haue 40. leagues.

Now hauing put down all that I know concerning the Countrie of Peru, and of the way from the Riuer of Plate vnto Tucuman, I will returne vnto Atacama the Southermost town vpon the coast of Peru, where I left. From this towne of Atacama till you come to Arica, all the coast is inhabited by Indians subiect vnto the Spaniards. But since Captain Drake was here, they haue built Towers by the Sea side, whereon, seeing any saile that they doe mistrust, they presently make smoakes, and so from Tower to Tower they warne all the Countrey. Hauing before spoken of Arica all that I can, I will now proceede to the next Port called Camana being a Towne of Spaniards, and containing about two hundred houses. Here they make store of Wine, and haue abundance of Figges and Reisins. The next Towne called Acari containeth about three hundred houses, and here is made the best and greatest store of Wine in all Peru. From hence passing along the coast you come to El Calao the Port of Lima consisting of about two hundred houses: and here was a strong Fort built since Captaine Drake was vpon the coast. The Citie of Lima standing two leagues within the land, and containing two thousand houses, is very rich, and of more trade then all the Cities of Peru besides; and this Citie is the seate of the Viceroy, the Archbishop and the Inquisition.

Next vnto this standeth a small towne of the Spaniards by the Sea side called Santa: and next vnto Santa is another small towne of Christians called Cannete. From hence they saile vnto a rich Citie called Truxillo, being one of the principall townes of Peru, and containing about fiue hundred houses. Then followeth Paita which hath to the number of two hundred houses. Leauing this towne they passe to Guaiaquil which standeth fortie leagues vp into a great Bay or Riuer, at the entrance of which Riuer standeth Tumbez, a towne of the Indians. All this coast along from Atacama to Tumbez it neuer raineth, as I haue before said: so that all the houses in their townes are not tyled, but couered with boords to keepe off the heate of the Sunne, for they feare no raine at all. Guaiaquil is the first place where it raineth, and here they gather Salsaperilla. Here is also great store of timber, and at this place they build many Ships. Hence they saile along the coast to a small and poore towne called Puerto Viejo, which in times past hath beene rich with Emralds: but now since these stones in regard of their plenty are growne nothing worth, this towne likewise is waxen very poore. Below this Village standeth another called La Buena Ventura: but whosoeuer goe thither must needes meete with euill fortune, the place it selfe is so waterish and vnholesome. Here abide not aboue twentie men, who serue onely to transport goods into a Citie standing fiftie leagues within the maine, in a Prouince called La gouernacion de Popaian. From Buena ventura and Popaian till you come to Panama there is no other towne, by reason of the high Mountaines, the manifold Riuers, and the vnholesomenesse of the Countrie. In this place doe inhabit the Negros that run from their Masters, and vpon these Mountaines was Oxenham the English Captaine and his men taken, as is before mentioned. Beyond these Mountains standeth the Citie of Panama, being a rich place, by reason that all the treasure which commeth from Peru is brought thither, and it consisteth of about foure hundred houses. The coast running along betweene this Citie and Nueua Espanna is called Costa rica.

Next vnto Costa rica, which is a Mountainous and desolate place, lieth the coast of Nicaragua, being inhabited by the Spaniards, and hauing many good ports belonging to it, and is frequented with trade of Merchandize; but hauing no knowledge of the situation thereof, nor of the towns therein contained, I surcease to speake any more of it.

The Prouince of Nicaragua.

A certaine Viceroy of Nueua Espanna called Don Luis de Velasco caused certaine Ships to be built for the discouery of the Malucos and of the coast of China: which Ships in sailing thitherward from certaine Islands, eightie leagues distant from the maine land, which the Spaniards, according to the name of their King, called The Philippinas: and hauing conquered one of these Ilands called Manilla, inhabited with a barbarous kinde of people, they built a fort and a towne thereupon, from whence they haue trade with the people of China. Vnto these Islands they haue foure great Ships that vsually trade, two of them continually going, and two comming: so that such Spices and Silkes as the Portugals bring home out of the East Indies, the very same doe the Spaniards bring from these Ilands and from China, for Mexico the chiefe Citie of Nueua Espanna. The principall Port townes of the coast of Nueua Espanna are Guatulco, and Acapulco.

All the Viceroyes and Gouernours that the King of Spaine sendeth for Peru and Nueua Espanna panna haue a custome, for the obtaining of his fauour, to seeke and discouer new Countries. But the greatest and most notable discouery that hath beene from those parts now of late, was that of the Isles of Salomon, which were found in manner following. The Licenciate Castro being gouernour of Peru, sent forth a Fleete of Ships to discouer certaine Islands in the South Sea, vpon the coast of Peru, appointing as Generall of the same Fleete a kinsman of his, called Aluares de Mendanio, and Pedro Sarmiento as Lieutenant, and in the Viceadmirall went Pedro de Ortega. This Fleete departing forth of the hauen of Lima, and sailing 800. leagues Westward off the coast of Peru, found certaine Islands in eleuen degrees to the South of the Equinoctiall, inhabited with a kinde of people of a yellowish complexion, and all naked, whose weapons are Bowes and Arrowes, and Darts. The Beasts that they saw here were Hogs and little Dogs, and they found some Hens. Here also they found a muster of Cloues, Ginger, and Sinamon, although the Sinamon were not of the best; and here appeared vnto them likewise some shew of Gold. The first Iland that the Spaniards discouered, they named Santa Izabella; and here they built a small Pinnace, with the which, and with their Ships Boate they found out betweene nine and fifteene degrees of Southerly laritude, eleuen great Islands, being one with another of eightie leagues in compasse. The greatest Island that they discouered was according vnto the first finder, called Guadalcanal, on the coast whereof they sailed 130. leagues, before they could know whether it were an Island or part of the maine land: and yet they know not perfectly what to make of it, but thinke that it may be part of that continent which stretcheth to the Streights of Magellan; for they coasted it to eighteene degrees, and could not finde the end thereof. The Gold that they found was vpon this Island, or maine land of Guadalcanal, whereas they landed and tooke a towne, finding small graines of Gold hanged vp in the houses thereof. But because the Spaniards vnderstood not the language of the Countrey, and also for that the Indians were very stout men, and fought continually against them, they could neuer learne from whence that Gold came, nor yet what store was in the Land.

The discouery of the Isles of Salomon.

Cloues, Ginget, and Sinamon.

The Isle of Guadalcanal.

These Indians vse to goe to Sea in great Canoas, that will carrie one hundred men a piece, wherein they haue many conflicts one against another: howbeit vnto the Christians they could doe no great hurt, for that with a small Pinnace and two Falcons a few may ouercome one hundred of them. At this place foureteene men mistrusting nothing, rowed to land, to take in fresh water, whom on the sodaine certaine Indians in foure Canoas set vpon, tooke the Ships Boate, and slew all the men therein: wherefore a man cannot goe on shore too strong, nor yet be too warie in a strange land. Hereupon the Spaniards went on shore in their Pinnace, and burnt the Towne, and in this towne they found the small graines of Gold before mentioned. They were discouering of these Islands from one to another about foureteene moneths, at the end of which time (because that vpon the coast where they were, the winde continuing still in one place, might be an occasion of longer tarrying) they consulted which way to returne. Southward they durst not goe for feare of great tempests which are that way vsuall: wherefore sayling to the North of the line, they fell with the coast of Nueua Espanna; on which coast they met with such terrible stormes, that they were forced to cut their maine masts ouer-boord, and to lye nine moneths beating it vp and downe in the Sea, before they could get into any harbour of the Christians. In which time, by reason of euill gouernment, and for lacke of victuall and fresh water, most of the men in their Admirall dyed; for fiue whole dayes together they had neither water nor meate; but in the other Ships they behaued themselues so well, that the greater part of them came safe vnto the land. He that passeth the Straits of Magellan: or saileth from the coast of Chili directly for the Maluccos, must needes runne in sight of some of these Islands before spoken of. At which Islands lying so conueniently in the way to the Maluccos, you may furnish your selfe with plenty of victuals, as Hogs, Hennes, excellent Almonds, Potatos, Sugar-canes, with diuers other sorts fit for the sustenance of man in great abundance. Also among these Islands you shall haue some quantity of Gold, which the Indians will giue you in trucke for other commodities. For the Spaniards in their discouery of these Islands, not seeking nor being desirous of Gold, brought home notwithstanding 40000. pezos with them, besides great store of Cloues and Ginger, and some Smamon also, which is not so good as in other places. The discouerer of these Islands named them the Isles of Salomon, to the end that the Spaniards supposing them to be those Isles from whence Salomon fetched Gold to adorne the Temple at Ierusalem, might be the more desirous to goe and inhabit the same. Now the same time when they thought to haue sent colonies vnto these Islands, Captaine Drake entered the South Sea; whereupon commandement was giuen, that they should not be inhabited, to the end that such Englishmen, and of other Nations as passed the Straits of Magellan to goe to the Maluccos, might haue no succour there, but such as they got of the Indian people.

CHAP. XII.

Briefe extracts tranſlated out of IEROM BENZOS, three Bookes of the New World, touching the Spaniards cruell handling of the Indians, and the effects thereof.

Ben. l. 1. c. 1. He ſerued 14. yeares in the Spaniſh-Indian expeditions.

ANno 1641. Ierom Benzo went from Millaine to Siuill in Spaine, and thence to the New World, where he was entertained of the Spaniards, and practiſed with them the huntings of the Indians; which they did by lurking in couerts, till ſome of the Natiues came within their reach; by bribing the Cacikes with trifles to procure captiues, and other meanes. Peter Chalice came while we were there to Amaracan with aboue 4000. ſlaues, and had brought many more, but with la- c. 2. bour, wearineſſe, hunger, and griefe, for loſſe of their Countrie and friends, many had periſhed c. 3. in the way. Many alſo not able to follow in the Spaniards ſwift march, were by them killed to preuent their taking armes. A miſerable ſpectacle to ſee thoſe troopes of ſlaues naked, with their bodies rent, maimed, ſtarued: the mothers dragging or carrying on their ſhoulders their Indians ſpoiled. children howling, the neckes of all, armes and hands chained; not any growne Maide amongſt them which the ſpoilers had not rauiſhed, with ſo profuſe luſt that thence grew contagion and pernicious diſeaſes. The Spaniſh horſemen in thoſe warres vſed quilted Iackes with Launces and Swords; the footemen, Sword, Shield, and Croſſe-bow, with lighter Iackes. The moiſture and great dewes made Peeces vnſeruiceable in thoſe parts.

c. 25. The Iſlanders in Hiſpaniola ſeeing no hope of better, or place for worſe, killed their children, and then hanged themſelues. The women by the iuice of a certaine hearbe cauſed abortions, that they might not procreate ſlaues to the Spaniards; others hanged themſelues, as their husbands had done: ſome threw themſelues from the tops of ſteepe hils, others into the Sea and Riuers; ſome ſtarued themſelues, and others with ſharpe ſtones ripped and rent out their entrals: ſo that of two millions there found at firſt, now ſcarſely one hundred and fiftie perſons remaine. Is this to conuert Sauages to the Chriſtian faith? The ſame altogether hath happened in Cuba, Iamaica, Porto Ricco, and other places. Yea whatſoeuer ſlaues haue beene after carried into the Iſlands, to preuent their deſolation, though in incredible multitudes, haue almoſt all periſhed with miſerie. Once, in whatſoeuer places the Spaniards haue diſplaied their colours, by their examples of crueltie, they haue left to the Natiues eternall monuments of implacable hatred.

l. 2. c. 1. After the natiue Iſlanders were killed with too much labour, the Spaniards procured ſlaues Negro ſlaues ſucceede. from Guinnee in great multitudes, and vſed their ſeruices in the Mines; which being exhauſt, they employed them in Sugar-mils, and in breeding of Cattell. Some of the Spaniards are ſo cruell, that if a ſlaue hath not brought his diarie or day-ſcot, or otherwiſe hath angred his imperi- Law of Bayon diuelliſh deuiſe. ous Maſter, he ſtrips him naked to cloath him with ſtripes (according to the Law of Baian, as they call it, deuiſed I thinke by ſome cruell Diuell) his hands and feete bound, and the proſtrate ſlaue tied to ſome croſſe timber, with a rod or roape he is beaten till the bloud iſſue from all parts: after which the Maſter droppeth ſcalding Pitch or Oyle ouer all that wretched corpes, and then waſhed with Pepper of the Countrie and Salt mingled with water, he lies on a boord in a ſheete or blanket till his Maſter thinkes him fit for labour. Others make a hole in the ground and there ſet him, his head onely excepted, all night long, which theſe Phiſitians doe to cleanſe and cure the vlcers of corrupt bloud. If any dye in theſe torments, his Maſter hath no other puniſhment but to pay the King another for him. Theſe cruelties cauſed the Negroes to flie and wander about, till gathering head together they grew dreadfull to the Spaniſh Ilanders, whom they (when they got any into their hands) repaied with like cruelties. Whiles I was in that Iland, their ar- Armie of 7000 fugitiues. mie was ſaid to containe 7000. men, inſomuch that the Spaniards feared to be driuen out by theſe Moores and Negros. And when as An. 1545. the Preſident Ceratus vrged Ceſars Edict for the Indians libertie, the Iland was almoſt brought to a deſert, not aboue 1100. Spaniards remaining therein: which (the ſtrangers increaſing) were in danger to looſe at once their life with the Iland. And the wonted meanes of getting wealth failing therein, few Spaniards are willing to ſtay there.

c. 9. Nombre de Dios, in regard of the heate and moiſture immoderate, is vnholeſome, as alſo for the See Drakes and Oxenhams ſtories. Weſterne Mariſh or Fenne, whence are frequent funerals of the inhabitants. Not farre from it to the Eaſt, ſome fugitiue Negros keepe in the woods, which haue ſlaine many Spaniards, and haue entred into league with the Indians, ſhooting likewiſe poiſoned Arrowes, and killing all the c. 11. Spaniards which they can get. Gotierez a Spaniſh Captaine going vp the Riuer of Suera, feaſted the Cacikes of Suera and Chuppa, and ſaid that he came thither to reduce them from their Idola- Gotierez his conuerting of Indians. try and the Diuels tyrannie, and to ſhew them the truth: namely, that Ieſus Chriſt the Sonne of God came from heauen to redeeme mankinde: and that he had brought a Prieſt with him, for no other purpoſe but to inſtruct them in Chriſtianitie. Wherefore (ſaid he) prepare your ſelues to the obedience of the Diuine Law, and to acknowledge the ſouereignitie of Charles the fifth, Ceſar, King of Spaine, and Monarch of the whole world. The Indians anſwered nothing, and returned home. The next day the Gouernour ſent for two other Caciques by a Spaniard, which truſting on his promiſe, came, and were bound in his Chamber with hard vſage. They had before giuen him 700. Duckets; now he picked a quarrell with them, and extorted from one 2000. Duckets, wrought in the formes of Tigres, Fiſhes, Birds, and other creatures: which the Gouernour ſeeing ſmaller then his expectation, cauſed a great fire to be kindled, and a cheſt to be brought forth, threatning to burne him, if in foure dayes he did not fill it with Gold ſix times; which hee promiſing to doe, found meanes to eſcape. Other Caciker of the Countrie hearing hereof, burned their houſes, cut downe their fruite trees and corne, and leauing a wilderneſſe to the Spaniards, fled to the Mountaines. The other Cacike yet in durance, hauing beene often threatned with death except hee brought the Gold demanded, the Gouernour commanded to be caſt to the Dogs: hee anſwered, that hee could not but marueil at the Gouernours vanitie, which had ſo often threatned that which he had rather ſhould be performed, then to liue ſo miſerable a life; contrary to his expectation, which had voluntarily come to him vpon his promiſe. Hee added, that he marueiled much what kinde of creatures Chriſtians were, which executed ſuch miſchiefes whereſoeuer they came, and that the earth could longer beare and nouriſh ſuch cruell beaſts ſo patiently. Indian magnanimitie.

But at laſt the Gouernour carried him priſoner in a miſerable expedition, where at a turning the Gouernour demanding of a captiue Indian, whether way would bring him to ſome Indian habitation, he anſwered, he could not tell; whereupon he commanded his Negro ſlaues to kill him, which was done. Then he demanded of the Cacike, and hauing like anſwer, gaue like ſentence. He preſently threw downe his burden, and prepared his head to the fatall ſtroke, with ſuch patience, that the Gouernour remitted it, and gaue him his life. Three ſtarued Spaniards were there left, and after killed by the Indians. The Gouernour commanded the Dogs to be killed for food, keeping the prouiſions left to himſelfe. I gaue my part to another, becauſe of the wormes therein; and went to the Gouernour, hoping to receiue ſomewhat of him, who ſent me to the roots of trees to feed thereon. Then ſaid another Spaniard; Sir Gouernour, if wee may not ſhare together in good and bad fortune, warre you alone. Hereupon hee diuided three pounds of Cheeſe into foure and thirtie parts amongſt vs. Two dayes after, the Indians ſuddenly ſet on vs, and ſlue the Gouernour as hee was doing his eaſement. I with anothers Helmet eſcaped that ſhowre of ſtones, wherewith it was then exceedingly battered; and the reſt being ſlaine, with two others fled thorow a troupe of Indians making way to the Hills top, where wee found the Prieſt, with two others which had eſcaped by flight in the beginning of the fight, and after that, foure and twentie others ioyned themſelues to vs. The Indians purſued vs, armed with our owne weapons, and dauncing about vs, cried in the Spaniſh tongue, Here is Gold Chriſtian, here is Gold. Two which had lurked in the Woods till the Indians were gone, told vs, that the Indians had carried away the head, hands and feet of the Gouernour, and of two Negros, the reſt being ſpoyled were throwne into the Riuer. If we had had but foure Horſes (theſe they feare more then all armes) they had neuer aduentured on vs. On foot the Spaniards are commonly ouercome by them. In the firſt Mexican expedition, they tooke the Horſe and Man to bee but one creature. Hungry March. Indians feare of Horſes.

That which hath carried the Spaniards into thoſe Prouinces, is onely couetouſneſſe, whatſoeuer profeſſion they pretend of Chriſtian Faith. Neither will any of them ſtay in any place where Gold is not found. Antonius Sedegnus died with thought after three yeeres trauell in Paria with ſeuen hundred men, not finding this golden Sun-ſhine, fiftie onely of his men returning. Soto ſpent in Florida, what he had gotten in Peru. He threatned fifteene Caciker, to burne them, except they brought him to the place whence they had their Gold. Theſe promiſed any thing to preuent preſent execution, and after twelue dayes wandring were ſent away with their hands cut off. When he told a Cacike which viſited him with a Preſent, that he was a Chriſtian, the ſonne of God, Creator of Heauen and Earth; and came thither to teach them the Diuine Law: If thy God, ſaid the Cacike, bids thee robbe, kill, burne, and commit all miſchiefe, wee can neither beleeue Him, nor his Law. Soto finding no Mine, died at laſt of the bloudy Fluxe. The like may be ſaid of Naruaez, twelue of whoſe companie fell mad with famine, and fell to biting and tearing each other. Of ſixe hundred which hee carried forth, ſcarcely ten returned, which at Mexico reported that with breathing they had cured the ſicke, and had raiſed three dead men to life. But I craue pardon of their holineſſe, and ſhall eaſier beleeue that they killed foure liuing men, then that they raiſed halfe a dead one. Cortez ſet forth by Velaſquez gaue him no accounts at all. Peter Aluarado left by Cortez at Mexico, fell vpon the Indians amidſt their dances, and ſlue them. And when Cortez had returned from the defeat of Naruaez, and beſieged Mexico, the Mexicans gathered all their Gold and Siluer, and threw it into the Lake, and by no torments could bee compelled to confeſſe where it was; although Cortez tortured the Kings Scribe to death, and put the King alſo to vaine tortures for that purpoſe. Some ſay that Cortez ſtrangled him. Cap. 13. Examples of couetouſneſſe. Sedegnus and his 700. men. Sotos acts in Florida. Pam. Narua. Cortez and Aluarado.

called Gonzallus, a man of seuentie yeeres of age, and well skilled in the Spanish Tongue. Hee one morning, I sitting neere him, fixed his eyes on my face, said, Christian, what are Christians? they require Maiz, Honie, Silke, a Garment, an Indian Woman to lie with; they demand Gold, and Silver. Christians will not worke; they are Gamsters, Dicers, lewd and blasphemous. When they goe to Church to heare Masse, they back-bite the absent, and they strike and wound each other. Hee concluded, that Christians were not good. I said, they were the bad, and not the good, which did such things: hee replied, Where are those good? for I neuer yet saw any but bad. I asked, why they suffered Christians to enter their borders. Hee answered, Honest friend, thus it is: When the fame of the cruelty of Christians, which wheresoeuer they came, filled all with fire, sword and robbery, dispersed in these Prouinces, had comme vnto vs, and wee had heard that they would inuade vs, wee called a Councell, of all our friends, and generally decreed rather to die then to yeeld our selues subiects to the Christians. When they had entred our Borders, wee made head against them, but most of vs after long fight terrified by the Horses, fled. And wee sent two messengers to desire pardon, and peace; with no other purpose but to gaine time to re-enforce our strength. Wee carried them many presents, entertayned them with dances, and within three dayes fell on them againe, but with ill successe; we seeke peace againe, and after that by common consent decree rather to die then to serue the Christians, and to kill him whosoeuer shall flee from the battell. Thus wee take Armes. But our Wiues come weeping to vs, and beseech vs rather to serue the Christians, then to die shamefully: otherwise, to kill them first, with their children, that they may not after losse of their husbands, come into the power of those bearded and cruell men. These prayers and teares brake our hearts, and wee voluntarily submitted our persons and goods to the greedy Christians. Some yet, prouoked by wrongs, rebell; but were punished grieuously by the Christians, not sparing the very Infants. Others also which were innocent, were made slaues; and wee were then possessors neither of our wiues, nor children, nor any thing else. Many impatient hereof, killed their children, others hanged, and others famished themselues: till the King of Castiles Proclamation, by which wee were made free, made an end of those miseries.

Indians conceit of Christians.

Cap. 18. The Indians, especially the sonnes of their Cacikes which can write and reade, confesse Gods Commandements good; but wonder that wee, of whom they haue them, doe not keepe them, and vse thus to say. Ho sir Christian, God forbids to take his Name in vaine, and thou continually for euery cause, bee it neuer so light, sweerest and forswearest. God sayth, Thou shalt not beare false witnesse: but you Christians doe nothing but slander, and speake euill. God commands to loue your neighbours as your selues, and to forgiue one another: You oppresse the poore, are rigorous to your Debtors, and if there be any poore Christians, you giue them nothing, but send them for reliefe to our houses. Some of them shewing a piece of Gold, will say, Lo here the Christians God, for this they are comme hither, for this they haue subdued vs, and done so many mischiefes, for this they are neuer quiet, but dice, blaspheme, curse, quarell, steale, commit rapes, and doe what soeuer villanie and lust.

Monkes and Friars. There are Monkes which perpetrate those things openly by day-light, which others would bee ashamed to doe by night. And a Franciscan publikly preached, that there was neither Priest, nor Monke, nor Bishop in India, worthie the name of a good man. For they all had giuen themselues to couetousnesse, and still went to the wealthie Countries, and auoided the poorer. For these words he was apprehended, and carried to Guatimala. I haue also heard Priests discoursing together, that they came out of Spaine into India for gaine, and nothing else. A Cacikes sonne, when hee was a childe of great towardnesse, proued afterwards very lewd; and being asked the reason, said, Since I was made a Christian, I haue learned to sweare by the name of God, and by the Crosse, and by the words of the holy Gospell, and to blaspheme by the life of God; and I denie him, nor doe I beleeue. I haue further learned to play with the Die, and neuer to speake truth. I haue also got mee a Sword to make frayes, and now want nothing to liue like a Christian, but a Concubine, which I meane to bring home shortly. I once reproued an Indian, for dicing and blasphemie: Wee, saith he, learned these examples of your selues. And the Indians which are so lewd, are such vsually as haue beene brought vp by some Spaniards which studie nothing else. These for the most part, are the Miracles which the Spaniards haue done amongst the Indians.

Span. Miracles.

Indian Christianitie. Many other Indians being demanded whether they bee Christians, answere, they are, because the Bishop hath crossed and blessed them, they haue built a Church, set vp there our Ladies Image, and gotten a Bell. I asked one whether he were a Christian: What, said he, would you haue me bee a Bishops seruant ten or twelue yeeres, and keepe his Mule? Others asked thereof, say, that a Priest washed their heads foure or fiue times, &c. Hee reciteth the Letter of Didacus Lopez de Zuniga, and other passages of Spaniards vices.

Lib. 3. c. 1. Triumuirate. In the third Booke Benzo relateth the Acts of the Spaniards in Peru. Francis Pizarro, Diego Almagro, and Fernand Luques a Priest, enter into a league of Triumuirate for the Southerne Discoueries, and therein to share equally, both the care, charge and gaine. They procure ships, and conuenient prouisions, and with two hundred and twentie Souldiers, Pizarro and Almagro, in the yeere 1526. one a little after the other, set sayle for Panama. Pizarro hauing sayled three hundred miles, goeth on land, and is repelled by the Indians, himselfe wounded, and many slaine. Hereupon he returneth to Panama. Almagro went vp a Riuer in another Region, and was kindly entertayned, and brought thence three thousand Duckets of Gold, with which in his returne he came neere to the place where Pizarro had receiued his bad entertainment, and himselfe in fight with them lost one of his eyes, and many of his Souldiers. Being come to Panama with those showes of Gold, they redintegrate their designes, and with two hundred Souldiers, and many Indian slaues setting sayle, landed in another place, where they also were beaten backe to their ships, and many slaine. Thence they went to the Ile Gorgon, a small and desart Iland sixe leagues from the Continent. The Golden hopes would not permit them to giue ouer that which this strength could not enable them to winne, and therefore Almagro is sent to Panama to reenforce and encrease their numbers. Hee returned with eightie fiue Spaniards, and found Pizarro, and the rest almost starued. Being refreshed they set sayle, and againe landing were repelled with the losse of some Souldiers, and went to a desart Hand, which they called Cocks-Iland, for the shape of the Cape or Promontorie. Almagro againe returneth to Panama for more Souldiers to bee reuenged on these Indians. Most of the Spaniards cursing their couetousnesse, would haue returned with him, but were not permitted, no not to write to their friends; which yet some closely did complayning of the Countrie, the leaders and their designes. Pedro de los Rios was then newly Gouernour at Panama, and hearing hereof presently sent one to Cocke-Iland, to Pizarro that hee should not detayne any there against his will, whereupon they all saue fourteene departed. These liued on fish till Almagro came, who also could bring no supply by reason of the ill rumour.

Cock-Iland.

At last they agreed to sayle by the shoare, and search if any riches there presented themselues. They sayled fiue hundred miles, and came to Chira, a Prouince of Peru, and there going on shoare tooke some cattell, and Indians to learne the Spanish Tongue. Then returning to Tumbez, when no Spaniard had so much courage, Peter of Candie (a Greeke borne in Candie) aduentured to goe on shoare, which he did, armed with a two-hand Sword. This spectacle of a bearded man was no little wonder to the Natiues. The Gouernour vied him kindly, leading him into the Fortresse, wherein was a Temple to the Sunne, full of stupendious riches. At the gate hee found certaine beasts like Lions, and two Tigres, but harmlesse. And when the Gouernour would haue giuen him at his departure certaine pieces of Gold, hee seemed to contemne them vtterly, so to dissemble the true cause of his comming. Then comming aboord he related what hee had seene: and they with ioy returned to Panama.

Peter of Candy.

Hereupon Pizarro is sent to Spaine, by Almagro and Luquez, to obtaine of Cesar the conquest of that Prouince, for which purpose they borrowed 1500. Duckets. He notwithstanding makes the sute in his owne name and accordingly obtayning commission, returned with his brethren Fernandez, Gonzales, Iohn, Pizarri, and Martin de Alcantara. Hence grew a quarrell, his partners esteeming him perfidious, till Gama compounded the matter twixt him and Almagro (Luques being excluded, and therefore afterwards surnamed, The Foole) that Almagro should employ his wealth, and therefore participate in the honours, swearing each to other, and taking the Sacrament thereupon. Thus Pizarro went from Panama with 150. Souldiers, and many Horses, leauing Almagro shortly to follow. Hee came to Colonchia, thence to the Iland Puna, where hee was well entertained till rapes and robberies made the Natiues take Armes, which was to their greater losse, the Spaniards getting the victorie. Thence Pizarro went to the Continent of Tumbez, fiftie miles distant. Where the Natiues refused his friendship, and sought to oppose him: but he by night entred the Riuer, and being guided by vnpassable wayes made a great slaughter of them, spoyled the Citie, and robbed the Sunnes Temple.

Fifth Voyage.

Puna now Saint Iago.

Atabalipa King of Peru, was then at Cassamalca, who hearing that a strange bearded People had robbed his Subiects, sent to Pizarro, threatning him, if he continued thus or there. Pizarro answered, that hee was sent by his Emperour to succour those which desired his friendship, nor might he safely returne to him, except hee had first seene his Royall person, and declared to him things good both for his body and soule. Thus hee trauels thorow Chira, and by the Lords in the way is sued to for friendship, which hated Atabaliba. Meeting with a nauigable Riuer, he layd the foundation of a Colonie there called Saint Michaels, and shared the spoyles amongst his followers. Atabaliba derided their paucitie, and sends to them, if they loued their liues to be gone. But he proceeded to Cassamalca, and thence sent messengers to the King (then two miles off) to signifie his desire of acquaintance. Fernand Pizarro told him, that hee was brother to the Leader who was sent from the Pope and Cesar, to desire his friendship, and therefore desired audience, hauing some speciall matters to deliuer to him, after which hee would bee gone. The King answered, hee would first haue him depart his confines. The night following they prepared themselues for fight. The next day the King was in Pompe carried on mens shoulders, guarded with fiue and twentie thousand Indians. Friar Vincent de valle viridi a Dominican, carrying in the one hand a Crosse, in the other a Breuiarie, went to him, and by an Interpreter, signified that hee came to his Excellency by the mandate of the Imperiall Maiestie, and that with the authoritie of the Roman Bishop, Vicar of the heauenly Sauiour, which hath giuen to Cesar the Lands before vnknowne, and now first discouered, that hee might send thither learned and godly men, to preach his most holy Name publikely to those Nations, and to free them from Diabolicall errours. Hauing thus said, he gaue to the King, the Law of God *, and sayth, that he had created all things of nothing, and beginning with Adam and Eue, tells how Christ had assumed flesh in the wombe of the Virgin, and died on the Crosse, after which he rose againe, and ascended into Heauen. Then auerring the articles of the resurrection and of euerlasting life, he sheweth that Christ appointed Peter his first Vicar for the gouerment of the Church, and that this power succeeded to his successors the Popes, declaring lastly the power and wealth of Caesar the King of Spaine, Monarch of the whole world. Therefore the King should doe as became him, if he accepted his friendship, and became his tributarie and vassall; and if lastly hee reiected his false gods and should become a Christian. Which if he would not doe voluntarily, let him know, that he should thereunto be compelled by force and armes.

The King answered, that not vnwillingly hee would accept the friendship of the chiefe Monarch of the world, but for a free King to pay tribute to a man whom hee had neuer seene, seemed scarsely honest or iust. As for the Pope, he must needs appeare to be a foole, and a shameless man, which was so bountifull in giuing that which is none of his owne. Touching Religion, he denied that hee would alter that which hee professed; and if they beleeued in Christ, whom they confessed to haue died on the Crosse, they also beleeued in the Sunne which neuer died. And how (sayth he to the Frier) doe you knowe that the Christians God created all things of nothing, and died on the Crosse? The Frier answered, that hee was taught it by his Booke, and withall reached it to him, which he looking on, said, it said nothing to him, and threw it to the ground. The Frier presently tooke vp his Booke, and cried amaine to the Spaniards, Goe to Christians, goe to, and make them smart for so haynous a deed, the Gospels are derided and throwne away. Kill these Dogs which so stubbornly despise the Law of God.

Presently Pizarro giues the signe, and leades forth his men. The Gunnes amaze the Indians, as also the Horses, Drummes and Trumpets. Easily are they hereby, and terrour of their Swords chased, and Atabaliba himselfe taken by Pizarro, which commanded the footmen: without hurt or slaughter of any Spaniard. Ferdinand his brother, Captaine of the Horse, made a great slaughter amongst the Indians, sparing neither age nor sexe, and filling the wayes with Carkasses. The Frier also all the time of the battell animated the Spaniards, admonishing them to vse the thrust rather then the stroke with their Swords, for feare of breaking them.

Cap. 4. Atabalibas ransome.

The next day Pizarro visits his prisoner, and giueth him good words, who grieued with his chaines, couenanted for his ransome to giue them as much Gold and Siluer vessels (so that they should not breake them) as should fill vp the roome as high as a man could reach. But when halfe so much was not brought in a moneths space, they perswaded Pizarro to kill him. The King excused himselfe by the length of the way, that it could not come in so soone. If they would send to Cusco, they might see themselues cause to credit him. Soto is sent thither with two Spaniards, which met Indians all the way laden with treasure. Almagro came to the sharing of this ransome.

Cap. 5. Pizarros perfidious crueltie.

Pizarro notwithstanding retayned his former purpose to kill him, that so hee might enioy the Countrey. Atabaliba desired to bee sent to Caesar, which hee refused. And none that consented to his death, came to a prosperous end. When Pizarro had told him of the Sentence, hee exclaimed bitterly, and then turning with his deuotions to the Sunne, hee expostulated with Pizarro for breaking his oath, not onely to restore him to libertie vpon his ransome, but to depart out of his Countrie: but hee commanded his Negros to execute him, which with a cord fastned to a sticke, and wrung about his necke was soone dispatched. Then marched hee to Cusco, and was encountered by Quisquiz, Atabalibas Captaine, whom hee ouerthrew, and entred Cusco by force, and got there more prey then before by Atabaliba. The Souldiers tortured the Inhabitants to confesse their treasures; yea some killed the Indians in sport, and gaue them to their Dogges to eate. After this hee beganne the Citie of Kings, on the Riuer of Lima, and made Almagro Gouernour of this new Prouince. Caesar also gaue him priuiledge to bee Marshall of Peru, and to conquer three hundred miles further then Pizarros conquest, for himselfe. Hence arose suspicions and iealousies of Pizarro to Almagro, and after some quarrels Almagro is sent to Chili by Pizarro, so to ridde his hands honourably of him. New Oathes also passed. Hee passeth ouer the snowy Hills, where diuers both Men and Horses were frozen to death. Pizarro receiueth soone after, the title of Marquesse, from Caesar.

Mango Inga his acts.

Mango Inga, brother of Atabaliba, whom Francis Pizarro in those broyles had crowned, was by Fernandez Pizarro taken and committed to chaines in Cusco: and vpon great promises by his brother Iohn freed: who seeing the Spaniards tooke a course of robbery rather then warre, rebelled, slue many Spaniards at their Mines, and sent a Captaine to Cusco, which tooke it, and slue Iohn Pizarro, with some Spaniards. The Spaniards againe recouered it, and againe lost it *, Mango besieging it with an hundred thousand Indians, which burnt it, and slue the Spaniards. The Marquesse sent Diego Pizarro, with seuentie Spaniards, against Mango; but not one of them was left to carrie tidings of their destruction. About the same time Morgouius had like successe with his Spanish Band, going to relieue Cusco. Gonçales Tapia was sent with eightie horse, but he and most of his were slaine neere Guamanga. Gaeta another Captaine with his fiftie Spaniards, ards ranne the same fortune. The Marquesse sends Godoies with fortie Horse, but he being assayled, and seeing his men slaine, fled, and brought newes to Lima. Then did the Marquesse send Peter Lerma with fiftie Horse, and followed himselfe, and slue many of the Indians in battell; two hundred Horses, and foure hundred Spaniards, had beene lost, neither could hee heare of his brethren any thing. He sent therefore to Corteſe, to Truxillo, Nicaragua, Panama, to Alonſo Aluarado, who first came to his succour with three hundred Spaniards, the most Horsemen. He ouerthrew Tizoia (Mangos chiefe Commander) with 50000. Indians, and againe in another battell.

Meane while Almagro (whom the Marquesse thought to bee dead) returneth out of Chili, which had not answered his expectations, the fame whereof caused Mango, fearing to be hemmed in of all sides, to leaue Cuſco, (despairing to recouer his estate) with twenty thousand Indians, setling himselfe on the Mountaines ouer Guamanga. When Gaſca the President sent for him after, promising him peace, he refused, as warned by Atabalibas example. Almagro would haue entred Cuſco in his owne right, as Gouernour, which Ferdinand Pizarro refused till he had leaue from the Marquesse. But he by night entred, and imprisoned both Gonzales and Ferdinand Pizarro. The next day hee was proclaimed Gouernour, according to the Imperiall commission. He hearing of Aluarado, and fearing his comming, sent to him Messengers which Aluarado stayed, but was soone after taken by Almagro in his Tents. Cap.7.

Then doth hee returne to Cuſco pompous, swearing to cast out all the Pizarriſts. Aluarado and Gonzales corrupting their keepers get out of prison, and acquaint the Marquesse with these things, who prouided fiue hundred men to march against him, but the case was compromitted. Yet did the Marquesse set men to murther Almagro by the way as hee should come to the place appointed, which tooke no effect, hee being warned thereof. After this they are reconciled, Oaths going before and after, which soone after were broken, and brake out into open warres, in which Almagro was taken, sentenced to death, which no pleading, appeale, intercession could reuerse; but he was first strangled in prison, and then beheaded by Ferdinand Pizarro, who had before beene his prisoner. His Father is not knowne; hee left a Sonne by an Indian Concubine, bearing his owne name Diego. Almagro put to death.

The Marquesse sent his Brother Ferdinand to Spaine, with the processe of Almagro, and the Kings fifts. In the meane time one Rada a friend of Almagro, with yong Diego his son conspire against the Marquesse, who contemning their meannesse, was by them slaine in his owne house with his halfe brother Martin de Alcantara. Diego Almagro inuades the gouerment, and makes all to sweare to him till Caſar had otherwise prouided. Hee goeth to Cuſco, and there slayeth Garcia Aluarado, who had stabbed Sotello, and would haue done as much for him. Cap.8. Ferd. sent to Spaine, where he is thought to haue died in prison. The Marquesse slaine.

Caſar hearing of these broyles sent the Licentiate Vacca di Caſtro thither with commission, betwixt whom and Diego was fought a bloudy battell, three hundred slaine, on Cæsars side one hundred and fiftie. Diego fleeth to Cuſco, but by Roderigo Salazar, on whom hee had bestowed many benefits, was betrayed to Vacca, who cut off his head. Cap.9. Vacca de Caſtro cuts off Diego.

About this time the Decree for the Indians libertie was promulged and Blaſcus Nunnez Vela made Vice-roy of Peru, who arriuing at Nombre de Dios, A. 1544. there met with many Spaniards which had gotten much by the sale of Indian slaues; hee committed to the Officers, and would haue confiscated their money, as against the late Law; which being done by him in a place out of his iurisdiction, it was vpon intercession restored. Going to Panama hee causeth the Indians to be freed, at Tumbez he meets with a Priest and a seruant of Gonzales Pizarro, which had beene in the battell against Almagro, and hanged them both. He executed a Frier also which had taxed the seueritie of Cæsars Edict, and ill rewarding those which had serued him. And whiles he would remit nothing of vtmost rigour, he procured the hate of all, which after brake forth into a rebellion. He committed Vacca de Caſtro into prison, whereupon the Spaniards chose Gonzales Pizarro their Leader, Gouernor, and Procurator generall of the Peruan Prouinces. The Vice-roy also put the Kings Factor to death, whose brother the Licenciat Carualal sware to be auenged of him. The Vice-roy after this was taken and imprisoned, but soone after sentenced to be sent back to Spaine by Alnarez, who at Tumbez freed him. His brother Vela Nunnez seeking to raise forces for him was taken and executed. Ciuill wars grew hot, a battel was fought betwixt Pizarro and the vnfortunat Vice-roy there taken, whom Carualal in reuenge of his brothers death caused to be done to death. Cap.10. Vice-roy Vela. Cap.11. Cap.12.

Gaſca, a man of great subtilty, was sent to appease those affaires; who made the Indians to beare the carriages of his Armie on their shoulders, chained on a rowe, to preuent their flight; some fainting vnder the weight of their burthens, others with extreme thirst. Those which could not march with the Armie the Spaniards freed by cutting off their heads, to auoide the delay of the chaine: or if they were tied with ropes, they ranne them thorow with their weapons: of some they cut off the legs, of others the nose, or armes. Gonzales Pizarro the chiefe of the Rebels, ouercame Centenus in one battell, but in another was taken by Gaſca, and executed; and after him his Camp-master Carualal, a cruell man, which would deride his owne Countrimen, when he executed them; bidding them, because they were Gentlemen horsemen, chuse, which tree they would hang on. Gaſca ordained that the Indians should pay tribute to Cap.13. Gaſcas acts in Peru. Cap.14. Cap.15. Cap.16.

their Lords onely of such things as the Countrie yeelded. For before, the Spaniards forced them by tortures to bring them Gold: if any not hauing it fled those torturers into the Woods, the Spaniards hunted them out with Dogs, and many so found were torne with Dogs, others hanged themselues. Once; the men of Peru conceiued so hard an opinion of the Spaniards, and of their cruelties, that they not onely denied them to be the sonnes of God, but thought that they were not borne into the world like other men, supposing that so fierce and cruell a creature could not be procreated of man and woman. They called them therefore Viracochie, that is, Sea-froth, as if they thence had receiued originall. Nor can any alter this their opinion so deeply rooted, but God Almightie; saying, The windes ouerthrowe trees and houses, fire burnes them, but these Viracochie deuoure all things, insatiably seeking Gold and Siluer, which as soone as they haue gotten, they play away at Dice, warre, kill one another, robbe, blaspheme, wickedly forsweare and denie God, neuer speake truth; and vs they haue spoyled of our Countrie and fortunes.

Lastly, they curse the Sea, which hath brought to the Land so fierce and dreadfull an issue. If I asked for a Christian, they would not answere, nor looke on me. But euery childe could say, There goeth a Viracochie. They hid their ancient treasures, that the Spaniards should not finde them; saying, that all which they got, in comparison of these hidden, was but as a graine of Maiz to a dishfull. Some they buried in the Earth, and some they threw into the Sea. &c.

Obseruations of things most remarkable, collected out of the first part of the Commentaries Royall, written by the Inca GARCILASSO DE LA VEGA, Naturall of Cozco, in nine Bookes; Of the Originall, Lines, Conquests, Lawes and Idolatries of the Incas, or Ancient Kings of Peru.

THis Authour (of the blood of the Incas, or as others call them, Ingas, Emperours of Peru, by the mothers side, his father a Spaniard*) hath written three large Volumes of* American affaires, one of Soto's expedition into Florida, in sixe Bookes; both the other of his owne Countrie of Peru, the one containing in nine Bookes the Historie of things done by the Incas, before the Spanish Conquest, the later these later Spanish-Peruan occurrents. Of the Floridan Historie wee haue onely borrowed a few notes, bringing on our Stage a Portugall, eye-witnesse of that Voyage, to act his owne part in our next Act or Booke: out of the other I purposed more liberalitie, that thou mightst heare a Peruan speake of Peru: but the Worke growing so great, and wee hauing out of Acosta, and so many others presented so much before, fearing to cloy the Reader with fulnesse (which may, if not here satisfied, goe to the Authour) haue principally collected such things as either they had not, or had by false information receiued and deceiued their Readers, whom this Authour correcteth out of better intelligence. Besides, hee seemes to hold counterpoise, as drawing things from their originall, with our Mexican Picture-antiquities.

Ex Præfatione. Of the Cusco Tongue. Three pronunciations. Accent. b. d. f. g. i. x. l. rr. wanting.

THe Language generall of Peru, hath three manner of pronunciations of some syllables much different from the Spanish, in which variety of pronunciation lieth the different significations of the same word. One way in the lips, another in the palate, and the third in the throat. The accent is almost alway in the last syllable but one, seldome in the syllable before that, and neuer in the last of all, as some ignorant of the Tongue haue affirmed. That Language of Cuzco doth also want these letters following, b, d, f, g, i consonant, the single l (they vse the double ll, as on the other side they pronounce not the double rr, in the beginning or midst of a word, but alway single) and x: so that of the Spanish Alphabet they want eight letters, accounting the single l, and double rr. Hence they hardly pronounce Spanish words in which these letters are. Neither is there any plurall number, but certaine particles which signifie pluralitie, otherwise the singular serues for both numbers.

Monie.

In my time about 1560. and twentie yeeres after, in my Countrie there was no money coyned, but they reckoned by weight, the marke, or ounce; as in Spaine they reckon by Duckets, so in Peru by Pezos or Castellans, euery Pezo of Siluer being foure hundred and fiftie Marauedies, and reduced to Spanish Duckets, euery fiue Pezos are sixe Duckets.

ANno 1484. Alonso Sanchez of Huelua, in the Countie of Niebla, traded in a small ship from Spaine to the Canaries, and thence to Madera. In this his triangular trade, hee was one day taken with a tempest, which carried him twentie and eight or nine dayes hee knew not whence nor whither, and then the tempest ending, hee arriued at an Ile (which some thinke to bee Hispaniola) where he went on land, and tooke the height. Hee wrote all occurrents, and after a tedious tedious voyage arriued at Tercera, but fiue of seuenteene being left, which all died there (spent with their ill passage) at Christopher Colon or Columbus his house, which gaue him that heart and courage to the discouery of the New World.

This Spanish report some of themselues conceale, others deny: see sup. ca. 1. §. 4. To. 1. l. 2. I haue here giuen this voyage (or fable) because the particulars are so full and plaine in this author: whereas Gomara saith neither in the man, nor time, nor place, &c. is agreed on: see Gom. p. 2. c. 13.

Blasco Nunnez de Balboa, An. 1513. discouered the South Sea; & was thereof made Adelantado, and the conquest of those Regions granted him by the Catholike Kings. He made three or foure Ships for discouery, one of which passed the line to the South, sailing along the coast; and seeing an Indian Fisherman at the mouth of a Riuer, foure of the Spaniards went ashore farre from the place where he was, being good runners and swimmers to take him.

The Indian marualing what kinde of creature the Ship vnder saile might be, was taken in the mids of his muse and carried a shipboord. They asked him by signes and words (being somewhat refreshed after that dreadfull surprize and bearded sight) what Countrie that was, and how called. The Indian not vnderstanding what they demanded, answered and told them his proper name, saying Beru, and added another word, saying Peru: as if he should haue said, if yee aske me what I am, my name is Beru, and if you aske me whence, I was in the Riuer, Peru being the common name of a Riuer in that language. The Christians conceiued that hee had vnderstood them, and answered to the purpose; and from that time Anno 1515. or 1516. they called by the name of Peru that great and rich Empire, corrupting both names, as they vse in Indian words. Some later authors call it Piru. After the discouery of the Incas Kingdome the name still continued, howsoeuer the Natiues to this day (seuentie two yeares since the conquest) will not take it in their mouthes, although they speake with Spaniards and vnderstand them: neither haue they one generall name for all those Prouinces, as Spaine, Italy, France with vs, but call each by its proper name; and the whole Kingdome they called Tauantinsuyu, that is to say, the fourth part of the World. That Riuer also where they cooke the Indian, was after by the Spaniards called Peru. Yucatan receiued the name from like accident, the first discouerers asking the place, the Indian answering tectetan, tectetan, that is, I vnderstand you not, which they vnderstood of the proper appellation, and corruptly called the place Yucatan.

Name of Peru whence and how.

The like you may before read of China, a name not ener knowne, &c. Iucatan.

From Panama to the Citie of Kings, the sailing is very troublesome, by reason of Southerne windes which alway runne on that coast, as also of many currents: these forced the Shippes in that voyage to make large boords of fortie or fiftie leagues into the Sea, and then againe to landward; vntill Francis Drake an Englishman (which entred by the Magellan straic 1579.) taught them a better course of sailing two or three hundred leagues into the Sea, which the Pilots before durst not doe, being fearefull of calmes, if they were once one hundred leagues from land, otherwise also vncertaine and ignorant.

Sir F. Drake teacher of nauigating the S. Sea to the Spar.

Touching the originall of the Inca Kings of Peru, this author affirmeth, that when hee was a childe, his mother reiding in Cusco her Countrie, euery weeke there came to visite her some of her kindred which had escaped the tyrannies of Atabalipa, at which time their ordinary discourse was alway of the originall of their Kings, of their Maiestie and great Empire, Conquests, and Gouernment: such discourses the Incas and Pallas hold in their visitations, bewailing their losses. Whiles I was a boy I reioyced to heare them as children delight to heare tales, but being growne to sixteene or seuenteene yeares of age, when they were one day at my Mothers in this discourse, I spake to the ancientest (my Mothers Vncle) desiring him to tell me what he knew of their first Kings, seeing they kept not memory of their antiquities, as the Spaniards vse in writing, which by their Bookes can tell all their antiquities and changes which haue happened since God made the World. I desired him to tell me what traditionary memorials he had of their Originals. He willing to satisfie my request, recounted to me in manner following, aduising mee to lay vp these sayings in my heart.

c. 15. Atabalipa or Atabalipa his cruelties.

In old times all this region was vntilled and ouergrowne with bushes, and the people of those times liued as wilde beasts, without religion or policie, without towne or house, without tilling or sowing the ground, without raiment, for they knew not how to worke Cotten or Wooll to make them garments. They liued by two and two, or three and three, in caues and holes of the ground, eating grasse like beasts, and rootes of trees, and wilde fruits, and mans flesh. They couered themselues with leaues, and barkes of trees, and skins of Beasts, and others in leather. Once, they liued as wilde beasts, and their women were in common and brutish. Our Father the Sunne (this was the Incas manner of speech, because they deriued their pedegree from the Sunne; and for any besides the Incas to say so, was blasphemie, and incurred stoning) seeing men liue in this fashion, tooke pitie on them, and sent from heauen a Sonne and a Daughter of his owne, to instruct men in the knowledge of our Father the Sunne, and to worship him for their God; to giue them lawes also and precepts of humane and reasonable course of life in ciuill fashion, to dwell in houses and townes, to husband the earth, to sowe and set, to breede cattle. With these ordenances our father the Sunne placed these his two children in the lake Titicaca, eighrie leagues from Cusco; and gaue them a barre of Gold two fingers thicke, and halfe a yard long, for a signe that where that barre should melt with one blow on the ground, there they should place their residence and Court. Lastly, hee commanded that when they had reduced the people to serue him, they should vphold them in iustice with clemencie and gentlenesse, behauing themselues as a pittifull Father dealeth with his tender and beloued children, like as he himselfe gaue them example in giuing light and heate to all the world, causing the seedes and grasse to grow, and the trees to fructifie, the cattle to encrease, the seasons to be faire, and encompassing the world once every day: that they should imitate him, and become benefactors to the Nations, being sent to the earth for that purpose. Hee constituted also and named them Kings and Lords of all the Nations which they should instruct and civilize.

After these instructions he left them, and they went vp from Titicaca travelling to the North, still as they went striking with that barre of Gold, which never melted. Thus they entred into a resting place seuen or eight leagues Southwards from this Citie Cuſco, now called Pacarec Tampu, that is, morning sleepe, and there slept till morning, which he afterwards caused to be peopled, and the inhabitants boast greatly of this name, which the Inca imposed. Thence they travelled to this valley of Cuſco, which was then a wilde wilderneſſe, and staid first in the billocke, called Huanacanti, in the midst of the Citie; and there making proofe, his Golden Barre easily melted at one streake, and was no more seene. Then said our Inca to his Sister and Wife, In this Valley our Father the Sunne commands vs to make our aboade; and therefore O Queene and Sister, it is meete that each of vs goe and doe his endeuour to assemble and draw hither the people to instruct and benefit them as our Father the Sunne hath enioyned vs. From the billocke Huanacauri our first Kings went each to gather together the people. And because that is the the first place on which they were knowne to haue set their feete, and thence to haue gone to doe good to men; was builded there a Temple to worship our Father the Sunne, in memorie of this benefit to the world.

Temple to the Sunne.

The Prince went to the North, and the Princeſſe to the South: to all the men and women which they found in those wilde thickets, they spake, saying that their Father the Sunne had sent them from heauen to become instructers and benefactors to all that dwell in that land, to bring them from a brutish life to ciuilitie, with many other words to like purpose. Those Sauages seeing these two persons attired and adorned with ornaments, which our Father the Sun had giuen them, and their eares bored and open, as their descendants haue continued, and that in their words and countenance they appeared like children of the Sun, and that they came to giue them sustenance; they gaue them credit, and reuerenced them as children of the Sun, and obayed them as Kings, and calling other Sauages and acquainting them herewith, many men and women came together and followed our Kings whether they would conduct them. Our Princes gaue order that some should be occupied in prouiding victuall in the fields, least hunger should force them backe to the Mountaines; others in making cottages and houses, the Inca instructing them how they should doe it. In this manner this our Imperiall Citie began to be peopled, being diuided into two halues, Hanan Cozco and Harin Cozco, that is, the high and the low Cozco, those which the King drew thither dwelling in the high, those which followed the Queene in the low. One halfe had not more priuiledges then the other, but they were all equall; but those names remained as a memoriall of those which each had attracted: onely those of high Cozco were as the elder, and the other reduced by the Queen as the second sons of the same parents; or, as the right hand and left. In like sort the same diuision was held in all the great townes and small of the Empire, by the high linages and the low, the high and low streetes or wards.

Cuſco or Cozco first inhabited.

Moreouer, the Inca taught the men to doe the offices pertaining to their sexe, as to till the Land, to sowe seedes (shewing them which were profitable) teaching them to make instruments for that purpose, to make trenches for the water, &c. The Queene on the other side taught the women to worke in Cotten and Woolle, and to make garments for their husbands and children, with other houshold offices. These Indians thus ciuilized, went thorow the hilt and wilde places to search out others, and acquainted them with these affaires, telling them what the children of the Sun had done for them, shewing for proofe thereof their new garments, and meates, and so brought much people hither, that in sixe or seuen yeares the Inca had trained many to armes for their defence, and to force those which refused to come to him. He taught them Bowes and Arrowes, and Clubs, &c. And to be short, I say that our first Father Inca reduced all the East to the Riuer Paucartampu, and Westward conquered eight leagues to the great Riuer Apurimac, and nine leagues Southward to Quequeſana. In this Region our Inca caused to people aboue a hundred Townes, the greater of them of one hundred houses.

These were our first Incas, which came in the first ages of the World, of whom all the rest of vs haue descended. How many yeares haue passed since our Father the Sunne sent those his first children, I cannot precisely say; we hold that it is aboue 400. yeares. Our Inca was called Manco Capac, and our Coya, Mama Ocllo Huaco, brother and sister, children of the same Sunne, and the Moone, our progenitors. I thinke I haue giuen thee large account of that which thou desiredſt, and because I would not make this cry, I haue not recited this storie with teares of bloud shed by the eyes, as I shed them in my grieued heart, to see our Incas come to an end, and our Empire lost.

The Incas Empire dured about 400 years Valera hath 500 or 600.

This relation I haue faithfully translated from my mother tongue, which is that of the Inca, to the Spaniſh, which is farre short of the Maieſtie of the stile, nor so significantly as that language affordeth, and haue abbreuiated some things which might make odious the diſcourſe. It is enough that I haue deliuered the truth of their conceit, as befits an Hiſtorian. Other like things the said Inca told me in those visitings and diſcourſes at my mothers house, which I shall recite in their due places.

The Floud.

The common people of Peru recite other fables of their Originals, the Collaſuyu which dwell to the South from Cozco, and the Cuntiſuyu, which dwell to the West; fabling that after the floud, floud, the waters ceasing, there appeared a man in Tiahuacana Southwards from Cusco, so mightie that he diuided the World into foure parts, and gaue them to foure men which hee called Kings, to Manco Capac, the North; the South to Colla; to Tocay, and Pinahua the East and West, and sent each of them to their gouernments, &c. Those of the East and North haue another tale, that foure men and foure women in the beginning of the world came out of a rocke by Pancartampu, all brethren and sisters, the first of which was Manco Capac and his wife Mama Ocllo which founded Cosco (which signifieth a nauell) and subiected those Nations; the second Ayar Cachi or salt; the third Ayar Vchu (a kinde of Pepper) the fourth Ayar Sanca, that is, mirth and content. These fables they allegorise also, and some Spaniards would here finde the eight persons which came forth of Noahs Arke; wherewith I meddle not, nor with the other fables which other Indian Nations haue of their progenitors; there being no honourable stocke which is not deriued from some Fountaine, or Lake, or Lyon, Tigre, Beare, Eagle, Cuntur or other Birds of pray, or Hils, Caues, &c. But I by the said Incas relation, and of many other Incas and Indians of those townes which the said Inca Manco Capac peopled, in the space of twenty yeares which I there liued, receiued notice of all that I writ: for as much as in my childehood they related their stories to me, as they vse to tell tales to children; and after being grown in age they gaue me large notice of their Lawes and gouernment, comparing this Spanish with the old, telling me how their Kings proceeded in peace and warre, and how they handled their subiects: and as to their owne Sonne they recounted to me all their Idolatrie, Rites, Ceremonies, Sacrifices, Feasts, and Superstitions, much whereof I haue seene with mine eyes, it being not wholly left when I was twelue or thirteene yeares old, who was borne eight yeares after the Spaniards had gotten my Countrie. I also purposing to write a storie of these things, did write to my Schoolefellowes for their helpe to giue me particular information of the seuerall Prouinces of their Mothers, each Countrie keeping their annals and traditions; which reporting my intent to their Mothers and kindred, that an Indian, a childe of their owne land, ment to write a Historie thereof, searched their antiquities, and sent them to me; whereby I had notice of the conquests and acts of euery Inca.

Fables and allegorisers.

Conceits of the originals of all these families.

Manco Capac to the East of Cosco, peopled thirteene townes of the nation called Poques, to the West thirtie, with the Nations Masca, Chilqui, Papuri; twentie to the North of foure peoples, Mayu, Cauca, Chinchapucyu, Rimac tampu: 38. or 40. to the South, 18. of which were of the Nation Ayarmaca, the others of the Quespiancha, Mugna, Vrcos, Quehuar, Huaruc, Cauinna. This Nation Cauinna, beleeued that their first Parents came out of a certaine Lake, to which they say the soules of the dead haue recourse, and thence return into the bodies which are borne. They had an Idoll of dreadfull shape, which Manco Capac caused them to leaue, and to worship the Sun, as did his other vassals. These townes from 100. housholds the greater, and 30. or 25. the lesse, grew to 1000. families, and the lesse to 3. or 400. The tirant Atauhualpa for their priuiledges which the first Inca and his descendents had giuen them, destroyed them, some in part, others wholly. Now a Viceroy hath remoued them out of their ancient scituation, ioyning fiue or sixe townes together in one place, and seuen or eight in another, a thing so odious and inconuenient that I cease to mention it.

Spanish alterations.

Manco Capac to reduce the abuses of their women, ordained that adultery should be punished with death, as likewise murther and robberie: hee enioyned them to keepe but one wife, and to marrie in their kindred or tribe that they should not be confounded, and that they should marrie from twenty yeares vpwards. He caused them to gather together tame and harmelesse cattle in flockes and heards to cloath them; the Queene teaching these women to spin and weaue. Hee taught them to make the shooe which they call Vsuta. He set a Curaca (or Cacique) ouer each seuerall Nation, chusing them to that dignitie which had taken most paines in reducing the Sauages, the mildest and best minded to the common good, to instruct the rest as fathers. He ordained that the fruits which were gathered in each towne should be kept together, to giue to each man as he had neede, till lands were disposed to each in proprietie. Hee taught them how to build a Temple to the Sunne, where to sacrifice and doe him worship as the principall God, and to adore him as the Sun and Moone, which had sent them to reduce them to ciuilitie. He caused them to make a house of women for the Sunne, when there should be women sufficient of the bloud royall to inhabit it; and propounded all things to them in the name of the Sun, as inioyned by him; which the Indians simply beleeued, adoring them for his children, and men diuine come from heauen.

Manco and his successours wore their haire poled, vsing to that purpose Rasors of flint, a thing so troublesome, that one of our Schoolefellowes seeing the readinesse of Scissers said, that if your Fathers the Spaniards had onely brought vs Scissers, Looking-glasses, and Combes, wee would haue giuen them all the Gold and Siluer in our Land. They weare their eares with wide holes caused by art to grow into a strange and incredible wideneſse, whereupon the Spaniards called them Orejones, or men with great eares. Hee ware on his head as a Diadem or royall ensigne a kinde of Ribben of many colours, which compassed his head foure or fiue times a finger breadth, and almost a finger thicke. These three were

After ſome time, hee vouchſafed (as a great fauour) the polling diuerſified in Prouinciall differences of the Eare-faſhions (which was a later and greater fauour) both for the boaring and Earing, or Iewell there worne.

Royall Diademe.

The Inca growing old, aſſembled his principall Vaſſals in Cuſco, and in a ſolemne ſpeech told them, that he intended to returne to Heauen, and to reſt with his Father the Sunne which called him, (which was practiſed by all his ſucceſſors, when they perceiued themſelues neere death) and now at his departure he minded to leaue them his chiefe fauour, to wit, his Royall Title, commanding that they and their Deſcendants ſhould be Incas without difference, as hauing beene his firſt ſubiects which he loued as children; and hee hoped that they would likewiſe ſerue his Succeſſor, and augment the Empire: that their wiues alſo ſhould be called Pallas, as thoſe of the Royall bloud. Only he reſerued the Royall Head-tire to himſelfe and his Deſcendents the Kings which was a fringe or lace coloured, extending from one ſide of the fore-head to the other. His ſirname Capac ſignifieth rich (which they vnderſtood of the mindes vertues) and mightie in armes. The name Inca ſignifieth Lord, or generally thoſe of the Royall bloud. For the Curacas, though great Lords, might not vſe that Title. The King is diſtinguiſhed from all others by the appellation Capa, Capa Inca ſignifying the only Lord, as the Grand Signior among the Turkes. They ſtiled him alſo Huaccharuyak, that is, Benefactor to the poore. They called them alſo Intip charin, the Sonnes of the Sunne. Manco Capac reigned, ſome ſay thirtie yeeres, others fortie. Hee had many children by his Wife Mama Ocllo Huaco, and by his Concubines (ſaying, it was good to multiply children to the Sunne.) He called his Vaſſals alſo of the better ſort, and recommended his Heire as by Teſtument in way of diſcourſe to them, and to the reſt of his children their loue and ſeruice of the Vaſſals, and to the Vaſſals their loyaltie to their King, and obedience to the Lawes. Then diſmiſſing the Vaſſals, hee made another ſpeech in ſecret to his children, that they ſhould alway remember that they were children of the Sun, to worſhip him as their God, and to maintaine his Lawes giuing others examples therein alſo to be gentle to the Indians, to vphold them in Iuſtice without oppreſſion: that they ſhould recommend theſe things to their poſterities in all generations, ſaying, that they were the people of the Sunne, which he left vnto them as his Teſtament; to whom he was now going to reſt with him in peace, and from Heauen would haue a care to ſuccour them.

Thus died Manco Capac, and left his Heire Sinchi Roca the eldeſt brother, and begotten of Coya Mama Ocllo Huaco his wife and ſiſter. Beſides the Heire, thoſe Kings left other ſonnes and daughters which married amongſt themſelues to keepe the Royall bloud entire, which they fabulouſly beleeued to be diuine, and of others humane, although they were great Lords of Vaſſals, called Curacas. The Inca Sinchi Roca married with his eldeſt ſiſter, after the manner of his parents, and of the Sunne and Moone, thinking the Moone to be ſiſter and wife to the Sunne. The Inca Manco was lamented by his Vaſſals very heauily, the Obſequies continuing many moneths. They embalmed his corps to preſerue it amongſt them, and worſhipped him for a God, Sonne of the Sunne, offering many Sacrifices of Rammes, Lambes, Birds, Graines, &c. confeſſing him Lord of all thoſe things which he had left.

Titles of honour.

The name Inca deſcended to all the poſteritie by the Male Line, not by the Female; all of this ranke were alſo called Yntip churin (children of the Sunne) and Auqui, or Infanta, which Title they kept till their Marriage, and then were called Inca. The lawfull Queene was called Coya; alſo Mamanchic, that is, Our Mother. Her daughters were likewiſe called Coya; the Concubines and other wiues of the bloud Royall, were called Palla, which ſignifieth a woman of Royall bloud. Concubines which were not of Royall bloud, were called Mamacuna, Mother. All the Royall Daughters were called Nuſta, and if not of Royall Mothers, the name of the Prouince was added as Colla Nuſta, Quitu Nuſta. The name Nuſta continued till they were married, and then they were ſtiled Palla.

Amautas, the learned Peruans.

Pachacamac, the name of God.

Iguoto Deo. Auguſt. in Zrat. l.2. ſaith that Atabualpa anſwered Vincent de valle viridi, that they held the Sun for God, the earth for Mother, & Pachacamac for Creator of all.

THe firſt Incas and their Amautas (which were their Philoſophers) by light of Nature acknowledged God the Creator of all things, which they called Pachacamac (the Sunne they held to be a viſible God) Pacha ſignifieth the World, and Camac to quicken, of Cama, the Soule, as if Pachacamac, were the ſoule or quickner of the Vniuerſe. This name they had in ſuch veneration that they durſt not mention it; and if they were by occaſion forced thereto, they did it with holding downe the head, and bowing the bodie, lifting vp their eyes to Heauen, and caſting them downe to the ground, lifting vp their hands open ſtraite from the ſhoulders, giuing ſmacks or lip-motions to the ayre (Rites performed only to him and the Sunne) holding Pachacamac in more internall reuerence then the Sunne, whom they named commonly on any occaſion. They ſaid that he gaue life to the World, but they knew him not, for they had neuer ſeene him, and therefore neither built Temples, nor offered Sacrifice to him; but ſaid they worſhipped him in their minds, and held him for the vnknowne God. The Spaniards which tooke him for a Deuill, and knew not the generall Language, found out another name for God, Tici Vira-cocha, which neither I, nor they know what it meaneth: and if any should aske mee how I in my Language would call God, I would answre, Pachacamac: nor is there in that generall Language any other name for him. And all those which Authors report are corrupted of other Languages, or deuised by them.

Acosta cals him Viracocha, and saith they had no proper name for God.

The Incas in Cozco kept a Crosse of Marble, White and Carnation, which they call Iaspe Cristaline. They know not how long they had it. Anno 1560. I left it in the Vestry of the Cathedrall Church of that Citie. The Crosse was square, three quarters of a yard lond, and three fingers thicke, and so much in breadth, all of one piece well wrought. They kept it in one of their Houses Royall, in a roome which they call Huaca, a holy place. They did not adore it, but held it in venerable esteeme, either for the goodlinesse, or for some other respect which they knew not. The Incas and all Nations subiect to them, knew not what it was to sweare: you haue heard of their respect to the name Pachacamac. The Witnesses were solemnely demanded in waightie cases by the Iudge, Doest thou promise to tell truth to the Inca? which he promising, the Iudge gaue him a caueat for lying or concealing. They exceedingly feared to lye, and if they were found to doe it, were grieuously punished, and in cases of great importance, with death, as hauing lied to the Inca: for so they spake to the Iudge as if it were to the Inca whom they worshipped for God. Besides Pachacamac, the Sunne, and Moone (as his wife and sister) and starres, they were forbidden by Law to adore any thing. Pachacamac the supreme God had no Temples ordinarily, yet in a Valley called Pachacamac was a Temple dedicated to that vnknowne God. The Spaniards attribute many other Gods to the Incas, through ignorance of their Rites in the first and second age, and of their language; and not knowing the diuers significations of the word Huaca, which in the last syllable pronounced high in the roofe of the mouth signifieth an Idoll. It signified also things sacred in which the Deuill gaue answeres, also things consecrated as offerings to the Sunne; Temples likewise and Chappels and Sepulchres whence the Deuill spake: they gaue that name also to all things eminent and superexcellent in their kind, as the faire st Trees, &c. On the contrary they called the filthiest and most monstrous things Huaca, which might cause horrour, as the great Snakes of fiue and twentie or thirtie foot long. Huaca was applied to all things also which go out of the common course, as to a woman which had Twinnes, making great Feasts, and strowing flowres in the street with Dances and Songs for such her fruitfulnesse. The same name they gaue to sheepe which had Twinnes (for vsually there they had but one) and in their Sacrifices rather offered a Twinne Lambe, if they had it, then another: likewise to an Egge with two yolkes, to those which had in their birth any member more or lesse then vsuall, as if one had six toes on his foot, a shorne lip, &c. also to Fountaines which yeelded extraordinary source of waters, to the ranke of the snowie Hils which runne thorow all Peru to the Magelane Straits, to all extraordinary Mountaines. Neither did they (as the Spaniards say) hold these for Gods, nor worship them, but for their eminence held them in * venerable respect. The same word Huaca pronounced with the last syllable in the inner part of the throat, signifieth to weepe; a thing vsuall in that Language, for the same word in differing pronuntiation, to signifie things different.

Acosta by this will bee better vnderstood & corrected.

* He seemeth also to make a difference twixt the adoration to the Sunne, & worship or reuerence of the Inca.

As for the Idoll Tangatanga, which one Authour saith they worshipped in Chuquisaca, and that the Indians said it was three in one, and one in three: I know no such Idoll, nor is there any such word in the generall Language of Peru: but the Prouince is one hundred and eightie leagues from Cozco, and the Spaniards corrupt all the words they take in their mouthes. It is likely that the Indians to flatter with the Spaniards, when they heard them preach of the Trinitie pretended some such likenesse of beliefe. The like I hold concerning their confessions, all which was inuented by the Indians to curry fauour with the Spaniards. I speake this as an Indian which know the naturall condition of the Indians: and I say that they had no Idoll with the name of the Trinitie, nor had any such word in their Language.

Acosta taxed. See before in Acosta. pag. 1041. &c.

They beleeued the immortalitie of the soule, that the bodie was of earth, and called it Allpacamasca, that is quickened earth. They beleeued another life after this, with punishment for the bad and rest for the good. They diuided the Vniuerse into three Worlds, Heauen called Hanan pacha, or the high World, whither they said the good men went to bee rewarded for their vertues: this World they called Hurin pacha, the World below: the third vun pacha, the centre of the Earth, called also Cuyarpa huacin, that is, the house of the Deuill. The life in Heauen they said was quiet, free from troubles, as that of the inferior World, which we call Hell full of paine and trouble without any rest or content, whereas this present life participated of both. Amongst the ioyes of the other life they did not reckon carnall delights nor other vices, but quietnesse of the minde only with rest of the bodie. They beleeued the Resurrection vniuersall, not glory nor paine, but to this same temporall life. They made great reckoning of their haire which they polled or combed from their heads, to lay it vp in some place, or in a hole of the wall, and if another Indian had seene it falne thence, he would take and lay it vp safe. I haue often asked the cause, and they would tell mee that wee were to returne againe to liue in the World (they haue no word for the Re-

Sacrifices.

The Sacrifices to the Sunne were diuers: as creatures tame, great and small; Lambes were the principall, next Rammes, and then barren Ewes; Conies, all Birds which were for meate, and Sewet, or Tallow; Corne and Pulse to the Herbe Cuca, and fine garments (which they burned instead of Incense; their drinkes also, as that made of water and Maiz; and in their ordinarie meales when they haue eaten and are about to drinke (for they neuer drinke whiles they are eating) they put their finger in the midst of the first vessell, and looking vp to Heauen with reuerence, they turne vp as it were, with a fillip, a drop of that drinke, offering it with thankfulnes to the Sunne, for that hee hath giuen them to drinke, * and kissing wise mooued their lips twice or thrice to the aire, which with them is a signe of adoration; and then drinke off the rest without more Ceremonies. This I haue seene them often doe. Yet did not the Indians of the second age (which began and ended with the Incas gouernment) offer the bloud or flesh of men, but prohibited the eating thereof, wherein Historians haue bin deceiued, it beeing true indeed of some Regions before the conquest of them by the Incas. Neither did they sacrifice either men or children when their Kings were sicke, as one Historian writeth; for they held them not for diseases, as those of the common people; but esteemed them as Messenges of their Father the Sunne, which came to call his Sonne to rest with him in Heauen; and those were their ordinary speeches, when they were to die.

Eybrow-rite.

When they entred into their Temples, the principall of those which went in, put vp his hand to his eye-browes, as if he would pluck off some of the haires, and whether he plucked off any or no, he puffed to the Idoll in signe of adoration and offering; this they did not to their Kings but only to their Idols, or Trees, or places where the Deuill gaue answeres. Their Priests and Witches did the like, when they went into their corners or secret places to conferre with the Deuill. This Idolatry I haue also seene them performe.

Priests of Peru.

The Priests of the house of the Sunne in Cozco, were all Incas of the Royall bloud: for other seruice of the Temple were Incas of those which were such by priuiledge. They had a High or Chiefe Priest, which was Vncle or Brother to the King: or at least legitimate of the bloud. The Priests had no peculiar Vestment. In other Prouinces where were Temples (which were many) the Natiues were Priests, the Kinsmen of the Lords of those Countries; notwithstanding the principall Priest (or Bishop as it were) was to bee an Inca, that so they might hold conformitie of Rites with the Metropolitan: for in all preeminent Offices of Peace or Warre, they had Incas their Superiours. They had many houses of Virgins which obserued perpetuall Virginitie without going out of their house; and others of the Concubines for the King.

Cozco Metropolitan: others had as it were Bishops and Priests.

All their Lawes Ciuill and Sacred were attributed to Manco Capac, saying, that hee had left and perfected some himselfe, the others for his Successors to accomplish in their times: so to giue authoritie to all, as from the Sunnes Ordnance. And though some of the Incas were great Lawmakers, yet no memory is left of any particulars vnder their name, but all is attributed to the first Inca.

All Ordinances attributed to Manco.

Diuision of the Empire.

The Incas deuided their Empire into foure parts: they called it Tauantinsuyu, that is, the foure parts of the World. Hereof Cozco was the Centre, which in that Inca-language signifieth the Nauill of the Earth, or Land. The East-diuision they called Antisuyu of the Prouince Anti (a name also giuen to the Rew of Snowie Mountaines in the East) the West Cuntisuyu, the North Chinchasuyu; the South Collasuyu; each name deriued of some Prouince therein so called, and continued to the furthest extent that way, as Collasuyu to Chili, sixe hundred leagues from Colla, and Chinchasuyu to Quitu foure hundred leagues from Chincha to the North.

Anti, called by Acosta, Andes.

Tithings and Tithingmen. See the like with vs in Lamb. peramb. of Kent.

They ordained that in euery Towne great or small of their Empire, the Inhabitants should be registred by Tithings, and one of them should take charge of the other nine, as a Decurion or Tithingman, called Chunca Chancapa. Fiue of those Decurions had another Superiour, which had the charge of fiftie. Ouer two of those was another Superiour or Centurion. Fiue Centuries were subiected to one which had charge of fiue hundred, and two of those charges had a Chiliarch or Captaine of one thousand: higher they went not.

Orders of Officers.

Chunca Camayu.

The Tithingman gaue account to the Gouernour of those in his charge, to prouide them Seed or Bread corne, or Wooll, or House-reparations, or other necessaries. He also was to informe of thir faults to the Iudges, which according to the greatnesse of the offence were also diuersified in order for dispatch of Iustice, and to take away need of Appeales, except in cases betwixt one Prouince and another, for which the Inca sent a speciall Iudge. If the Decurion neglected to informe, the fault was now made his owne, and hee corrected for it: as also in the other case of prouision. Hence there were no Vagabonds nor idle persons. The Father was corrected which did not educate or correct his children; the children also were punished in correspondence of their age: and the Tithingman was to informe of both. The Iudges punished them, they said, not for the fact, but the fault in transgressing the Incas commandement which they respected as Gods.

They

They had no purse-punishments, Fines or Confiscations; for to leaue them poore, was but to giue them more libertie to euill. If any Curaca rebelled and deserued death, his sonne succeeded notwithstanding to his State. In warre they had Natiues for Captaines ouer their owne Countrimen, hauing Incas for their Superiours. The Iudge durst not arbitrate, but execute the Law, or else hee died for breaking the Royall commandement. This seueritie of the Officers and of the Lawes which for light offences inflicted death, prooued rather gentle then cruell and barbarous, few daring to transgresse: so that all that Empire, extended thirteene hundred leagues, and consisting of so many Nations and Languages, was gouerned by one Law, as if it had beene one house, the rather because they held the same diuine, and from the Sunnes ordinance by the Incas.

Penalties. No fines.

Nothing more merciull then seueritie vnpartiall, which makes all to feare; so Guns haue prooued sauers of mens liues, the generall feare of Ordnance causing few battels, and consequently fewer slaine in warres then when & where they haue not beene.

And the Law-breaker was therefore accounted sacrilegious and accursed, insomuch that some accused by their owne consciences haue made confessions without other accusers, fearing to bring publike plagues on the State, as Diseases or Dearths, which they sought to preuent by appeasing God with their deaths. And I conceiue, that from these publike confessions, the Spanish Historians haue written that the Indians of Peru had confession in secret like Christians, and Confessours appropriated: which is false, for in Peru they had no other then I haue mentioned: and the Indians which told the Spaniards thus, answered so to their questions, as they thought might best please them. Neither had they any Appeales Ciuill or Criminall. Euery Towne had a Iudge, and for higher matters they went to the Superiour Iudge in the Mother Citie. The Sentences of ordinary Iudges, were euery moneth related to the Superiour Iudges; and theirs to others their Superiours, which were in the Court in diuers degrees according to the qualitie of Cases. The Supreame were the Presidents or Vice-royes of the foure parts of the World. This report was made to examine Sentences which had passed, and if they were found vniust, the Authors were seuerely punished. The manner of rendring these reports to the Inca, and to those of his Counsell, was by knots in lines of diuers colours, which serued them as it were Ciphers: for the knots of such or such colours declared the offences, and certaine threads of diuers colours fastned to the lines, shewed the punishment. This was their Arithmetike in which they were expert and certaine, some applying themselues to nothing else. If any Prouinciall controuersie could not be decided by those whom the King sent, it was suspended, till his Visitation of those parts, and then hee himselfe would see, heare and sentence.

No auricular confession in Peru, as Acosta &c.

Quippos.

The Tithingmen also gaue account euery moneth of all which were borne or died, and likewise at the end of the yeere; such as perished in the warres, they also related. The like Officers and Orders were in the Campes of warre, as in the Townes of peace. They permitted not to sacke the Townes which they conquered by force. For euery of those foure diuisions of the Empire the Inca had Councels of Warre, of Iustice, of necessary businesse. These had subordinate Officers in diuers degrees which rendred accounts of all to the Supreme Councell. Each had a President or Vice-roy which receiued those accounts, and rendred the same to the King. These were Incas legitimate, of great experience in Warre and Peace. And these foure only were Counsellors of State.

Monethly and yeerely accounts.

But foure priuy Counsellors.

Roca succeeded his Father Manco; he was called Sinchi, that is, valiant; excelling in manly feates of Actiuity, Running, Leaping, casting stones or Darts, Wrestling, any of his time. His Fathers Obsequies beeing finished, hee sought to augment his Empire, assembled his Curacas to that end, and put them in mind of that which his Father had said to them, when he would returne to Heauen, commanding the conuersion of the Indians, to the knowledge and worship of the Sunne; whereunto he was now obliged by his place, and for the profit of the bordering Nations which had need thereof. They promised all readinesse, and he made his expedition to Collasuyu and perswaded with faire words, the Nations Puchina and Chanchi, being simple and credulous of euery nouelty (as are all the Indians) and so proceeded without violence twentie leagues that way to the people Chuncara, in all things following his Fathers example. Hee also brought in other Nations on each hand; some affirme a great many. He is thought to haue reigned thirtie yeeres: and then professing that he went to rest with his Father the Sunne, hee left Lloque Yupanqui his sonne to succeed him, and a numerous Issue besides. His name Lloque signifieth left handed (for so he was) Yupanqui was added for his vertues, and signifieth, thou shalt account or reckon, to wit, his great exploits and good parts. If any thinke the word may imply aswell the recounting of vices, let him know that in that Language it is not so, the same Verbe not beeing flexible to euill transition which is vsed to good, nor to good which may be applyed to euill; but their elegance enforceth a change of the Verbe in change of the obiect. The name Yupanqui, as that of Capac were for their merits giuen to three other Incas. He reduced vnder subiection proceeding by the Collasuyu, the people Cana by perswasions. The Ayauari refused and fought with him, and after fortified themselues and indured many skirmishes, but by siege and famine were subdued.

After that he went to Pucara, which was a Fortresse builded by him: and sent to the Pancarcolla and Hatuncolla, which listned to his proposition, being a great Nation, or rather a multitude of Nations, which had many fables of their originall, some from a Fountaine, others from a Caue, Caue, others from a Riuer. They worshipped a white Ramme as their principall God, being Lords of much cattell. They said that the first Ram in the world aboue, made more reckoning of them then other Indians, and had multiplied their Cattell. They offered to that Ram Lambs and tallow in Sacrifice. All of them agreed in this Ram deitie, in other their gods differing, but now exchanged all for the Sunne. Afterwards Tisicaca, and Chucuytu, and Hurin Pacassa were subdued by him. Now to intermixe somewhat of the Sciences which the Incas had.

Of the Peruan Arts. Astrologie.

Their Astrologie and and naturall Philosophie was little, by reason their Amautas or Pphylosophers wanted letters. They better vnderstood morrall learning, and left it written in the practise of their lawes. They obserued the solstices and equinoctials by certaine towers. The Moone and Moneth they called Quilla, the yeare huata. The eclipses of the Moone they attributed to her sickneſſe, fearing that she would dye and fall from heauen, and kill all below, and therefore they sounded Trumpets, Cornets, Drums, and such Instrumencs as they had, beating, and making their Dogs also to houle, thinking her affectioned to Dogges, for a certaine seruice which they fable done by them, and therefore imagine she would respect them, and awake out of her sleepe caused by sickneſſe. The ecclipse of the Sunne they say happeneth for some offence done against him, for which he is angrie. The spots in the Moone they fable to haue come of a Foxe, which being in loue with the Moones beautie, went to heauen, and touching her with his foreteete left those foule memorials. They make their children to cry Mama Quilla, Mother Moone doe not dye leſt all periſh. The men and women cry likewise in her ecclipse with horrible noise: when she recouers her light, they say Pachacamac hath cured her and commanded her not to dye, that the world should not perish; and giue her great thankes. All this I haue seene with mine eyes. The lightning and thunder they adore not for gods, but honour and esteeme them as the Sunnes seruants resident in the ayre, not in heauen. Like account they make of the Rainebow, which the Kings Incas placed in their armes and scutchion. In the house of the Sunne was a roome for each of them. They made no Prognostications nor Predictions by signes of the Sunne, Moone, Comets, but by their dreames often and strange, and by their sacrifices. The Sun euery euening set in the Sea, and with his heate dried vp much of the water, and swam vnder the earth thorow it to the East. For Phisicke they vsed purging and bleeding, but had no skill of Vrines, or Pulse: some rootes and hearbes they made medicinable vse of, especially of Tobacco.

Geometry. Chorography. Arithmeticke.

In Geometrie they had some skill for partitions of their grounds, but nothing for speculation; and so much Geographie, as with plats or pictures to expresse the Nations. I haue seene one of Cusco, and the confines admirably artificiall. Arithmeticke they practised with knots, as is said, and with graines of Maiz, and small stones, making perfect accompts. Musicke they had in some rules of art; with diuers Instruments, as Pipes proportioned to a consort, and flutes and songs.

Musicke.

Poetry.

The Amautas also had some practise of Poetrie, and composed Comedies and Tragedies. The Actors were not base persons, but Incas and the Nobilitie, sonnes of the Curacas. The argument was the acts of their ancestors. These were represented before the King and Lords at Court. They had no base or dishoneſt parts intermixed. They made Verses short and long with measuring the syllables without rimes, I haue giuen an instance; the argument is (like that of Iupiter and Iuno in our Poets) the daughter of a King had a pitcher full of water to moisten the earth, which her brother brake, and with the blow caused thunders and lightnings. They were found in knots and particoloured threads, being very ancient. The words are thus in Peruan and English, the syllables also in like number and meeter.

Handicrafts. Goldsmiths.

Now for Handicrafts, the Goldsmiths (of which they had so many) knew not to make an anuile of Iron, nor of other mettall; nor to cast Iron, although they had Mines thereof. They vsed for anuiles certaine hard stones, of a pale greene colour, which they plained and smoothed with rubbing one against another. They were rare and precious. They knew not how to make hammers with handles of wood, but wrought with instruments made of Copper and Laton mingled, in forme of a Dye, of seuerall sizes, which they held in their hands to strike with as men doe with stones. They had no Files nor Chissels, nor Bellowes for casting of mettals, but vsed Pipes of Brasse, halfe a yard long or lesse, and ioyned eight or tenne together as there was neede.

Carpenters.

Neither had they skill to make tongues. And yet did they make marueilous workes. Their Carpenters were as much to seeke or more, hauing no Iron tooles, but an Axe and a Hatchet and those those of Brasse; no Saw, nor Augre, nor Plainer, nor Nailes, but fastned all things with lines or ropes of a kinde of heath. Neither were their Masons in better case: they vsed a certaine blacke stone not to cut but to beate their stoneworks with force of their armes, and yet haue left incredible Monuments of their art. The Iesuites and other Religions haue instructed the youth since in other arts, in Dialogues and Comedies of Scripture. One Iesuite in praise of our Lady the Virgin Mary composed a Comedie in the Aymara tongue; the argument was Gen. 3. I will put enmitie betweene thee and the woman, and betweene thy seede and her seede: She (so the Romists reade and make of it this remarkeable vse) shall breake thy head, &c. A dialogue of the faith was recited at Potocsi before 12000. Indians, and another of the Sacrament at the Citie of Kings before innumerable, the Indian youth acting and pronouncing with such seemely gestures as much affected the Spaniards. The Licentiate Iuan Cuellas read the Latin Grammer to the Mestizos of Cozco, with good fruite.

Masons.

Note.

Ayta Capac followed his predecessors examples, and went forth with 12000. men (the former expeditions had beene with lesse company, as of 7000 and so vpwards as the state encreased) and couering his couetousnesse and ambition with pretence of conuerting people to his religion *, came to the disemboking of the great lake Titicaca, and made Boates for transporting his army. He brought vnder by faire meanes the Tiahuanacu, which people had admirable buildings. One was a hand-made Mount admirable high, founded on stones ioyned with morter, none could tell for what cause. In one roome thereof stood two figures of Giants cut in stone with long garments downe to the ground, with couerings on their heads, well worne with age. There was also a huge wall of stones so great that it may breede wonder what force of men might be able to bring or raise them where they are, seeing that in a great distance there are no quarries. There are other braue buildings, great porches or frontals, in diuers places each made of one stone in all the foure parts; yea to greater admiration some of these are set on stone, of which some are thirtie foote long, and fifteene broad, and sixe in front, and these stones so great, and the porches are of one peece; nor can it be imagined with what instruments they were wrought. The Naturals say they are ancienter then the Incas times, and that they imitated these in building the fortresse of Cozco; and knew not who made them, but haue a tradition that they were all made in a night. It seemeth that they were neuer finished, but were onely beginnings of what the founders intended. Diego de Alcobaça a Priest, my Schoolefellow, & borne in the same house that I was, being also my foster brother, and a Preacher to the Indians; which hath beene there, wrote to me that in that Region Tiahuanacu fast by a lake called Chuquiuitu, there stands a marueilous house, with a faire Court fifteene yards square, compassed with a high wall, on one side whereof is a great hall 45. foote long, and 22. wide, couered like the house of the Sunne in Cusco. This Court with the wals and floore, hall, roofe, porches, and thresholds of two doores (the one of the hall, the other into the court) is all made of one peece wrought in one rocke: the wals of the hall and of the wall are three quarters of a yard thicke. The roofe though it seeme of tharch is of stone. They say it was dedicated to the Maker of the World. There are also many stones cut in shapes of men and women, so naturall as if they were aliue drinking with cups in their hands, some sitting, some on their feete, others as it were passing, others with children in their armes, and 1000. other postures. The Indians say that for their sinnes, and for stoning a man which passed thorow that Prouince, they were conuerted into statues. But to returne to our Inca, he subdued many Nations or pettie habitations; such as would not be wonne by perswasions, hee mastered with seege and hunger. Battels were very rare. Hee died hauing raigned about thirtie yeares, and was bewailed a yeare after the custome. His Sonne Capac Tupanqui succeeded, the fifth Inca.

Capac Yupanqui the fifth Inca.

His first care, after his Diadem assured, was to visite his Kingdome; in which visitation hee spent two yeares, enquiring into the courses of his Ministers and Gouernours. After this hee went vp from Cozco with 20000. men, and went Westward. Hee caused a Bridge to be made in the Riuer Apurimac at Huacachaca, lower then that of Aceha. Hee passed ouer it to the faire Prouince Tauahura, which gladly receiued him; thence to Aymara, there being betwixt those two Prouinces a Region dishabited of thirtie leagues; which passed, he found at the hill Mucansa much people of that Prouince (which is thirtie leagues long, fifteene wide, rich of Mines of Gold, Siluer, Lead and Cattell) to encounter him. But he sought rather to beseege them on the hill, hauing purposely sent men about, and by hunger forced them to composition after a moneths siege. Hauing pacified the Aymaras, hee proceeded to Cotapampa and Cotanera of the Nation Quechua; and after to the Vallie of Hacari, great and fertile. Hee made another expedition, leauing his Brother his Lieutenant of his Kingdome, and the foure Masters of his Campe his Councellours, chusing others to serue him; and went to the Lake of Paria, where two Curacas at contention, made him arbitrator, and themselues his subiects in the diuision Collasuyu. Thence thorow a spacious Countrie vnpeopled, but full of Cattell and hot Springs; hee came to the Prouinces Tapacri and Cochapampa. Hee made another Bridge in the water-passage of Tuicara. The former of Huacachaca was made of Osyers, this of Bull-ruſhes there growing, of which they made foure cables as big as a mans legge, reaching from one ſide to the other; on which they laid great bundles of the ſame matter as bigge as an Oxe, ſtrongly tied together and to the Cables: ouer theſe bundles they made two other cables which they faſtened ſurely with the bundles: vpon theſe they laid other little bundles as bigge as a mans arme, wouen into each other and with the cables; theſe were as the cauſey of the Bridge. This Bridge is thirteene or foureteene foot broad, and about one hundred and fiftie paces long. They renewed it euery ſixe moneths. Often vſe made readineſſe and quicke diſpatch. They remoued it as they ſaw occaſion. The Inca paſſed further to Chayanta, thorow a diſhabited Countrey: this with fiue other great Prouinces he ſubiected, and then returned to Cozco, and rewarded his Captaines.

The Kingdome now reached one hundred and eighty leagues from Cuſco Southwards, and Weſtwards to the Sea, ſixtie leagues one way, and eightie another: to the Eaſt thirteene, to the South-eaſt fortie. He adorned the houſes of the Sunne which Manco Capac had founded, and that of the Virgins, with other great workes. After this he ſent the Prince Roca with an army of 20000. men, by the way of Chinchaſuyu Northwards from Cuzco, which had continued at a ſtay ſince Manco Capac, but ſeuen leagues from the Citie, the Country beyond being rough and vnpeopled. He entred into the rich Countrey of Sura, which gently receiued him, as did alſo the next called Apucara, which was in enmitie with the former. The like ſucceſſe hee had in Rucana, Namaſca, and other Vallies to Arequepa eightie leagues outright, and foureteene in breadth. The Inca tranſplanted people from thoſe parts to Apurimac, both being hot Regions. Old Inca Capac Yupanqui after theſe things dyed, leauing about eightie children (ſome of them left one hundred, ſome two hundred, and ſome aboue three hundred) and his Sonne Roca ſucceeded.

Let vs now ſpeake of Cozco and the holies thereof.

Religious reputation of Cozco and the ſuperſtitious holies therein.

One of the principalleſt Idols of that Empire was Coſco, the Imperiall Citie, which the Indians worſhipped as a thing ſacred, becauſe it was founded by Inca Manco Capac, and becauſe it was the houſe and Court of the Incas their gods. If an Indian in the way met another which came from Cozco, though otherwiſe equall, and now he himſelfe were going thither, he gaue him reſpect therefore as his ſuperiour for hauing beene there; how much more if he were a neere dweller, or Citizen there? The like was in Seedes, Pulſe, or whatſoeuer was brought from Cozco, more eſteemed for that cauſe then thoſe of other parts in other reſpects as good. To hold it ſtill in reputation, the Kings adorned it with ſumptuous buildings, of which the principall was the Temple of the Sunne, euery Inca increaſing it, which is ſaid to be builded by Yupanqui, becauſe he enriched it, being before founded by Manco. The Chappell or ſhrine of the Sunne was that which is now the Church of Saint Domingo (although not the ſame altogether) wrought of poliſhed ſtone. The high Altar (that we may ſo call it, for they knew not how to make an Altar) ſtood to the Eaſt, the roofe was thatched (for they could not make tile.) All foure wals were couered from the top to the bottome with Plates of Gold. In the Eaſt or high Altar ſtood the tooke vp all the end from one wall to the other. Neither had they any other idols in that or any other Temple but this: for indeede (whatſoeuer others ſay) they worſhipped no other gods but the Sunne. This Idoll fell by lot, in the Spaniſh Conquerours ſharing, to one Mancio Serra, whom I knew and left aliue when I came to Spaine, who loſt it at play in a night, whence they ſaid Prouerbially, hee had plaid away the Sunne before it was vp. Hee was after choſen the ordinary Alcalde of the Citie many yeares, and grew to abhoore play very much. But by ſuch a ſhare falling to one man, may be gueſſed the exceeding riches of that Citie. Sunne with his face to it: as his beſt beloued ſonne, whom they worſhipped in his life time for his vertues. Theſe corpes the Indians did hide with the reſt of their treaſures, the moſt of which is not yet knowne. Anno 1559. the Licentiate Polo found fiue of them, three of the Kings, and two of the Queenes. The principall doore looked to the North, as it ſtill abides. That and the other leſſe doores were lined with plates of Gold, in manner of a Porch. Without the Temple, on the top of the wals ran all alongſt a chamfred worke of gold, in forme of a Crowne, aboue a yard broad, round about the Temple.

Beyond the Temple was a Cloiſter of foure ſquares (one of which was the Temple) ſound about the top whereof was ſuch a crowne of chamfered gold, as is before mentioned, aboue a three other ſides of the Cloiſter. One of them was dedicated to the Moone, all which and the doores thereof was couered with plates of Siluer. Her Image was placed therein like that of the Sun, with a womans face in a planke of Siluer. Thither they went to viſite her, and to commend themthemselues to her as the wife and sister of the Sunne, and mother of the Incas, and all their generation; and called her Mamaquilla, Mother Moone: but offered no Sacrifices to her as to the Sunne. On each hand of the Moones image were the bodies of the Queenes deceased ranked in order of their antiquitie. Mamaoello Mother of Huayna Capac stood before the Moone face to face, for producing such a Sonne. The next roome to that of the Moone, was dedicated to the Planet Venus, and to the seuen Starres, and to all the Starres in common, which they held to be the seruants of the Moone, and therefore placed them about their Lady to be ready at hand for any seruice. The next roome was lined with siluer also, and the porch of siluer. The roofe was made with resemblances of Starres great and small, like the starrie firmament. The next to this of the Starres was dedicated to the Thunder and Lightning and Thunderbolt, all which were signified in one word Tllapa. They worshipped them not for gods, but held them for seruants of the Sunne. They made no picture thereof. The fourth roome or Chappell was dedicated to the Rainebow, which they esteemed seruant to the Sunne; this roome and the former were all garnished with gold. On the golden plankes of this was the Rainebow painted. When they saw a Rainebow in the skie, they couered their mouth with their hand, saying, that if their teeth were vncouered they would consume. The fifth building was for the chiefe Priests, and the other Priests which serued in the Temple, not to eate or drinke in, but for consultation about their Sacrifices: it was garnished with gold from the top to the bottome.

The chiefe Priest was called Villac Vmu, that is, the Priest which speaketh, namely to the people, what the Sunne hath giuen him in charge, or diuels, or dreames, or other diuinations haue foretold. Three of those fiue roomes remaine, the Gold and Siluer except. Those of the Moone and Starres are downe. Euery side had foure Tabernacles without, which had like workes on them in stone, as within of mettall. Not onely the wals but the floores of those Tabernacles also was of Gold. The Images were also pouldered with Gemmes, Turkesses, and Emeralds; for they had no Diamonds nor Rubies. There were twelue doores to the Cloister, and as many Tabernacles or shrines, besides that of the Moones Chappell and of the Starres, these were of Siluer, the rest were all plated ouer with Gold in forme of Porches. They had also in the house of the Sunne many other roomes or chambers for the Priests and seruants of the house, which were Incas of priuiledge: For none but an Inca might enter into that house, nor any woman, no not the wiues or daughters of the King. The Priests serued their courses by weekes, which they reckoned by the quarters of the Moone: in which space they departed not out of the Temple day nor night. The Porters and all inferior officers were of the same townes which serued in the Kings house; there being no difference made in the two houses of the Father and the Sunne, but that one had women, the other no Sacrifice in it, equall otherwise in Maiestie. For seuerall Sacrifices they had seuerall roomes. In the house were fiue Fountaines of water which runne thence in pipes of Gold: the Pillars were some of stone, others of Gold hollow, others of Siluer; there they washed the Sacrifices. Onely one of these Fountaines were left to water the garden of the Couent, till 1558. when it being occasionally broken, no Indian could tell whence that water came, or how to helpe it. Such traditions of sacred things it seemes were kept by their Priests, and now lost. Occasion seuen moneths after found the water, which they amended without further search of the Fountaine, the pipes lying very low.

This Garden was in the Incas time a Garden of Siluer and Gold, as they had in the Kings houses, where they had many sorts of Hearbes, Flowers, Plants, Trees, Beasts great and small, wilde, tame, Snakes, Lizards, Snailes, Butterflies, small and great Birds, each set in their place. They had Maiz, Quinua, Pulse, Fruit-trees with the fruite on them all of Gold and Siluer, resembling the naturall. They had also in the house heapes of wood, all counterfeit of Gold and Siluer, as they had in the house royall: likewise they had great statues of men and women, and children, and many Pirua or Troses for corne, euery day inuenting new fashions of greater Maiestie, vsing yearely on the Sunnes chiefe festiuities to present him so much Siluer and Gold wrought into counterfeit formes. All the Vessell (which was infinite) for the Temples seruice, Pots, Pans, Tubs, Hogsheads, was of Gold and Siluer, euen to the Spades, and Pickaxes for the Garden. Like to this Temple of Cozco were others in many Prouinces of that Kingdome, in which euery Curaca indeuoured according to his power to haue such riches of Gold and Siluer. But the most famous was that of Titicaca.

This might for Gold and Siluer compare with that of Cozco. It is an Iland in the mids of a Lake of the same name, where their fables tell that after the floud, the Sunne first shined; and after that, he exposed his Sonne and Daughter (as ye haue heard) to ciuillize the world. In these respects it was holden for a place sacred thorow all that Empire, and a Temple was built therein, all lined with plates of Gold, dedicated to the Sunne. All places subiect to the Empire, yeerely offered Gold and Siluer, and Precious stones, in thanksgiuing to the Sunne for his benefits there done them. This Temple had the same Seruice as that at Cozco. Of the offerings of Gold and Siluer was such a quantitie stored in the Ile, besides that which was wrought, that it is more matter of wonder then credit. Blas Valera saith, that the Indians reported that there was enough to build another Temple from the foundation, and when the Spaniards came, they threw it all into the Lake.

In the Valley of Orcos, ſix leagues Southwards from Cuzco is a little Lake aboue a mile about, but very deepe, into which the report was that much of Cuzco treaſure was throwne. Some Spaniards agreed to be at coſt to empt ie it, Anno 1557. but hauing entred fiftie paces into their maine worke, by which they had thought to haue conueied the water into the Riuer Yucay, they were encountered with a rocke, which ſeeking to make way thorow, they brought forth more fire then ſtone, and were enforced to giue ouer. The Indians are thought to haue hidden infinite treaſures. But for that barren rockie Ice the Incas were at further coſt to couer the ſtone with good earth, that it might beare Mayz (which growes no where in that eold Region) of which a little quantitie grew, and by the King was offered to the Sunne in his Temple, and to the choſen Virgins in Cuzco, which were to ſend it to other Monaſteries and Temples, one yeare to one, and another to another, that they might haue of that graine which ſeemed to haue come from heauen. They ſowed it in Gardens of the Sunnes Temple, and made ſuch adoe about keeping and beſtowing it, that that Indian thought himſelfe a happy man which had a graine of that Maiz, and that he ſhould neuer want bread all daies of his life.

The fourth Booke. Houſes of Virgins.

THe Incas had houſes of Virgins retired in many Prouinces, touching which the Spaniſh Hiſtorians haue beene deceiued. I will ſpeake of the houſe at Cuſco called Aclahua, that is, the houſe of the choſen, to wit, for their beautie, or ſtocke, to ſerue the Sunne. Theſe liued not in the Temple of the Sunne, but diſtant a ſtreete from it, a row of houſes going betweene them. For neither might men enter where the Nuns were, nor women where the Prieſts were. It was neceſſary that theſe women ſhould be of royall bloud, without any mixture of either ſide. There were in it ordinarily 1500. Nunnes. Some of them were ancient, called Mamacuna, that is, Mothers which take charge, or care of the reſt. Some were as Abbeſſes, others as teachers of the Nouices both in rites and handiworkes, as to ſpin, weaue and ſow; others were porters, or prouiders of neceſſaries. They liued in perpetuall cloſure to their dying day, neither might they ſpeake with any man, or ſee any man or woman, but thoſe of their owne houſe. Onely the Coya and her daughters might haue leaue to enter and conferre with them. By them the Inca ſent to know how they did, and whereof they had neede. The principall gate was not opened but for the Queene, or to receiue Nouices. They had twentie Porters, which men might not paſſe the ſecond gate vnder paine of death. They had fiue hundred Girles for ſeruice of the Monaſterie, daughters to thoſe which the firſt Inca had priuiledged to be Incas. Theſe alſo had their Mamacunas. The principall exerciſe which the women of the Sunne did, was to make all the garments and robes that the Inca or his Coya did weare, and thoſe fine robes which were offered to the Sunne. The King himſelfe might not giue thoſe Garments to any of his Curacas which were not of his bloud. They made alſo the Bread for the Sacrifices to the Sunne at the great feaſts Raymi and Sittua, called Zancu, and the drinke which the Inca then dranke.

All the Vtenſils of the houſe, euen to Pots and Pans, were of Gold and Siluer, as in the houſe of the Sunne. They had ſuch a Garden alſo as the other, of golden Plants, Birds and Beaſts. Obedience and Virginitie was perpetuall, vnder paine of burying quicke. Any man which ſhould defloure, muſt not onely dye himſelfe, but his wife, children, kindred and neighbours. Such the Law, but there was neuer found cauſe of execution. Like to theſe of Cuzco, dedicated to the Sunne, were other Nunnes and houſes in principall Prouinces of the Kingdome. In which were admitted thoſe of the bloud Royall, pure, and mixed, and daughters alſo of the Curacas as a great fauour. Alſo ſome of the faireſt of the common people to be concubines for the Inca, and not for the Sunne, but kept with like vigilance. Their life was like the other, and their maintenance from the Inca. Their workes the Inca might impart with others, and themſelues alſo he might take out for his Concubines, which then might not returne againe, but either ſerued the Queene or were ſent into their Countries with great credit. Thoſe alſo which were old in theſe houſes might haue like licenſe. Thoſe that were dedicated for the King preſent, when heo was dead, were called Mamacunas, and were inſtructers of thoſe Concubines which entred for the New Inca.

Euery of theſe houſes had a Gouernour, which muſt be an Inca: a ſteward and others officers. All the veſſels were of Gold and Siluer, as in the houſes of the Sunne and of the King, ſo that all the Gold and Siluer in the whole Kingdome was ſpent in manner in the Sunnes ſeruice, and of thoſe which were eſteemed his deſcendants. The Curacas were ſtinted what veſſels of Plate they might haue for their owne vſe, which was but little. They might neuer be beſtowed on other men, which had beene choſen women for the Inca; for they held it a profanation of that which was holy; yea to be a ſlaue to the Inca was more eſteemed then to be wife of another Lord. eſteeming him as next to the Sunne; wherein ſome Spaniſh authors haue beene deceiued. yet did he reward his great men with women, but they were the daughters of other Curacas or Captaines, which held this for a fauour done them that he ſhould eſteeme their daughter as a iewell, which with his owne hand he would beſtow. some of the Curacas his owne Daughters which were (as they esteemed such as were not of the whole bloud) bastards, which hee had by women not of his Inca-kindred, which was holden Diuine.

Besides these, there were many other of Royall bloud which liued retired in their owne houses with vow of Virginity, though not inclosed in any Monastery: which tooke libertie to goe out to visit their kindred neere them in their sickneſſe or trauell. Such were highly reputed and were called Ocllo, a sacred name: and if they lost their chastitie, were burned aliue or cast to the Lyons Denne. One of these very old I knew, which visited my Mother, beeing her Grandfathers sister. Widowes in the first yeere of their widow-hood kept very close; those which had no children married againe; but those which had, continued continent all their liues: in which respect the Lawes allowed them many priuiledges, and the tillage of their grounds before the Curacas or Incas.

Another sort of Nunnes.

Widowes.

And for matter of Marriage in Cozco, once in a yeere or two, the King assembled all the youth of both Sexes, of his owne Linage, the Males of twentie to foure and twentie, the Maids of eighteene and so to twentie (he permitted them not sooner to marry) and called them forth, such a man and such a maide, and hauing ioyned them with his owne hand, deliuered them to their Parents: after which the Marriage Feast was solemnized by the new Parents, two, foure, or sixe dayes. These were legitimate wiues and the most honoured. The day following his Officers did the like for the Citizens, obseruing the distinction of High and Low Cozco. The Gouernour in each Diuision with the Curacas did the like in their gouernments, the Inca neuer vsurping but assisting the Curacas Iurisdiction. Those of one Prouince might not marry with those of another, but obserued the Rites of the Tribes of Israel: nor might they goe to liue out of their Prouinces or out of their owne Townes, or the Wards of the same Towne.

Marriages.

Tribes, towns, wards, not intermarrying.

In defect of children by the lawfull Wife, the Inheritance by Law fell on the eldest of the bloud lawfull, as from Huascar to Manco and neuer to Bastards: for which Lawes sake Atabualpa destroyed all the Royall bloud, hee being a Bastard. Others might not marrie their sister, but the Inca only. The Prouinces differed in some cases, the elder Sonne of the Inca succeeding, in other places all the brethren after each other, and somewhere the best esteemed of the Sonnes. Such vsiges were before the Incas times, and not broken by them.

Laws of Inheritance.

Diuers customes.

The Incas made a great Feast at the wayning of their eldest Son, which was at two yeeres old or vpwards, & they first cut off his haire with a flint-razor, the Fathers beginning, each following in his dignity: then did they name him and offer presents. The same was imitated by the Curacas and the people. Their children were brought vp without any dainty niceneſſe. Assoone as they were born they washed them in cold water, and then put them in blankets. They gaue them the breast but at morning, and noone and night, thrice a day, how much soeuer they cried, lest they should be gluttons. But if I should follow our Author in houshold affaires, I should be too long.

Care of Infants.

Inca Roca their sixth King pursued his Northerne Conquests to Chanca, a valiant Nation, which say they descended of a Lyon, and therefore worshipped the Lyon for God. I haue seene them in their Feast of the Sacrament twelue of them like Hercules, attired in a Lyons skinne. He proceeded to the end of the Prouince Antahuaylla and thence to Vramarca and Hancohuallu and Villca, Sulla, and Vtunsulla. After that he sent his Sonne the Prince Yahuarhuacac to Antisuyu or the East, where since Manco Capac they had done nothing. They say that when this Prince was borne, he wept bloud, and so his name signifieth. Other Historians haue herein beene deceiued. He tooke with him fifteene hundred Warriours, and three Campe-masters. Hee went to Hausca (which was after, the lot of my Father Garcilasso de la Vega) and thence to the Vallies where the herbe Coca groweth, so much esteemed by them: and beyond it to Cannac-huay which hath fiue leagues of descent almost perpendicular, and striking terrour to the beholders: how much more to them which goe downe, the way winding like a Snake? In these Prouinces of the Antis they worshipped Tygres and great Snakes fiue and twentie or thirtie foot in length, called Amaru, which doe no harme, being as some say, charmed to that innocence by a great Magician. They worshipped also the herbe Coca or Coca as the Spaniards call it. In this Expedition the Prince added thirtie leagues to the Empire, but ill peopled. The Inca Roca leauing the Prince his Deputie, went with thirty thousand to the Conquest of Chareas: and added fiftie leagues square to his Soueraigntie: after which he dyed and his Sonne Yahuar Huacac succeeded. Rocas Lawes and Schooles which he is said first of all to haue founded in Cozco, for the Arts aforesaid, I omit. He was wont to say that Pachacamac must needs be a great King which had such a house as the glorious Heauens to dwell in: also, that if he were to worship any thing below, he would worship a wise and vnderstanding man: Yet saith he, that which beginneth, groweth, dieth irrecouerably, ought not to be worshipped.

Yahuar Huacac or weep-bloud, for the ill diuinings of that accident at his birth, stayed a good while in visiting his Kingdomes before hee thought vpon Conquests. Yet at length hee sent his Brother Inca Maita with twenty thousand South-westward, which conquered from Arequepa to Tacama. After this he minded a more haughtie Designe to conquer Caranca and other Regions in the Diuision Collasuyu valiant people, but was soone called to other thoughts by the ill demeademeanour of his eldeſt Sonne, whom therefore hee purpoſed to diſherit for his cruell conditions. He cauſed him to liue with the Shepherds which kept the Cattle of the Sunne in Chita, which he did, carrying himſelfe like a Shepherd three yeeres and a halfe. He came one afternoone to his Fathers houſe and ſent to ſpeake with him, who ſent him word that he ſhould goe thither where he had placed him, hauing incurred death by breaking his precept. Hee ſent word that hee came with a meſſage from as great a Lord as himſelfe, which when he had deliuered he would returne. And feare them not, for in whatſoeuer aduerſitie I will ſuccour thee as my fleſh and bloud.* After theſe words hee vaniſhed away. His Father chid him and would not beleeue him. Three monethes after came newes of the Rebellion of many Nations which had killed their Gouernours, and had aſſembled thirty thouſand Souldiers in demand of Cozco: Hancohuallu was their Generall. This was the firſt Rebellion of the Prouinces which the Incas had conquered, and was ſo ſudden to Yahuar Huacac that hee fled out of Cozco with a few followers, with purpoſe to ſecure himſelfe in Collaſuyu. The Citizens were readie to flee each his way, till ſome thinking of the Prince (whom vpon that Dreame or Viſion they called Viracocha Inca, his former name is vnknowne) gaue him intelligence thereof. He gathered what forces he could, and followed his Father to whom hauing preſented in a pithy ſpeech, the miſerable leauing of the houſe and holies of the Sunne, and of the Sunnes Virgins to ſuch prophane Enemies, hee bid thoſe which loued an honourable death before a ſhamefull life to follow him: which foure thouſand of the Royall bloud did, to whom others from all parts aſſembled. Hauing ſet order in Cozco, hee went with eight thouſand reſolute Warriours to meete the enemy which had now paſſed the Riuer Apurimac.

THe next day came newes of 20000. men, comming to his aide from Cantiſuyu, which hee attributed to Viracocha which had promiſed him ſuccour in all diſtreſſe; this bred him reſpect, and confidence to the buſineſſe with the Indians. He entertained theſe ſupplies ioyfully, which told him of other fiue thouſand comming two dayes behind. To theſe hee ſent word to Embuſcado themſelues in a place appointed, that ſo in the fury of the battle they might come

This they did and much daunted the enemies, eſpecially when with ſhouts and cryes manifold ſmall troupes came in alſo which were of ſuch as had fled from Cozco, who hearing of the Princes reſolution made head as they could and made the Rebels thinke that they ſhould neuer ſee an end of their enemies.

Aduantage by Fables.

vnderſtood by the Spaniards. The Prince after the Victory ſent three Meſſengers, the firſt to the houſe of the Sunne (for in all things they dealt with him as if he had beene a bodily man, ſetting him meate and drinke, &c.) the other to the houſe of the Virgins, the third to his Father. He dealt very mildly with the Rebels and their wiues and children, pardoning them and prouiding for the Widowes and Orphans. Hee was receiued with great Iubilee in Cozco, and thence went to the Straits of Muyna, to viſit his Father which ſeemed malcontent. They ſpake ſome words in priuate, and the Prince came forth and ſaid that his Father would not returne to Cozco. This (whether true or falſe) was enough, and in vaine had he now gainſaid it; ſo that a Pallace of pleaſures was there built for the Father to ſpend the reſt of his dayes, his Sonne taking the Diademe. This Viſion of Viracocha with a beard and clothed to the foot, whereas the beardleſſe Natiues are clothed but to the knees, was the cauſe that the Spaniards at their firſt comming were called Virachoca: and for that they tooke and killed the Tyrant Atahuallpa, which had ſlaine Huaſcar the right Heire, and wrought ſo many cruelties. Which cauſed that ſix Spaniards alone, of which was Soto and Barco, went to Cozco two or three hundred leagues without harme. They called them alſo Incas, Sonnes of the Sunne. That which ſome ſay, b that they were called Virachoca, becauſe they came by Sea, ſaying that the word ſignifieth the fat (or ſcumme) of the Sea, they are deceiued: for Virachoca is the Sea of fat, or tallow (Vira, ſebo; cocha, mar) ſo that it appeares to be a proper name, and not compounded. I conceiue further that the Artillery was the cauſe that they were called Virachoca.

This

This Inca Viracocha by his victorie and viſion was ſo eſteemed, that in his life time they worſhipped him as a God ſent by the Sunne for reparation of things amiſſe, reuerenced him beyond his predeceſſors. He built a Temple for memoriall of that Viſion to Viracocha in Cacha, therein imitating, as much as was poſſible, the place where hee ſaw the ſame, and therefore without a roofe: it was an hundred and twenty foot long, and eighty wide, of ſtone fairely wrought, with foure doores, the Eaſterne onely open, with his figure in a Chappell, ſomewhat reſembling thoſe Images which wee make of the Apoſtles. The Spaniards deſtroyed it, as they did other famous workes which they found in Peru, ſcarſely any Monument remayning: which they did to ſearch for treaſure vnder them. He made alſo two huge Birds called Contures (ſo great, that ſome haue beene found with the extremes of their wings extended, fiue Varas, or Spaniſh yards aſunder) they are fowles of prey, ſo fierce, that their dammes breake their talons; the beake ſo ſtrong, that at once they will breake the hide * of a Cow. Hee made the picture of theſe two Birds, one repreſenting his father in myſterie fleeing from Cozco, the other Viracocha. He ſought to gratifie his Commanders and Subiects, and ſought new conqueſts. Hee ſent Paknac mayta Inca his brother againſt Caranca, Vllaca, Llipi, Chicha and Ampara. Theſe two laſt worſhipped the ranke of Hills for their heigth, and for the Riuers which they yeeld. Theſe were all ſubiected: and Eaſtward to the Sierra, or ſnowy Hill, Southwards to the furtheſt Prouince of Charcas two hundred leagues from Cozco. So that the Sea and the Hills on each hand, and Southward the Deſarts betwixt them and Chili, bounded the Empire. Northwards hee went with thirty thouſand warriours to Huamanca, and other Nations which hee ſubiected. Hee made a water-paſſage twelue foot in the channell, to run an hundred and twenty leagues from betwixt Parcu and Picuy to Rucanas; and another thorow all the diuiſion Cuntiſuyu from South to North one hondred and fifty leagues from the high Sierras to the Quechuas: which may be ranked with the Worlders of the world conſidering the Rockes they brake thorow without inſtruments of ſteele, and onely by ſtones with force of hands. Neither know they to make arches, but were driuen to goe about. The Spaniards haue ſuffered them all to periſh: as they haue permitted two third parts of thoſe which were to water the Corne grounds to be loſt alſo.

Embaſſadours came from Tucma (the Spaniards call it Tucuman) to the Inca, offering vaſſalage, whom hee made to drinke in his preſence (an ineſtimable fauour) and promiſed ſo much better reſpect as his courſe deſerued. Hancobnallu notwithſtanding all his kinde vſage, left his Countries to goe ſeeke new, and the Inca ſent Colonies to the Chancas. This Inca they ſay had a foretelling of the Spaniards comming. Hee died, and left his ſonne Pachacutec Inca his heire. It is ſuppoſed that he raigned aboue fiftie yeeres. Anno 1560. I ſaw his body in Cozco, in the poſſeſſion of Licenciate Polo, with foure others: this with white haires, the ſecond of Tupac Inca Yupanqui, the third of Huayna Capac, which two were hoary but not white: the two other were Queens; Mama Runtu wife to Viracocha and Mama Ocllo mother of Huayna Capac. They were ſo whole that there wanted not haire, eie-brows, nor haire on the eie-lids. They had their garments, ribands, & diadems, as while they liued. They were ſet as the Indians vſe with their hands acroſſe on their breaſts, the right hand ouer the left, their eyes downwards, as looking on the ground, and ſeemed as if they had beene aliue, and full fleſhed. The Indians would neuer tell the Spaniards their embalming arte. They weighed ſo little, that they were eaſily carried to the Gentlemens houſes which deſired to ſee them. The Indians by the way kneeled to them with ſighs and tears.

When the Inca had conquered any Prouince, and ſetled the gouernment, hee improued the lands which would beare Mayz, ſending Engineers to that purpoſe for conueyance of waters, without which they ſowed no Mayz in thoſe hot Countries. They alſo made plaine the fields, and layd them in ſquares, the better to receiue the water. They made plaine the Mountaines which were capable of ſeed, as it were in ſcales or ſteppes, one plaine ſubordinate to another, therefore called Andenes. Hauing thus improued the Land, they diuided it, to each Towne their ſhare by themſelues; each ſubdiuided into three parts, one for the Sunne, a ſecond for the King, and the third for the Naturals; with that prouiſion, that alway the Naturals ſhould haue ſufficient, and if the people increaſed, the Sunnes and Incas part were leſſened, that they ſhould not want. The like diuiſion they made of the grounds which needed not ſuch watering, ſowed with other ſeeds. The Andenes commonly belonged in greateſt part to the Sunne, and the Inca. The Mayz grounds they ſowed euery yeere, heartning them with dung, as Gardens.

They firſt husbanded the Sunnes grounds, next that of Widowes and Orphanes, and of the old and ſicke, all which were holden for poore, and had peculiar men in euery Towne appointed Officers for that purpoſe. They had ſeed alſo, if they wanted, out of the Store-houſes. Each man was tied to husband enough for prouiſion to his owne houſhold. The lands of thoſe which ſerued in the warres were prouided as thoſe of the poore; their wiues for that time being reſpected as widowes. And if any were ſlaine in the warres, great care was had of his children. After theſe lands, each man tilled his owne, one helping another in courſe; then thoſe of the Curaca, which were laſt cultiuated in euery Towne. In Huayna Capacs time, one of the Chachapuyas was hanged for tilling the Curacas land his kinſman, before the widowes, and the Gallowes was ſet vp in the Curacas land, where hee had tranſgreſſed the Incas precept. all was the Incas lands, which thought his good to be grounded on the prosperitie of his Subiects. These and those of the Sunne were common workes which they did with their best ornaments and rayment, with spangles of Siluer and Gold, and feathers on their head, as on festiuall dayes; with songs in breaking vp their ground, in praise of their God and Prince. One Anden neere Cozco, being the first in the Kingdome which was dedicated to the Sunne, was tilled onely by Incas and Pallas of the bloud Royall with a great feast in their beast iewels, making Songs of Haylli, that is, of triumph. Their Plough (or Spade rather) was of wood, a yard long, plaine before and pointed, round behind, foure fingers thicke; halfe a yard from the point was a stirrup of two pieces of wood fastned to the principall, in which he set his foot, leaping and thrusting it forcibly into the ground vp to the stirrup. They went in companies, seuen or eight together, and digged vp turfes of incredible bigneſſe. The women went besides them to helpe with their hands to lift vp the earth, and weed out the rootes, and to cheare them with Songs. The Land was diuided to each man according to the number of his familie, and to the Curacas in greater proportions; likewise the water and other things necessary.

Tributes of labour.

The principall tribute which they payed was this labouring the grounds of the Sunne and Inca, gathering their fruits, and keeping them in places appointed. Of their owne priuate lands they payd nothing. Other tributes were their making of clothes, shooes and armes for expense in warre, to which end they had wooll of the Cattell of the Sunne and Inca, which were innumerable in the Hills, and Cotton in the Plaines. The poore were tied to giue on certaine dayes so many pipes of Lice so to acknowledge subiection, and to keepe themselues cleane. The Royall kindred, Priests, Ministers, and Curacas were tribute-free; the chiefe Captaines to Centurions, the Iudges, Officers and Souldiers in time of seruice, young men vnder 25. and old men aboue 50. and all women and maidens: Their labour was not imposed but voluntary. Gold, Siluer and Gemmes were not reckoned tribute, nor treasure, nor price of other things bought and sold, or of mens labour. Onely they esteemed them for beautie, and thereof made voluntary presents for the Temples, Nunneries and houses Royall. For they might not visite a Superiour without a Present. The Curacas in the principall feasts must visite the Inca, and made him Presents of these or other things of account, as materials for buildings, Lyons, Tigres, Beares, Parots, Monkies, great Snakes, or any other thing faire, fierce, great or strange. The King had in euery Towne two places, one to keepe his goods for the seruice of the Sunne and himselfe, another for prouision against deare yeeres; besides others for high-wayes, &c. Wooll was distributed euery two yeeres, as any had need for garments for them and theirs, so that none needed to begge, neither had they any beggars in later times. I neuer saw Indian man or woman in my time that begged, but one old woman named Isabell, which did it more to goe from house to house, as a Gipsie or Iuggler, then for any need. The Incas also caused to build publike Ianes for entertainment of Strangers, which had all necessaries free out of the Kings Store-houses: and if any were sicke, they were likewise prouided for. None trauelled in priuate affaires, but in the Kings businesse. When any new conquest was made, they recorded on their quipus the quantitie, qualitie, site and other conditions of the lands of each Prouince, Towne and Diuision, that order might accordingly be taken. The Mines were giuen to the Curacas. Salt, Fish and Cotton were common, none to applie any part to himselfe, but to gather what hee needed. Each man might plant trees in his owne ground and enioy them at his pleasure. The lands were diuided as you haue heard.

The Sixth Booke.

Stupendious buildings and riches of the Incas.

THe seruice and ornament of the houses Royall of the Incas may seeme to haue exceeded any Kings of the world in some things. The buildings of their Houses, Temples, Gardens, and Baths were adorned with stone fairely wrought, and set so close that the ioynture could not bee seene. Many of them had melted Lead or Siluer or Gold for the ioyning, which caused the totall destruction of them all, by the Spaniards seeking for those metals. They had the counterfeits in Gold and Siluer of herbs which growe on walls, as if they had beene the plants there growing: and likewise the resemblances of Mice, Butterflies, Snakes great and small, Lizards seeming to moue; the Incas chambers were lined with Gold, with figures of Men, Women, Birds, all knowne Beasts wilde and tame, all in their naturall figure and largeneſſe in Gold and Siluer; the Incas Chaires of state were of solid Gold, without backes, hauing a great square Table of Gold ouer them. All the vessels of seruice both for Table, Butterie and Kitchin, small and great, were of Gold and Siluer, and that in all the Kings houses, so that when hee iourneyed in progresse they did not remoue them from one house to another, as likewise in the Prouinces where he had occasion to march with his Armies, or to visite his Kingdomes. Hee had in them also of like metals many Granaries and Repositories not to keepe Graine, but to expresse Maiestie.

Their houses.

Garments, Cieça, Zarate, Gomera, and other Spanish writers testifie the same of these prodigious treasures in Peru.

Hee had store of rich garments, the Inca neuer vsing to weare one thing twice, but giuing them once worne, to his kindred. The bed-furniture was of the wooll of the Vicunna, so fine, that King Philips Beds are thence furnished. Feather-beds they had not, but had such Mantles layd ouer and vnder them. Tapistrie was supplied with linings of Gold and Siluer on the walls.

Their

Their prouisions for diet were abundant, they preparing for all their kindred and seruants: the houres were from eight to nine in the morning, and in the euening lightly by day-light. Their drinking lasted till night, for whiles they eate they drinke not.

Gardens, Orchards and Baths.

Their Gardens and Orchards had all the faireſt trees and plants planted, and many others counterfeited of Gold or Siluer; as Mayz with the leaues, ſtalkes, roots, and reedy tops of gold and ſiluer mixed, and ſo in other herbs and flowers; ſome comming forth, ſome halfe growne, ſome ripe; with counterfeits of Lizards, Butterflies, Snakes, Foxes, wilde Cats (for they had none tame) Birds of all ſorts and poſtures, ſet on trees and plants; Deere, Lions, Tigres, and whatſoeuer creatures the Land had, ſet in due places. Their Baths had great veſſels in which they bathed themſelues, of gold and ſiluer, and water pipes of the ſame. They had alſo wood-ſtackes counterfeited thereof. The moſt of which treaſures the Indians hid from the couetous Spaniards, vnwilling that others ſhould bee ſerued with that which was for the ſeruice of their Kings.

Seruants and Officers.

The ſeruants and officers for Water, Fewell, and the Kitchin, for the Table of ſtate (for the Women and Concubines prouided for the Inca himſelfe) Butlers, Porters, Keepers of the Wardrobe, Iewels, Gardens, and in other Offices, were not particular perſons: but for euery Office they had two or three Townes aſſigned, whoſe charge it was to ſend men of abilitie and truſt, by dayes, weekes, or moneths changed in courſe: and this was their tribute; the whole Towne being puniſhed in any defect. Theſe Townes were within ſixe or ſeuen leagues of Cozco, being thoſe which Manco the firſt Inca had reduced from Sauages to Townes of ciuilitie, and theſe were Incas by priuiledge, and had the title and attire according. The Incas huntings were at certaine times of the yeere with twentie or thirtie thouſand men, one halfe going on the right hand, the other on the left, circling in twentie or thirtie leagues, bringing in whatſoeuer wilde beaſts in that compaſſe, and killing all they pleaſed. Euery foure leagues they had Poſts, ſwift runners for ſudden meſſages, called Chaſquis, either by word or quipus. But now wee will returne to Pachacutec.

Pachacutec hauing finiſhed the ſolemnities viſited his Kingdome, to examine the courſes of his Gouernours: and then ſet forth his brother Capac Yupanqui with an Armie, which paſſed thorow the Prouince Sanſa, corruptly by the Spaniards, called Xauxa, which profeſſe to be deſcended of a man and a woman which came out of a Fountaine; their Townes were like Fortreſſes: they worſhipped the figure of a Dog, and did eate Dogs fleſh ſauourly. They had alſo an Idoll like a man, in which the Deuill ſpake. This people called Huanca were ſubiected, the Tarma and Pumpu alſo and Chucurpu, Ancara, Huaylla (in which Prouince he grieuouſly puniſhed Sodomites, a ſinne before vnknowne to the Indians) after which conqueſts hee returned to Cozco, hauing gained ſixtie leagues North and South in that Expedition, continuing three yeeres. Pachacutec was buſie in making Lawes, building Temples, founding Houſes for elect or choſen Virgins in the Prouinces (which was to make ſuch Prouinces, Citizens and Naturals of Cozco) in erecting Fortreſſes alſo in his frontiers, and Royall Palaces in the moſt delectable places, and Store-houſes to keepe prouiſions againſt yeeres of dearth. He ſpent three yeeres in viſiting his Kingdome, and after ſent his brother Inca Capac Yupanqui with his ſonne the Prince Inca Yupanqui, knighted that yeere after their manner, and fiftie thouſand men by Chinchuſuyu to Pincu, Huaras, Piſcopampa, Cunchucu; which being ſubiected, hee proceeded to Huamachucu, where they worſhipped particoloured ſtones, and ſacrificed mans fleſh, which was in that conqueſt altered. After that they came to Caſſamarca (famous for the taking of Atabualpa by the Spaniards) where they firſt ſtood out and after yeelded, and there was founded a Temple for the Sunne, and a houſe of Virgins, which after grew one of the chiefe in the Kingdome. In returning they ſubdued the Yauious, and were with feſtiuall pompe entertained in Cozco, each Nation in the Citie gracing the ſolemnitie, ſingled in their ſeuerall bands with warlike Muſike, adding Songs of triumph: betwixt the Generall and the Prince went the Inca Pachacutec, till they came to the limits of the Temple of the Sun, and then they put off their ſhooes, except the Inca which at the doore of the Temple was vnſhod alſo, where entring, adoring and rendring praiſes for the victories, they returned to the Market place where they ſolemnized the feaſt with ſongs, dances, and good cheere. Each Nation aroſe from their place and ſung and danced before the Inca after their Countrie guiſe. This continued a moneth.

After this the King with his ſonne and brother went to the conqueſt of the Vallies Piſco, Yca, Chincha, which Countries hee enriched with a Riuer from the Sierras, turning the courſe which naturally went Eaſtward into the Weſt, to water the grounds. All thoſe Nations for fiue hundred leagues ſpace worſhipped the Sea, beſides the particular Idols of each People, and called it Mamacocha, or Mother Sea, for her plentie of fiſh, which ſhee gaue them to eate. They worſhipped alſo the Whale for the monſtrous greatneſſe. In another expedition the Vallies Runahuanac, Huarcu, Malla, Chilca, all ſubiect to one Prince, were ſubdued, the Inca beſieging and famiſhing their Armie. Then paſſed they to the Vallies of Pachacamac, Rimac, Cancay and Huaman, which alſo had one King, called Cuſmancu. The Spaniards corruptly call Rimac, Lima: Pachacamac had the name of the inuiſible God, neither had they any Temple to him in all Peru but but here, the edifices and ſacrifices whereof were remarkable. Beſides beaſts they ſacrificed men, women and children. The Spaniards confound the Temple of Rimac, with that of Pachacamac, which were differing, that of Rimac being an Oracle (for Rimac ſignifieth him that ſpeaketh) of much veneration with the Natiues, and after the conqueſt with the Incas. The Spaniards founded there the Citie of Kings, ſo named, becauſe founded on the day of the Epiphanie. Their Idoll was kept in a Temple, not ſo ſumptuous as that of Pachacamac.

Cuyſmancu refuſed ſubiection to the Incas demands in name of the Sunne, ſaying his Pachacamac was the Creator and preſeruer of all, and therefore greater then the Sunne, to whom they had erected a Temple, where they offered the beſt things they had, and held him in ſuch reuerence, that when the King entred his Temple to worſhip him, he did not dare to looke on him, but he and the Prieſt went backwards with their ſhoulders towards the Idoll: and that hee alſo adored Rimac which fore-told things to come; and Mamacocha, the Sea. The Inca ſent him word that they alſo in their hearts worſhipped Pachacamac, but without Temple or Sacrifice, becauſe they knew him not, and were fearefull to pronounce his name. Many other words of perſwaſion paſſed, and peace was concluded, on condition that they ſhould worſhip the Sunne, as did the Incas, and make him a Temple apart as to Pachacamac; that they ſhould take away their Idols in the Temple of Pachacamac, and worſhip him without Statue; and that they ſhould ceaſe humane Sacrifices: that a Houſe of Virgins ſhould be erected in the Valley of Pachacamac: that Cuyſmancu ſhould remaine in his Lordſhip, acknowledging the Inca Lord Soueraigne, and obeying his Lawes, and that Rimacs Oracle ſhould ſtill bee in eſtimation. And thus Royall affaires, and thoſe of greateſt moment were after conſulted of in Pachacamacs Temple, vulgar buſineſſes were remitted to Rimac. Pachacutec hauing beene a great King and Prieſt and Captaine, enriched the Temple of the Sunne, couering the walls with plankes of Gold, as alſo the Shrines, and of the Cloiſter. Where the Idoll of the Sunne was, there is now the bleſſed Sacrament, and in the Cloiſter are Proceſſions, and yeerely Feſtiuals in the Couent of Saint Domingo.

Exchange and ſucceſſion of Idols.

Hee ſent his ſonne in another Expedition, who comming to the Valley, entred Pachacamacs Temple, but without Sacrifices or verball Oriſons, onely profeſſing mentall adoration. He viſited alſo the Temple of the Sunne with rich offerings, and then the Idoll Rimac: and after marched to Huamac, where Chimu a great Lord reigned: from thence to Truxillo in the Vallies Parmunca, Huallmi, Santa, Huarapu and Chimu. Here while Chimu would admit no new Gods, a bloudy warre followed, which at laſt ended in his vaſſallage. The Inca now hauing enlarged his eſtate aboue an hundred and thirty leagues North and South, and in breadth from the Hills to the Sea ſome ſixtie or ſeuenty leagues, fell to founding Townes, Temples, Store-houſes, and reformed the Empire, ennobled the Schooles, augmented the Schoole-maſters, cauſed all the Curacas and all Officers to learne the Cuſco Language (as common) and much enlarged Cozco. Hee reigned about fiftie yeeres, or as others, aboue ſixtie, and left Yuca Yupanqui his ſucceſſor, leauing aboue three hundred ſonnes and daughters. The Spaniſh Authours confound the father and the ſonne. Many of his ſentences and lawes are recorded by the authour, here omitted: as likewiſe the tranſplanting of Colonies, order of bringing vp the Curacas heires in the Court; the common or Coure Tongue; the deſcription of Cozco, *the Schooles, and the three Royall Palaces, Almes, &c. for all theſe I remit the curious to the Authour, fearing blame for this our length. See of their Feaſts in Acoſta.

Cozco was another Rome, in which the Sunne had foure Feſtiuall ſolemnities obſerued, the principall in Iune, which they called Yntip Raymi, as it were The Sunnes Eaſter, and abſolutely Raymi, in acknowlegement of the Sunnes Deity ouer all, and his being Father of the Incas, Manco and his deſcendants. All the principall Captaines which were not then in the warres came to it, and all the Curacas, not by precept but of deuotion, in adoration of the Sunne, and veneration of the Inca. And when age, ſickneſſe, diſtance or buſineſſe in the Kings affaires detained them, they ſent their ſonnes or brethren with the chiefe of their kindred to that ſolemnitie. The King did performe the firſt ceremonies as Chiefe Prieſt: for although they had a high Prieſt alwaies of the bloud Royall, Brother or Vncle to the King, legitimate by Father and Mother; yet in this Feaſt proper to the Sunne, the King himſelfe, as firſt-borne of the Sunne, was the principall Solemnizer. The Curacas came in their greateſt brauerie, and beſt deuiſes; ſome like Hercules, in Lions skinnes with their heads in the Lions head-skinne, as boaſting of deſcent from a Lion; ſome like Angels, with great wings of a Cuntur fourteene or fifteene foot diſtant in the extremes ſtretched out, as deſcended of that Fowle; ſome with yizors of moſt abominable and deformed formes, and thoſe are the Yuncas; others with golden and ſiluer ornaments; and others with other inuentions. Euery Nation carried the armes which they vſed in fight, as Bowes and Arrowes, Darts, Slings, Clubs, Lances, Axes, &c. the pictures alſo of whatſoeuer exploits they had done in the ſeruice of the Sunne or Incas. Once; all came in their beſt accoultrements and brauerie that they were able.

Faſt of three dayes.

Feaſt

Feast the Priests Incas made ready the Sacrifices and Offerings, which euery Nation is to prouide. The women of the Sunne make that night a great quantity of dowe of Maiz called çancu, whereof they make little loues as bigge as a common Apple. Neyther do these Indians euer eat their Maiz made into bread but at this Feast and at another called Citua; then eating two or three bits at the beginning of the meale; their ordinary meales in stead of bread haue çara parched or boyled in graine. The Virgins of the Sunne prepare this bread for the Inca, and those of his bloud; for the rest, innumerable other women are appointed, which make it with Religious care. Bread festiual.

In the morning early the Inca goeth accompanied with all his kindred, ranked according to their age and dignitie, to the chiefe street of the Citie called Hancapata: and there expect the Sunne rising, all barefooted, looking to the East with great attention; as soone as he peepes forth, fall on their elbowes (which is as kneeling here) adoring him with their armes open, and their hands before their faces, giuing kisses to the ayre (as in Spaine it is the vse to kisse a mans owne hand, or the Princes garment) so acknowledging him their God. The Curacas set themselues in another street next thereto, called Cassipata, and make the same adoration. After this the King riseth on his feet, others remaning on their elbowes, and taketh two great vessels of Gold full of drinke, the one in his right hand, as in the name and steed of the Sunne, as if he did drinke to his kindred (this was their greatest courtesie of the Superior to the Inferior, and amongst friends, to giue them drinke) and powres it into a pipe of Gold, by which it runneth into the house of the Sunne. After this he drinketh part of that in his left hand, giuing the rest to the Incas in a small Cup, or out of the same vessell (this sanctifying or giuing vertue to all that is brought forth) euery man drinking a draught. The Curacas drinke of that which the women of the Sunne haue made. This done, they went all in order to the House of the Sunne, and two hundred paces before they came at the doore, they put off their shooes; only the King stayed till hee came at the doore. Then the Inca and his entred in and adored the Image of the Sunne, as naturall Sonnes. The Curacas abode in the street before the Temple. The Inca offered with his owne hands the vessels in which he had done that ceremony; the other Incas gaue their vessels to the Priests (for they which were not Priests, might not doe the Priestly office, although they were of the bloud.) The Priests hauing receiued the Incas offered vessels, went forth to receiue those of the Curacas which brought them in order of their antiquity, as they had bin subiect to the Empire; they gaue also other things of Gold and Siluer, with Sheep, Lizards, Toads, Snakes, Foxes, Tigres, Lions, variety of Birds, and whatsoeuer most abounded in their Countries. The offerings ended, they returned to their streets in order. Then the Incas Priests bring forth great store of Lambes, barren Ewes and Rams of all colours (for sheep in those parts are of al colours, as Horses in these) all being the Cattle of the Sun. They take a black Lambe (which they esteeme the holiest colour for Sacrifices and the Kings weare commonly black) and offer that first for Soothsaying (a thing vsed by them in all things of moment in peace and warre, looking into the heart and lungs for prognostications) they set the head to the East, not tying any of his feet, open him aliue (being holden by three or foure Indians) and that on the left side, to take out his heart and entrals with their hands, without cutting. The best Augury was if the lungs mooued when they were taken forth: the worst, if the Sacrifice in the opening arose on the feet ouercomming those which held it. If one prooued vnluckie, they assayed another of a Ram, and another of a barren Ewe; if all prooued vnlucky they gaue ouer keeping the Feast, and said the Sunne was angry for some fault which they had done, and expected wars, Dearth, Murrayne, &c. After this Augury, they opened not the other Sacrifices aliue but out off their heads, offering the bloud and heart to the Sun. Adoration of the rising Sun. Festiuall and consecrated Drinke. Procession bare-foot. Oblations. Strange Offerings. Sacrifices and Auguries. Blacke taires. Soothsaying vsuall. Rites thereof.

The fire which they vsed must bee new, giuen them, as they said by the hands of the Sunne, which they did by the force of the Sunne beames shining thorow a Iewell which the High Priest held in his hand (as by a burning Glasse) on Cotton. With this fire they burned the Sacrifice and rosted that dayes flesh: and carried thereof to the Temple of the Sunne, and to the house of Virgins to keepe all the yeere. And if the Sunne did not shine, they made fire with motion of two smooth round stickes: but this absence or refusall of the Sunne they esteemed vnlucky. All the flesh of those Sacrifices was rosted openly in the two streets aforesaid; they parted it amongst the Incas, Curacas, and common people which were at the Feast, giuing it with the bread çancu. Holy fire.

After this they had many other Viands: and when they had done eating they fell to drinking, in which vice they exceeded, though now the Spaniards example haue that way done good, and this vice is infamous amongst them. The Inca sitting in state sends his Kinsmen to the principall in his name to make them drinke, first the valorous Captaynes, next the Curacas which haue not bin Commanders in war, then to Cozco-Incas by priuiledge: the manner was this; the Inca which brought the drinke said, the Capa Inca sends thee banketting drinke, and I come in his name to drinke with thee. The Captaine or Curaca tooke the Cup with great reuerence and lifted vp his eyes to the Sunne, as giuing him thankes for such a fauour, and hauing drunke, returned the Cup to the Inca with shew of adoration, not speaking one word. Hee sends to the Captaines in generall; but to some speciall Curacas only; the rest, the Incas in their owne name, and not in the Kings, cause to drinke. The Cups were holden in great veneration because the Capa Inca had touched them Festiuall eating and drinking.

them with his hands and lips. After this beginning they fell to freer drinking one to another, and after that to dancing, the Feast continuing nine dayes with great iollity, but the Sacrifices held but the first: and after they returned to their Countries.

Manner of making Knights.

Now for their Knights, till they had that order, they were not capeable of the dignities of warre or peace. The youths of the Royall bloud (for none else might be in election) from sixteene yeeres old vpwards, first made experiments of themselues in rigorous tryals, whether they could indure the hard Aduentures of warre. Euery yeere, or each other yeere, these noble youths were shut vp in a house where old Masters examined them. They were to fast seuen dayes strictly, with a little raw Corne and water, to try their endurance of hunger and thirst. Their Parents and brethren also fasted for them to intreate the Sunne to fauour them. They which could not sustaine this fast, were reiected as vnsufficient. After this they heartned them with meate, and tryed their actiuitie in running of a certaine Race a league and halfe long, where was a Banner set, which he that first came at was Captaine of the rest; others also to the tenth were subordinately honoured. Their next tryall was in skirmish, one halfe to keepe, the other to get a Fort; and they which were now keepers, were another day besiegers, where eagernesse and emulation sometimes cost some their liues in that ludicrous warre. Then followed wrestling betwixt equals, leaping, throwing small and great stones, also a Launce and a Dart, and other Armes, shooting, casting with a sling, and exercise in all weapons of warre. They caused them to watch ten or twelue nights as Centinels, comming suddenly on them at vncertaine houres, shaming those which they found sleeping. They tryed with wands how they could indure stripes, beating them cruelly on the armes and legs (where the Indians goe bare) and if they made any sad remonstrance of sorrow they reiected them, saying how would they beare their enemies weapons? They were to bee in manner vnsensible. A Fencer also made semblance with a two hand Club called Macana, another while with a Pike, to hit or strike them, and if they shrugged, or in their eyes or body made shew of feare, they were reiected. Next they made triall whether they had skill to make their armes of all sorts, and shooes called Vsuta, like those which the Franciscans weare.

After all these, the Captaines and Masters of these Ceremonies tell them of their pedigree from the Sunne, the noble Acts of their Ancestors, and instruct them in courage, clemency and mildenesse to the poore, with other parts of morality. The Heire apparant indured no lesse rigorous tryals then others, except in running for the Banner, and all that tryall time (which was from one New Moone to another) he went in poore and vile habit to teach him to pity the poore. These things done, the King solemnly attended, made a Speech to them, and each on their knees receiued at his hand the first Ensigne of dignity, which was to boare a hole in their eares.

The New Knight kissed his hand, and the next person to the Inca put off his Vsutas, and put him on gallant shooes of Wooll. Then did he goe to another place, where other Incas put him on breeches, as the token of manhood, which before he might not weare: after which they put on his head two kinds of flowres, and a leafe of another herbe which will long keepe greene. No other men might weare those flowres. The Prince had the same Ensignes, and differed only in his yellow fringe of Wooll (which none but he, and that first after his tryall, might weare) and an Axe of Armes with a kinde of laueline aboue a yard long; which when they put in his hand, they said Ancunapac, that is, for tyrant Traytors. The Kings fringe was coloured; he ware besides on his head two feathers of a Bird called Corequenque, which are said to bee but a Male and a Female, in one place only called Villacuntu. These they weare vpon their fringe: and euery new Successor must haue new. When the Prince is Knighted all of the bloud Royall adore him as their Prince.

Inca Yupanqui the tenth Inca.

The Musus inuaded.

INca Yupanqui bestowed three yeeres in visiting his Kingdome, and afterwards resolued on a difficult designe, namely to passe the Antis Eastward from Cozco, that hauing trauersed those high Hils, he might find passage by some Riuers running thence Eastward: for the Hils themselues still couered with Snow falne and falling were impassable; mooued by a tradition of many Habitations and Countries in those parts. One of which was called Musu (by the Spaniards, Moxos) to which he might enter by a Riuer in the Antis diuided into fiue, which all make the Riuer Amarumayu; which I suspect to fall into the Riuer of Plate, the greatest Riuer knowne after Orellana. With this determination he sent to cut a great quantity of that stuffe which the Spaniards call Higuera, wherein they spent two yeeres, making thereof a kind of Boats, so many as receiued ten thousand Souldiers with their prouisions, each holding thirtie, fortie, fiftie more or lesse, with their prouisions in the midst. Thus went they downe the Riuer, and had great encounter with the Chanchus which liued on both sides the Riuer, all painted and naked with feathers on their heads armed, with Bowes and Arrowes. They were reduced to subiection, and sent presents of Poppenjayes, Monkies and Huacamayas, Waxe and Honey, which they continued till the death of Tupac Amara the last of the Incas, whom the Vice-roy Francis de Toledo beheaded.

The Chanchus subdued.

A Colonie of these was planted neere Tuno, some sixe and twenty leagues from Cozco. They pro-proceeded in their Conquest till they came at Musu two hundred leagues from Cozco. These hearing their Relations of the Incas conquests and deuotions, and Viracochas vision, were content to accept of their friendship, and confederacie, but not to acknowledge vassallage. They permitted them to make a plantation there, and gaue them their Daughters for Wiues, being now not aboue a thousand left, the rest wasted in the ill wayes and warres. They sent an Embassage also to Cozco which were well entertained and instructed in all their Rites. These Peruans would haue returned into their Countrey about the time of Huayna Capacs death, but hearing of the Spanish conquest, stayed.

Peruan Colony in the Musus Countrie.

Anno 1564. one Diego Aleman a Spaniard hearing of Gold in those parts, with twelue others went on foote with an Indian Curaca for his guide (the ill wayes admitted no Horses) and hauing trauelled into the Musus Countrey after eight and twentie dayes, were set vpon and tenne Spaniards killed, Diego himselfe taken, and two only escaped in the darknesse of the night. The Indians made Diego their Captaine (of a Captiue) against their enemies. About this Golden prize the Spaniards after fell into contention, diuers hauing gotten the grant, and many were slaine by their emulous Competitors, and so made an easie prey to the Chunchos. Three they took and after two yeeres dismissed them. One of them was a Frier and Priest whom they requested at his departure to send for their conuersion which was not done. But let vs returne to Inca Yupanqui.

Spanish attempts frustrate.

After this Expedition to the Musus, hee resolued on the Conquest of the great Prouince Chirihuana, which is vpon the Antis Eastward from Charcas. And because the Countrey was vnknowne, he sent Spies which brought word that it was a wretched Countrey, wilde Mountaynes, miry Marishes, Lakes and Bogs, vnprofitable for Seed and Husbandry, and the Naturals brutish worse then beasts without Religion or worship of any thing, without Law, Townes, or Houses, and eating mans flesh, hunting to that end the Neighbour Prouinces, and drinking their blood, without difference of sexe or age; eating also their owne when they dyed, and when they had eaten their flesh, they layd the bones together and mourned for them, burying those Relikes in Rockes or hollow Trees. They were clothed in skinnes, and abstayned not from sisters, mothers, daughters. Good Inca Yupanqui (so they vsed to call him) hearing this, said they were more bound to the Conquest, to the end to ciuilize them; for therefore our Father the Sun hath sent vs.

Chirihuana. A Sauage beastly Nation.

Hee sent tenne thousand men which spent two yeeres, and returned without hauing effected their Deigne by reason of the ill condition of the Countrey. Neyther had the Vice-roy Don Francis de Toledo any better successe in the like attempt. Anno 1572. in which by reason of the badnesse of the wayes vnpassable for Mules, his Litter was carried on mens shoulders, whom the Chirihuanas followed with cryes threatning to eate them. Such terrour they cause to the borderers, that an hundred of them will flee from ten: yet this little conuersation with those which the Inca sent, instructed them to leaue eating their dead friends, and to dwell in houses in common.

Inuasions of the Incas and Spaniards frustrate.

The good King Inca Yupanqui after this, proceeded to another purpose of conquering Chili, and from Atacama sent Spies to discouer it, and the difficulty of the wayes; which passed the Deserts and left markes in the way lest they should loose it at their returne, there beeing eighty leagues of Wildernesse from Atacama to Copayapu, which is a little Prouince well peopled, from which to Cuquimpu are other eightie leagues vnpeopled. These hauing giuen aduice to the Inca, he sent ten thousand men of warre vnder the command of Sinchiruca with prouisions necessary; and after them sent ten thousand others both to succour them, and to terrifie the enemy. When words would not perswade the men of Copayapu to receiue the command of the Lord of the foure parts of the World, they came to skirmishes and after so composition, vpon the comming of the second Army. The Inca hereupon leuied other ten thousand, and sent them to follow the former which marched eighty leagues, and after many troubles came to another Valley or Prouince called Cuquimpu, which they subdued. And so proceeded conquering all the Nations which are till you come to the Valley of Chili, whereof that whole Kingdome takes the name. This exploit was sixe yeeres in hand, the Inca still sending fresh supplies of men and prouisions of armes, clothes and other necessaries, so that he had fiftie thousand men of warre in Chili. They went fifty leagues further Southwards to the Riuer of Maulli, still vsing faire meanes rather then cruelty to reduce them. And thus the Empire was aduanced aboue two hundred and sixty leagues beyond Atacama: yet ambition looking further, they passed the Riuer Maulli with twenty thousand men. Three dayes they fought cruelly till halfe of both sides were slaine: the three dayes following they were content to sit still in expectation, and after that departed from each other without further accomplishment. Maulli was now the Southerne boundarie, and the Inca hauing intelligence sent them word rather to cultiuate and order what they had gotten then to seeke new Conquests. Thus they fortified the Frontiers and attended the administration of Iustice, and building Houses for the Sunne and the King.

but the ſight and innumerable troubles in the way, he returned to Peru, which was the cauſe of the generall Rebellion of the Indians of Peru, and of the diſcords and Ciuill warres of the Spaniards. Pedro de Valdiuia, made the next Diſcouerie, and happily conquered them, but as vnhappily was put to death by the Araucans his vaſſals, after hee had raiſed his profits to a hundred thouſand Pezos yeerely, which yet did but enlarge his appetite. The Araucans had aſſembled twelue or thirteene thouſand, notwithſtanding which numbers Valdiuia ſtill had the better, by reaſon of the Horſemen, ten of which would breake thorow a thouſand Indians, which therefore would not deale with the Spaniards in the Plaines but kept the Hils. A certaine old Captaine hearing hereof, would needs goe thither to ſee what that Military myſterie might be, that one hundred and fiftie men ſhould hold vnder ſo many thouſands. He called a Councell, and asked if the Spaniards were mortall and made of fleſh, ſubiect to humane infirmities of wearineſſe and ſleepe; and likewiſe of their Horſes; which being affirmed, hee taught them another courſe of battle, diuiding all their thouſands into ſo many bands ſingle, each of which ſhould fight, and doe what they could, and when they were wearie ſhould conuay themſelues away, and giue place to another Regiment; meanewhile to recollect themſelues into their ranke againe, and to refreſh themſelues: ſo likewiſe ſhould the ſecond and third and all of them doe in their order. Thus they fought and fled, and ſtill ſeemed to the Spaniards both broken and whole, they hauing often broken the bands, which yet kept ſtill neere the number which they had at firſt. This troubled them, their bodies and horſes yeelding to wearineſſe by long continuance from morning till afternoone: and then Valdiuia commanded his men that they ſhould recoyle by degrees, making a defenſiue warre till they might recouer certayne Straits, where they might eaſily by the ſtrength of the place bee defended. This was heard by one Philip a Chili Seruant of the Gouernours (by his Indian name, Lautram) who fled to his Countrimen, and told them this his Maſters intent. Whereupon they ſent ſome Regiments to make good that place, ſo that about Sunne-ſet the Spaniards thinking to ſecure themſelues there, came to the Sunne-ſet and irrecouerable night of their Fates. The Gouernour and a Frier were taken, the reſt ſlaine: three Indians fled and carried newes of this diſaſter. Valdiuias death is diuerſly told; ſome ſay that that Philip killed him, ſome that another Captayne did it with a Clubbe whiles others by his promiſes were wonne to giue him libertie. Francis de Rieros which then was a Captayne in Chili, from the reports of Indians, tels that the Chilois made dances all night, at the end of each dance cutting off a piece of the fleſh of both their Priſoners and eating it before their faces. Notwithſtanding they doe not ordinarily eate mans fleſh. This was Anno 1553. and euer ſince the Rebellion hath continued: at which time Don Sebaſtian rebelled in Potoſi and Francis Hernandes Giron in Cozco, Rebellions later then thoſe of the Pizarriſts and Almagriſts.
